"I like soft kisses on my neck, and I like to kiss guys on their bottom lip and on their neck and ear," said Kelly Howell, a freshman Political Science major.

One who shall remain anonymous proposed, "Kissing is a prelude to sex. You should just skip it, and get to the hittin' it."

Senior Arthur Bonnie's least favorite type of kiss was summed up in nine words that made me cringe, "Driving your tongue in and out like a jackhammer."

On a more enticing note freshman Caitlin Crosby was able to sum up her favorite kiss in a word, "unexpected." Catherine Turner, a senior Political Science major, said her favorite kiss included the use of a tongue ring.

"Kissing is so much fun. I especially love kissing people with tongue rings; they make it the experience an adventure. Oh, and they come in handy when kissing other parts of the body too, if you're picking up what I'm putting down. Just don't get VD on V-day."

Other favorite kisses included those that are "playful," "Butterfly kisses," "before you open your eyes in the morning," "at the drive in," "on the beach, but not on the rocks," "on a mountain top," "eyeball kisses," and sophomore Lauren Pardee's favorite, "I love Eskimo kisses!"

What are the best places to be kissed? Special spots on campus ranged from the 23 floor of DuBois library at sunset, to a quadrangle of vegetation by the hills, the overused and under appreciated football field, to the cars parked way out in the yellow lots.

But in the words of my friend Abby, "It doesn't matter where it is, the best ones are when you're drunk with a hot, tall, dark, and handsome man."

I believe Kevin Costner's character, Crash Davis, in Bull Durham said it best.

"I believe in long, slow, deep, soft, wet kisses that last three days."

♥♥♥

Kissing can be seen in all areas of popular culture. From the movies that hit the silver screen to the websites found upon surfing cyber space, the act of kissing is something seen and talked about in almost every genre.

Films through the ages often portray "the kiss" as the essential moment in story plots. Older movies like the 1928/29 Academy award winning film for best picture, Broadway Melody, built up the act of kissing to be the ultimate admission of forbidden feelings of love. And have things really changed? Well, films of today, like current 2002 Oscar nominee Moulin Rouge, create their dramatic mood using "the kiss" as that same symbolic declaration of passionate feelings.

Type the word "kiss" into an Internet search engine, and websites pertaining to the band KISS or radio stations with "Kiss" somewhere in its title will be heavily summoned. One can even find the random websites of businesses that place "kiss" in their title for no apparent reason, such as a computer software and programming assistance site.

Websites dealing directly with pucker-up and get-to-it kissing, however, are limited. Ones found ranged from entertainment and resource websites like VirtualKiss.com (where one can read and share kissing stories, send out e-kisses to special someones, look up the "kiss spycam," or read up on interesting games centering around the ever-popular act) to sites like KissorMiss.net (where one can rate people on how "kissable" they appear to be, based solely on their submitted photos).

The world of print material presents another delicious look at the world of kissing. Women's magazines such as Cosmopolitan or Glamour can always be excepted to dish up some interesting article focusing on personal intimacy, from kissing to beyond. Pictures are naturally included.

Books such as William Cane's The Art of Kissing present instructional aid in improving one's kissing skills. And Cane's instructional help did not stop there. Since the book's first publication, his enterprise on the world of kissing has sprouted to include the website kissing.com, which features advice from French kissing

Turn to KISS, page 2

■ kiss

continued from page 1

to kissing with braces as well as Cane's touring lecture series, in which he discusses topics of his books.

As for listening enjoyment one need only turn on the radio to hear a variety of songs proclaiming how love or romance is grand or missed or special or painful and so on. And all too often that connection between a special relationship and that special kiss is once again made. This can be seen overtly in songs like Mel Carter's Hold Me, Thrill Me, Kiss Me, Faith Hill's This Kiss, and Sixpence None the Richer's Kiss Me.

So when wheeling and dealing in the world of mass communication don't be surprised to find kissing is on the brain.

♣♣♣

Adrenaline. Increased heart rate. Stress relief. You guessed it. It's time to look at kissing from a medical point of view. And according to WebMD Medical News, the act of kissing is actually rather healthy for the human body.

An article by Jeanie Davis printed on the site explained that the health's side of kissing can range from exercising facial muscles and naturally keeping one looking younger and healthier longer in life to burning calories of up to two per every minute spent full fledged making out.

Davis continued by noting how kissing can actually be good for one's mouth as well. The extra salivating gets from kissing washes some bacteria off each partners' teeth during the process, her source, Mathew Messina DDS, a practicing dentist from Fairview Park, Ohio, pointed out. This, in turn, can help break down oral plaque.

Hmm. So kissing produces young, healthy, thin people with great teeth? Well, only to a minimally reasonable extent, as each and every physician quoted in the article pointed out. Perhaps these little health boosters won't completely alter one's state of health. However, participating in an enjoyable act that has its minimal health side effects can make the act just that much sweeter.

♣♣♣

A kiss. Known in Middle English as a "kissen." In Old English as "cyssan." Meaning to touch or caress with the lips as an expression of greeting, affection, or respect. In the simplest of terms, it's one way in this current society to share something special with someone special.

An anonymous quote reads: "Nothing breaks the silence like a kiss." Our advice to you then?

Curl up on a couch or bed sometime with someone deserving of some lip action. Make good on that fiery eye contact and sneak a little smooch. Or take a moon lit stroll around the campus pond, just happen to pause to look at the passing ducks, and embrace with your idea of the perfect kiss.

And oh yeah, we almost forgot: enjoy Valentine's Day.

Information from WebMD Health was used in this article.

Jennifer Eastwood and S.J. Port

On Kissing with S.J. Port

A kiss can be an explanation of our need for another's body or an experiment in moves, tenderness, biting, sucking and other kinds of play. It is often our first kiss with someone that tells us whether there is a chemistry or natural connection between us. However, personally, I find the best kisses to be those of pure unadulterated passion, lust and hunger for another — the kind that often follow a first, second or hundredth kiss with the same person.

When I think of my own experiences with kissing, there are few bad experiences, except for those drunken, slovenly spit swapping episodes that I've almost managed to banish from my memory. However, as I dive into my friends and peers romantic pasts I found that kissing does indeed range from some of the most amazing moments of our lives to some of the worst.

For example, my best friend Caitlin shared one experience with me that is surely a poor example of lustfulness if I ever heard one.

"I had to wait around in Mr. Frat's room for 3 hours watching ESPN and 'When Animals Attack II' before I finally leaned over and said, 'Hey, I want you to kiss me now.' And he went 'huh?' And I said, 'Yep, kiss me now, please.' And only after the second try did he actually get it."

Fortunately, not all men are as low on the perception scale as Caitlin's now ex-boyfriend. My darling friend Geoff Arthur, a freshman here at UMass, is a true romantic, proud of the love he and his girlfriend share.

"I like to kiss Tiffy on the bridge of her nose, and where her nose meets her cheek. Let's not go any further, shall we?"

Kelly Howell, a freshman Political Science major, shared her most humorous stories with me the other night over a Bluewall smoothie.

"Last year, I hooked up with a kid from another high school in a janitors closet. They called him Lysol for the rest of the year!"

Another friend, Jess Enos, a freshman SOM major, reminisced absently mindedly, while her boyfriend napped next to her, of the unexpected and wildly romantic kiss she'd received from a friend in high school.

"He was a senior, I was a sophomore, and we'd always been friends. It was the end of the year, and all the graduating seniors were gathered in the auditorium for an end of the year assembly. While we were both on stage, in front of all the seniors, he grabbed me and kissed me. He announced that it was just something he'd always wanted to do. He graduated that week, and I haven't seen or talked to him since."

When sophomore transfer Maggie Klaus began, "I was riding this night train from Milan to Madrid..." my ears perked up and I began to listen as her story of exotic men and kisses in the dark began.

"I was riding this night train from Milan to Madrid and was seated next to this beautiful Italian college student. Listening to him talk to his friends, I knew he did not speak English. When the lights went down and his friends fell asleep, I gazed into his eyes, and we shared a kiss. No words, no names, just night train kissing from Italy to Spain."

Then there is Catherine Turner, a Political Science major in her senior year, who rattled off several impressive stories, only a few of which I will share with you. Turner's best kiss came innocently enough at a summer camp.

"My best kiss ever: on the dock at Camp Lawton in St. Croix Falls, Wisconsin. The first time Dana kissed me, it was amazing. It was great. The sky was full of crazy stars reflecting on the still lake. The loons were singing. Everyone else was asleep. Wisconsin really is for lovers."

Not so innocently, Turner admitted to appreciating tongue rings.

"My best kiss with a tongue ring: Andy Miller, Wayzata, MN, 1999."

Unfortunately I am not at liberty to share the best kiss I have yet to receive since my mother will be reading this article, and I'm too much of a wimp to expose myself.

However, in fairness I'll in a tribute to my last boyfriend, I'd like to muse over (again and again) my favorite kiss we shared. He had driven an hour to visit me at home this break, and after hanging around the house and parents we were finally left alone in my kitchen.

As I searched for mustard in the fridge he watched me, and as I turned around, placing the unearthed mustard on the table, he slid his arms around me and kissed me. Surprised, and caught off guard I kissed him back and said, "Hi," and stared back at his smiling face. I'd realized that in the rush of the visit we hadn't really stopped to say hello. His sensitivity to that, and awareness of us amidst the hustle and bustle of my household connected us.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, deriving revenues only on customer generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as the [illegible] and became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1944. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 Monday through Friday between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
SPRING 2002
Where the Arts and Audiences Come Together
Tickets only $5, $7, $15 for five college students

Saturday, February 23
Academy of Ancient Music
Christopher Hogwood, Conductor
Robert Levin, fortepiano soloist
"A Night at Mozart!" Renowned for their baroque and classical performance style, including playing instruments of the appropriate period, the Academy of Ancient Music gives audiences the experience of hearing music as it might have sounded at the time it was written. Their program includes the Symphony No. 35 in D Major, and Piano Concertos No. 21 in C Major, K. 467 and No. 24 in C Minor, K. 491.
Concert Hall at 8pm
Sponsored by TIAA-CREF
With generous support from the Frederick C. Tillis Endowment for the Arts

Wednesday, February 27
Children of Uganda
Tour begins 2002
With the exuberant vitality of East African music and dance—infectious rhythms, quick-paced movements, powerful drums, and hopeful songs of joy and hope—the award-winning Children of Uganda come to the Fine Arts Center. Hailed as "first rate" and "inspiring" by The New York Times, the group is composed of 18 orphans—ages six to seventeen—who will serve as ambassadors for the 1.4 million other AIDS and war-related orphans living in Uganda.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by WRNX 100.9FM and FamilyFun Magazine

Saturday, March 9
The Kalichstein-Laredo-Robinson Trio
Joseph Kalichstein, piano, Jaime Laredo, violin, and Sharon Robinson, cello
Celebrating 25 years together, the Kalichstein-Laredo Robinson Trio is one of the best-blended, most sensitive and intelligent piano trios in the world today. Join them for a special program titled "Two Faces of Struggle: Beethoven and Shostakovich." Bowker Auditorium at 8pm

Tuesday & Wednesday, March 12 & 13
The Who's Tommy, The Musical
It began as a revolutionary rock album throwing off dazzling sparks such as "Pinball Wizard," "We're Not Going to Take It," "See Me, Feel Me" and "Acid Queen." This infamous tale of the "deaf, dumb and blind kid" speaks to each generation. This latest touring production has been hailed as "the latest and maybe the best version of one of rock music's grand creations."
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Florence Savings Bank, The Daily Hampshire Gazette and WRNX 100.9FM

For tickets call: 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
or go on-line to www.fineartscenter.com

www.dailycollegian.com

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans
• Trucks • SUV's
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co
• MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

WILDER THAN A PANTY RAID

NATIONAL LAMPOON'S VAN WILDER
IN THEATRES SPRING 2002
WWW.NATIONALLAMPOON.COM
ARTISAN

No really, it's updated!

LOSING IT:
False Hope and Fat Profits in the Diet Industry
An evening with author Laura Fraser

A reformed dieter and ex-bulimic, LAURA FRASER talks about her journey from battling an eating disorder and, after recovering, taking on the American diet industry in an undercover investigation. She'll talk about the history of America's obsession with slenderness, and all the false hopes, scams and medical disasters that women have endured in order to attain an impossible ideal. She'll take on the paradox of why Americans are heavier than any other people, and yet diet the most, and she'll talk about some practical changes.

Monday February 25
7:30 to 9:00 pm
Campus Center
Room 174-176
A FREE TALK sponsored by University Health Services, Everywoman's Center and Five College Inc.

Job snobs
Students dusted off their finest attire in hopes of finding a career in the Campus Center.

Recession's effects still felt in internship search

By Jazmin LeBlanc
CHICAGO MAROON (U. CHICAGO)

(U-WIRE) CHICAGO – The most recent recession has increased students' anxieties about finding internships and jobs. Career and Placement Services (CAPS) counselors at the University of Chicago have been particularly busy this year helping students look for summer internships and post-graduate jobs, according to Ted Boles, public relations and marketing manager at CAPS.

"Students have to be more aggressive and creative now," Boles said. "I'm not an economist, but our students are very concerned and worried, and they shouldn't be."

The economy was in a recession until just recently, when experts announced that an upturn is in sight.

Although the recession may be over, many students in the job and internship market are still facing its effects.

"The economy is now a popular topic in the media, and it is affecting students at the University of Chicago only slightly," Boles said.

Boles stressed that Metcalf internships, which are paid internships in many fields and available only to University students, are an underutilized option for students regardless of the state of the economy.

"Students aren't applying for them," he said.

According to Boles, it is difficult to judge whether students have opted this year for programs like Teach for America and the PeaceCorps instead of positions in the for-profit sector, since every year students apply for many different types of internships.

"It has been hard," said Mariangela Anzalone, a first-year in the College. "I want to be paid and there are not a lot of paid internships available in government or law. It seems like a lot more were paid in past years."

Despite the negative prospects, students are still finding internships. Michael Delcour, a third-year economics concentrator in the College, was interested in landing an internship in lobbying and government.

"It is absolutely hard to find internships this year," he said.

Delcour has found a summer internship through contacts in the applicable fields.

"I am definitely less optimistic about finding jobs and internships [this year]," said Albert Yu, a fourth-year anthropology concentrator in the College.

According to Yu, there is increased pressure on applicants because more people are applying to fewer positions, and that generally there are fewer internships available than there was last year in museum work, non-profit sectors and political work.

However, according to some students, this year there are fewer opportunities available in financial fields as well.

"The people at CAPS are very helpful; they have good ideas, but they can't change the economy," said one third-year economics concentrator.

Despite the decreased immediate availability of jobs, the promise of an end to the recession changes the students' outlook.

"Ultimately, there's an optimism," Yu said. "The sluggish economy is definitely not permanent."

Officials at CAPS see an end to both the sluggishness of the economy and the internship market. "Fall internship opportunities were slow but it has picked up this quarter," Boles said.

CAPS is planning a non-profit job fair for spring quarter, at which Boles said that some groups will be hiring at higher than usual rates, although there may be fewer groups represented. This news comes after a fall quarter job fair with a poorer turnout than expected.

"There were probably a third of the companies there this year compared to last year," said an economics concentrator.

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT & MORE!
$500.00 BONUS
JOIN OUR TEAM OF SELECT ENTERTAINERS AND RECEIVE A $500 CASH BONUS!!*
*TERMS AND CONDITIONS APPLY
BEAUTIFUL PEOPLE ONLY NEED APPLY!
(413)532-3621

TODAY!!
Have you been wondering...
"What educational and career benefits are there to doing a co-op?"
"How do I apply for an internship?"
"Which employers have summer & semester Co-op Jobs?"
Find out the answers to these questions (and more!) at the 19th Annual Co-op and Summer Job Fair
Thursday, February 14, 2002
Campus Center Auditorium
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
Open to all students and majors.
Have YOU thought about doing an internship or co-op?

The following is a partial list of organizations that are attending the COOPERATIVE EDUCATION JOB FAIR. Employers will have table displays throughout the day and several will offer formal presentations in the afternoon.

Boston Globe
Compaq Computer
Federal Reserve Bank
General Electric
IBM
ING Aetna Financial
The May Institute
Millipore
National Park Service
Reebok International
Spirit of Boston
TJX Companies
United Technologies
US Fish & Wildlife Service
Walt Disney World

A co-op position offers you an opportunity to gain valuable experience and helps you become a more competative canididate when you graduate. Through cooperative education you can explore your chosen field while earning a salary.
For more information, call the Campus Career Network Field Experience Office at 545-6265 – www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Be my Valentine ...please?

• BEST FOREIGN FILM • BEST CINEMATOGRAPHY • BEST SOUND • BEST ORIGINAL SCREENPLAY • BEST ART DIRECTION
AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
THE VALLEY ADVOCATE "THE BEST PICTURE OF THE YEAR!"
THE NEW YORK TIMES "FABULOUS!
OVER 130 CRITICS AGREE "ONE OF THE BEST FILMS OF THE YEAR!"
Amélie
JEAN-PIERRE JEUNET

DAILY @ 7 & 9:15 14th And Last Week! - Ends 2/21
Downtown Northampton's Academy of Music
Movie-Line: 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com
support by the Valley Advocate • www.valleyadvocate.com

JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2002
ARE YOU READY?

From airfare to your hotel, parties and activities, these reliable tour operators will get you there
Sun Splash Tours
1.800.426.7710
www.sunsplashtours.com
Student Travel Services
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

Summer in Paris 2002
Over 100 Courses

THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY of PARIS
Two 5-week Summer Sessions:
I. June 1-July 3, 2002
II. July 8-Aug. 13, 2002
Two 3-week Sessions of French Immersion:
I. June 1-June 21, 2002
II. July 8- July 30, 2002
Other Special Programs
Tel: (33) 1 40 62 06 14
Fax: (33) 1 40 62 07 17
or in the U.S.: (303) 757-6333 summer@aup.edu www.aup.edu

comedy CONNECTION
This Saturday!
HU KE LAU
413•593•5222

AISHA
Host of E!'s "Talk Soup" & UPN's "The Sth Wheel" TYLER

February 23rd at 7PM
DAVID "Boomerang" & "In Living Color"
ALAN GRIER

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.14.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Olympic spirit?

Something's missing

Worldwide media attention has shifted to Salt Lake City in recent months, intensifying in the past week as the 2002 Winter Olympics commenced under intense pressure to be the most secure games amidst national security concerns.

The unprecedented precautions in Utah have yielded remarkable results: after seven days, the climate surrounding the games has remained quiet and uneventful, running to the smallest detail how organizers had anticipated.

The games themselves, however, have again fallen under threats of questionable fair play.

Some years it's drug use; who used, who actually got caught, and more appropriately, who gets away.

Other years it's financial troubles, with questionable practices regarding how Olympic funds are being raised.

This year, the first true controversy to hit the Olympiad came by way of the pairs figure skating finals, in which the Russian couple of Yelena Berezhnava and Anton Sikharulidze won gold with a sub-par performance over the Canadian duo of Jamie Sale and David Pelletier. Th; Canadian's flawless performance suffered under the scores of five judges: Russia, China, Poland, Ukraine and France.

While the case may initially seem trivial, concerns of "block voting" have long plagued Olympic results. According to the Boston Globe, judges in the past have handed together to favor skaters from their regions, broken down particularly along cold war lines.

Similar problems plagued the 1998 games in Nagano, and aren't likely to stop in the future. In situations like this, with little hard evidence to work off of, the temptation is often too great to ignore.

In theory, the Olympics are supposed to epitomize our ability to come together on the national stage, to put aside outside grievances and appreciate the beauty of amateur athletics.

But wait. Amateur athletics? Not so in hockey, where the majority of teams are sporting professionals from the NHL. While not on par with questionable judging, the presence of legitimate professionals still raises concerns: these individuals have enormous paychecks waiting back at home, playoff positions they're fighting for, and their own health to keep in check. What's the motivation to even lift a finger? Homeland pride? So they'll say, give the same opportunity to a handful of college athletes, however, and watch who comes out of the gate faster.

The Olympics carry an enormous ability to attract support and attention. Its own actions, however, are reversing that motion more and more each day. The attention paid to outside influences has been superb; the same attention now needs to be turned inward.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Information from ESPN.com and Boston.com was used in this article.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

Love yourself first on Valentine's Day

RACHEL SMITH

"To love one's self is the beginning of a lifelong romance." Oscar Wilde said that some time before he was imprisoned for his sexual preference.

Perhaps Oscar's life would have been less tumultuous had he spent more time getting to know himself and less time chasing after men half his age. One might argue that everybody chasing after something as esoteric as "true love" is wasting their time and that Valentine's Day is a crock. Not so.

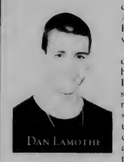
Valentine's Day is a great idea. We have an annual excuse to tell the objects of our most secret desires how much they really mean to us while risking humiliation and rejection of the cruelest variety. The pain and resentment we may endure is perhaps what's most wonderful about Valentine's Day. Where else would poetry, music and the arts be without mental anguish?

The arts would be excruciatingly dull and most likely redundant without tales of unrequited love and social rejection. Music would be hardly recognizable. I couldn't imagine listening to the Beatles, Bob Dylan or any of the great albums of our time if the songs were about romance, happiness and other such nonsense. Poetry would also be a nightmare.

Look at French poet alcoholic and lunatic Charles Baudelaire. He created beautiful, passionate poetry as he succumbed to absinthe, a notoriously hallucinogenic drink made with wormwood and alcohol. Baudelaire's obsession over a young woman inspired most of his work including "The Flowers of Evil," his most revered book of poetry. Poor Charlie. Not that I blame the object of his unrequited love – mentally ill starving artists seldom make People magazine's "Sexiest Man Alive" lists.

Love plays a very important role in our society. Besides inspiring lovesick poets to create literary masterpieces, love inspires lovesick people to give their objects of affection free stuff. Thanks to Valentine's Day, millions of people will enjoy free food and fresh flowers this Thursday. According to the Society of American Florists, around 105 million roses were sold during Valentine's Day last year. Roughly a quarter of the monies made in the floral industry was made on Valentine's Day. Without Valentine's Day flower vendors would probably go out of business.

Don't feel alone if you're not getting flower this year though. There are 15.5 million single people between the ages of 24 and 34 in the United States according to the Census Bureau. That represents 33 percent of that age group. Single means "unmarried," of course and the census report I got my hands on doesn't account for college-age folks' 9-5 25. But I'm sure the number of students sharing unattached is significant. I'm sure the whole campus doesn't have a boyfriend/girlfriend although it might seem that way. Heck, my roommate's boyfriend sent her three dozen roses. I have a constant flood of emails of my own much single-ness.



I couldn't find any statistics about restaurant revenue on V-Day, but I'm sure the local eateries make a decent profit off of blissfully attached couples. I assume most of you "together" folks will be heading out to eat Thursday night.

As for me, I'll be studying in my room while munching on a banana from the Grab and Go this Valentine's Day. That doesn't mean I'll be lonely. Like Oscar said, the relationships we have with ourselves are just as important, if not more important than our relationships with significant others. If we're alone this V-Day, don't drink yourself into a stupor like poor Charlie Baudelaire or chop your ear off like a certain lovesick Vincent Van Gogh. Instead of wallowing in self-pity, treat yourself to a nice dinner and get to know the person you're stuck with for the rest of your life. And who knows? As you become more confident in yourself, Mr. or Ms. Right just might show up.

Rachel Smith is a UMass student.

"...The relationships we have with ourselves are just as important, if not more important than our relationships with significant others."

It's time to step up

DAN LAMOTHE

"There will not be a diminution of quality at the Amherst campus," Billy Bob Bulger said. Famous last words? One can only hope.

Right now, there are a lot of angry people in the once happy World-o-UMass. Everybody's bitching about something, bar none. And really, that makes a lot of sense – there IS a lot to be upset about. Our boy Billy couldn't be more wrong about the quality of life on this campus declining, and he damn well knows it.

The music department lost half their staff. Escort services is in serious jeopardy of being eliminated. The security staff will most likely be reduced. Many classes in the fall will be gone. Much of the staff will be gone. Day-care is gone. The roll call goes on – at this point, all y'all with a pulse on this blessed campus know the nitty gritty.

What has irritated me so far about all of the budget cuts is the way that the student body has reacted to it. Don't get me wrong – I hate the way that the rug has been pulled out from under us financially and educationally just like everyone else. It's been said before, and I'll say it again: we're getting the shaft. People need to be reasonable, though! Please?

Mum about stuff that makes sense, ok guys? Quit being dumb? You're giving me a migraine! "Why doesn't SOM just share their money for that addition with everyone else?" I'd like to smack my head every time I hear something like this. SOM's money is SOM's money because some dude named Isenberg (hence, Isenberg School of Management) donated it for the expressed purpose of building an addition for them. Why should UMass turn the money down because it has a specific project assigned to it? As a campus we should take the money where we can get it, for whatever we can get it for.

Budget cuts affect us all differently. Different things are going to tick each of us off. Escort service? I didn't care. I'm a big enough guy, and I'm not afraid of walking around this place at night. I'll never need that thing in my life, I reasoned. Waste of time and money for the University, I thought. It never occurred to me that someone might actually use the thing until the backlash hit and I spent an entire week sorting through letters to the editor at the Collegian written by individuals angry about losing the service. It obviously ticked someone off. It just wasn't me.

Rumblings have it that at the very least, the foreign language requirement will be dropped soon due mostly to a lack of staffing in the departments. Does it personally affect me? Nope. I'd much rather take the nine credits of Spanish I would have been taking and take something else instead. If the language departments are revamped, though, someone's going to upset, and they've got a legitimate reason to be. There will be people outside of a foreign language major who are going to want to get into those classes, and they're most likely not going to be able to anymore.

"...Each and every one of us is facing higher fees with fewer classes and services offered. We're all losing out. All of us. Deal with it."

The bottom line is we're being selfish. That's not unexpected – when people screw with our futures, we tend to take it personally. We tend to think of our own first. It also, however, doesn't make it right. The UMass student body as a whole is getting screwed – each and every one of us is facing higher fees with fewer classes and services offered. We're all losing out. All of us. Deal with it.

Crying in your beer and pointing fingers at other departments and places that lost less than yours are not going to help anything. It's ok to be upset with the administration. It's ok to be upset with the state government. It is NOT ok to be upset with fellow students in different majors who have no more control over the whole crappy process than we ourselves do.

The student body needs to band together instead of bickering among itself. Try to see where other groups on campus are coming from when they voice their concerns. They're probably as important as your own. There shouldn't be an "us" versus "them" mentality between different groups of students on this campus.

The cuts scare the bejeezus out of everyone here, because no one really knows what's next to go except for good ol' Billy and his buddies. We've all got that same dark cloud hanging over our heads – no student group or major is any different than another.

Things are going to suck around here for a while. Get used to it. Stick together, guys. It'll be tough for UMass to make it through if we don't.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

Random rants and ravings

SEAN JAQUET

The great thing about random columns is that I don't have to address an hot social topics or pertinent political issues. I can simply rant on sarcastically like Dennis Miller. Except, I hope, somebody thinks I'm funnn. So, dear reader, I promise not to discuss anything of importance.

I've seen flyers around campus for a fraternity dedicated to clean living and academic performance. Come on, now. A frat without booze or hazing? That'd be like Massachusetts' flagship university not having any money.

Hey, we can't spell Patriots without R-I-O-T-S.

Arnold Schwarzenegger stars in a new movie called Collateral Damage as a man seeking justice against the terrorist organization that killed his family. Hmmm. Arnie shooting people with automatic weapons and blowing up everything in sight. Haven't seen this movie before.

The recent financial mismanagement by our fair university makes me wonder who really is President: former Senator Bill's Bulger, or his brother, known criminal Whitey Bulger. If it really is Whitey calling the shots, we could all angrily shout that "Whitey's keeping us down."

No, but seriously, the UMass higher-ups should get together with the Enron bigwigs to exchange strategy and wisdom. The Enron people could teach UMass to shred incriminating documents, while UMass could give Enron a lesson in making the worst possible decisions with the money they DO have.

In honor of the Patriots first Super Bowl title, I'm thinking of naming my first child Romeo after gargantuan Patriots defensive coordinator Romeo Crennel. First, though, I have to find somebody to go out with me.

What do you think will happen first: another fee increase or the next round of budget cuts? I'm saying fee increase, but only because we have to cover the last round of budget cuts. Oh, and all the free crap the basketball team gets.

The Super Bowl's patriotic halftime show really struck a chord with me. Nothing says America like U2 (Irish), Barenaked Ladies (Canadian) and Paul McCartney (British).

Why is it that girls seem to know the lyrics to all the dirtiest and most demeaning songs? Akinyele's classic "Put It In Your Mouth," no doubt this generation's "Stairway to Heaven," drives girls crazy whenever it's played. This particular song instructs girls to "catch these damn facial hairs" after they put "it" in their mouths. One might think such a blatant order to perform fellatio might offend some girls. Instead it seems like they know every word. AfroMan (we haven't heard the last of him) chronicles his sexual adventures in "Colt 45 & Two Zig-Zags." Apparently he went around the world sleeping with any and every girl he saw. Girls love this, singing along to AfroMan's lyrical craftsmanship. Classy. I want to take you home to meet my mother.

Britney Spears is coming out with a new movie called Crossroads, in which she treks across the country with two friends in order to find herself. Oh man, I can't wait. Can I reserve tickets now?

I'm sorry. I still think George W. Bush is the biggest nitwit ever to occupy the White House.

Did you see the Patriots Super Bowl parade last Tuesday? Cornerback Ty Law treated fans to an impromptu dance party in which owner Bob Kraft and quarterback Tom Brady showed us exactly why white men shouldn't dance. If there were any doubt that white guys were the lamest bunch on Earth, Brady and Kraft obliterated all doubt.

Mike Tyson causing a melee before biting Heavyweight Champion Lennox Lewis at a press conference? Didn't see that coming.

The Winter Olympics began last Friday with little fanfare. Nobody seems to care about these games, which is strange considering the ultra-patriotic, flag-waving fervor that has swept the nation. I guess people don't get very excited about curling and the biathlon. Figure skating, for some reason, attracts a huge audience. Watching people hop around on ice can only hold my attention for so long.

Now that football is over, and baseball is still two months away, the Sunday afternoon TV lineup has weakened considerably. College basketball doesn't generate excitement until March Madness and pro basketball is simply a dunk parade with guys shooting 35 percent from the field. Until March Madness starts, I'll have nothing to look forward to. Maybe I'll start going to church again. Or maybe I'll go watch the basketball team play at the Mullins. Wait, no, I'd rather go to church.

I guess the Brady/Bledsoe debate has been settled. Brady went 14-3 as a starter, earned a trip to the Pro Bowl, and won the Super Bowl MVP. Bledsoe threw three touchdowns and two interceptions, appearing in just three games. Bledsoe, huge contract and all, appears headed out of time despite the fact he was protected in the expansion draft. He's still leaving, but expect the Pats to trade him for draft picks. Early reports have Bledsoe going to the Redskins, where he'd be a perfect fit for new coach Steve Spurrier's Fun N' Gun offense. Don't be surprised if Bledsoe revives his career in Washington, where running back Stephen Davis will complement Bledsoe's passing game nicely. With Davis to hand the ball off to, Bledsoe won't have to do it all himself, as he had to do since Curtis Martin left for the Jets (how did they do in the playoffs anyway?) In the meantime, Bledsoe deserves a hero's sendoff when he leaves New England. In his nine years in Foxboro, he managed to throw for nearly 30,000 yards and 166 touchdowns despite laboring behind a porous offensive line and stagnant running game for much of his career. I've been a Bledsoe defender for years now, and the was he conducted himself this season was more than admirable. If he indeed lands in Washington, I wish nothing but success for good ol' Drew. So long, buddy.

Screw Flanders.

Sean Jaquet is a UMass student until budget cuts and fee increases force him to leave school. "Screw Flanders" is a quote from The Simpsons.

Letters to the Editor:

Dear Editor:

My name is Farley Griner and I'm a Linguistics major here at UMass. I'm also currently working part-time to recruit applicants to Teach For America.

Teach for America is the national corps of outstanding recent college graduates of all academic majors who commit two years to teach in urban and rural public schools. Teach for America has two main goals. First, we provide this country's most disadvantaged students with excellent teachers who will go above and beyond traditional expectations to ensure that their students achieve academically. We also influence the career direction and civic commitment of its corps members, in order to build an ever-expanding force of leaders and citizens who are committed to making the changes needed to ensure that all children In this nation have an equal chance in life.

As a corps member you will have a dramatic impact on the lives of your students by raising their level of academic achievement. You'll also get to know members of the community in which you teach and the families of your students, becoming a valued community leader yourself in the process. For example the Houston Independent School District's Teacher of the Year (out of 12,500 teachers in the district) for the past school year was Teach For America corps member Libby Levandowski. Additionally, two of the last five years, the district's Young Education of the Year award went to a TFA alumnus.

Furthermore, Teach For America corps members gain an incredible amount of insight into what long-term changes are necessary in order to ensure that ultimately, all children grow up with an equal chance of life. At the same time, they utilize and develop a diverse set of skills that I know will be of value no matter what field they enter – skills such as the following: leadership, strategic planning, problem-solving, communication, and management. Consider TFA alumnus Bill Norbert, who after graduating from law school was elected to the Maine House of Representatives and now serves as the state's majority whip.

Teach For America seeks applicants of all academic majors and no previous education coursework necessary. Corps members receive a full salary, a $4725 education award for each year of service, and are eligible for loan forbearance. The last application deadline is February 21, 2002. To learn more visit the website at www.teachforamerica.org.

Become part of a force for change.

Sincerely,
Farley Griner
Class of 2004

Dear Editor:

Since September 11, 2001, the media and newspapers have been paying way more attention to the war on terrorism instead of the hungry in America. It seems like you can't get away from the war. The war is everywhere you turn, soaking up the news and filling up the front pages of every newspaper. Yet more and more people are going hungry everyday.

Hunger events are losing the important coverage that they need due to the excessive coverage on the war. Key issues such as hunger have been left on the backburner to be forgotten! Hunger is an issue that won't go away any time soon. Hunger is here to stay unless we get up and do something about the issue! Hunger in America is just as an important issue as the war on terrorism in the fact that over 800 million people suffer from hunger worldwide!

Hunger is being left out of the spotlight. Unfairly enough, one in every 10 households face hunger, and an estimated 3.1 million American households suffer from hunger altogether. But, there is something you can do....

You as a UMass student need to deal with hunger on an approachable level. As young, motivated students, you need to become more active by participating in the many campus programs offered to deal with hunger and the homeless. The number one reason why people don't get involved is because they lack education in the issue or issues being presented. Your small impact will strongly affect the greater Amherst community. Every student has the ability to produce some positive result towards this ongoing issue of hunger and poverty in America.

On April 6, 2002, the Amherst community will be gathering together to participate in the 18th Annual Hunger Cleanup. The Hunger Cleanup involves a community service fundraising event. Through it, student volunteers directly make an impact on the issues of hunger and homelessness by taking on substantial work projects where they raise funds through hourly sponsorships for their work. Last year MASSPIRG volunteers raised 10,000 dollars through the hunger cleanup.

If events like this interest you, many more are in the process of being planned right now. For more detailed information make sure to check out the hunger and homeless campaign at MASSPIRG, Student Union room 425A. Or feel free to join MASSPIRG for a fun and exciting spring kick off meeting to be held on February 19, 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 174. Help bring attention back to real issues like hunger.

Sincerely,
Michelle Johnson
UMass Student

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

VALENTINE'S DAY

Valentine's are yucky

By Nick Pizzolato
Cupid's Nemesis

Happy Valentines Day! The day where love is eternal and candy is painted and flung around campus like flyers for MassPIRG. Yes, love is in the air and the sweet aroma of roses, chocolates, and CK One wafts. Cards flow like water with words like "love," "adore" and "sweetie," announcing love for their significant others. Candy hearts with the phrases "Be Mine," "I Luv U" and "Kiss me" populate the valley. Millions of people celebrate this holiday and consider it one of the most romantic days of the year.

Well, you know what? I don't!

Valentines Day is a nothing more than Hallmark holiday. A day in which hundreds of thousands of "I Love You" cards are sent out with "I Love You" stamps, each with a little angel on them, each with a cute little message than can be anything from cute to downright dirty.

But that's the problem I have with Valentine's Day.

Why do I have to make a whole big deal about one day? And why this day? What's the big difference between Feb. 14 and Feb. 15? Why not March 17? The fact that this is a day when more is expected is ridiculous. If I love you today, then I will love you tomorrow. Will one day, one insignificant day in February, really make or break a relationship? What about the other 364 days of the year?

Even more upsetting is the litany of items that one must purchase for this "special" day. Now, the candy hearts are classic, they've been around for ages. But the new ones are just plain stupid. Here is one actual thing that I have seen written on a small candy heart (and I am not making this up) "Fax Me." How romantic is that? "Fax Me." What's next: "143" on every other candy? (Sidenote: if you don't know what that is, listen for someone's pager to go off today in class, and ask them to read and translate it to you.)

I have nothing wrong with balloons, cards and bears; I think those are adorable and should be sent yearlong. Nothing says, "I love you" like a brown bear wearing a raincoat holding a red heart shaped balloon.

Now, if you've made it this far into my rant, you must be wondering, "What made this guy so upset about Valentines Day? After all, it's the day of endless love since the fifteenth century." Well very simply, you can blame it all on elementary school.

The days I dreaded most weren't the days we had spelling bees or math contests. They weren't the days were I had to speak in front of the class. The scariest day of my four years in elementary school was Valentine's Day. The stress would begin when the teacher announced a week in advance about the party, and then the mad rush began to find the most neutral cards at CVS. If you were lucky you would get Scooby Doo or The Transformers (I don't know if G.I. Joe ever had them, but if they did they must have been best-sellers for boys between the grades of one and four). But god forbid that you got Rainbow Bright or the My Little Pony cards, even the She-Ra cards were the kiss of death.

For the sake of argument, let's just say that you were able to get the Scooby Doo cards, the next arduous task was to separate the cards into neutral, and-even more neutral for the boys and girls respectively. With the class list that the teacher provided you (because he/she was well aware of what an art this was) you would give the boys (especially the ones that already had facial hair) the cards that said the most neutral cards of all. Sample writing on such a card, "Have a Nice Day." Doesn't

Turn to ANTI-VALENTINE, page 6

Lovey-dovey songs

By Michael Delano
Cupid's Victim

Valentine's Day is no time for stuffy 'best of' lists attempting to rank love songs in order of popularity or social relevance. V-Day is all about those messy feeeelings that lift us up and weigh us down. Lord knows a few of those sentiments have leaked into a song or two over the years, so here are my Top 5 fave love songs, High Fidelity-style, 'cause you were wonderin':

5. P.J. Harvey "Good Fortune"

The video for this song couldn't have captured the emotion behind it any better. Starry-eyed with her arms out, spinning around the streets of Manhattan, P.J. Harvey "was really in love" when she wrote this. Electrified from the start, the music jogs alongside Harvey's images of movement and flight, from time travel to exotic birds and landslides. Of course, she's transfixed the entire time ("like a gypsy/ you dance in circles/ all around me/ and all over the world"). The song is always threatening to take off, especially on the building chorus that revels in newfound simplicity, and finally does at the coda when Harvey and her lover finally escape, "like some modern day Bonnie and Clyde," and are "on the run again."

4. Elvis Costello & The Attractions "Lipstick Vogue"

Love doesn't always flow both ways, but Elvis Costello still only has heartspace for one in this relentless but sweet song about jaded tunnel vision. "Sometimes I think that love is just a tumour; you've got to cut it out," he laments, and if you weren't sure he was feelin' bad, he lets you know that "sometimes I almost feel just like a human being." Ouch. But through it all he's a one gal kinda guy since, "it's you/ not just another mouth in the lipstick vogue." Didn't know the ladies were exactly lining up to grab some time with EC, but at least we know he wasn't lookin'.

3. OutKast "Da Art of Storytellin' [Parts 1&2]"

The earliest morning stoned pimps need love too, and there is possibly no sweeter hook than the one in "Part 1" that backdrops Big Boi's explicit adventures of casual sex with "Suzie Screw." Life moves as quick for Big Boi as it does slow for Andre's cool night stargazing with "Sasha Thumper," a drama that shoots from young love to Sasha's death by drug overdose in the span of a heartbeat. The trials of love come to a mind-blowingly apocalyptic close in "Part 2," where Mother Earth takes vengeance on humanity for disrespecting her "heavenly body." Respect women and be careful with love before the "sky is electric blue" and "all the weed smell like ammonia;" it's all in a song's grasp for these Southern playas.

2. Björk "Possibly Maybe"

"Hyperballad" is a close call here for its watery-eyed yearning, but "Possibly Maybe" runs the full gauntlet of love's peaks and valleys. The refrain of "possibly maybe/ probably love" feels like a suggestive wink, but the fuzzy, repeating tones of the music could be recalling the warmth of a relationship or commenting on the eerily perpetual and depersonalized nature of love throughout life. With B you can never be sure, just as it's hard to pinpoint the headscratching ending ("I suck my tongue in remembrance

Turn to LOVE SONGS page 6

Some loving advice

Ask Elena

By Elena Panesis
Cupid's Main Squeeze

For the last couple weeks, many of you V-Day hopefuls have been chattering incessantly about how to approach that gorgeous gal at the gym or whether not to exchange some notes i.e. phone numbers with that cutie in Chem class. Hopefully by this point you have successfully sailed through the "asking out" phase and are ready to move onto step two, dating plans. There are plenty of sweet alternatives to the traditional format of dinner and a movie, which can be rather monotonous. Spice up that old standard by watching a flick like Chocolat or Like Water for Chocolate while baking brownies or eating some Hershey's Kisses. Better yet, why not tape the evening's events (and no, I don't mean porn) and make your own original production. From first dates to longtime love with a few hot hints, this Valentine's Day you'll be sure to win over that sassy someone.

Elena, I was just recently dumped by my long-term boyfriend. I've been pretty devastated lately though I've had an offer from a really nice guy for a Valentine's Day date. I know I'm not ready to date but I can't stomach being alone. What would you suggest? - Solo in Southwest

I admire that you have the foresight to admit that a first date on Valentine's Day would be a bad move on your part so soon after a break up. In fact, it may only fill you with longing or bitterness for your ex depending on the circumstances, which is not healthy or fair to you or this new guy. In fact, if Mr. Newcomer really is as sweet as he sounds, then he'll have no problem waiting until you are ready to start anew and begin dating. After a long-term boyfriend leaves the scene, the loneliness sets in and running off to what seems like the next prince charming often sounds like an easy solution. Yet, I am firm believer in surrounding yourself with close friends and even making new friends to fill that empty space.

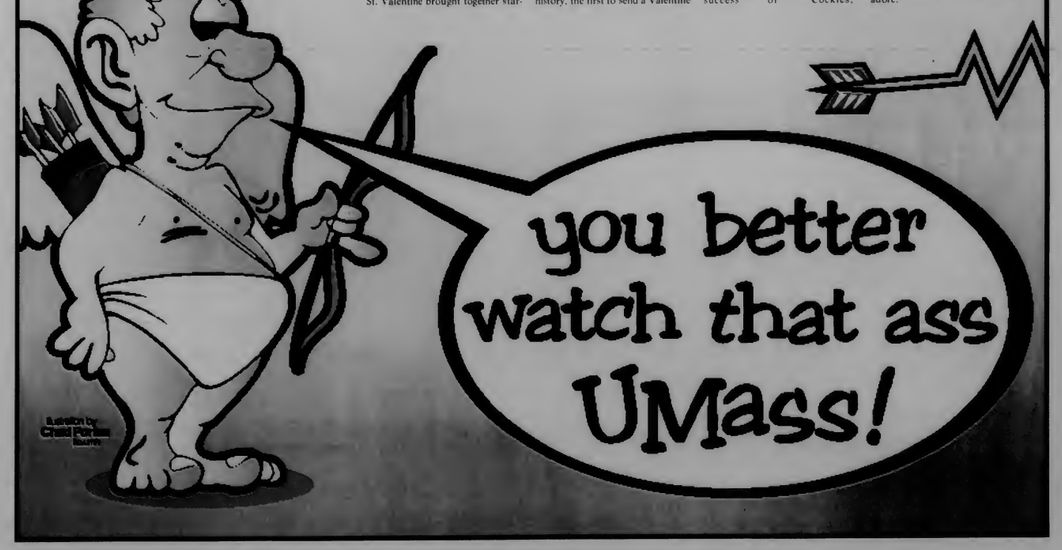
Why not plan a fun filled girl's night where you rent chick flicks with some girlfriends and some male gal pals, namely Ben and Jerry or Dr. Pepper? Unhealthy junk food and plenty of it is a must and can also be incorporated into the female friendly festivities. Try making ice cream sundaes together or baking some V-Day Cookies while cozying up to a few choice movies of the romantic, teen genre like Ten Things I Hate About You starring Aussie heartthrob Heath Ledger or Drew Barrymore's Never Been Kissed.

If you're a bookworm bunch, pick up a copy of Cameron Tuttle's The Bad Girl's Guide To Getting What You Want. You'll love the "dating yourself" section or the guide to a "10

Turn to ELENA page 6

Valentine's Day rules the school

By Shauna Bellinos
Cupid's Muse



You know what's a load of bull? People who say that Hallmark invented Valentine's Day. If Hallmark invented the holiday, don't you think they would have come up with a catchier name? Perhaps something more mediasaavy like "Love Day" or "2-getha 4-eva Day." Did all the people who gripe about Valentine's Day ever consider that perhaps Valentine was a real person?

Yes, Valentine's Day has a base in history, and a base in truth (perhaps – but we all know the validity of history is completely debatable). St. Valentine brought together star-crossed lovers and helped them marry during times of Christian persecution, and Feb. 14 is the day of his martyrdom. But love and February goes back even further... during Roman times, mid-January to mid- February was the feast of Lupercalia. On February 15, young Roman men would honor the god Lupercus by drawing the name of a young woman who would be his sexual partner for the next year.

Okay, you're saying - but then all this love stuff disappeared until CVS decided to sell N'Sync Valentines, right? Wrong. French King Henry IV's daughter threw a Valentine's Day party, and the Duke of Orleans was, according to history, the first to send a Valentine when he sent his wife love letters from the Tower of London.

And then, there were the Victorians. Socially rigid and a little "whack" at times, those crazy peeps were big on Valentine's Day, sending Valentines that were originally a little lewd but eventually became more tame. The Victorians were so obsessed with love they even created their own language of flowers to send their loved ones messages. For example, a yellow tulip meant "I desperately love you" and a gentian meant "You are unfair." Soon, by the late 1860's, "Cockles," love sayings written on paper and placed in shell-shaped candies, were all the rage. Inspired by the success of "Cockles," Massachusetts' own NECCO (New England Candy Company) began making those happy little Conversation Hearts in 1866.

And now, to put the final nail in your little "Valentine's Day is a Hallmark holiday" garbage, Hallmark was begun in 1910 – long after any of the above occurred. So, my dear little love grinches, why don't you just embrace Valentine's Day for what it was meant to be, and find a concubine to be yours for the next year, and stop your whining. Because many of us, dateless or dating, take some joy in a simple holiday that lets you appreciate the friends, family and loves that you adore.

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Compiled by Nick Pizzolato Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

FILM SCREENINGS

UMASS – The Augusta Savage Gallery will be hosting a video screening of Amy Chen's "The Chinatown Files." It tells the story of Chinese-Americans who were "hunted down, jailed, and targeted for deportation" during the McCarthy era witch-hunts. The event is on February 27 at 7 p.m. and is free for all that wish to come.

AMHERST COLLEGE – The "At Human Cost Film Series" will be showing the film In Cold Blood, based on the Truman Capote book, which traces the true story of two drifters who become murdering criminals. It will be shown at the Amherst College Campus Center Theater at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, February 12.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – The Student Union Gallery will show the exhibit "Marlene Dietrich: A Legend in Photographs" from February 11 to February 22 with an opening reception on February 12 from 4-6 p.m.

UMASS – There will be a showing of Terri Priest and her works of contrasting colors and optical illusions at the Hampden Gallery, Monday through Thursday 12 p.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5. The exhibition is free to the public and will run until March 4.

UMASS – An exhibition of work by eight UMass undergraduate students will be on displays until Sunday, February 24 at Central Gallery. The gallery is free to the public and open for viewing Monday through Thursday 3 to 6 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5.

UMASS – The Augusta Savage Gallery will be displaying works of Pioneer Valley self-taught artists from Wednesday, February 13 to Thursday, March 14. It includes paintings, sculpture, photography, drawing and collage. It is available for viewing Monday and Tuesday between 1 and 7 p.m. and Wednesday through Friday 1 to 5 p.m. There will be an opening reception on February 13 between 5 and 7 p.m. Admission is free.

UMASS – The University Gallery will be showing the exhibition "The Culture of Violence." It showcases works by twenty artists who explore violence in the U.S. and cover timely and controversial issues of war, hate crimes, youth violence, and terrorism. It is available for viewing between the hours of 11 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. during Tuesdas through Friday and 2 to 5 p.m. on Sundays. The showing is free to all.

AMHERST COLEGE – The Mead Art Museum at Amherst College will present "Casa Manana: The Morrow Collection of Mexican Popular Art." The works exhibit the importance of Mexican Folk Art in American culture. Amherst College alumni Dwight W. Morrow and his wife Elizabeth Cutter have donated the works of art. It runs Friday, February 8 until Saturday, April 21. On February 8 at 4:30 p.m. the exhibition will kick off with a lecture by curator Oles.

THEATER

UMASS – New WORLD Theater presents the show "On the Difficulty of Sustaining Compassion for Chrome Magnum Man," written and performed by Alberto "Beto" Araiza. This compelling satire tells the story of two brothers at odds because of conflict brought up by their life choices. The show will take place at the East Street Dance Studio at 47 East Street in Hadley at 8 p.m. It is $10 for general admission and $5 for students and seniors.

AMHERST COLLEGE – The Amherst College Department of Theater and Dance presents the new comedy TOO MANY PEOPLE IN THIS HOUSE, "a comedy that redefines the meaning of stuffed porcupines on stage." The show combines old-fashioned humor and modern stagecraft when a brother and a sister who live in New York's Greenwich Village look at loyalty, family, love and friendship just to end up saving the world. The performance will take place on February 14, 15, and 16 at 8 p.m. at Kirby Theater at Amherst College. Admission is free but reservations are recommended. To save a place in the audience for yourself call 542-2277 between 1 and 3:30 p.m. and until 8 p.m. on performance nights.

NORTHAMPTON – Deborah Lubar, a former Smith College Professor of Theater from 1983 to 1994, will perform her one-woman play entitled "Naming the Days". In the play, Lubar plays three very different women thrown into a room during war. The play will take place on Friday, February 15 and Saturday, February 16 at 8 p.m. in Theater 14 on Green St. Tickets are $7 for Smith faculty and staff and $5 for any student. Tickets may be reserved by calling (413)585-ARTS.

CONCERTS AND DANCE RECITALS

UMASS – The Department of Music and Dance will sponsor a program that will showcase new works by UMass Faculty and student composers. The concert will be on Friday, February 22 at 7:30 p.m. in the Newman Center Chapel. The show is free and all are welcome.

UMASS – On February 21, 22, and 23 The Five College Dance Department Faculty Concert will take place featuring the premier of a commissioned work by Jawole Willa Jo Zollar. The event will take place in Bowker Auditorium in the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. General admission is $12 and for students, seniors and children $5. For reservations call 413-545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMASS.

UMASS – The UMass Department of Music & Dance presents the first annual day of percussion. Thomas Hannum says, "This day is really going to give the Percussion faculty an opportunity to become acquainted with percussion students and teachers around New England." It will begin at 9:30 a.m. on Saturday, February 16 in Room 44 in the Fine Arts Center. It will end with a concert at 8 p.m. in room 36 in which the general public is invited. The concert is $4 for students, children under 18 and seniors and $8 for all others. Tickets are available through the box office at 413-545-2511.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – The Really Hard Rhythm Society will be performing at Hampshire College. The members of the group are all graduates of the internationally renowned Interlochen Arts Academy and are now students in the nations leading liberal arts institutions. The show blends elements of "the humor of Stomp with the rich history of American experimental music." The show will take place on Saturday, February 16 in the Hampshire College Music & Dance Building Recital Hall and will start at 8 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Five College Music Departments present the premiere of Pulitzer Prize winning composer Lewis Spratlans Dona Nobis Pacem: An Entreats for Peace in the Middle East on Saturday, February 23 at 7:30 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College. The show is free and open to the public.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

UMASS – Novelist, political activist and poet Marge Piercy will be in the Cape Cod Lounge in the UMass Student Union on Thursday, February 21 at 7:30 p.m. She will be reading and signing her new memoir Sleeping With Cats. The book tells the story of her struggle from being raised unappreciated in a poor working class family in Detroit and her trials to becoming one of the top voices for women's rights. The event is free to the public.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Poetry Center at Smith College will present poet Cornelius Eady. His latest volume entitled "Brutal Imagination," "explores the vision of the black man in white imagination." The event will take place on Tuesday, February 19 in Stoddard Hall Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. A book signing and selling will follow the reading.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Music Department presents Owen Jander, Professor Emeritus at Wellesley College, who will lecture on the Orpheus legend as interpreted by Beethoven in the Adante cantato of the Fourth Piano Concerto. Monica Jakuc and the Smith College Chamber Orchestra will perform the piece. The event will be on February 21 at 4 p.m. in Sweeney Concert Hall at Sage Hall and is free and open to the public.

AMHERST – Poet Ellen Dore Watson will be reading from her new book of poetry called Ladder Music. The event will take place on Wednesday March 13 at 7 p.m.

AUDITIONS

The Country Players will be holding auditions for three one-act plays. The auditions will be held on Saturday, February 23 at the Northfield Church in Northfield from 6 to 7:30 p.m. and on Sunday February 24 at the Shea Theater in Turners Falls from 2 to 3:30 p.m. For more information call Jeanne Closson at (413) 498-2205.

COURTESY OF NORTHAMPTON ARTS COUNCIL

The Academy Award-nominated film Promises will be shown as part of The Northampton Arts Council's Four Sundays in February '02 program. The screening takes place at 2 p.m. this Sunday at the Academy of Music Theater. Check tomorrow's Collegian for more info.

■ anti-valentine

continued from page 5

get any more neutral than that. Then you would take the other neutral cards and cross out the words like "love" and "sweetheart" with "like" and "friend." It was those cards that would go to your guy pals. Finally, the ones with the slight Valentine's Day undertones would go to the girls, however, all of the cards that ended in "love" were changed to "your friend." These were trying times to a first grader.

Don't get me wrong: I've not given up on love at all. I wish there was more of it. But Valentine's Day is, in truth, a non-existent holiday. There is no true meaning to it, except love that someone special a little bit more. Well, what are surprises for? Doesn't this day just build up anticipation? Love should be celebrated every day, not just on one day. That's what romance is all about.

■ Elena

continued from page 5

minute date." Take turns reciting "the 15 sacred bad-girl affirmations" like "It's not paradox that I'm such a fox" because trust me, you are! And furthermore, you never need a man to tell you what you should already know inside your pretty little head. Of course it's always nice, but for now focus on yourself and enjoy being single! With your new-found confidence and loads of friends, the right man can wait.

I'm really psyched because I actually have a date this V-Day! I finally got the nerve to ask out this cute girl in my hall. But I'm worried about the actual date. Can you throw a few ideas out there for me? -Clueless in Colonial Village

Congratulations on sealing the deal with your sweetie! Now we just need to erase those pre-date jitters with a few innovative ideas. In the beginning of the column I threw out a few suggestions of how to jazz up the standard dinner and movie, to woo any woman with your creativity (unless she's reading this article). Take note of her interests. Perhaps, she's a super speed skating champion that may put some Olympians to shame or a one-on-one wonder in b-ball. Bring her to the Mullins Center during free skate and if you're experts, practice doubles moves like a throw triple toe loop (or whatever they're called). It may not be quite as romantic as the skating scene from Serendipity in Central Park but honestly, what is?

Since this is a first date, you may want something more casual and even more towards mid-day like coffee or lunch followed by a quick game of pool. Or why not hit up the arcade, bowling alley or laser tag at the Hampshire Mall? Activities like that will send you both back to those high school days of puppy love and whirlwind romance that will surely make for sparks.

However, do not get too caught up in the details of the date, which can cause unnecessary apprehension. Basically, pick a plan and run with it but do so with the sincerity and chivalry that your lovely lady deserves. Hopefully she'll mail a thank you card to cupid and say a very enthusiastic yes to a second date. Yet, if you put forth your best effort and she passes on another round, then it just wasn't mean to be. Remember that you should never pine over someone who would let a sweetie like you slip through her fingers!

Whether you're flying solo or cruising as a couple, enjoy this V-Day, especially all the chocolates, flowers and cards that accompany it! More importantly remember that it is just another day on the calendar and that we should really spread our love for others anytime we feel inspired to do so.

Stay tuned for next Tuesday's edition of "Ask Elena," and in the meantime keep the emails coming at askelena@yahoo.com. Write about anything that's troubling you in e love, academics, family, work etc, any area where you need expert advice!

■ love songs

continued from page 5

of you" as bitterness, another case of her exaltation of sex or simply a cute little memory. Regardless, the song covers, in a painfully convincing way, so many of love's trademarks: flirt, hope, anticipation, compromise, uncertainty, excitement, sex, electric shocks?, disappointment, waiting, bliss.

1. Oasis "Wonderwall"

Throw the eggs if ya want, but Noel Gallagher's ode to his then future, now-former (their divorce spurning Noel to say the song will never again be played live) wife is flawless enough to deflect any pouts. "Wonderwall" is versatile; it's there when you're in love, it's there when you're depressed but have hope, and its anthemic chorus has overpowered all interepretations from orchestral to strictly acoustic to foot-stompin' stadium adhesive communal hymn. "There are many things that I would/ like to say to you/ but I don't know how" may be biggest lie ever written in a song. 'cuz when the chorus asks with false sheepishness "I said maybe/ you're gonna be the one who saves me?," he's said everything there is to say about love.

(Editor-in-Chief's note – Mike's exclusion of Bruce Springsteen's "The Fever", They Might Be Giants' "She's an Angel", and Marvin Gaye's "Let's Get It On", makes me wonder if Mike should be kept on staff. – SEW)

Arts...where the love is!

Valentines Day Special
Lobster Dinner for Two with Champagne $24.95
All February Murphy's Stout Special
$2.50 Pint THE HARP $3.25 20oz.
Thursday
Shanti with People of the Hill
Saturday
Summit House Grove Blues Jam Band
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
(413) 548-6900
Just off the bus route next to Cowl's Lumber
No Cover
"Start Your Own Tradition"

Dream it. Do it. Disney.
We're coming to campus!
Mark your calendars — All majors and all college levels invited. This is your chance to go inside this world-famous resort, build your resume and meet students from around the world
Check out a Walt Disney World® College Program paid internship. Housing is offered. College credit opportunities may be available. Visit our website at wdwcollegeprogram.com and then come to the presentation. Attendance is required to interview.
Thursday, February 14 at 7:00PM
Thompson 106
Walt Disney World COLLEGE PROGRAM wdwcollegeprogram.com
EOE • Drawing Creativity from Diversity • © Disney

It can't Break, fall off, or not Get put on.

Depo-Provera is 99.7% effective.
Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Of course, using condoms is the only way to protect yourself against HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases, but make sure you're also as protected as possible against pregnancy. That's why more women than ever are choosing Depo-Provera—it's 99.7% effective when administered on time every 3 months.

Depo-Provera doesn't protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

Some women using Depo-Provera experience side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months and some may experience a slight weight gain. You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant, if you have had any unexplained periods, or if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a possible decrease in bone density.

Depo-Provera is not only one of the best ways to protect yourself from pregnancy, it's also one of the simplest. Ask your health care professional if prescription Depo-Provera is right for you.

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

See what Depo-Provera is all about. Call toll free 1-866-519-DEPO or visit www.depo-provera.com.

Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Please see important product information on adjacent page.

■ defense

continued from page 9

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen managed only four free throw attempts the entire game twice in the final 90 seconds when they had the ball in the offensive end with a chance to tie. With UMass down by two Shannon Crooks (15 points) tried to flip a pass into the lane to a slashing Rayner only for the 5-foot-7 Green to step into the passing lane and grab his game-high sixth steal.

Less than a minute later UMass once again had a chance to tie after Crooks tied up Green in front of the Minuteman bench giving the ball back to UMass. However Anderson could not get the ball inbounds giving the ball back to the Bonnies who put the game away at the free throw line.

■ twine

continued from page 9

Johnson exclaims. "Its kind of whatever I feel like doing I'm gonna do because it feels right."

"He is sort of a standup goaltender but not classic standup," Kilduff explains. "His game is more mental. If he's struggling we'll just talk on the phone a lot. It doesn't really help him to look at tape because he never really makes the same save twice."

When Tim has some kinks to work out in his game he and Dave will "spend a lot of time going over film and talking about his weaknesses." Warner's style is such that the level of his performance can be a direct derivative of his positioning and fundamentals.

"When he's in the net, he plays a lot bigger than his size," says Johnson. "Part of it is he uses big gear, but he's a real confident kid in the net so when he gets in there he looks like a 6-foot-3 guy because he plays so big and I think that helps him out a lot playing wise."

Says Kilduff, "Tim is Mr. Butterfly."

From day one through the 30-team games of Tim's freshman season, Mike and Dave have been their every step of the way.

"Timmy actually stayed with me when he came on his official visit," Mike remembers. "I didn't think that they would do that because I'd only know him for one year, and he has his brother on the team. But I guess I was gonna be his goalie partner, and I could help him out in that regard." Warner says it "was a lot of fun to room with Mike and have him really show me the ropes. Besides my brother Mike [Warner] he's the best friend I have on the team."

It is rare for a college hockey team to even hire a coach to concentrate on just goaltending. In Kilduff, Mike and Tim have a rare opportunity to learn from a coach whose position exists solely to help them improve.

"Obviously Toot [Cahoon] recruited him to come here but he doesn't really deal much with the goalies," says Kilduff. "My team is two guys. The whole game I'm glued on one person. It's a real personal thing for me.

"I'm proud when they do well and I'm sad when they do poorly."

Neither Tim nor Mike became closely associated with Kilduff until the fall, but since then the trio has been inseparable in both friendship and focus.

"They are two friends for life," Kilduff says. "We'll talk about anything from the NHL to equipment to girls and school. But at the same time they have enough respect for me to know when I am trying to help them on the ice."

Together the trio represents three generations of UMass goaltenders. Dave was in the net for the Minutemen's first game and first victory since the program's reinstatement in 1994. For three years he backstopped a fledgling program that has slowly moved toward notoriety. Now as the team's volunteer goalie coach, while he finishes his degree in Communications, Kilduff hopes he can see his pupils, no his friends continue what he started and create a legacy of their own.

"We talk a lot about how much the program cares about the two of them – especially Timmy," Kilduff says. "He has the chance to really do something special for this team."

In eight games Tim has at times flashed the brilliance that had him hi-lighted at the top of nearly every recruiting hot sheet last year. But every time it looks like he has moved a few spaces forward, he rolls three straight doubles and ends up in goaltending purgatory.

He wowed the 1,936 in attendance at Providence's Scheider Arena by making 33 saves in a 3-2 loss earlier this year. Including a 'hurts just looking at it' split stop on a two on none break late in the third to keep UMass in it.

But the building blocks that seemed so prevalent a week earlier came crumbling down in the final stanza against lowly Connecticut. With the score 4-1 at the second intermission, Cahoon pulled Johnson to give his freshman some time and hopefully some confidence.

"Well it wasn't a confidence builder," Cahoon said after Warner allowed four goals on only 12 shots, forcing the Minutemen to eke out a 6-5 victory.

To combat Timmy's ebbs and flows, Mike offered a steady hand in the net and guidance down a road he's been down before. Johnson has been a picture of solidity from start to finish. His 2.82 goals against average and .902 save percentage has given his team a chance to win on a nightly basis. All the while keeping a firm eye on his friend and successor.

"Obviously being so highly regarded comes with a lot of pressure to perform, and I'm not sure in his eyes he's living up to it," Johnson remarks. "But in my eyes he is because maybe he's not playing as well as he could. But he's learning so much more than he realizes right now."

Freshman goaltenders can be as easy to figure out as a rubix cube, and Timmy is no exception. A painful growth process can be expected out of a rookie and for that reason his struggles don't come as a huge surprise to anybody – except maybe Tim himself.

Johnson says "he came in with a lot of pressure on him to make an impact immediately," and with good reason. If there is anything Mike may not understand about his understudy's career, it's his high school days.

To say that Tim Warner was dominant in his pre-UMass days would give his opponents too much credit. He was the man everywhere he went. From his early days at Arlington Catholic to his final two years of prep hockey under John Gardner at Avon Old Farms. Warner was the Basilica of prep goaltending.

"Warner is a kid who has a lot of talent and has had success and won games wherever he has gone," Cahoon says. "He has been especially tough to beat in big games. He is the type of goalie and the type of kid that rises to the occasion."

He's got more MVP trophies than birthdays and his prep school goals against average couldn't be seen with a microscope, but once you get to college all that stuff – the trophies, the honors, the accolades – goes by the waist side. Everybody at this level was a high school superstar and everybody starts with a new slate, meaning the proving grounds are wiped clean and reset – a fact Warner has had trouble adjusting to.

"He was a big time goalie in high school and at Avon Old Farms," Cahoon said before Timmy's trial by fire began. "But with a freshman goalie sometimes you wonder how he is going to react to all the changes and expectations?"

Answer: not well...at least not yet.

There wasn't much Johnson could do to help Tim cope with his humbling transition from high school god to collegiate mortal – after all, Mike has had little experience with hockey immortality.

"I wasn't the number one guy [at Minnetonka] until my senior year," Johnson recalls. But what he could certainly help with is Tim's involuntary role as learner.

"I told him he has a great opportunity with Johnny here," Kilduff says. "Mike knows what it's like to go from backup to the No. 1 guy. He played behind Markus Helanen for three years before he got his shot. Tim has the chance to do the same thing in a better situation. He can be an apprentice for one year than he'll basically walk into camp next year as the man."

So despite all his struggles, the trials and tribulations, Tim Warner is being bred as the future of UMass between the pipes. Johnson says, "There's no doubt in my mind that within the next three years, Timmy will be in the spotlight."

And who knows, maybe when Tim has become the player he can be, he'll skate off the ice, head up this time, and Mike will be waiting at the end of the bench. Just to be sure he's the first to give his buddy a slap on the pads.

The Collegian Sports Staff would like to say "I love you" to...
AdamVinatieriTomBradyTroyBrownThePatriotsSuperfanSignGuyTheCanadianFigureSkatersMattVotourBillSimmonsOurMomsOurGroupiesBrettMaurerBryanSmithMoboWhiteShadowBonnieKennyBruiserLarryMassCancerManDaneTheOldCoffeeShopCharlieBrownSUPERMANEarlBoykinsLouRoeLarryBirdKevinMcHaleRobertParishJohnnyMostRyanNadeau27TheYankeesTheOriginalSixCammyGranatoSCLub7NSYNCWuTangBNLMosDefCommonTheRootsTeflonDonTyTryonHorvathPocherHattyGilmoreCarlStacklerTyWebbPrincessLeiaQueenAmidalaCMunnyNanSnacksHitHorJQA2010DonTaylorJimHughsonFoxsbergMaverickGooseIcemanThePingerMig28MiMiyagiDanielSanBUSTEDPatrioticGreekGuyGLINGbencalAmrilAnnaScottWilliamThackerJonathanKeithGuinnessBlueBeerStoreHerculesYOUKateCuligSJPTheDovesNestDeminosWorcesterDinersOnSnewsburyStreetTootAntoniosUAVJordanTheForceVogt..or so you're led to believe.

Depo-Provera®
Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension
Birth control you think about just 4 x a year
DEPO-PROVERA
What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
What other things should I consider before using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
What are the possible side effects of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
What if I want to become pregnant after using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
What are the risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Who should not use DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Should any precautions be followed during use of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Pharmacia & Upjohn Company
Kalamazoo, MI 49001 USA
CB-7.5
Rx only
Pharmacia & Upjohn

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE!...CALL NOW!
1-800-SURFS-UP
www.studentexpress.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for: Friday 2/8 – Thursday 2/14/2002
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com

ROLLERBALL (PG13) 12:50 4:50 7:45 9:50*	A WALK TO REMEMBER (PG) 12:25 7:35
COLLATERAL DAMAGE (R) 12:05 4:30 7:40 10:20*	BLACK HAWK DOWN (R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
BIG FAT LIAR (PG) 12:15 3:55 7:10 9:50*	SNOW DOGS (PG) 12:35 4:05 7:05 9:45
BIRTHDAY GIRL (R) 4:50 10:15*	THE ROYAL TENENBAUMS (R) 12:20 4:10 7:50 10:30
I AM SAM (PG13) 12:30 4:15 7:15 10:25	A BEAUTIFUL MIND (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
THE COUNT OF MONTE CHRISTO (PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00	LORD OF THE RINGS (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30
THE MOTHMAN PROPHECIES (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05

Tickets & Showtimes on the web at cinemark.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.14.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Tim Warner (left) has struggled this year. But all the while Mike Johnson has been on his side.

Partners in twine

Sometimes even a blue-chip freshman can't skate alone...

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Try not to forget that Tim Warner and Mike Johnson are goaltenders competing for the same spot on the same team. Especially because the next time you see them they'll likely be talking about classes or girls or what's going down this weekend – anything but hockey.

Excuse them if they look a lot more like friends than competitors, because that's exactly what they are. Friends, bros or buddies – you know, that whole male bonding thing where guys look out for each other.

That's why when teams like Boston College bury three softies past Tim in the first period of a game five weeks ago, Mike is at the end of the bench, making sure he's the first to greet him as he skates off the ice, head hanging, after that first tough period.

"I know after the BC game he started, the first two shots were two goals, after the period he came over and I had a few kind slash unkind words to say to him," Johnson recalls. "You know just to try to get him back in focus and the rest of the game he played real well. He kept us in it the rest of the way. If the situation warrants a good talking to, I'm definitely gonna give it to him."

Tim stopped all but one shot in the final 42 minutes of that game against BC, as the Minutemen stormed back, only to lose 4-3 in overtime – but we aren't supposed to talk about hockey.

Because when these two are away from the rink, they are off the ice, both body and mind. "Hockey rarely comes up in the conversation," Johnson says. "Timmy would much rather talk about girls anyway. He likes to talk about girls a lot. He's never seen 12,000 at one time before."

But living a weak backhand from a host of free spirited females isn't the only thing that the rookie wasn't used to when he arrived in Amherst. UMass, known affectionately as the Zoo, offers its fair share of distractions to any wet behind the ears freshman. All Tim had to do was shade his vision and keep his focus on hockey – and if his eyes did happen to wander, Mike was there to see his green mate down a road he knew well.

"He reminds me a lot of myself three or four years or go," Johnson, ever the grizzled veteran, recollects. "Coming in here in the same situation, doing the same things my first semester. There are a lot of negative temptations around. I guess in that regard it's kind of a teacher-student type thing where I just told him what to look out for and what not to get into."

So far, the only trouble Tim has run into has been on the ice.

***

Mike Johnson and Tim Warner were born three years, six months and thirteen days apart in two distant cities. Both learned their trade in the backyard of major American hockey hotbeds – Tim just 10 miles up the pike from Boston and Mike in Excelsior, Minn., a suburb of the Twin Cities. Their two careers, although departing from different stations, followed a similar route from peewee hockey on up until high school.

The pair both started out as forwards until, by some twist of fate that seemed to coincide with a sixth birthday, they ended up guarding the net instead of trying to conquer it. Tim, before his first game with the Waltham Mite C's, "showed up at the rink, and they didn't have a goalie. Coach asked me if I wanted to play, and I said yeah because I was used to my dad and my brother firing tennis balls at me in the cellar of my house.

"I actually got a shutout in my first game."

Lucky for Mike, he had more of a say in whether he was going to trade in the glory of goal scoring for a blocker, leg pads and the loneliest position in organized sports.

"When I was little, I was a really good forward believe it or not. I loved forward. The last game I ever played up front, I scored five goals in one game," Johnson recalls from his days with the Mite North Stars. "Then the next day I remember I had always seen the goalies wear a chest protector like a catcher in baseball, and I always thought that thing was so neat. One night I brought it home, I put it on and I just had my dad fire tennis balls at me. I'd go down and stop it, and I thought it was really fun.

"The next day I brought the chest protector back, and I said I want to play today and our normal goalie said 'OK ill skate out' and I played once and never stopped."

And just because tenders have to defend their superstitious stereotype, "I always brought the chest protector home with me because I thought that meant I was gonna play the next day."

So the goaltending lottery found two lucky winners four years and 1,300 miles apart, but equal in so many ways.

***

Mike Johnson sits on a bench in the lobby of the Mullins Center practice rink, flanked by two sportswriters clamoring for one of the many golden quotes he's known for offering up.

He's still in full pads, just a few minutes after practice, his goatee is unkempt and his hair shows the remnants of his helmet's air holes. He's forced to constantly wipe away the beads of sweat pouring down from his scruffy brown locks. Still, Johnson remains composed and attentive to every question.

The doors to the interview area creek open, and Tim Warner squeezes through. His hedgehog hair and glassy eyes are fixed toward the ground. He saunters stealthily, but he can't escape the notice of his goaltending brethren.

Mike, without once breaking eye contact with his interviewer, gives Timmy a nice slap on the pads with his white Koho goalie stick – enough to get his friend and teammate to lift his head up.

"The biggest thing he's told me is just play," Tim says. "Just forget about everything else, and just play."

That little stick slap on the pads – that's goaltending sign language for 'forget about it.' And lately Tim has had some things that would best be forgotten.

In his most recent start against New Hampshire, Warner was porous in a 6-1 loss – but Johnson kept his teammate's head up. "I just tell him to take it one day at a time and if things don't go his way don't get upset about it and let it ruin his next opportunity to do something," Johnson says. "Whether it's another shot or his next test or whatever."

The debacle with UNH was six games ago and with UMass and Merrimack in a dead heat for the final playoff spot in Hockey East it is looking increasingly bleak that Tim's next opportunity will come anytime soon.

So for now, sporadic play has the talented rook rear-bolt to the pine.

"He's young and inconsistent; he's only 18 years old. That's a big task for any goaltender at any level," UMass goalie coach Dave Kilduff exclaims. "The consistency will come with the experience."

Kilduff is in his first year with the Minutemen, but it didn't take him long to notice how comparable his pair of pupils are away from the game and how equally distinct they are in the crease.

"They really enjoy each other's company," Kilduff articulates. "But they are two totally different players."

Mike has an uncanny feel for the game, almost like a golfer who tears up his yardage chart before each round. "It's all instinct."

Turn to TWINE, page 8

UMass wastes tough defensive effort

Bonnies survive offensive nightmare

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

AMHERST – At his weekly radio show on Monday night, Massachusetts men's basketball coach Steve Lappas said that he wanted his Minutemen to keep the score against St. Bonaventure in the 60's. If they did so Lappas felt that his squad would be able to knock off the high-flying Bonnies for the second time this season.

St. Bonaventure	60
UMass	56

Less than a month ago the Minutemen handed St. Bonaventure its first home loss of the 67-65 on a Micah Brand dunk with less than 10 seconds remaining.

However there would be no such heroics last night as J.R. Bremer scored 31 points and Marques Green added 19 to give the Bonnies a 60-56 victory at the Mullins Center.

Bremer and Green were the offense for the Bonnies as the rest of the team managed just a paltry 10 points on 2-of-15 shooting. However it was enough as Anthony Anderson was unable to inbound the ball with 17.6 seconds left and UMass down by three. Bremer then hit one of two free throws a few seconds later to put the game away.

"Everybody feels down right now," said sophomore forward Raheim Lamb. "We had a chance to win and we just gave away the game."

Bremer hit 10-of-19 shots and 9-of-11 free throws en route to 31 points, marking the seventh time this season that he has scored 30 or more.

Lamb led the Minutemen with a career high 18 points but the inside trio of Brand, Kitwana Rhymer and Eric Williams managed just eight points and 13 boards against the much smaller Bonnies. Brand was the main culprit as he grabbed just two rebounds before picking up his fourth and fifth fouls at the 11:47 mark of the second half. Brand fouled Bremer on a layup and was then whistled for a technical foul immediately following the play for his fifth of the night. With Brand on the bench Lappas was forced to go to a smaller lineup thus negating his squad interior advantage. With Brand out for most of the second half SBU was able to grab a 32-30 rebounding edge including 12-7 on the offensive glass.

The Bonnies came into the game averaging more than 80 points per game and led the nation in three-pointers made. However, they scored a season low 60 points shot 35-percent from the floor and made just four-of-21 three-pointers.

But one of those three's was one of the biggest baskets of the game. Senior forward

Turn to DEFENSE, page 8

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Raheim Lamb scored 18 last night.

Happy Valentine's Day

Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice!

OPEN 7 DAYS Delivery Available

ICHIBAN SUSHI

Authentic Japanese Restaurant

1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, Off Main St.)

What is the Difference?

#1 Sushi
Daily fresh raw fish over sushi rice
Stay healthy & live longer!
"This one is what everyone falls in love with"

#2 Tatami Room
• Cozy & private
• Parties available up to 25 ppl

10% Off Dinner w/ Student ID (All 5 College Students)

Exceptional Catering Service
Sushi chef works @ your party
Lunch Specials $4.95 & up

Reserve for Karaoke

To the love of my life, Amy, the amorous accountant. The sensuous way you stroke my keys gets my numbers humming. Debits and credits have never been so sexy. Meet me at the computer for a hot time. Love, Quick Books Pro (multi-user edition)

Oh, and Brent...
Quick Books Pro loves you too...there's plenty muliti-user edition to go around. Love, QBP

To the wonderful girl who can kick my ass at Trivia Pursuit, but who doesn't stand a chance at Egyptian- Maybe we should settle the score over a blazing round of Dr. Mario? (Oh, and won't you be my Valentine?) From your (not always so forgetful) Admirer...

Snuggle Bunny: started with romantic, then got to frantic. When I am with you like a habit, without you I can't stand it. I love you! ~Munchky~

To all my girls
I love you all
Love Pimp Daddy Kulak

Carla, you are truely a blessing to me. I love you. God Bless! Hey no good!
Ko

My little Mister
I love you now and forever!
Happy Valentine's Day!
Love, Lay

Happy Valentine's Day to all my girls! 14 Salem Place: Andrea, Amber, Heather and Adrienne. Nothin' but love for ya!
Jaime Rae

I love you RTD!

Jimmy McCain is the sexiest man on campus! I can barely control myself when I'm around him! Love you!

Happy Valentine's Day
Virginia! You are the best!
Thanks! Love, Jaime

Happy Valentine's Day
Jamielle, Annoula, Marlenne, Danielle, and the Starbuck's girls! LOVE ALWAYS, TiaMamaMia and B. O. B.

WANTED: A valentine Preferebably 5'7", brolic arms, cut stomach and lines to sweep me off my et!

You're still my fave, hael. Who else but her fiish? I love you.
nda

KT
"Get that thing" "Five bucks, for you ten" Hogie

Dearest Alicia,
Did you enjoy the Godiva? Happy Birthday! Happy Valentine's Day! Love, Cupid

Lloyd!
My Amor...
Mon Cherie...
I love you
Tater

21 - You girls and Mary-Jane have kept this semester rolling. Happy Valentine's Day! -18

Sasquatch
The way your teeth glisten in the light as you swallow loaves of bread , and the way you massively disturb all that is around you makes my heart flutter.
Happy V-Day! - Big Foot

Craig, the way your hair flows is glamerous. Your basketball skills are amazing. I love everything about you. You're my one and only. Love Craig

To my Belissimo Baybanks
C Ladies -
I'm all cooled off - now it's time to heat me up.
Love, Ernesto

Einat Mieder - I'm a tall lefty from Israel - Meet me tonight for lobster ravioli and red wine.

Schahar - you are my first and last true love at UMass
Love, Erin

Nolan, We Miss you!
Love, Meg & J
Morgan miss you too!!!

To Jess and Alicia,
You two are my sisters away from home. Thanks for everything, and have a great Valentine's day!
Love, Jen

My Dearest Robina--
Who needs a guy on Valentine's Day when you have me?? I hope you have a FABULOUS day!! I love you! Maybe GYM-BOY or FREDDIE will turn out to be successes and surprise you after all!

Sean-
You are my love otter. I will miss you while you're out west, but I'll be dreaming of you. I'm so glad you're my honey pie.
Love, Your Little Nut Brown Hare. p.s. you're sexy

LONG NECK DEER-
Come home soon! I miss you! Love, Grasshopper

Suds, I can't wait to drop an album with you. As Common says, there is a light that shines special for you and me. -CMunny

To my wonderful Roommates-- Tom, Maribeth, Gavin--
Happy Valentine's Day! I hope you eat lots of chocolate! Love, Morgan

Lemur-
Your kknowledge of birds really ruffles my feathers. I love eating fruit with you and dancing to Michael Jackson. You're my favorite endangered species. The white man can't keep us down!
Love, your Sweed
To Nike and Leo
Have a Great Valentine's Day! Love always.

Hey Air Tran BOS
Brian, Kris, Howard, Carmen, Denny, Kyle, Maya Trisha, Steven, Chris, John. Well Everyone there, have a happy valentine's day!
~Love, Irop~

To my Peppermint Patty-
I hope you have a happy day out in San Francisco! Eat lots of Peppermint Patties!!! Miss you!
Love, Peppermint

To Mike Moron
Sponge Bob and his friends want to wish you a very happy valentine's day down in Bikini Bottom!

Russell C
You are my Valentine. You have a beautiful mind...and so much more. I want to be with you on this day. Be my gladiator. Seduce me with your rough magic. Our love is the sum of us. I love you Love M.

To Dawn
You are my sunshine. You are the sweetness inside Valentine's Day chocolates. Friends forever.
Mike

To Jimmy, "Turkey", Britta, Maya, Efan, Anna and the rest of Chadbourne...
Happy Valentine's Day
Love, Andrea

I miss you BOOGER - FACE. Get your "scrumps" up here!!!

Mike
No, I will NOT make out with you, Kulak!
Hugs and Kisses, Jess

To SJP
Why don't you come on over and eat some soup with me. Your legs must be tired 'cause you've been runnin' through my mind all day.
C$

Leigh Anne
You are my Princess Leia. You are my grape. You are my grape. Hug Nuzzle!
Love Mike

Jess May
Is that a keg in your pants 'cause I'd like to tap that ass!
Love Collegian Staff

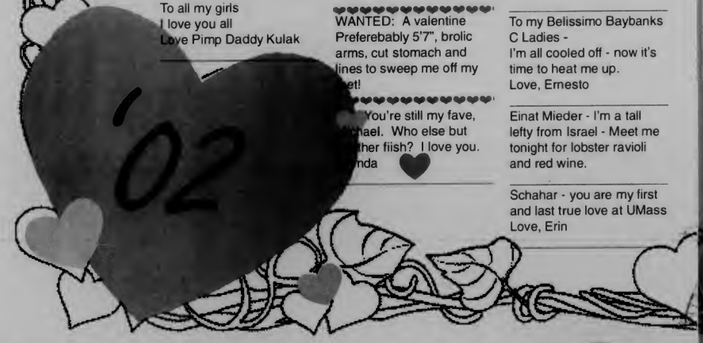
Dan
Thanks for dissing me for breakfast last weekend. Thanks for not calling. I love you too.
Love Catherine

You're the fly in my soup,
You're the pebble in my shoe,
you're the pea beneath my bed,
you're the bump on every head,
you're the peel on which I slip,
you're the pin in every hip,
you're the thorn in my side,
makes me wriggle and writhe...
You do it all because you're evil...Happy Valentine's Day Andrew & Jillian

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor

HOME OF THE 50 POUND BAG OF ICE!!!

Largest selection of Cigars in Hadley and Amherst.



Special Orders Welcome

BEER WINE LIQUOR ICE KEGS CIGARS CLOVES CIGARETTES TOBACCO

Amex, Disc, MC, Visa Debit Accepted

333 Russell Street (Route 9)
Hadley, MA
Hours: Mon-Sat, 9am-11pm
(413) 584-8174

Dear Aleks,
Happy 21st and V-Day with Love
J

Historic 1705
Salem Cross Inn 1705
Route 9 - West Brookfield, MA 01585

Enjoy traditional New England Dining in a beautifully restored colonial farmhouse

On Valentine's Day
Enjoy music with Lori Brooks
Starting at 8:00pm
in the Chestnut Room by the Fireplace
Try our Prime Rib and Homemade Desserts

Call or e-mail for brochures and sample menus
Phone: 508-867-8337 Fax: 508-867-0351
salemxinn@aol.com • www.salemcrossinn.com

❤ February Hours ❤
Thursday and Friday 11:30 - 9:00
Saturday 5:00 - 9:00 Sunday noon - 8:00
Valentine's Day
Thursday February 14, 2002 - Reservations Suggested

Lonely Hearts Club — Beckwith Builders

Finding a Part-ner is easy at...

PELHAM AUTO PARTS
RT. 9 AMHERST BELCHERTOWN LINE
256-0457

TIRED but willing to go another 150K! Red GTI is overbored and waiting for that special piston. Give me a ring!
853-TSI

Don't be fuel-ish! Newer (low 30's) style Camry seeks to climb hills with fresh electric pump. Please-no "universal" types!
598-ABJ

Too Hot to BELIEVE! Middle age Honda hits 280° day or night! Seeking a Thermally responsive individual about 160° to control my steamy personality.
145-SCH

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER, UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities • Sororities Clubs • Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy [illegible]

Do you have questions about [illegible] The Women's Center, Counseling & Consultation Services, Room 428 Student Union.

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Fuel Co-Op. Open now. Call 545-0801 or stop by Commuter Services, Room 428 Student Union.

THE SPOT! Memorial Drive, Chicopee. Monday nights 18+ dance Party with DJ Seyhre. Friday nights DJ Chris Jones top 40 Dance Party. Saturday 2/16 "Undertow" the Toole Tribute 10 p.m. $3.00 cover. Sunday 2/17 "Countdown to St. Patty's Day" with St George the X-rated comedian + "meet the guiness girls!".

Contact your Avon Representative at Contact Call 585-[illegible] today.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 1 bedrooms [illegible] SHOWPLACE [illegible] SEPTEMBER [illegible]

CENTER OF TOWN [illegible] Second Street [illegible] SHOWPLACE [illegible] SEPTEMBER [illegible]

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Honda Accord call 549-3685.

1994 Acura Integra Auto, 88,433, AM/FM cassette, Power Steering Windows, Sunroof, single owner, excellent condition $5,000 OBO 546-[illegible]

'85 Volvo Wagon Auto, [illegible] $700, 665-8109 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with [illegible] for $139.00. Color Printing laptop start at $99.00 413-584-8857.

EMPLOYMENT

After school care positions available. 20 cents and [illegible] Experience with school age children preferred. Call Matt or Brett @ the YMCA at 586-8000, option 3 584-7086.

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 866-291-3884 ext. 485.

Someone to watch vending booth $8.00 per hr. Tues. & Thurs. 11:00-12:15, Fri. 11:40-12:15 Call Mike 549-1456.

Mosquitoman Pest Control is looking to hire 2-4 Seasonal Service Technicians. Height and weight requirements include treating outside of residential exterior foundations. THE JOB IS OUTDOOR WORK, NOT INDOOR! Applicants must be [illegible] Valid driver's license [illegible] Willing to work weekends [illegible] Apply 2002 season [illegible] Duties include [illegible] Mosquitoman [illegible] Application is available [illegible] SHOWPLACE [illegible] SEPTEMBER [illegible]

CENTER OF TOWN [illegible] Second Street [illegible] SHOWPLACE [illegible] SEPTEMBER [illegible]

Substitute teachers needed for full days and part days $7.00 an hour. Cushman Scott Children's Center 549-1167.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Charlemont 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary, will train. Full and part time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photographs position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. 413-625-2288.

Instructor, the Princeton Review, the nation's largest test prep company, seeks teachers for MCAT and MCAS courses, held year round in the Springfield area. Teaching experience helpful, but not required. Job involves teaching small groups of high school students basic math and English skills, as well as test-taking strategies. Starting pay is $11/hr. paid training and all course materials provided. Great part-time job, flexible hours. For more information call the Princeton Review at 413-584-6849. To apply, fax cover letter and resume to the Princeton Review at 413-586-4939.

Childcare needed for 2 children in our Amherst Home. Mon. 3:15-5:15 Wed. 1:30-5:30 $8.00 an hr 253-4197.

Mothers helper/ PCA. Help disabled mom with dressing and household chores. References and drivers license required. Own transportation to south Deerfield 2 to 3 afternoons/ week. $8/hour. 665-4814.

Cruise Line. Entry level/ on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. 954-423-4284 www.cruisecareers.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE; DJ Jonas and NYB productions are now looking for spring semester, call 545-8527.

EMPLOYMENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742.

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

FOR SALE

Mountain Bike 99 Fusion 19" excellent $400 413-374-0653.

Guitar Cort Acoustic/ electric with Fishman preamp and case. Mint cond. $450 413-374-0655.

FURNITURE

Couch Green/ floral pillows, $150.00, Recliner Lazyboy $100.00 259-1020.

PERSONAL

Formal date needed: 3 prom dates required contact Scott Simmons 549-9441.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female only [illegible] available ASAP [illegible] included [illegible]

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and support 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Montreal Maddness Spring Weekends $99 Quad Occupancy price includes round trip luxury motor coach, 2 nights deluxe hotel, sightseeing tour of town, breakfast, dinner, free millimeter glamorous dome - more! Departs March 15-17, April 19-21, other weekends available. $50 security req. Call Global Express Travel 781-878-0176.

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sunc[illegible]

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlessvacations.com

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties, Lowest prices! www.leisuretours.com (800) 985-6789

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDI GRAS. RIPS NEEDED... TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203 WWW.LEISURETOURS.COM

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen. Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze!food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line [illegible] 1-800-426-7710

TRAVEL

Spring Break Super Sale! Book your trip with StudentCity.com and save up to $100 per person to Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, Padre and Florida. Most popular student hotels including the Oasis and the Nassau Marriott Crystal Palace! Prices start at $399! Sale ends soon! CALL NOW! 1-800-293-1443 or go to StudentCity.com!

WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@hitsp[illegible]

ADVERTISE WITH US!

WRITE FOR US!

HSCN

Morning Sessions Radio Network

THURSDAY EVENING		C - Campus				FEBRUARY 14, 2002
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford's	Business Rpt.	Newshour with Jim Lehrer		★★½ "The Forest Hours" (1954) Narrated by Orson Welles				Frontline "Faith in Stones"		This Old Hse.	Hometime
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Raymond	King	CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Agency "Rules of the Game"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Raymond	King	CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Agency "Rules of the Game"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Charlie Brown	Winnie-Pooh	Funniest Home Videos		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Charmed "Murder by Fan"		Charmed (N) (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)
WTXX	20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Charmed "Murder by Fan"		Charmed (N) (In Stereo)		News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Family Guy	Family Guy	Temptation Island 2 (In Stereo)		News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)
WGBY	57	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour with Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Doctors	Frontline "Faith in Stones"		Mystery! Inspector Lynley		Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Charlie Brown	Winnie-Pooh	Funniest Home Videos		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel (N)	Shipmates (N)
WTBS	29	Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	★½ "Mars Attacks!" (1996, Comedy) (PA) Jack Nicholson, Glenn Close				★★ "Wildcats" (1986, Comedy) Goldie Hawn
A&E	265	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Jack the Ripper		★★½ "Longitude" (2000, Drama) (Part 1 of 2) Michael Gambon				Law & Order: Nurture"
CNN	20	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Live From...	The Point	Larry King Live		News night		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Geeks	★★★ "An Ideal Husband" (1999, Comedy) Rupert Everett				South Park	Man Show	Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	280	Monkeys of the Temple Forest		Wild and Weird: Wild Sex		Mysteries of the Sea		Science Mysteries		Would You Believe It		Justice Files	Scams
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		College Basketball North Carolina State at Duke (Live)				College Basketball Notre Dame at Kentucky (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★½ "Seasons of the Heart" (1994, Drama) Cicely Tyson				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	32	Who Knows?	Music Videos	Making Video	Flipped	Global Forum-Colin Powell		Real World	True Life	Tough Enough	Dismissed	Kidnapped
NICK	68	Told by Ginger	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Sponge	Told by Ginger	Family Ties	Family Ties	Family Ties	Family Ties	Family Ties	Family Ties
SCIFI	66	Star Trek: The Next Gener.		Earth: Final Conflict	Taken	Outer Limits "Stasis"		★½ "Project Shadowchaser" (1992, Science Fiction) Martin Kove				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	280	Sixth Sense		In the Mind of Criminal		Secrets of Forensic Science		Unwrapped: The Mysterious		Mummies: Frozen in Time		Secrets of Forensic Science
TNT	54	NYPD Blue	Safe Harbor	Pretender (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Judge Dread"		NBA Basketball Washington Wizards at Sacramento Kings. (Live)				Inside NBA
USA	282	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Artist"		★★ "Never Been Kissed" (1999, Comedy) Drew Barrymore				Westminster 2002		Living Single	Martin
HBO	65	Living Dolls: The Making of a Child				★★½ "All the Pretty Horses" (2000, Western) Matt Damon. PG-13		Vagina Monologues (N) (In Stereo)				Taxicab Confessions
MAX	43	★★½ "Something to Talk About" (1995) R				★★½ "The Bodyguard" (1992, Suspense) Kevin Costner (In Stereo) R				★ "Valentine" (2001, Horror) David Boreanaz R		Erotic
SHOW	68	(5:45) ★★½ "Just One Night" (2000) PG-13				Filmmaker		★★★ "Mission: Impossible 2" (2000, Action) Tom Cruise. PG-13"		Going to California (N)		★★ "The Story of Us" (1999) R

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

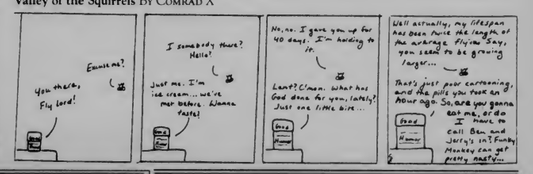
Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Noodle By Jacki

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Skybox By Blake

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"Don't get VD on V-Day!!!"

–Kate Amos

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 36 LOW: 21	HIGH: 46 LOW: 25	HIGH: 47 LOW: 21

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – This is a good day to try, once again, to broaden your horizons and increase the amount of hands-on learning you can do. Get involved! You're gonna get laid!
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may realize that a recent failure has been nothing more than a combination of bad taste and bad timing – two things you can surely fix. You're gonna get laid!
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You should be able to maintain your optimistic outlook all day long, provided you focus on what you can do, rather than on what you can't. You're gonna get laid!
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're going to find bargains wherever you go, so don't splurge on anything that doesn't suit your needs or your bank account. You're gonna get laid!
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your first look at a new opportunity may reveal only a small portion of what could be ahead if you change paths at this juncture. You're gonna get laid!
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You can help someone come alive in a new and perhaps rather intimidating situation. By day's end, you'll be playing the role of teacher AND student. You're gonna get laid!
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – A dream can come true today, but only if you approach it from a realistic and down-to-earth point of view. You're gonna get laid!
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Don't be tempted to change your story today. Stick to the truth and make things as clear and specific as you can. You're gonna get laid!
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Though the easy way out is not for you today, there is no reason for you to make things more difficult than they already are.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – If you carry around a condom in your pocket, you're sure to get laid!
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may be able to parlay a pure pleasure and profits today, but you're going to have to follow the rules as you do so. Don't be tempted to cheat. You're gonna get laid!
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You may be hanging onto the past in all the wrong ways right now, and that's what's holding you back. Enjoy memories; avoid obsessions! You're gonna get laid!

HAPPY CHOCO-LATE DAY!

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Tomato Soup
OneyGa

Chicken Quesadilla

Beef Enchilada Casserole

Vegan Black Bean Quesadilla (vegan)

Garlic Eggplant Stir Fry (W Basics)

DINNER

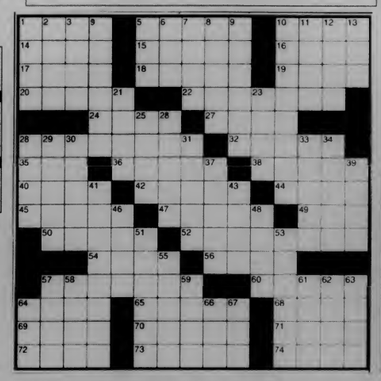
Tomato Soup

Grilled Ham Steak

Baked Chicken Quarter

Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
*
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thursday VALENTINE'S DAY
Karaoke w/Cloud Nine $2 cover
Saturday Ware River Club
Americana Rock $3 cover
Sunday David Loysong
Jazz no cover
Monday Amherst Jazz Orchestra
8:30-11pm
36 N. Pleasant Street • Amherst
413 - 253 - 4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM



ACROSS
1 Some tennis shots
5 Beeper
10 "— Ado About Nothing"
14 Give forth
15 Juliet's love
16 She, in Paris
17 Slam governess
18 Mops
19 Soon, in verse
20 Boxer's dukes
22 Gossip
24 Atoms with a charge
27 Place
28 Massed critters
32 Jewel weight
35 Can. neighbor
36 Nature walk
38 Reward for bravery
40 Avoid
42 "Golden touch" king
44 Only
45 Actress Hunt
47 Fresh scent
49 Pitcher Darling
50 Type of trapshooting
52 Dregs
54 Globule
56 Throw a tantrum
57 Awaited
60 Nun's attire
64 Lion's pride
65 Detects
66 Kind of prize
69 Rainbow shapes
70 Ceiling
71 Dog in "Beetle Bailey"
72 Potpie ingredients
73 Playground gear
74 Common question

DOWN
1 Page of a book
2 Science magazine
3 Flour holders
4 Radio noise
5 18th letters
6 Like valleys
7 Asian nanny
8 Resist authority
9 Tile design
10 Finds the width
11 Wing-to-elbow bone
12 Sale
13 Poultry buy
21 Grime
23 Paper quantity
25 Average
26 Slow mover
28 Make it snappy
29 Embers, finally
30 Fill the seams
31 Margins
33 Love dearly
34 Hawk's gripper
37 Sitter, as an excuse
39 Advanced, as cash
41 Uncalled-for
43 Pepsi, e.g.
46 — Wolfe
48 Almost, in poems
51 Adds up
53 Pasture
55 Danger
57 Do a kitchen chore
58 Quechua speaker
59 Ms. Moore
61 Two at the same time
62 Least bit
63 Horse's gait
64 Arias page
66 Help
67 Sault — Marie

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

H	A	L	F		S	I	L	O	S		T	I	P	S
A	L	A	I		K	N	O	L	L		O	D	I	E
S	O	U	R		A	L	L	E	Y		Y	O	K	E
P	E	D	E	S	T	A	L		F	I	L	E	D
				W	H	E	W		A	T	O	N
T	A	B	O	O		M	A	R	I	G	O	L	D
I	G	L	O	O		M	O	R	E	L		C	A	R
B	E	A	D		C	A	N	O	E		K	A	T	E
I	N	S		D	O	Z	E	N		P	I	L	E	S
A	T	T	O	R	N	E	Y		Y	E	A	R	S
			Y	U	K	S		C	U	R	L
P	R	I	S	M		R	O	S	E	B	U	D	S
E	A	S	T		B	A	Y	O	U		A	R	I	A
E	R	L	E		O	S	A	K	A		S	A	C	K
L	E	E	R		P	A	N	E	L		A	L	E	E

10-23-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff
Sam Wilkinson
Tibora Gircyc-Blum
Jess May
Mike Kulak
Andrea Mangini
Melissa Hammel

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

WHO WILL MEASURE
THE ECONOMY'S
ON TRUTH, INTEGRITY AND HONESTY RATHER THAN PERCEPTION,
SPECULATION
AND GOSSIP?

Investors need assurance to make decisions.
Help us help them and the companies whose stock they buy, and we'll help you build a career.

www.pwcglobal.com/lookhere
Opportunities. Info. Free tickets.

Look beyond the numbers.

We heart Madonna. 4eva.
Arts Page 5

Education anyone?
Ed/Op Page 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

FRIDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE EIGHTY TWO ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.15.02

Faculty recommend two million dollar cut to athletics

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Faculty at the University of Massachusetts are recommending a two million dollar cut to the athletic department over the next four years.

The advisory resolution was passed by the Faculty Senate at yesterday's meeting after much discussion – not over whether or not to cut athletics, but over the severity. The yearly cut, if implemented, would represent a yearly 2.7 percent cut in the department's 18 million dollar budget.

Professor Craig Moore, chair of the Program and Budget Council, put forth the motion last semester after the Faculty Senate directed the council to look into the athletic budget. The idea to cut athletics was formulated before the budget cuts in January, and that's the criteria the council used, Moore explained.

"We did that in isolation of those other areas [of the budget]," Moore said. "This is not the result of any comprehensive review of the entire campus."

The intent of the motion is to spread out the pain of cuts, Moore said, and to protect academics.

"The academic mission of the campus is primary," Moore said. "The academic heart of the campus must be given priority."

The report associated with the motion stated that athletics were not a predominant factor in enrollment, but that academic quality was the deciding factor.

"If one evaluates the importance of athletic prominence to prospective applicants and their parents, the evidence is that it has very little influence on the decision to apply or attend," the report read. "Highest on their list is the availability of majors, academic reputation of the institution, and the quality of the faculty."

The original motive of the motion was to send a message that the campus was tired of seeing money poured into failing programs, Moore said – hence the original one million dollar figure. The UMass football program lost 2,571,262 dollars last year, according to the 2000-01 UMass Athletic Department Annual Report. Moving to Division I-A, the council concluded, is neither fiscally sound nor wise.

"I-A football appears to be a political "cause" that some members of our board of trustees are enamored with but has not been thought through very well," the motion's report stated. "Shouldn't the move to I-A football come after we move our campus into the highest academic conference? Isn't highest-quality academics our primary mission?"

Senator Robert Levin, a professor of Food Science, proposed to amend the motion to read that the largest budgeted athletic programs should be targeted first, and that no teams may be eliminated.

Levin said he didn't want to see athletics "removing excellence to preserve mediocrity."

Senator Jack Tager, a professor of History, was against the amendment because it insinuated that the faculty distrusted the Athletic Department.

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

State Representative Steve Kulnik (D-Turner's Falls) addressed the Faculty Senate yesterday. Kulnik is a UMass alumnus.

"These are our colleagues," Tager said. "Whatever decision they make will become a public decision, and there will be a public response."

Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams cautioned that while she supported the motion, no program was exempt from the review that was ongoing. Williams hinted that in coming weeks there would be more information available on the cuts.

Senator Ron Story, a professor of History, spoke in favor of the motion.

"The board of trustees doesn't care about us," Story said. "If this amendment fails, I will propose that we increase the amount."

The amendment failed, as senators disagreed over whether or not it was the Faculty Senate's job to tell the Athletic department how to do its job, and senators voted to increase the amount from one million dollars to two million. The final amount is arbitrary though, Moore said.

"We just picked the figure of one million dollars to send a message," Moore said. Moore also explained that reviews were ongoing in the Athletic department and that any cuts may in fact be greater than the two million dollar recommendation.

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

A taste of the real world
Students learned about summer positions at numerous companies at yesterday's Career Fair held in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Polymer Science professors reap awards for scientific achievments

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

William McKnight and Richard Ferris, of the Department of Polymer Science and Engineering at the University of Massachusetts were both the recipients of prestigious science related awards.

Both professors have been previously honored by the University for their numerous accomplishments by receiving the Samuel F. Conti Faculty Fellowship Award.

McKnight received the Herman F. Mark award, presented by the American Chemical Society's division of polymer chemistry. The award recognizes outstanding leadership and research in the field of polymer science and carries with it 2,000 dollars. McKnight will travel to Sonoma, Calif. to give an award address at the 2002 Biennial Polymer Symposium later in the year.

A professor at the University since 1956, McKnight was one of the faculty members responsible for creating the department of polymer science and engineering, a program that received full status in 1974. He was formerly a member of the chemistry department. He served as the head of the department for a total of 16 years before returning to a teaching position in 1995.

McKnight primarily studies both polymers and polymer blends for their strength and stiffness and how that relates to their molecular structure. His specialty is polymer blending.

This is not the first time that McKnight was recognized for excellence; other accolades include a membership to the National Academy of Engineering, a fellowship at the American Physical Society and the American Society for the Advancement of Science.

He has also been awarded the American Chemistry Society Award in Polymer Science, the Ford Prize in High Polymer Physics and was named a distinguished faculty member. He is also the Wilmer D. Barrett Chair Emeritus.

Professor Ferris was also recognized for his significant achievements in the area of chemistry and chemical engineering. He will receive the Pruitt Award that highlights his commitment to sponsoring discussions between the community and other universities in the area of chemistry.

With the award Ferris receives an engraved plaque and $5,000 that will be donated to the Polymer Science and Engineering Graduate Student Club for a program that promotes activities that foster the education of chemistry in grades K-12.

The award will be presented at a banquet in Ferris's honor in Cincinnati, Ohio this spring.

The professor has served as head of his department for five years, up until recently in 2001. He has been part of the faculty for 28 years and holds a number of other awards in addition to this honor. He is a distinguished faculty member and has authored approximately 300 research publications and come up with 15 patents.

Ferris primarily studies experimental mechanics and continuum in mechanics and physics. He heads up a research team of 10 PhD candidates and four visiting scientists that have used these new experimental methods to study the behavior of polymers and their composites.

Collectively both professors have managed to graduate 96 doctoral students from their program.

Sex trafficking, abuse examined

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Janice G. Raymond, a Women's Studies professor, examined the issue of trafficking women into the sex industries of North America, Asia, and Latin America in her two-year long study. The findings were publicly released earlier this month.

According to a recent press release, the study's results will aid in gaining legislation support for international policies to guard women's human rights, more effectively prosecute sex traffickers, and prevent prostitution.

The study included interviews with 146 women, each trafficked in the sex market of Indonesia, the Philippines, Thailand, Venezuela, or the United States. While some of interviewees were trafficked for prostitution within their native countries, others were brought into particular countries for the explicit purpose of serving in the sex industry.

Each woman recalled her recruitment process, her transfers across nation's borders, and the type of people to become her clients/buyers in order to give the researchers a clearer comprehension of the sex industry's inner workings.

Finally, interviewees were asked to share their opinions about what changes, ranging from social to legal to political, should be made to regulate this industry.

"Our goal was to provide a very good reference point for advocacy that prostitution is a form of violence against women and has serious consequences on the health of women," Raymond reported. "We will advocate for anti-trafficking legislation that does not legitimate the commercial sex industry."

Among the information gathered, Raymond especially noted that the United States had a particular high rate of violence against women in the industry.

"They [women sex trafficked in the United States] reported the highest rate of physical harm of all of the women we interviewed," she explained.

Raymond added that another purpose this study set out to achieve was to make such harm visible those who might simply live their lives without taking notice of its existence.

"Demand is the least visible aspect of the sex trafficking problem. National legislation has to address the buyer, client, and customer," she said. "Supply of women trafficked from abroad into the U.S. could not function without buyer demand and the existence of organized local sex industries that flourished with impunity."

Raymond explained that the United Nations approximates that four million people are trafficked throughout the world every year, and the majority of these people are women and girls. Based on the study's findings, she noted that the recruiting networks, regardless of their size, range from a connection to organized crime to dealing with prostitutes' own families or community members.

"Victims need protection, financial aid, jobs, legal help, counseling, visas, and legal residence, as well as other resources," she pointed out. "Instead of punishing the men, we punish the women. Victims of sex trafficking should not be treated as criminals."

This study, researched by six individuals experienced in research and women's advocacy, including Raymond, was funded with a 260,000-dollar grant from the Ford Foundation to the Coalition Against Trafficking in Women. Raymond, a co-editor of the international, non-profit organization, served as the study's international coordinator.

Duke facing Teaching Assitant shortage

By Dave Ingram
The Chronicle (Duke U.)

(U-WIRE) DURHAM, N.C. — Faced with a changing curriculum, increased enrollments and competition for graduate students' time, many Duke University Arts and Sciences departments are working to resolve a shortage in the number of teaching assistants.

Although the shortage is not new in many disciplines, administrators said the problem is increasing. The severity of the problem varies by department, but the need for qualified aides to lead labs and lecture sections has caused some departments to seek other sources.

Administrators report such sources – including undergraduates and other departments' graduate students – have helped to fill the need, but the shortage of TAs from their own departments underlines the tensions of graduate student life.

One of the principal causes of the shortage has been the ability of graduate students to obtain grants. Many students who otherwise might teach to earn money from their departments instead are able to get external funding.

"We determined the funding packages for students early on in the year, in response to Graduate School packages, so when funds become available later on, we often end up short on TAs," said Reiko Mazuka, director of graduate studies in psychology: social and health sciences. "If you get a grant for research, you can't also say you want to TA."

Mazuka said her department usually falls short by a few TAs, and the department closes the gap either by giving students more teaching hours or by hiring students from other departments, such as sociology or statistics. To be considered students for tax purposes, however, TAs must work no more than 20 hours a week.

For most students, that remains a non-issue if they are able to get fellowships, become research assistants for professors, or obtain other forms of support.

"The real tension is between making sure that you have funding and making sure you have progress toward your degree requirements," said Alison Papadakis, a fourth-year graduate student in psychology: social and health sciences. "If you can do something that will get you closer to having your degree requirements done, I prefer to do that than TA-ing, which takes time on top of other work I could do."

The shortage in TAs has been exacerbated by recent course changes, including aspects of Curriculum 2000. Under that plan, many disciplines have had to develop new courses to help students fulfill graduation requirements. The biology department, for example, added several large lectures, including a course on AIDS and one on the biology of dinosaurs.

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

By Jeff Swartz

"What would you buy someone who's birthday is on Valentine's Day?"

[illegible] 2003
[illegible]
Jewelry

Arjah Kloet Grad
Geology
"Flowers, it is Valentine's Day after all."

Aimee Sullivan 2002
Communications
"Flowers, but they can't be red."

Carrie Bestnick 2005 and Robyn Della-Giustina 2005
Psychology and Undeclared
"Those boxes with the magnets, noses that kiss."

Eric Van Orden 2004
Marketing
"A vibrator or a Massaversity of Unichusetts sweatshirt."

Kara Nostrand 2003
BDIC
"Mr. Rightnow and a jug of Offshore Amber Ale for later, so we can get wicked retahded. Happy Birthday Greta!"

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts and is supported by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Class Day Collegian, first came out in 1891, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1928. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a Broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2002
ARE YOU READY?
Negril and Montego Bay
WE LOVE ONE YEAR! ONE GREAT PARTY!
Come to Jamaica and party all night at an unbelievable price.
From airfare to your hotel, parties and activities, these reliable tour operators will get you there
Sun Splash Tours
1.800.426.7710
www.sunsplashtours.com
Student Travel Services
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WILDER THAN A PANTY RAID

NATIONAL LAMPOON'S
VAN WILDER
IN THEATRES SPRING 2002
WWW.RATORALLAMPOON.COM
THIS FILM IS NOT YET RATED.
© 2001 Die Sechste Weltweite Produktions GmbH & Co. Medien und Merch KG. All Rights Reserved. NATIONAL LAMPOON'S AND © 21 Laboratories. All Rights Reserved.

it's not for everyone, but that's
[the point].
In Army ROTC you'll push yourself. Test your limits. And in the process, learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. You could even get a scholarship. Register today for an Army ROTC class. Because you're not just like "everyone."
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Oregon's athletics costing too much; sports reports half million dollar deficit

By Allison Pyburn
OSU Daily Barometer (Oregon State U.)

(U-WIRE) CORVALLIS, Ore. — An audit reveals the Oregon State University department of athletics has not met a commitment to pay down its debt, regardless of soaring revenue and increased reliance on the university's general fund dollars.

Despite "inaccurate" information given to the Oregon University System by OSU management, auditors uncovered that a commitment to make payment on the athletics department's debt was sidestepped completely for fiscal year 2001, which ended June 30.

That missed payment followed a three-year span from June 1998 to June 2001 in which the OSU athletics department experienced a 53 percent jump in annual revenue from $13.3 million to $25.4 million, the audit states.

At the same time, the department upped spending 67 percent, from $19.6 million to $29.2 million.

Despite those increased revenues and increased expenditures, including a $2 million "Jumbotron" for Reser Stadium, the athletics department relied on the university's general fund for an increasing amount of money. Meanwhile, the department neglected a total of $600,000 toward paying off its deficit.

"Athletics continues to require infusions of cash from E&G (education and general) funds," the report stated. "E&G Fund expenditures for athletics totaled $2.6 million for the first six months of the current year, compared to $2.1 million for the first six months of the prior year."

As of Dec. 31, $8 million in E&G funds had been advanced to the athletics department to cover "short-term cash requirements," the report noted. That $8 million advance occurred sometime between Dec. 31, 2000, and Dec. 31, 2001.

In mid-October, OSU announced a $19 million shortfall in its general fund budget.

"The university will depend on its distribution from the Pac-10 Conference in June 2002 to repay the advanced due at year-end," the report stated.

The athletics department received $5.6 million from the Pac-10 last year.

"They are part of us, but they do not stand alone," OSU Vice President of Finance and Administration Mark McCambridge said of the athletics department.

The auditors said the department may become even more dependent on general fund monies. "Unless its results from operations improve, additional subsidies from E&G funds may be necessary if athletics is to meet its deficit reduction target at June 30, 2002," the report stated.

General fund dollars at OSU are monies intended to be used on the general operating and education expenses of the university.

"The general fund part of the budget is just like the part that supports a chemistry class," McCambridge said.

McCambridge said many people are involved in discussions surrounding allocations of general fund dollars, but the provost ultimately approves the budget.

"I believe the reason for raising it to the $4.3 million was to ensure that they could continue to run a quality program for their student-athletes and fulfill their deficit reduction program," McCambridge said. The department also received $1.14 million in student fees in 2001 and anticipates more than $1.16 million this year.

"The repercussions that it has on students is tremendous," said ASOSU President Justin Geddes. "I'm extremely disappointed in the way in which we are spending E&G funds. Any source of general funds that are not being put into the academic sector of the university is hurting students."

Oregon State's athletics department has had a history of debt. The current plan in place to pay off the debt does not include intentions to eliminate the liability, the audit reported.

A previous commitment to eliminate the long-standing debt by 2005 was revised by OSU President Paul Risser in April 1998 and was approved by the state Board of Higher Education. That commitment was revised twice but finally stated by June 2003 the deficit will not exceed $3.8 million.

As of June 30, the athletics department's deficit was $600,000 more than the amount to which Risser had committed. OSU officials told auditors money to cover the extra deficit was added to the account after the year had passed. Auditors found that information to be false.

There was no evidence of payment being made at all during the 2001 fiscal year, OSU Director of Business Affairs Beth Barker said.

"I didn't intend to fib to them," McCambridge said. "But I was not given accurate information."

McCambridge took over as interim vice president of finance and administration following the reassignment of Rob Spector Nov. 1.

At this time, McCambridge said he was questioned by OSU auditors regarding last year's missing payment.

"I called and asked the athletics department folks whether or not it had been made," he said.

McCambridge said he was told by a member of the athletics accounting staff the payment had been made.

"So I responded back to the chancellor's office that it had occurred," McCambridge said.

The actual plan to manage the deficit is handled by the staff in the athletic department, he said.

Asked whether or not McCambridge has questioned the reason for the "miscommunication," he said, "I have not gotten around to asking that question. This is a concern. It won't happen again."

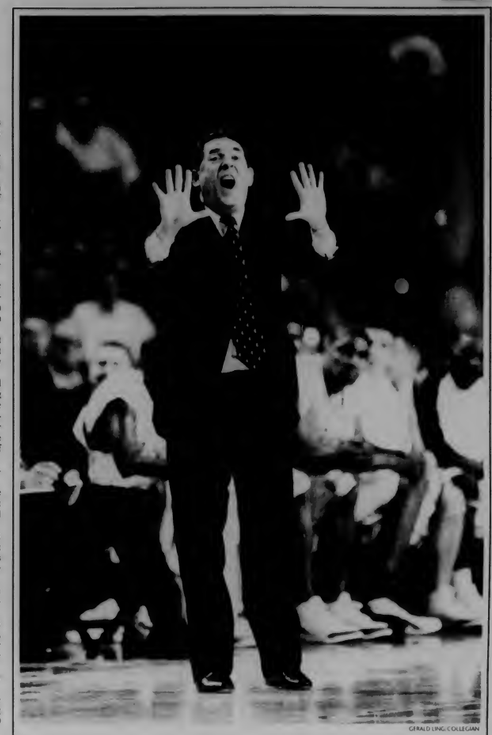
According to the university's latest debt reduction commitment, the athletics deficit should be no more than $4.4 million by June 30.

OUS Vice Chancellor for Finance and Administration Tom Anderes said judging by the auditors' report, it doesn't look like the athletics department will meet its commitment for 2002. McCambridge, Barker and Wednesday's daily cash report said the athletics department now has a deficit of $4.2 million.

Barker said late payments from the athletics department are not unusual.

"It was a mistake," Barker said. "They've met and exceeded those commitments, but not every year by the close of the fiscal year."

"If they put money in to offset a deficit after the fiscal year is closed, you can't apply those dollars to that year," Anderes said. "It may well apply to 2002, but how does that apply to 2001?"



OSU Director of Athletics Mitch Barnhart could not be reached for comment.

In 1998 the department's debt stood at $8.3 million. According to Bob Bruce, OUS assistant to the vice chancellor for communications, a history of athletic indebtedness can be traced back to 1992.

"Since that time, the board has periodically requested reports," Bruce said.

The audit will be presented at the state Board of Higher Education's meeting Friday along with an audit of OSU's $19 million shortfall and redesign.

The athletics department audit also examined budgets from University of Oregon and Portland State University. Both universities have eliminated their athletic debts.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Five games!
That is how many games are left for the Minutemen in the Atlantic 10 regular season.

Writers wanted!
See this space?
It could be filled with your concise and accurate articles on campus, local and national news.
Interested?
Come down to The Collegian's spacious offices in the Campus Center Basement anytime, or attend a News meeting on Tuesdays at 5:30 p.m.

WHAT OFFICE

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE!...CALL NOW!
1-800-SURFS-UP
www.studentexpress.com

carloansOK.com
GET YOUR CAR IN 24 HOURS
FASTAPP CODE: 2032
Log on to www.carloansok.com and fill out the fast and secure online application. Walk into the dealership already approved and ready to drive the car of your choice! Log on now! www.carloansok.com
FAST! EASY! ON-LINE AUTO APPROVAL!

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FRIDAY 2/15-THURSDAY 2/21/2002
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Not a Wife(R) 12:50 4:45 7:45 10:40*
John Q(PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
Collateral Damage(R) 12:40 4:30 7:40 10:25*
Big Fat Liar(PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:10 9:50*
Super Troopers(R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15*
Crocodile(PG13) 12:00 2:15 4:35 7:05 9:45*
Return to Neverland(G) 12:35 2:30 4:40 7:15 9:20*
I Am Sam(PG13) 12:30 4:15 10:25
The Count Of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:50 7:00 10:00
Black Hawk Down(R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:20
The Royal Tenenbaums(R) 12:20 7:50
A Beautiful Mind(PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:30
Lord Of the Rings(PG13) 3:45 7:30*
Senior Movie 2/21/02 Collateral Damage
Senior Movie 2/7/02 I Am Sam doors open at 11:45am
* no passes/superpasses
cinemark.com

• BEST FOREIGN FILM • BEST SOUND • BEST ORIGINAL SCREENPLAY
• BEST CINEMATOGRAPHY • BEST ART DIRECTION
AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
THE VALLEY ADVOCATE
"THE BEST PICTURE OF THE YEAR!"
THE NEW YORK TIMES
"FABULOUS!"
OVER 130 CRITICS WORLDWIDE
"ONE OF THE BEST FILMS OF THE YEAR!"
Amelie
JEAN-PIERRE JEUNET
DAILY @ 7 & 9:15
14th And Last Week! - Ends 2/21
Downtown Northampton's
Academy of Music
Movie-Line 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com
support by the Valley Advocate • www.valleyadvocate.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.15.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Olympic Coverage
Is it Americanized?

Every time the Olympics come around, complaints are made that American television coverage of the Games is focused only on American athletes, regardless of the worth of the competitors.

And every time the Olympics come around, these complaints are ignored by networks.

In virtually every event, viewers are subjected to sob stories about the incredible odds the Americans competing have had to go through. These athletes, we are told, have overcome extraordinary adversity to get to the games. In cases when the Americans fail to crack the top twenty, one is left to wonder about the struggles faced by the medal-winning European, Asian or Canadian athletes. Did they face extraordinary odds? Probably, but we'll never know, as the networks rarely consider running a profile of a foreigner.

Certainly, American viewers will be most interested in how the athletes from their home country are performing, and it isn't unreasonable for NBC to sometimes cater to their wishes. Also, these Winter Games are being held in Utah, and athletes competing on their home turf almost always get more attention.

But to completely ignore the accomplishments of almost all foreign athletes only reinforces the stereotype of Americans- who are unconcerned about anything that occurs outside their own borders. Coverage of the Olympics in other nations, while somewhat biased in favor of national teams, is nowhere near as obsessed with "home athletes" as the coverage in the United States.

After Sept. 11, we were told that, finally, America had reached a solid awareness of the world around it. Everyday Americans knew the political circumstances of Muslim countries half a world away. What happened to this newfound "awareness" though? It seems almost non-existent when one watches the Olympics, and sees that more than half of the coverage is granted to American athletes who, even by the judges' admissions, have no realistic shot of winning.

In cases when American athletes are bound to fail, and nothing appropriately inspirational or heartwarming can be presented as a "very special" segment, then the Canadian athletes are highlighted, as though the proximity of Canada to America makes them a clear choice for us to root for. Sportscasters have begun referring to Canadian athletes as "North American," so as to drive home the point that Canada shares a continent with the United States, and thus its athletes are somehow more worthy of our attention than others. Would the judging controversy in pairs figure skating be covered as heavily by NBC if Russian athletes had been the "victims?" It doesn't seem likely.

Admittedly, most of the sports featured in the Winter Olympics are less than exciting. It may take sob stories and personal profiles to maintain an audience's interest. But to do so by fostering an "America Versus the World" attitude in the Olympics is not only shortchanging audiences of many of the Games' most interesting competitors, but it also violates the very spirit of the events.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian

Responding to the budget cuts:
how you can take an active role to help

DAN CLAWSON

Four ways to respond to the budget cuts:

1. Whine and complain. That's what most of us have been doing. We haven't known what else to do.

2. Try to manage the fee increases and budget cuts, making the best of whatever is dished out to us. At least so far that's been the administration's strategy, as the SGA forum made clear.

3. Turn on each other. Faculty could propose bigger fee increases for students. Students could propose pay cuts for workers. Workers can suggest eliminating someone else's job.

4. Organize to Save UMass. Let people know what's happening, build support for the university, and fight to make this university at least as good next year as it was last year.

That's the approach of a new group, an ad hoc coalition of students, faculty, and staff called simply Save UMass.

All of us are all still scrambling just to understand what's happening. Each week is likely to bring more bad news unless we make our voices heard.

Fees are going up $1280 a year. Will your fee increase get you a better education with more course offerings and more services? Hell no.

Separate from the budget cuts, but related to them, the legislature passed an early retirement program that gave long-time employees, including faculty, a bonus for retiring now. If the campus were able to replace aging senior faculty with new young faculty, the state would still save money and the quality of education would be maintained. (New assistant professors are paid less than retiring full professors.) But by the terms of the law, only 20 percent of those retiring can be replaced. That means the state saves even more money, but the quality of education goes down.

The administration's best guess is that as a result of early retirement and the budget cuts, next year we'll have 150 fewer faculty than we have this year, with almost exactly the same number of students. There is no good way to handle that. Think of what it was like getting into classes last fall. Now imagine next fall: one out of seven of those courses will no longer be offered.

Reductions in faculty are only one part of the problem. All the rest of the staff is also being reduced. Some entire programs are scheduled to be eliminated: the escort service, childcare, language labs. But even when programs aren't eliminated, lines will be longer and staff will be cranky, since three people will be expected to do what four did before. Janitorial staff, dining service workers, and department secretaries: all will be stressed out. Workers were supposed to get a pay increase; not getting that money hits many workers about the same way a fee increase hits students.

That's what happens if we simply accept whatever the trustees, the legislature, and the governor do, then try to minimize the pain. But we could go another way.

"...If we organize and mobilize, we can make a difference."

If we organize and mobilize, we can make a difference. The solution can't be found here on campus: administrators really do not have the money. (Which is not to say I agree with the choices they've made.) The trustees can raise fees, but even they can't spend money the university doesn't have. The solution to the problem must come from the legislature and the governor, so we must target our efforts to influence them. There are four reasons we should be able to win substantial improvements:

1. UMass is an easy sell. We are a top-rate university and a good bargain. We enjoy wide popular support, and the support would be even higher if we did a better joh of spreading the word.

2. UMass is being cut worse than the rest of the state budget; we'd he much better off if the UMass budget went down by the same amount as the over-all state budget.

3. There are a lot of us. The 23,000 students here, 6,000 workers, and 85,000 alumni are a formidable force. Add in parents, relatives, friends, and neighbors and we can have an impact.

4. The squeaky wheel gets the grease. Social movements matter. One reason we've been cut so much is that we don't make noise when we get hit. It's time to let legislators and the governor know we are ready to fight back. That's a whole lot better than seeing a great institution get destroyed.

That's what Save UMass is all about. This ad hoc coalition of undergraduates, faculty, graduate students, and staff was born at a meeting Tuesday February 5. People came up with dozens of great ideas. Now "all" we have to do is figure out how to put ideas into action.

It would be great if the administration would take the lead, but so far they haven't. Saving UMass is too important to wait for the administration. And it's too important to leave it to the faculty either. A dozen years ago, when things looked almost as bleak as they are now, the whole campus mobilized. Undergraduates took the lead: When undergrads start organizing, they are an awesome force. The week of actions then had a rally at noon that drew 3,000 people, most of them undergraduates. The place rocked and Whitmore shook. Later on, 22 buses of students went to Boston to lobby, and 16,000 students from all over the Commonwealth surrounded the Statehouse.

The need this time is at least as great. The future of UMass is in your hands. The Save UMass local action group meets Tuesdays at 4, the publicity group meets Tuesdays at 5, and there's a general meeting every Wednesday at 3. (All in the Campus Center.)

If students take the lead, they can stop the fee increases and course closeouts. This battle is about the future of public higher education; UMass students today can make history, just as other students made history in the civil rights and women's liberation movements. I hope to see you at Save UMass meetings.

Dan Clawson teaches in the sociology department and can be reached at claw-son@sadri.umass.edu.

A UMass education:
please don't give it away

SEAN JACQUET

A few days ago I received a notice informing me that an excess check may be waiting for me at the Bursar's Office. Great. I thought, this might actually be a rewarding trip to good ol' Whitmore. So I strolled to Whitmore with a big grin on my face expecting a fat check, which I could use on something other than paying for a basketball player's shoes. Strange how a trip to the Bursar's Office can sabotage one's cheerful mood.

Upon arriving, I told the clerk that I was there to pick up a check. After checking my computer file, she informed me that not only was there no check for me, but I owed money. Gasp! My parents and I had to pony up more money for this university. "What for?" I asked. She gave me some crap about the meal plan, which I quickly refuted because that bill had been paid some time ago. "You owe $421," she told me. "Is that for the fee increase?" I asked. It was indeed for the fee increase I was told, and I may have a check to pick up when the fee increase is paid. So, instead of walking out of Whitmore in a pleasant mood, I muttered angrily to myself for the next half-hour, cursing the fee increase, UMass, Whitmore, and Billy Bulger.

My frustration aside, the real issue is the fee increase. Ah, the fee increase. By now you've all heard. The Board of Trustees enacted a $495 increase in response to Gov. Swift's $25 million budget cut. Recently, the trustees approved a second increase: this one $280, bringing tuition-and-fee for Massachusetts's residents to $6,484. Out-of-state residents will have to fork over $15,535. Still not angry? Massachusetts, before the budget cuts, ranked 48th out of 50 states in state funding for public universities. That's odd. I thought Massachusetts took such pride in its institutions of higher learning. Why then is our funding so scant?

"...Athletics certainly is a more viable candidate to take a cut than child-care or the Escort Service"

It seems that a week can't pass without the students being asked to pick up some other expense. Either that or some program, whether it's the Escort Service or the childcare program, is being cut because we don't have the money. Professors are being laid-off or forced into early retirement. Thus, fewer professors will need to teach the same number of students. The effects are being felt already. The students are dealing with overcrowded classes, lackluster facilities, and a shrinking faculty. Many kids (myself included) can't even get classes in their own major. President Bulger, meanwhile, insists, "there will be no diminution of quality at the Amherst campus." Bulger is lying, and he knows it. Quality has already begun to drop; yet we are paying more. Confidence in the administration and morale around campus has also dropped.

I attend this university, as I imagine many of you do, because I wanted a solid education for a good value. UMass also provided a journalism major, something St. Anselm, the last college I attended, didn't have. I transferred to UMass for a better education and more opportunities and so far I've received neither. UMass, once considered cheap, may now be out of reach for many potential students. Had I known I'd be walking into this mess, I would have gone elsewhere. I feel bad for anybody that's gone to this school for more than a year. You've had to deal with administrative incompetence and financial mismanagement for years.

I'm hardly the only one affected by this budget crisis. Every student at UMass has been forced to pay more to generate money to cover Massachusetts's budget cuts. Everybody understands times are tough financially. Yet crucial programs are being cut while other, less important endeavors remain. The Escort Service and the childcare program have already been cut, and who knows what will appear on the chopping block next. Our education is being compromised (Are you listening, Mr. Bulger?) and UMass doesn't seem to know how to spend the money it does have. As big a sports fan as I am, I begrudgingly admit the Athletic Department may have to take a few cuts of their own. Everybody's had to make sacrifices. Now it's your turn. Athletics certainly is a more viable candidate to take a cut than child-care or the Escort Service.

While President Bulger and Chancellor Williams have repeatedly denied the severity of the situation, this is indeed a crisis. There will be a drop-off in quality if there hasn't been already. Overcrowding in classes will get worse, courses will continue to disappear, and the faculty will continue to shrink. At some point departures, lay-offs, and early retirements will make it impossible for the faculty to meet the demands of the student body. Publicly ignoring the problem will do little to fix the situation. Only aggressive lobbying of the state legislature and better financial decision-making by the University will correct this problem.

Massachusetts must raise its funding for public universities in order to climb out of the 48th ranking among the 50 states. Needless to say, this is an embarrassing situation that UMass doesn't need. It seems that UMass has generated so much bad publicity in recent months that repeated mistakes are hardly what the university needs. Hopefully, administration can reverse the budget crisis and salvage some respect by not compounding the mistakes that have already been made. To Gov. Swift, the Massachusetts state legislature, and the UMass Board of Trustees: this is our education. Please don't give it away.

Sean Jacquet is a UMass student.

Letter to the editor: more cuts

To the editor:

I am writing in response to the recent backlash to the budget cuts here at UMass. While I sympathize with some of the hardships that this decision has caused, and I have experienced some of them (finding classes was no fun), I think some of the anger is completely unwarranted. The fact that the end of childcare funding made the front page of The Collegian is ridiculous. First, the vast majority of students here are not affected by the loss of day care. Second, last time I checked the main purpose of this institution is education, followed closely by offering a secure environment for learning. Anything else that this campus offers us should be considered a luxury. When the University was established they decided to offer residence halls and dining commons and many other amenities that are not necessary to our education. We should feel privileged that this isn't a glorified community college.

All that being said, this place is an institution established for higher learning, but we cannot possibly deny or be naive enough to believe that this isn't as much a business as anything else; it just happens to be a non-profit organization. The state is our main financer, and when they lose money, so do we. And we certainly are not the only group to lose funds, and maybe we should take a look at another place that lost money. The Targeted Cities Program, an initiative started to help some of Massachusetts's most at risk inner city youths, lost millions of dollars in the new budget as well. This was only one of many early education programs that lost funding. Now if any of you in our so-called "community" can honestly say, after taking the time to look at the other places that have lost money, that we've got it tough, then I think this place has a much bigger problem than loss of funding.

I am also embarrassed by some of the reactions of my fellow students. Recently, The Collegian quoted a junior as asking Chancellor Williams "How do you sleep at night?" We were given a forum to ask questions about why decisions were made and what the future looked like, and this is how we responded. I do not personally know anyone of the Board, but I have to assume they are respected members of their communities if they have been elevated to the positions they hold. Whether or not you believe the Board of Trustees cares in the least about the student body is completely irrelevant. I can't imagine they would diminish their status in the community by making irrational decisions that would hurt the integrity of this university. I do believe they care about the well being of the students on this campus, and I think they need to be treated with a dignity that reflects that.

In closing, things are going to get tighter here. I am not denying that. What I am asking for all of us to take a step back and look at all we have been given and instead of accentuating what we are being deprived of. We should appreciate all that we have been afforded.

Mike Christman is a UMass student.

And another thing...

YOUSEF MUNAYYER

Over the past couple weeks, I have been thinking about a lot of issues. So why belabor this? I'll go strait to the important stuff.

Unionization & RA's- I've read a bit about the idea of the RA union and some of the complaints that the RAs have. I have also talked to some RAs about the issue in general and have formulated some reactions to the issue. I understand the positions of the RAs when they say they believe that a Union will help them communicate with the administration. But at the same time, I have to wonder what other motives might be behind unionization. Throughout history, the successful unions, that is, the unions that have persuaded their employers to change policies regarding employees working conditions and pay, have done so by using their strength as a skilled workers union and striking.

Now, as to whether or not you believe that the RA union will work to persuade the administration by talking is up to you. It just seems to me that talking can be done without a union. Also, scary words like "union" used to refer to university employees are not the most comfortable words to be hearing amidst all of these budget cuts. And since we're on the topic...

Budget Cuts- Every one hates to pay more money. We know this. We write about it in papers. We read about it in papers. We complain about it over coffee but what are we doing to change it?

I must laud the efforts of the groups on campus which have organized information sessions- making it possible for the student body to under-stand where the money went and what has happened. But I also want to remind the student body that though joining together to learn about these things is good, Joining together to protest and yell doesn't help much. Protests may help us vent our anger, but we have a greater power and influence than loud voices in front of white buildings. That power we have is the right to cast a vote. And when that day does come, the day we go to the polls and cast our votes, we must not forget the budget cuts, and we must not forget the driving forces behind them.

Collateral Damage- Yes, forgive me. I saw the movie. But I must say that it was an interesting experience. This is a really bad movie about a man (Arnold Schwarzenegger) who loses his wife and child in a bombing on political targets by Columbian guerillas and becomes a vigilante seeking revenge in the war torn country. I wouldn't pay to see this again; in fact I regret paying to see it the first time. Don't get me wrong I would never downgrade the phenomenal acting job by Schwarzenegger. One thing though that I did find interesting was that the bad guys in this film (the guerillas) were portrayed as Columbians. I found this to be surprising since the usually vilified peoples are Arabs. As an Arab, you notice how many times the Arab people are grossly misrepresented by Hollywood. In fact Shaheen has compiled a great book called Real Bad Arabs: How Hollywood Vilifies a People that documents hundreds and hundreds of movies in which Arabs have been portrayed as thieves, murderers and terrorists. Just by watching Collateral Damage, I saw many hints of the same type of vilification of Columbians. Just from watching films that portray Arabs in the evil way that they do, I can just imagine how Columbians were grossly misrepresented in Collateral Damage.

The Riots – Well I know this is getting kind of old now, but its been bothering me for quite some time now. First off, I want to congratulate the New England Patriots on becoming world champions of football. Now about the violence that occurred afterwards, I just have to wonder what the initial discussion right after the Adam Vinitieri kick must have been like.

UMass Pats Fan #1- Dude we just won a Super Bowl

UMass Pats Fan #2- Yeah, but what do we do now? We never won a Super Bowl before.

UMass Pats Fan #1- Oh, I know. Let's do what we always do. Yan-kees Suck. Yan-kees Suck.

And so the chant and the burning of tax dollars in a gigantic hooligan-esque fiasco that we dare label "celebration" begins. Ah yes, the joys of the liberal state college experience.

Yousef Munayyer is a UMass student.

write 4 edoc

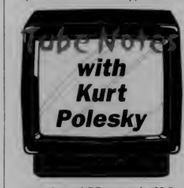
DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.15.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DEFANO

Hail the return of Friends

No fear "Friends" fans. Your "friends" aren't going anywhere, at least for the time being. After rumors that the current season would be the show's last (including a plea from Collegian entertainment industry insider Nikolas Markantonatos in "Sounding Off!"), NBC executives announced this week that the highly rated comedy will run another season - 24 more episodes in fact - after the conclusion of this television season in May.



When the "Friends" cast renewed their contract two years ago, it was the biggest per show deal an ensemble cast had ever received in television history: $750,000 dollars per star, per episode. It was thought at the time that NBC would end the show after two more seasons because of its high cost of production. However, since then, NBC has been unable to find a new breakout hit show to replace "Friends." With network competition fiercer than ever, NBC can ill afford to lose its highest rated show, hence the deal to bring back "Friends."

Show producers Kevin Bright, Marta Kaufman and David Crane told zap2it.com, "We will devote the entire 24 episodes of the final season to wrap up storylines and send our characters off into the world. We are all very excited about being able to do that and very grateful to the many who will make it possible."

Meanwhile, according to that bastion of hard news, the supermarket tabloid The Star (which can be credited with breaking stories such as Oprah's wild sex romps and Britney Spears getting hammered) has reported that show producers are considering killing off Jennifer Aniston's character Rachel in the series finale. The Star reported that the series writers were considering several other possible series enders ranging from Rachel and Ross getting married (again) to Rachel and Joey getting married, to having Beetlejuice from "The Howard Stern Show" kill Rachel with an icepick (just kidding about that last one). These rumors have been denied by Warner Brothers' (who produces the show) spokespeople.

Felicity History

Two weeks ago I reported that the WB was considering giving "Felicity" the axe. Last week it was made official, as the network announced that the four-year-old series would not be renewed after the season finale in May. The show's creators and producers have expressed obvious disappointment with the decision, but have promised a proper send off for the characters, and the resolution of the Felicity, Ben, Noel love triangle.

Olympic Soap Opera Scores Big

Even though the numbers show that most college age viewers are not interested in the Olympics, the same can't be said for the rest of America. (College age people and old people don't like the same things? I refuse to believe it). Friday's opening ceremonies on NBC garnered a 23.5 rating (about 72 million viewers), according to Nielson Media Research, making it the most watched show on television for the week (other than the Super Bowl, of course).

The numbers for the opening ceremony were the highest ever, and 49% higher than the 1998 Winter Olympic opening ceremony. The previous all-time record rating for an opening ceremony was a 24.2 rating for the 1960 Summer Games in Squaw Valley.

What makes the rating all that more impressive is that the previous record was set at a time when there was only three broadcast networks, and in the pre cable days, that meant three channels on everyone's television. Furthermore, this reverses a trend of declining ratings for major sporting events (other than the Superbowl) over the past few years. Ratings for events like the NBA Finals and The World Series have been on a steady decline for several years, and the 2000 Summer Olympics in Sydney were the lowest rated Olympics in thirty years.

What always makes the Olympics so fascinating is its ability to get viewers to watch and seemingly care about sports that they don't follow regularly. For instance, how many of the 72 million viewers last Friday actually will watch a downhill skiing event during the year? (Maybe a million, if the numbers are accurate.) Because of a lack of interest in the actual sports, NBC seems obsessive attaching a "story" wherever it can to an athlete or event to draw in viewers with melodrama instead of athleticism.

It seems as if every athlete profiled has at least one of these several conditions that they have "overcome" to make it to the Olympics.

1. The death of a family member or close friend.
2. A career-threatening injury
3. A poor performance in a previous Olympic games.
4. All of the above. When you consider that along with the fact that many of the events aren't broadcast either live or in their entirety, watching the Olympics has become more like watching a soap opera than watching an athletic event, a soap opera that isn't as good as "Passions," though.

Information from zap2it.com was used in this article Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member.

COURTESY NBC.COM

They'll be there for you. For at least another season, anyhow.

Material Girl adds second volume to greatest hits

COURTESY MADONNAFANCLUB.COM

Madonna's Greatest Hits Volume 2 traces her later years.

COURTESY MADONNAFANCLUB.COM

One of Madonna's many manifestations.

By Nikolas Markantonatos
COLLEGIAN STAFF

MADONNA
GHV2: Greatest Hits Volume 2
Warner Bros.

In 1990, Madonna's racy Justify My Love video was banned by MTV, sparking a furor that took Madonna to the peak of her notoriety and over the borderline. The subsequent release of her explicit Sex book and Erotica album and video in 1992 triggered a huge Madonna media backlash, resulting in her decline in the early 90s. It seemed her career was over.

The sequel to Madonna's first blockbuster greatest hits album, The Immaculate Collection, picks up right around this time. GHV2: Greatest Hits Volume 2 continues to trace the journey of the most significant female artist of our time, providing an unflinching look into pop music from one of the most interesting personas in rock 'n' roll history.

GHV2 brings us Madonna's sex era and subsequent transformation into her electronica years. From 1992 to the present, the Material Girl has turned into the Ethereal Mother.

Much like TIC, GHV2 helps us realize how brilliant her records have been over the years. Though our current mindset often leads us to believe that Madonna pushed our collective libido, Madonna has pushed musical boundaries as well. Both greatest hits collections prove it.

For all her sexual randiness in the early 90s, Madonna made powerfully moving statements about family, Sadomasochism, voyeurism and bisexuality were just some of the issues she tackled. To some degree Madonna helped break down the stereotypical walls surrounding such taboo matters. Love or hate her, you have to acknowledge her contribution to the art form.

The first part of this album runs the gamut of some of Madonna's most poorly produced singles including Bedtime Story and Human Nature. To add insult to injury, Human Nature is represented here in a horribly dated house mix and the essential lines "I'm not your bitch/ Don't hang your shit on me" are butchered.

The highlights of this era include Secret, her veiled paean to heroin and masturbation, which had a brilliant bluesy strut and Take a Bow, a beautifully composed song by any measure.

Madonna's 1994 single Take a Bow, her biggest song to date with a seven week, number one run on the Billboard Hot 100 chart, helped commercially revitalize her career. It also marked the period where Madonna cleaned up her image and set her sights on playing Eva Peron in the musical Evita.

Deeper and Deeper and Ray of Light notwithstanding, GHV2 fails to brim with as much fun and frothy energy of the earlier package. Instead, the collection offers a more introspective look into one of the most intriguing women in the world.

The compilation continues with 1998's huge comeback Ray of Light and the lesser Music. Lyrically soul stirring and musically breathtaking, Ray of Light is not only Madonna's best album in her three-decade spanning career, but also one of the best albums of the '90s. Brit knob-twirler William Orbit helped craft some of Madge's trippiest music yet. The juxtaposition of fuzzy beats and soundtrack-score strings lends Drowned World (Substitute for Love), an unreleased track in the states, and Frozen, an unsettling-beats melodrama that's nothing short of magical.

Laced with a hydrogen bomb bass line and sprinkled with atomic beats, Music still sounds light years ahead of what any other mainstream artist dares to produce. Music, crafted by prodigy Mirwais, became Madonna's most universally appealing hit in her 18-year career. Don't Tell Me is a funky mix of acoustic folk guitar, chopped up production, accompanied by start-stop beats, poetic lyrics, and one of Madonna's most heartfelt vocal performances ever.

GHV2 is lacking some of Madonna's biggest hits. This Used to Be My Playground and I'll Remember were left off to avoid threatening sales of Something to Remember, a compilation of her ballads. Also missing are Rain, Nothing Really Matters and luckily, American Pie.

GHV2 doesn't come close to rivaling TIC. TIC, which has sold 22 million units worldwide, is a soundtrack of an era and a pop classic – the songs were commercially and culturally significant, if not iconic. The songs on GHV2, while great, just don't measure up in that sense.

GHV2 (interestingly released exactly 11 years to the date that TIC was released) lacks any new tracks, probably because she's saving them for her next album which she has already begun recording.

GHV2 is a testament of damn good pop music. There were a dizzying amount of record breaking "Best Of"s and "Greatest Hits" released this past holiday season, with some having the most tenuous reasons for existing possible. GHV2, however, will outsell and outclass the lot of them.

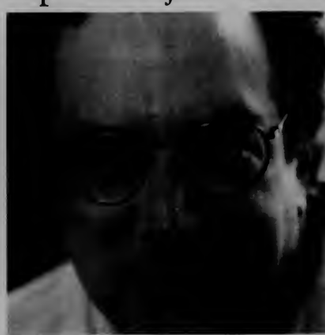
GHV2 speaks loud and clear: Madonna is a cultural icon – one who shows little sign of slowing down. Even more importantly, however, it musically portrays one of the most fascinating tales in recent pop. There's no telling where the woman who sang "Music makes the people come together" to the tune of over 150 million album buyers worldwide may take us next. But we can sure bet it won't be anywhere she's brought us before.

Caine meshes hip-hop with jazz music

Ever wanted to see what would happen if you mix a hip-hop DJ with a jazz pianist? Sunday night at Amherst College, you can find out. Uri Caine has been mixing up styles from classical to funk to klezmer for years, and he will be bringing his octet to Amherst College as part of the Magic Triangle Jazz series.

Uri Caine is a Philadelphia native who, as a teenager, received lessons in jazz and classical piano from the brilliant French Pianist Bernard Pfeiffer. Later, he studied composition and performance at the University of Pennsylvania, and then played in clubs in and around Philadelphia with jazz notables, such as Joe Henderson and Benny Golson.

In the late 1980s, Uri moved to New York City and focused on jazz. Some of that work can be seen on his mid-90s recordings "Sphere music" and "Toss," which were dedications to Thelonious Monk and Herbie Hancock, respectively. However, one of his earliest classical reworkings, Mahler's First Symphony, was on "Toss." Since then, he has been working on his own unique brand of music.



His latest album, The Goldberg Variations, will be the focus of the concert on Sunday. The album contains 72 tracks of extremely diverse music including drinking songs, klezmer, chamber, chorales, and poetry. On the album, Uri plays with everything from a small group to a large chorale. The album consists entirely of songs that are built on four eight-bar phrases, with most of the phrases consisting of Bach melodies.

Uri uses styles such as klezmer in passages of the song "Luther's Nightmare variation" and turntables on "Logic's Organ Parade" in this collection of variations. The album is also much more than a bunch of short Bach vignettes; it proves that the simplest building blocks can make up the most complex music. Plus, it's entertaining.

This Sunday, Uri Caine is playing with an octet. This ensemble includes: Uri Caine, piano; Ralph Alessi, trumpet; Joyce Hamman, violin; Dave Binney, reeds; DJ Olive, turntables; Barbara Walker, vocals; Cornell Rochester, drums; Drew Gress, bass. As this is a small ensemble, there will be no choir or poetry readings. However, it will be a performance of improvisational beauty that is unique to Uri Caine's style.

Tickets are $6 for students and $9 for the general public. Advance tickets are available through the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS.

-Eitan Novotny

COURTESY FINE ARTS CENTER

Jazz pianist Uri Caine will perform at Amherst College on Sunday, as a part of the Magic Triangle jazz series.

Promises guarantee hope and harmony

The Oscar nominated film Promises will be screened this Sunday at Northampton's Academy of Music Theater. The director, B.Z. Goldberg, will be present to conduct a discussion following the film.

Promises, nominated for best documentary feature, features seven Palestinian and Israeli children between the ages of nine and 13. They live close to each other (within a 20-mile radius of Jerusalem), but lead disparate lives. The film explores the nature of these children's lives and the cultural differences that cut across them.

The filmmakers, Goldberg, who grew up in Jerusalem, and Justine Shapiro, have featured an age group that are reflections of their culture, but without the self-censorship that comes with age. Promises not only examines the boundaries that make their worlds so different, but they also document some children who have dared to cross these boundaries to meet their neighbors.

The film will be part of a show titled Hope and Promises. It's the third Sunday in the Northampton Arts Council's "Four Sunday in February" series and will also feature Sultana. The sextet will kick off the event with their combination of musical talent. The musicians hail from Israel, Palestine and other Middle Eastern countries.

Hope and Promises is this Sun., Feb. 17 at 2 p.m. at the Academy of Music Theater. Tickets are available in Northampton, at the Arts Council office or at the Academy of Music box office. If using credit cards, call 584-9032. For more information, visit the Arts Council website at northamptonartscouncil.org

COURTESY NORTHAMPTON ARTS COUNCIL

A Palestinian child from Promises, the Oscar nominated film playing in Northampton.

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Student Groups/Student Organizations Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy CampusFundraiser.com fundraising method. Does not involve credit card applications. Limited spots available, so call today! Contact CampusFundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238 or visit www.CampusFundraiser.com

THE SPOT! Memorial Drive, Chicopee. Monday nights 18+ dance Party with DJ Stylze. Friday nights DJ Chris James top 40 Dance Party. Saturday 2/16 "Undertow" the Toole/Tribute 10 p.m. $3.00 cover. Sunday 2/17 "Countdown to St. Patty's Day" with just George the X-rated comedian + "meet the guiness girls!!"

APARTMENT FOR RENT

[illegible] Bedroom [illegible] Student Group [illegible] Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy CampusFundraiser.com fundraising method. Does not involve credit card applications. Limited spots available, so call today! Contact CampusFundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238 or visit www.CampusFundraiser.com

AUTO FOR SALE

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstmanor.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1993 Geo Metro Auto. Excellent transportation 65,000 miles $85.0599

1990 Plymouth Grand Voyager, 7 Passengers, 114,000, Very clean. $1875.00 585.0599.

1992 Ford Explorer 2 Dr. 5 Spd, 4X4, 75,000 miles $2850.00 585.0599

1990 Volvo Wagon 240 DL, 117,000 miles, Auto, AC, $3650.00 585.0599

1985 Ford F-150 Pickup, 6 Cyl, Auto, AM, $2150.00 585.0599

1994 Acura Integra Auto, AC, CD, Am/Fm Cassette, Power Steering Windows, Moon roof, Single owner, Excellent condition $5500.00 OBO 546-6445.

AUTO FOR SALE

87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good. $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 866-291-1884 ext. 485.

Someone to watch vending booth $8.00 per hr. Tues. & Thurs. 11:00-12:15, Fri. 11:00-12:15 Call Mike 546-1326.

Substitute teachers needed for full day and part day $7.00 an hour. Cushman Scott Children's Center 549-1167.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

FOR RENT

Instructor, the Princeton Review, the nation's largest test prep company, seeks teachers for SAT and MCAS courses, held year-round in the Springfield area. Teaching experience helpful, but not required. Job involves teaching small groups of high school students basic math and English skills, as well as test-taking strategies. Starting pay is $13/hr; paid training and all course materials provided. Great part-time job! Flexible hours. For more information call the Princeton Review at 413-584-6849. To apply, fax cover letter and resume to the Princeton Review at 413-586-4919.

Childcare needed for 2 children in our Amherst Home Mon. 3:15-5:15 Wed. 1:30-5:30 $8.00 an hr 253-[illegible]

Cruise Lines [illegible] Travel on board [illegible] Available. Great benefits! Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruiseworld.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE: DJ Booze and SYB productions are now booking for spring semester call 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Mountain Bike www.bikesxm.com 99 Fusion 19" exc. cond. $400 413-374-0653.

Guitar Cort Acoustic/electric with Fishman preamp and case. Mint cond. $450 413-374-0653

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 days $279 Includes meals & free parties! Awesome beaches! Night life! Departures from Florida! Cruises to Bahamas $459 Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Tickets! Get a FREE MTV audience tickets to select shows when you book your Spring Break through StudentCity.com! Go to MTV.com or call StudentCity.com at 1-800-293-1443 for details! Hurry and Dickens fill limited.

TRAVEL

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida

SPRING BREAK 2002

LAST MINUTE SPECIALS!! SAVE $100 PER PERSON!

Organize Your Group, Travel Free!

STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES

800-648-4849

www.ststravel.com

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Montreal Maddness Spring Weekends $99 Quad. Occupancy price includes round trip luxury motor coach 3 days, 2 nights deluxe hotel directly downtown, breakfast, dinner, free nightclub admissions, dome + more. Departs March 15-17, April 19-21, other weekends available. $10 security fee. Call Global Express Tours (781) 979-0076.

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007, www.sunsplashtours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakcentral.com (800) 985-6789

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on a Spring Break Cancun or Florida Trip FOR FREE!!! To find how call 1-888-[illegible] 4643 or email [illegible]

WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

NEED A NEW CAR????

STILL LOOKING FOR A JOB?????

NEED A ROOMMATE?

CHECK THE DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS!!!!!!

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network

2	CBS/3
3	NBC/4
4	Fox Sport NE
5	PBS/57
6	HSCN Movie Channel
7	WB/20
8	HSCN Movie Channel
9	TV Guide Channel
10	FOX/61
11	ABC/40
12	NBC/22
13	International Channel
14	UMASS
15	HSCN Info Channel
16	ESPN
17	ESPN 2
18	LVC-19
19	ESPN Classic
20	Cartoon Network
21	CNN
22	CNN HL
23	Weather Channel
24	Learning Channel
25	History Channel
26	A & E
27	Discovery Health
28	Food Network
29	NASA
30	House & Garden TV
31	Travel Channel
32	Lifetime
33	CNBC
34	Tech TV
35	BET
36	UPN-38
37	USA
38	TNN
39	MTV
40	CMT
41	VH-1
42	TNT
43	TBS
44	E! Entertainment
45	Sci-Fi Channel
46	Court TV
47	Nick at Nite
48	Comedy Central
49	Cartoon Network
50	Crime Show Network
51	TV Land
52	FOX Family
53	Discovision
54	Galavision
55	Telemundo
56	College TV Network
57	C-SPAN
58	C-SPAN2
59	Bloomberg Television

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 15, 2002

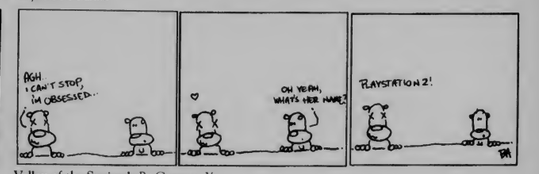
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Now With Bill Moyers (N)		Nova "Evolution" (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours (N) (In Stereo)		★½ "The Odd Couple II" (1998, Comedy) Jack Lemmon				News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours (N) (In Stereo)		★½ "The Odd Couple II" (1998, Comedy) Jack Lemmon				News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Funniest Home Videos		More Classic Bloopers (N)		In Crowd and Social Cruelty		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Sabrina Witch	Raising Dad	Raba (N)	Maybe It's Me	News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)							News
WTXX		27 Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Sabrina Witch	Raising Dad	Raba (N)	Maybe It's Me	News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT		30 News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)							News
WTIC	8	61 Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	★★ "American Pie" (1999, Comedy) Jason Biggs				News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	9	22 News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)							News
WGBY	10	57 BBC World	Business Rpt.	News hour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	How With Bill Moyers (N)		Blackadder III	Red Green	Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	28 News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Funniest Home Videos		More Classic Bloopers (N)		In Crowd and Social Cruelty		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Wheel Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	★★★ "The Fifth Element" (1997, Science Fiction) Bruce Willis				Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel (N)	Shipmates (N)
WTBS	22	Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	★ "Wild Wild West" (1999, Western) Will Smith, Kevin Kline				★½ "Mumsy Talks" (1997, Comedy) (PA) Chris Tucker
A&E	14	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Grief" (In Stereo)		Biography: Hall Roswell		Inside the Playboy Mansion				Law & Order
CNN	20	23 Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Live From...	The Point	Larry King Live		Newsnight		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	15	30 Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show	Geeks	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Premium	Premium	Premium	Premium
DISC	52	Turtles: The Shell Game		Vultures: Carrion Gang		Private Jets		Atlantis: The Ultimate Resort		Luxury Cruises (N)		Justice Files
ESPN	21	Sportscenter		1983 NCAA Championship		Battle Lines (N)		College Basketball Southern Mississippi at Cincinnati (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	29	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★½ "Conspiracy of Silence" (1991, Drama) Stephen Ournelle, Michael Mahonen.
MTV	39	Tough Enough	Global Forum	Colin Powell	Music Videos (In Stereo)		TRL	Show Us Your Hits (I/V) (In Stereo)		Charts	Making Video	Music Videos (In Stereo)
NICK	35	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Rsy Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Spongeb	Oddparents	Oddparents	Cheers	Cheers	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	26	Star Trek "The Cloud Minders"		Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)		Strange World	Lullaby (N)	Chronicle "Hot From the Oven"		Loss "Drum Ridge" (In Stereo)		Strange World	Lullaby
TLC	27	25 Sasquatch Odyssey		Manhunt International		Protect and Serve "On Patrol"		FBI: Critical Incident		FBI: Critical Incident		Protect and Serve "On Patrol"
TNT	25	Law & Order "Judge Dread"		Law & Order "Top Hat" (N)		★★★ "The Pelican Brief" (1993, Suspense) (PA) Julia Roberts, Denzel Washington						★★★ "Top Gun" (1986)
USA	24	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Shadow" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Report"		★★★ "Out of Sight" (1998, Drama) George Clooney, Jennifer Lopez (In Stereo)				Law & Order
HBO	45	(5:15) "Charlie's Angels" (2000)		★½ "Black Sheep" (1996) Chris Farley PG-13		Time Machine		★★★½ "Fight Club" (1999, Drama) Brad Pitt, Edward Norton (In Stereo) R					Dennis Miller
MAX	44	★★★★ "Almost Famous" (2000, Comedy-Drama) Billy Crudup R				★★★ "The Brothers" (2001, Comedy-Drama) Morris Chestnut R				★★★ "Bad Boys" (1995, Drama) Martin Lawrence R
SHOW	46	(5:10) "Crocodile Dundee II"		Black Filmmaker Showcase		★ "Dracula 2000" (2000) Christopher Plummer				Stargate SG-1	Chris Isaak Variety Hour (N) (I/V)		Red Shoe

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

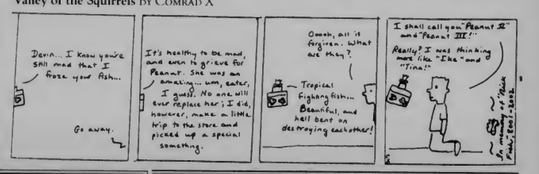
Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Monty By Jim Meddick



Skybox By Blake

Noodle By Jacki

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"I'm always quiet after someone complains."

–Don Key

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 31	HIGH: 43 LOW: 21	HIGH: 36 LOW: 13

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You can improve your own outlook and your productivity, simply by accepting current limitations and beginning to work with them willingly.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may find yourself entangled in a bittersweet triangle of sorts. Others involved are likely to depend upon you for a solution. But you don't have one. So tell them to ask Jeeves.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You must resist the temptation to capitalize on another's misfortune today, despite your need to increase the pace of your progress. Yeah, so you're selfish, who isn't?
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You'll want to do things in your own way today – to the extent that others may back away and leave you very much alone for a time. Kind of how the Goonies left Chunk alone with Sloth. It all works out in the end. Just make sure you have plenty of Rocky Roooooaaaaad!
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – It's up to you to keep deception out of the picture today. During evening hours, a misunderstanding may bring tensions to the boiling point. Add ice.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may be asked some difficult questions to which there are no hard-and-fast answers. Today, instinct and training work closely together. If you get stuck, just ask Abby.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may have to pick up the pace, especially toward midday, in order to item to all the personal business on the docket at this time.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – The stars are favoring your romantic efforts at this time. Take care, however, that you aren't trying to do things the "wrong way around" somehow.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You'll find yourself embracing things that you had shied away from in days or weeks past. Your attitude is undergoing a change for the better. Once you get yourself laid this weekend, you'll be all set.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – A phone call, letter, telegram or other form of long-distance message is essential to your peace of mind today. Be prepared to receive it. Your grandma's birthday card to you will hold $50.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Introspection will lead you directly to the door of a new and illuminating truth today. Yes, you were in fact adopted.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – They say love is a two-way street, but today you may have to hog the road in order to make any headway. The Collegian offers one solution: the frats.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

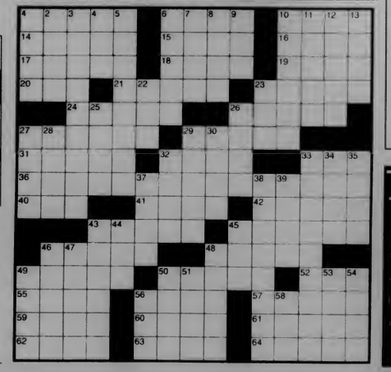
LUNCH
Vegetarian Vegetable Soup
Shepherds Pie
Fish Nuggets
Lentil Chili (vegan)
Pasta Bar
Cheese Tortellini with Vegetables
Grill Station
BBQ Pork Sandwich
International
Chicken Wing Bar
Buffalo Chicken Wings
Terriyaki Chicken Wings
Vegan Nuggets
Mozzarella Sticks

DINNER
Vegetarian Vegetable Soup
Cajun Catfish
Salisbury Steak
Vegetable Strudel Marinara (vegetarian)
Potato & Mushroom Delight (vegan) / (W Basics)
Pasta Bar
Cheese Tortellini with Vegetables
Grill Station
BBQ Pork Sandwich
International
Chicken Wing Bar
Buffalo Chicken Wings
Terriyaki Chicken Wings
Vegan Nuggets
Mozzarella Sticks

ADSPACE



ACROSS
1 Coffee-chocolate drink
6 Face-covering
10 Not odd
14 Ohio city
15 Klein of design
16 "Gladiator" setting
17 Downgrade
18 Raise
19 Popular side dish
20 Owns
21 Tiniest
23 Meted out
24 Nobelist from Egypt
26 Blender button
27 Red Cross founder
29 Thinks ahead
31 Walking
32 Misfortunes
33 Small swallow
36 Breakfast drink
40 Cover with turf
41 Optical device
42 Passion
43 Drift
45 Conductor Ormandy
46 Pulled the oars
48 Star in Cygnus
49 Diminishes
50 Vigilant
52 Unseal, to Blake
55 Valhalla host
56 Egg-shaped
57 Violinist Stern
59 Barrel of laughs
60 Soup dish
61 Ground
62 Actor Perkins
63 Quaint hotels
64 Wild West show

DOWN
1 Crush
2 N. Mex. neighbor
3 Junction
4 Bounce
5 Story
6 Type of parking
7 Lady in King Arthur's court
8 Hard facts
9 Allow
10 Mistakes
11 Curtain fabric
12 Quiz show host
13 Prerequisite
22 Went jogging
23 Hound for payment
25 Surmounting
26 Over with 27 Suitcases
28 1960s hairdo
29 Unit of weight
30 Aloha go-withs

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

L	O	B	S		A	L	A	R	M		M	U	C	H
E	M	I	T		R	O	M	E	O		E	L	L	E
A	N	N	A		S	W	A	B	S		A	N	O	N
F	I	S	T	S		M	E	A	R	S	A	Y
		I	O	N	S		L	I	E	U
R	A	C	C	O	O	N	S		C	A	R	A	T
U	S	A		T	R	A	I	L		M	E	D	A	L
S	H	U	N		M	I	D	A	S		S	O	L	E
H	E	L	E	N		L	E	M	O	N		R	O	N
	S	K	E	E	T		S	E	D	I	M	E	N	T
			D	R	O	P		R	A	G	E
P	I	L	O	T	E	D		H	A	B	I	T
M	A	N	E		A	R	E	A	S		D	O	O	R
A	R	C	S		L	I	M	I	T		O	T	T	O
P	E	A	S		S	L	I	D	E		W	H	A	T

10-24-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Matthew F. Sacco
Jeff Swartz
Jennifer Eastwood
Pete Prest-one
Mike McCormick
Frank DiMeglio
Enrique Akid

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.15.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Possible conference card shuffling

UMass in must-win position

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Desperation is not a word that Massachusetts men's basketball coach Steve Lappas uses when speaking of his team's mental focus going into its final five games of the season. The Minutemen sit five games behind St. Joseph's for the top spot in the Atlantic 10 East Division and three games behind Temple for the all-important second spot, which includes a first round bye in the conference tournament. UMass is not desperate; it just knows that it must win.

"Every game has been a must win for us for a while," said Lappas yesterday, prior to setting off for a pair of crucial contests in Philadelphia.

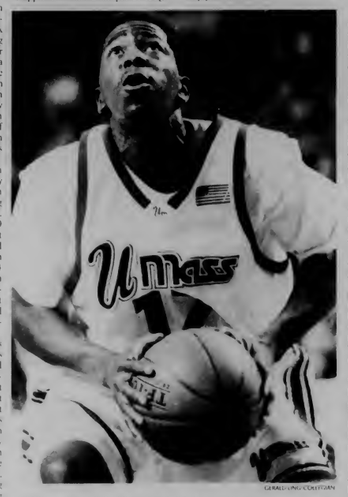
On Saturday, afternoon the Minutemen (10-12, 4-7 A-10) will look to make it a perfect 2-for-2 for the season against Temple (10-13, 7-4 A-10) when the two teams tip off at the Liacouras Center. Back on Jan. 19, the Minutemen snapped a five-game losing streak with a 63-53 triumph over the Owls at the Mullins Center. Freshman Kyle Wilson was the star on that day scoring a career-high 17 points on 5-of-7 shooting and UMass knocked down 44-percent of its shots from behind the 3-point arc to pull out the victory. While Wilson and his fellow backcourt mates may have caught John Chaney and the Temple defense off guard on that day, Lappas expects the Owls to be prepared on Saturday.

"I think they'll be more aggressive on the perimeter," he said "They are going to have more concern for guys shooting the ball."

Despite the result of the last meeting between these two A-10 rivals and Temple's loss to LaSalle on Wednesday night, which snapped a four-game winning streak, the Owls will stick with their famous match-up zone that has frustrated opponents for more than a decade.

"They haven't changed their defense in 15 years," Lappas said. "They're going to do what they do."

One thing that will change from the January meeting is the availability of 6-foot-6-inch forward Alex Wesby. Wesby, who is averaging 10.9 points and 5.5 rebounds per game, sat out that meeting with a wrist injury but is now back in the Owl starting lineup. His return gives Temple much needed depth on the perimeter. Chaney will now be able to bring sophomore Brian Polk and freshman Nic Murry off the bench, giving his team even fresher legs with which to runs its defense.



UMass also must once again shut down the Owls' primary offensive threat, point guard Lynn Greer. He is the second leading scorer in the A-10 behind only St. Bonaventure's J.R. Bremer at 23.9 points per contest but was shut down by Raheim Lamb and Shannon Crooks last month. In that game, Greer hit just 8-of-24 field goals including 3-of-11 from 3-point range. While he did manaed to tally 23 points on that afternoon, he was often frustrated and forced up a number of ill-advised shots.

If Temple is going to win, it is going to need to rediscover its long-range stroke. The Owls lead the A-10 in 3-point shooting percentage at just above 41-percent but they made just 6-of-24 against the Minutemen. For the better part of the conference schedule, UMass has frustrated its opponents from behind the arc, holding them below 33 percent. This was evident on Wednesday night when the Minutemen held St. Bonaventure, the nation's top 3-point shooting team, to just 4-for-21 from long range.

Saturday's game will be won from behind the arc with each team relying on perimeter players for a bulk of their offense. The team that hits more threes and a higher percentage will likely come out on top.

In his first return to the City of Brotherly Love since signing on with the Minutemen last March, Lappas will face a couple of tough challenges. But they are challenges that must be met head on if the Minutemen want to have any chance at reaching the postseason.

Desperate times call for desperate measures. But these are not desperate times for the Minutemen. They just have to win.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

With a solid Philly weekend Anthony Anderson could lock up the A-10's Rookie of the Year award.

Weekend key for seedings

By Jesse Greenspan
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With a 7-16 (5-7 Atlantic 10) record thus far, the Massachusetts women's basketball team knows that its only chance for postseason play will come through winning the conference tournament.

However, that does not mean the Minutewomen don't care about their final four regular season contests.

In contrast, these remaining games will go a long way toward establishing A-10 tourney seeds, as UMass could finish as high as third in the Eastern division and as low as sixth, and will give the Maroon and White a chance to gain some confidence for the stretch run.

"Obviously, we are in a situation where we're not going to win the division," Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said. "So we want to see where everyone's at before the A-10 tournament.

"I'm a firm believer in the law of averages. Sooner or later our shots are going to start going in."

Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, however, the road toward a much-needed confidence boast will not be easy. Tonight, the women travel down to Philadelphia for a match-up with the first place Temple Owls, who have totaled a 14-9 (9-3 A-10) record on the year.

"This is huge," O'Brien said. "Temple is starting to turn into a nice little rivalry for us, and the game is going to be aggressive and physical. We have the advantage in the post, but our guards have got to handle the ball on the perimeter against their press."

Temple is led on the offensive end by Natalia Isaac, who is averaging over 13 points per game despite being held scoreless by Xavier last weekend. The senior guard is supported by Athena Christoforakis, who is totaling 12.9 points and 8.6 rebounds a contest in addition to coming off an A-10 Player of the Week award.

Earlier in the year, these two proved to be too much for the Maroon and White to handle, as it fell to the Owls 67-57.

"When we played them last, we played average, and we have to play better than average to beat them," O'Brien said.

After tonight's game, UMass will stay in Philly as it prepares for its Sunday contest with second place St. Joseph's. The Hawks are a team even more dangerous than the Owls on the offensive end (70.9 PPG) and have garnered a 17-6 (8-4 A-10) record on the year. In addition, they are led by one of the top players in the nation, Susan Moran.

If an A-10 leading 22.1 PPG average weren't enough for the Tullamore, Ireland native, Moran is also leading the A-10 in free throw shooting (86 percent) and is second in rebounding (8.9 boards per game). All of this has kept her in the running for the nation's player of the year award, which she will be competing for against the likes of such superstars as Michelle Snow (Tennessee) and Sue Bird (UConn).

"It is tough to do anything special against her," O'Brien said. "We will double her when we get the opportunity and guard against her strengths – make her shoot jump shots and force her to the left – but the only way to really stop her is to get her sitting on the bench (in foul trouble)."

When St. Joseph's and UMass met earlier in the year, the Hawks were able to pick up the 54-48 win, but this time around, the Minutewomen are riding a streak of momentum brought on by last weekend's 60-46 defeat of St. Bonaventure.

"We just played solid and executed the game plan," O'Brien said of the match-up with the Bonnies. "We knew their guards were important, and we didn't want to give them any easy shots. Everything they got they earned."

Tip off for the Temple game is slated for 7 p.m. while the St. Joe's game will get underway at 2 p.m.

Premier matchup

Men's tennis team finally gets a shot at No. 7 Yale

By Elena Panesis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's tennis team will achieve a major goal Saturday. After years of coaching the UMass squad, Coach Judy Dixon and crew will finally make a trip to New Haven, Conn. to battle Yale, a regionally ranked program with a prestigious history of success in the Ivy League.

"We've never played Yale before, and they are a nationally ranked team," said Dixon. "I think they are No. 7 in the East, and we have been trying to get them to play us for years. It's great competition for us to play tough schools of their caliber."

With a healthy, full roster, the Minutemen will face off against the Bulldogs Saturday and then drive six hours to Hamilton, N.Y. for a match against rival Colgate University. Last year, the Maroon and White lost an emotional match to the feisty Colgate squad 5-2 on its indoor home courts at Hampshire College.

"The kids really want to play these matches," said Dixon. "Colgate is always a gritty match. They have a tough outdoor/indoor surface, which is hard to play on.

"They have a great coach in Bob Dallis who used to coach Boston University, and he always gets up for UMass. We're not the favorite, but it will be an emotional match for us."

The Minutemen will not have to thrive only on their emotional power this weekend, as they finally have a complete, healthy roster. No. 1 Steve Prisco, who has suffered an ongoing back injury, will return to the lineup after missing four matches last weekend. Freshman Scott Sans-Leeb defaulted his last match due to illness but has recovered enough to play against the two high caliber teams. Also, Jed Greenberg, a player who almost transferred for academic reasons, has regained his form after getting in more practices and will fill the sixth slot on the roster.

"Everyone with the exception of Rory Theis is fine for the first time in awhile," said Dixon. "Steve's back is okay, and Scott had strep throat, but he's feeling better. Phill Cullen is eligible after transferring and will be at the seven spot and Mark Porter will be at eight. So now we have backups if someone is to get injured again."

Last season, the Minutemen established themselves as a team to be reckoned with in the Atlantic 10 Conference, finishing second only to St. Bonaventure in its postseason tournament. Other A-10 rivals like Xavier University, which in the past expected the Maroon and White to make the long trip up in order to get in a match, asked Dixon last spring if they could come to Amherst to battle the UMass men.

Yet, injuries to key players like sophomore Theis have lowered the squad's expectations for the spring 2002 season. Though seniors Prisco and Todd Champeau would like to advance in the A-10 tournament and possibly make the NCAA's before graduating, Dixon realizes that she must focus the team on improvement and rebuilding.

"With the older guys like Steve and Todd, this is their swan song, and they want to do well, and they have been playing very well lately," said Dixon.

"Yet, this season is not about wins but rather improvement. We must take each match on a day-to-day basis. We won't be seeded in the A-10 tournament, but we need to get better with each match so that during the tournament, we will have hopefully improved enough to be ready to fight it out."

A peek through the looking glass

Heralded UMass recruit visits Mullins

By Matt Brady
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With another week before the next conference game for the Massachusetts hockey team, the focus on Friday night will be fixed directly on the future, as the U.S. National Team Development Program (NTDP) comes to the Mullins Center.

Head Coach Don Cahoon set up the exhibition game as a key tool in adding more high-profile recruits to the Minuteman program.

"It's three pronged – we want to bring the players in here to show them the facilities. There are a lot of prominent college prospects, and it's a recruiting tool," Cahoon said. "There are still a couple of guys who haven't committed yet that we're still looking at."

The NTDP is a team that is made up of some of the best American hockey players under the age of 18, with high school players from all around the country teaming up to face off against some of the best college hockey programs in the nation.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Sami Jalkanen would prefer to spend more time on the other side of the glass.

"Eighty percent of them have committed," Cahoon said. "Generally, the kids on the team are in grade 12, but some are in grade 11, and it's amazing that those kids can compete with college teams."

One player for the elite team has already committed to join the Maroon and White next season. Stephen Werner, who is tied for sixth on the team in points this year (nine goals, 10 assists), but has played several games fewer than four of the players ahead of him.

Werner also has one-game-winning goal, the victorious tally in a thrilling 1-0 victory over Team Finland at the Five Nations Tournament, held in Tyumen, Russia. The NTDP showed well in the tourney, winning three out of four games, and its game against the Minutemen will be the first back on domestic soil since the tourney.

"[The game] breaks up the monotony of practicing," Cahoon said. These are some of the best 1984s in the nation – they came in second in the Five Nations Tournament."

Several other players on the team will be heading to Hockey East schools next year, including a pair of younger brothers heading to Boston College. Patrick Eaves, brother of sophomore Eagle standout Ben Eaves and son of NTDP coach Mike Eaves, is second on the team in scoring with 28 points (17g, 11a) in his 29 games, including six tallies coming with a man advantage.

Also heading to Chestnut Hill is Stephen Gionta, brother of former Hobey Baker finalist Brian Gionta. The younger Gionta has a slight three points (two goals, one assist) in his ten games of action with the NTDP this season.

The exhibition brings a week off from a strenuous Hockey East schedule for the Maroon and White. Last weekend, it got a vital point in a game against Lowell on Saturday, but threw away a chance at two points by blowing a three-goal lead in the third period. Additionally, the Minutemen fell to Boston University on Friday. Also throwing fuel on the fire was Merrimack, who moved two points ahead of UMass by virtue of a solid 5-2 win over No. 10 Maine.

The Minutemen head north to Orono to face off with those same Black Bears next weekend in a two-game series where UMass is in dire need of points while time is quickly ticking away on the season. The Minutemen have a 2-23-2 record all time versus the Bears, with the last win coming four years ago.

But for now, it's all about the future for the Minutemen, as Cahoon will make some personnel changes for the contest. Tim Warner will start between the pipes, and it is likely that many youngsters who have not logged ice time as of late will get a significant chunk of it against NTDP. And for Cahoon, the ideal situation is obvious.

"Best case scenario, Werner scores four goals and we score five."

Game time on Friday is 7:00 p.m.

WHY RETURN TO NEVERLAND? ARTS PAGE 5
IS TV THE DEVIL? ED/OP PAGE 4
U-S-A! PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
TUESDAY ISSUE EIGHTY THREE 2.19.02

Kulik paints a painful picture of fiscal status to the faculty senate

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

State Representative Steve Kulik (D- Turner's Falls) painted a bleak picture to the Faculty Senate as he explained the current fiscal situation from a legislator's point of view, with little hope in sight.

"There has been an 18 percent decline in state revenues," Kulik said. "Every department is affected."

Acting Governor Jane Swift's submitted budget for Fiscal Year 2003 is naive, Kulik said.

"It starts out, by ay all assessments to be about a billion dollars out of balance," Kulik explained. "It's a very political budget that is not based in reality. It's not worth the paper it's printed on."

According to Kulik, Swift's budget assumes a five percent increase in revenues from last year's submitted budget.

The voter supported tax roll backs must also stop, Kulik said. The rollback was voted on in the 2000 election, during a period of economic growth. It proposed to drop the income tax rate from 5.85 percent to five percent. Kulik recommends freezing the drop at 5.6 percent.

"Those were flush times," Kulik said. "At this point it is just foolhardy to continue on that pace."

But with hard times ahead, budgets in every sector of the state will have to be reduced. In times like these, Kulik says, it is the "loudest voice that gets heard."

And with students from every electoral district enrolled in the University of Massachusetts, Kulik says that UMass has a loud voice – if they choose to use it.

Echoing Representative Ellen Story's (D-Amherst) words at the budget forum of Feb. 7, Kulik said it is vital for students and their parents to register to vote, and to contact their representatives.

"It is so very important to contact their [students' and parents'] representatives in their districts," Kulik said. "Every legislator needs to know they have a stake in UMass."

Kulik answered questions from the Faculty Senate after his presentation.

"The rumor is that the people on Beacon Hill have not heard this year, or last year from the board of trustees of this University or from the president's office," Professor Ron Story said.

"There are no rumors in politics," Kulik said. "I know I have never been contacted. The board is stacked. It is not a board of trustees that sees its role as one of advocacy, and it should.

"[The trustees] do care," Kulik added. "But they are more than caretakers."

Professor Brian O'Connor, the Faculty Senate's delegate to the Board of Trustees, mentioned that at the last general meeting the entire board was not in attendance, and that at many of the smaller committee meetings only a handful of trustees were present.

Professor Joseph Donohue expressed his concern over the cut to the library's acquisition budget, which is a line item in the state's budget, and not a part of the University's actual appropriation. The library's acquisition budget was cut so severely that there will be no new books purchased this year.

"It seems to me that one of the real problems is a simple one," Donohue told Kulik. "[This issue] symbolizes the disdain or uncaring attitude your colleagues have for the University."

SARA WILSON/COLLEGIAN

Tribal dance

Students for a free Tibet held a variety of different events showing Tibetan culture, including these dancers in traditional costumes.

Texas law school dean quits day job to focus on university

By Purva Patel
DAILY TEXAN (U. TEXAS-AUSTIN)

(U-WIRE) AUSTIN, Texas – University of Texas School of Law Dean William Powers Jr. resigned from the Enron Corp.'s board of directors Thursday, citing a need to refocus on the University.

In a letter of resignation to Enron executive John Duncan, Powers said he had completed investigating the company's questionable transactions and wishes to focus on his duties as dean of the law school.

UT President Larry Faulkner said he has spoken to Powers about his growing obligations at Enron, but the administration never asked him to reconsider the position.

"He came to this decision on his own," Faulkner said. "I think he feels he's made his contribution, and we applaud him for turning his attention back to the law school."

As dean, Powers is responsible for developing academic and research programs, working as a contact for faculty, students and other campus units, maintaining relationships with alumni and the government, and overseeing the school's $20.1 million operating budget and $156 million endowment.

Chris Feldman, an Austin, Texas, attorney who works for Public Citizen, a judicial watchdog group, said Powers' decision is good for the school and its image.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE HAMILTON

Not gone, just badly burned

The Delta Upsilon fraternity house still stands, though badly burnt. After finishing off last semester in the University Lodge, the brothers of DU can be found on "fraternity row" in a new house.

"For appearance's sake, he probably did the right thing," Feldman said. "I guess the ultimate question is if he should have joined the board in the first place, but that's open to debate."

Feldman was one of several critics who said Powers' presence on Enron's board of directors posed a conflict of interest.

The controversy stemmed from the large amount of contributions Enron had made to the University in the past and Powers' ties to a company official.

Houston-based energy corporation Enron announced the selection of Powers as a new board member and chairman of a special committee reviewing the company's transactions Oct. 31.

He corresponded with the Securities and Exchange Commission and issued the internal report that accused executives, auditors, lawyers and other board members of creating partnerships to inflate earnings, hide debt and enrich some insiders.

Critics said Enron's large contributions to the University, including $250,000 to the law school, would inhibit Powers' ability to serve as an independent board member.

They said Powers' independence also was compromised because of the law school's connections with Enron officials such as General Counsel James V. Derrick Jr., who has served in major fund-raising positions for the school.

Derrick resigned from the Longhorn Foundation, a fund-raising group for the law school, when Powers joined the Enron board to avoid any perceived conflicts of interest.

Powers could not be reached for comment but released a statement in which he stated, "Because of the ongoing nature of the Enron investigation, it is appropriate that I save comment on my Enron-related duties for the investigations of official agencies, should my comments be sought."

Enron spokesman Vance Meyer said the direct implications of Powers' resignation are not yet apparent since the board recently announced it was in the process of restructuring.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE HAMILTON

Twisted metal

This bike, found outside the Campus Center, has seen better days

Help slam AIDS

This year's annual AIDS Slam Jam fest will be held in the basement of Greenough Dormitory in the Central Living Area on Feb. 23.

The annual event, hosted by the Baker, Chadbourne and Greenough community is a night of entertainment with live musical acts, poetry and guest speakers focusing on AIDS awareness. The Jam Fest was started in 1998 as a way of reminding students that AIDS and HIV were an ongoing struggle for both the campus community and the population at large.

The event strives to provide students with the opportunity to listen to live music and poetry while learning valuable information about the prevention and spread of AIDS.

Also on display at the event will be an AIDS quilt and a number of other forms of artwork done by the student community.

This year's proceeds from both concessions and a $1 admission fee will go to Between Family and Friends of Springfield, an organization that is helping to support individuals suffering from AIDS or HIV with food, housing and medical support.

Anyone interested in performing at the event can call 546-6648, and poets interested in doing a reading of their material can call 546-5855.

-Melissa Hammel

National Briefs

Arizona

By Tyler Wagger
Arizona Daily Wildcat (U. Arizona)

(U-WIRE) TUCSON, Ariz. – Cheering bystanders and supportive honks from passing cars greeted a march against the death penalty led Sunday by the author of Dead Man Walking.

Nobel Peace Prize nominee Sister Helen Prejean, who authored the book that was later made into a movie, led the march from Catalina Park to Old Main in Tucson.

"You have to wake people up," Sister Prejean said. "With the civil rights, with the vote for women, people sometimes go along with whatever everyone else is saying, even if it's wrong. Now we want them to wake up and see that we're killing kids."

Sister Prejean's book, written after she witnessed the execution of an inmate, was made into an Oscar-winning film starring Susan Sarandon and Sean Penn.

Yesterday's public march and rally, which attracted nearly 100 people, was held in support of legislation to end the death penalty for juveniles in Arizona. "In the U.S. judicial system, the death penalty is overtly racist," said political science sophomore Andrew Lutito, a representative of Amnesty International. "It seems fundamentally wrong for the state to kill people for killing other people."

People came together at the event for a variety of reasons, including personal ties to prisoners on death row. "I've been visiting a man on death row for the last eight years who was only 16 at the age of his crime," said Carol Korich, who attended the rally.

Claudia Elquist, state co-chair for the Coalition of Arizonans to Abolish the Death Penalty, addressed problems with executing juveniles.

"Research has shown that the parts of the brain that control impulses are not fully developed until people reach their 20s," Elquist said. "Automobile companies figured this years ago, and that's why they changed the rates for juveniles. When dollars are at stake we figure it out really fast."

The walk was intended to bring public attention to the issue of juvenile execution.

There are currently five people in Arizona on death row who were juveniles at the time of their crime.

"We freeze-frame people into the worst act of their lives and then freeze frame ourselves into killing them," Sister Prejean said. "Once you have the mentality of identifying people solely with their crimes, it's easy to kill the mentally challenged and kids."

The death penalty has been abolished in 110 countries, and all but six countries have stopped executing people who were juveniles at the time of their crime.

"When the rest of the world looks at us executing people who weren't even considered grown-ups, it's horrific to them," Elquist said. "Politicians who are not willing to come up with real solutions to violence pretend that being for the death penalty proves that they're being tough on crime. But in reality, states that have the worst record for arresting and convicting dangerous criminals are the ones that use the death penalty."

Andy Silverman, UA law professor and co-chair of Sanctity of Life, People Against Execution, said he hopes the walk will bring attention to the death penalty issue in Arizona.

"All of these things bring about community awareness and support for this movement," he said.

Last year, the group helped enact a law prohibiting the execution of the mentally challenged and this year, they're working on legislation to prohibit the execution of juveniles.

Israel Carpenter, representative from Students Against the Death Penalty, who recently met Sister Prejean, thinks of her as a powerful motivator.

"She does everything for the right reasons," she said. "She inspires people as she goes."

Ohio

By Bekki Kanter
The Lantern (Ohio State U.)

(U-WIRE) COLUMBUS, Ohio – Astronauts aren't the only things going up into space this month.

The Ohio State University Army ROTC flag will be aboard the space shuttle Columbia, taking off from Kennedy Space Center in Cape Canaveral, Fla., Feb. 28 at 9:32 a.m.

Lt. Col. Nancy Currie is an OSU Army ROTC alumna and the NASA astronaut taking the flag into space.

"To my knowledge it's the first flight when they have loaded flags from a variety of organizations," said Lt. Col. Jack Gumbert, professor of military science for the Army at OSU. "Each astronaut has the chance to take some personal item up."

"It's a way to share the space program with all those people who pay for it," said James Hartsfield, NASA spokesman at the Johnson Space Center. "We can't fly everybody, but we can fly mementos."

Hartsfield said each crew member has a small amount of personal space for each flight, called a personal preference kit. School flags and other school spirit items usually are taken; however, astronauts cannot take something that could be sold after the flight for commercial profits, he said.

Currie's invitation did not stop at the flag, however. She also invited Gumbert and OSU Army ROTC students to attend the launch.

From Feb. 27 to March 1, Gumbert and four students will have the opportunity to meet astronauts, observe the launch from the viewing stands and attend the Currie family launch reception. Gumbert said many students were interested in taking the trip, but he had to limit the number because of finances.

"These students show great aptitude in school work in majors that allow background for the Army Astronaut program," Gumbert said. Each student attending also has a 3.5 GPA or greater.

"My intention in them going is to show them an event which will trigger their imagination and might interest them in following in Currie's footsteps," Gumbert said.

Gumbert said when these cadets become captains, the Army will contact them about joining the astronaut program, which trains ROTC members to be mission specialists like Currie. If they join the program, they will perform both military and civilian experiments.

"I've always been inspired by flight," said Cadet Brian Downs, a sophomore in aeronautical and astronautical engineering. "I thought about it a while ago – being an astronaut – and it has always been in the back of my mind. This might help me decide what I want to do."

Cadets Luke Anderson, a junior in mechanical engineering, and Thomas Hardy, a junior in electronic and computer engineering, also are attending the launch with Gumbert. Hardy also serves as the Army ROTC Web master.

During three years of active duty for the Army, Cadet Justin Crocker, a freshman in criminology, worked making gas jets for plane engines. He said he is interested in comparing vertical flight to horizontal flight. He is the only student attending the launch who does not major in some sort of engineering.

"This is what college is all about, a way to discover new avenues and explore new experiences," Crocker said. "Why would anyone pass it up if they have the opportunity to go?"

Currie, who received a bachelor's in biological science from OSU, is scheduled to visit OSU May 23 to speak to ROTC cadets and the members of the department of engineering. She also will have breakfast with the ROTC seniors at the Fawcett Center on May 24.

Oklahoma

By Lou Ann Lissonnet
Daily O'Collegian (Oklahoma State U.)

(U-WIRE) STILLWATER, Okla. – The ninth annual statewide Islam Awareness Week will kick off Monday through efforts of the Muslim Student Association.

Two lectures from out-of-state speaker Aminah Assilmi will highlight the week's activities.

Thursday's presentation is "The Truth About Islam," and Friday's is "Women in Islam." They will be held in the Student Union Starlite Terrace at Oklahoma State University at 6:30 p.m.

Assilmi, formerly Southern Baptist, once tried to convert Muslims to Christianity but eventually she converted to Islam, according to www.islamfortoday.com.

"Hopefully, we can help people understand the truth about Islam," said Abdusselam Bowwe, vice president of the Muslim Student Association.

The Muslim Student Association is encouraging participation by students and professors.

"We really want the participation of the professors because there are several classes about Islamic ethics," said Louia Jalabi, association member. "We would like to help make more resources available for their teachings."

During the week members of the association will hand out information about Islam at the Chi-O Clock.

"We would like to clear up some of the misunderstandings that are out there about public perception of Islam, some examples being the roles of women in Islam, the use of arms and where the Islams come from," said Yousef Bensaif, president of the Muslim Student Association.

Bensaif said the media have had a tremendous effect on the portrayal of Islam; he noted these concepts are foreign to the media, and the media fail to be fair and unbiased.

Oregon

By Brook Reinhard
Oregon Daily Emerald (U. Oregon)

(U-WIRE) EUGENE, Ore. – The University of Oregon has projected 20,000 students are expected to attend the University this fall, and the high demand for housing and the lack of housing standards in Eugene, Ore., means local landlords have more freedom to raise rates and cut costs.

Students wanting the best places to live next year should start their search now, Duck's Village Operations Manager Jean Robbins said.

With the increased demand, complexes like Duck's Village are considering an approximate 5 percent rate increase. Robbins said students will pay the $5 to $10 monthly rent increase and cited Duck's Village's 99.5 percent occupancy rate as proof of satisfied renters.

Student leaders who have been working with the city to adopt a housing code are worried the extra demand will decrease property upkeep even further.

"It's like a domino effect," said Megan Hughes, who is leading ASUO's fight for city housing standards in Eugene, the biggest city in Oregon without a housing code. "There are more students looking for more houses, so students are going to have to settle with what they can. If their basement floods and their landlord doesn't do anything about it, they're going to have to settle for that."

University residence halls can house roughly 3,400 students, the Greek system takes care of 1,000 to 1,500 more, and large apartment complexes such as University Commons Apartments and Duck's Village have room for about 2,500 students. That leaves the remaining 63 percent of students to find an apartment or a house to rent off campus – or live with mom and dad.

"We're obviously going to end up with more people applying than we have space to provide," Robbins said of her properties.

University residence halls also are expecting high numbers of students to fill the 3,400 available spots, director of University housing Mike Eyster said. But Eyster added the University is seeking to house only 3,125 students in these rooms, because double occupancy rooms get crowded when there's only 147 square feet to share between two students.

Eyster previously proposed building a new residence hall to add space and provide a roof for almost 400 students where the current outdoor tennis courts are located north of 15th Avenue, but the project is still in the planning stage.

If students want more space, they can opt for apartments like the ones offered by University Commons, which have individual rooms and 820 square feet in which to spread out.

Renting a house is another option, and students even can decide to put down roots and buy their own place. The city of Eugene offers interest-free deferred loans of up to $4,000 for first-time home buyers and is happy to consider students for the program, city of Eugene property rehabilitation specialist Mark Trit said.

Wherever students decide to live, they'll have the best luck if they start early.

"The earlier you apply, the better chance you have of getting a room," Robbins said.

She added students in Eugene haven't experienced a tight housing market before.

"Some students literally pull up to our apartments the first week of school with a vanload of stuff. People aren't used to finding a house or apartment in advance," Robbins said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1911, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Gargantia Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Sittawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd. North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUVs • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily Weekly Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MHEC Rates
Or Your Home

carloansOK.com
GET YOUR CAR IN 24 HOURS
FASTAPP CODE: 2032
Log on to www.carloansok.com and fill out the fast and secure online application. Walk into the dealership already approved and ready to drive the car of your choice! Log on now! www.carloansok.com
OK!
FAST! EASY! ON-LINE AUTO APPROVAL!

RING IN THE NEW YEAR WITH GREAT CONNECTIONS! GREAT VALUE!
3500 FREE Minutes for LIFE!
That's 3200 Night & Weekend and 300 Anytime home airtime minutes every month!
All for only $35 monthly access when you sign up now for one year and remain on a SingleRate™ East Plan
— PLUS —
UNLIMITED Nationwide Long Distance
When calling from your home rate area. Airtime charges apply
GREAT CONNECTIONS!
The whole family can stay connected with the Family SharePlan™.
Activate a primary line on any SingleRate East Family SharePlan℠ $35 or higher and add up to 3 lines for only $20 a month for each additional line!
GREAT VALUE!
Buy one digital phone, get one phone FREE!
Available on select phone models with annual contract.
HOLYOKE MALL • (413) 533-2500
HADLEY • 322 Russell Street • (413) 587-3248
@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com
36 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1-800-613-2355 for details, dial ext. 226 for franchise opportunities.
verizon wireless
Authorized Retailer
*After valid with new activation on select plans for a limited time only. Subject to terms of Cellular Service Agreement and Calling Plans. $40 activation fee per line. $175 early termination fee per line. Subject to credit approval. Cannot be combined with other offers. Usage rounded to next full minute. Plans, allowances vary. All calls subject to taxes and other charges. Requires digital service in certain CDMA equipment. Phone model may vary. While supplies last. For Family SharePlan™, only one user can be on a primary plan and others must be on secondary plan. All lines must be activated on the same billing account. Night & Weekend hours: Mon-Fri 9:00pm-7:00am, Sat 9:00am-Sun 11:59pm. Some restrictions apply. See store for details.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON
Travel to Learn this Summer!
These programs provide a dynamic learning experience—a lively blend of classroom and field activities resulting in a true appreciation of the host country.
Field School in Prehistoric Archaeology in Belize
Afro-Cuba Today: People, Culture, and Historical Environment
Ireland Today: Politics and Society
Spanish Language and Culture in Mexico
Vietnam Today: Culture, History and Politics
For more information, contact University of Massachusetts Boston Division of Corporate, Continuing and Distance Education 100 Morrissey Blvd. Boston MA 02125-3393
call us 617.287.7913
visit us www.conted.umb.edu
UMASS. BOSTON

Students surprise politicians

By Tara Kyle & Alison Schmauch
The Dartmouth (Dartmouth College)

(U-WIRE) HANOVER, N.H. – During a busy political weekend at the College, a group of Hanover High School students surprised prominent politicians – including U.S. Sen. Bob Smith (R-N.H.) and U.S. Congressman Charlie Bass '74 (R-N.H.) – by protesting a presentation of flags to several local schools.

Smith and gubernatorial candidate David Corbin also made less controversial appearances at a meeting of the Young Republicans, and Smith later won cautious support at a gathering of environmental activists from different schools in the Ivy League.

The Hanover High students, bearing signs with slogans such as "Stop Mindless Nationalism" and "Flags Don't Make Patriots" stood outside the school Saturday to protest the donation of 89 flags by Americans for Victory, a local group founded after Sept. 11 to promote patriotism in the Hanover, N.H., area. When the ceremony began, the students unexpectedly walked into the auditorium and stood silently near the stage, holding their signs.

Ansel Pelogg, a junior at Hanover High, said the protestors were upset because Americans for Victory never asked any teachers or administrators about the proposed donations of the flags.

Pelogg was unsure if any members of the Hanover High faculty would have opposed the donation of the flags. But she said she is worried Americans for Victory is "using the flag as a symbol of support for the government's policies in Afghanistan. And I know a number of students and teachers don't support those policies," she said.

Orrin Judd, director of communications for Americans for Victory, said many members were concerned because Hanover citizens reacted differently to the aftermath of Sept. 11 than citizens in nearby communities did.

For example, he noted a number of Hanover citizens had attended Dartmouth College-sponsored panels on the war that "tended to enforce the idea that the events of Sept. 11 were America's fault."

Judd said Americans for Victory wanted to foster greater patriotism by placing flags in every classroom in Hanover.

Like all of the other politicians who spoke at the ceremony, Smith said he supports the flag donation and regards the flag as a symbol of American liberty. He related the story of a prisoner of war in Vietnam who linked together pieces of red, white and blue thread during his captivity to make a flag.

State Sen. Clifton Below noted the American flag is unique in that it symbolizes the unity of the United States as a single nation, yet the distinct stars and stripes symbolize the diversity among the 50 states of the union.

Police Log

February 11

Breaking and Entering

There was a vending machine that was broken into in Herter Hall.

Larceny

There was a mountain bike taken from Mary Lyon Dormitory.

A cell phone was lost in Southwest Mall.

A flat screen monitor was stolen from an office in W.E.B. Dubois Library.

February 12

Suspicious Person Activity

The caller reports that an individual followed her off of the bus and is having strange and erratic conversations with her while she is walking to class.

An individual called to report an ongoing problem with harassment by email originating from the University.

A caller reported that someone who was possibly misrepresenting himself interviewed him.

February 13

Breaking and Entering

There was a vehicle with a smashed window found in lot 22.

There was a report of a vent window being broken and a stereo being taken from a vehicle parked in lot 44.

Larceny

The rear plates were stolen off of a vehicle in the parking lot in lot 11.

There was a report of a lost UCard and a key.

February 14

Disturbance

There was a report of 6-7 people running up and down the halls of John Quincy Adams Dormitory creating a disturbance.

Larceny

There were two plates stolen off of a vehicle in lot 62.

A license and social security card were taken from Boyden Gymnasium.

JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2002
ARE YOU READY?
Negril and Montego Bay
ONE LOVE, ONE HEART, ONE GREAT PARTY! Come to Jamaica and hop all night at an unbelievable price.
From airfare to your hotel, parties and activities, these reliable tour operators will get you there
Sun Splash Tours
1.800.426.7710
www.sunsplashtours.com
Student Travel Services
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

One of our job requirements includes "being yourself."
How can you grow as an individual if you're being forced into a mold? At Ernst & Young, we empower you to push the boundaries. We offer the chance to generate creative ideas that really count. On our teams everyone has a role to play and something to contribute, so not only do you have a voice but you can make a difference with clients and co-workers alike. Break the mold.
FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2002
ERNST & YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

UMass employees retiring:

Who could blame them?

Early retirement – it sounds like a great idea. Who wouldn't want to leave behind all of the troubles of work at an early age with a lucrative pension?

The answer? Almost no one.

UMass's faculty, administrators, and clerical workers are no different than anyone else. Last Friday's deadline for taking early retirement courtesy of Jane Swift and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has come and gone, and the final numbers are staggering. Not surprising, but staggering.

371 employees have filed for early retirement. These employees include 96 faculty members, 88 professional employees, and an additional 187 workers employed with clerical duties or by Physical Plant. And that won't be all. Paul Page, a retiring vice chancellor for administration and finance, said that other employees can still file for retirement directly with the State Retirement Board in Boston.

Expect them to, and don't begrudge them their decision. Veteran UMass employees are no more comfortable with the budget cuts than we are. After years of dedicated service to the university, each of these employees are weighing the options and trying to decide whether or not it's still worth it to work here.

For many, this is not a difficult decision. Regardless how loyal they may be, UMass' workforce reads the writing on the wall just like the students do. Those who choose to stay know that they're going to be working on staffs with the same amount of work to do, but fewer employees to do it. They realize they're going to be working for a university that is cutting its fringe benefits such as childcare.

Those are not easy things to swallow. This retirement program is designed to trim the workforce. Only 20 percent of all employees who retire will be replaced. That means that not only is UMass losing many of its wisest and experienced employees, it isn't even replacing the bodies. It's a simple choice for them, really. Realistically, the university could have been hit a lot worse with retirements than it will be. Five hundred university employees sought counseling services to consider retirement in the past month.

All of the employees who filed for retirement by the deadline have the right to withdraw their retirement applications by June 15. Some no doubt will do it. How many people actually do retire will depend on one basic factor: how much worse will it get?

Many of these employees are retiring not because they really want to, and not because they are really ready to. They're retiring because they feel like they have to. They're retiring because they are no longer comfortable working for a university that can slash benefits and programs so easily without batting an eyelash. It's not selfish, and the student body shouldn't be upset that they're doing it. It's called self-preservation. These good people have to do what is best for them.

In the meantime, the university will continue to suffer. The loss of this many seasoned, experienced, and dedicated professionals is a tough one to swallow. Then again, most campus news lately is tough to swallow.

Unsigned editorials are the majority opinion of the Daily Collegian editorial staff.

Information from the Hampshire Gazette was used in this editorial.

THE COLLEGIAN WELCOMES YOUR OPINION. WRITE TO US AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER, OR E-MAIL US AT COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM. PLEASE INCLUDE YOUR NAME, YEAR AND MAJOR. LETTERS SHOULD BE LESS THAN 300 WORDS. THE COLLEGIAN RESERVES THE RIGHT TO EDIT FOR LENGTH AND CLARITY.

Going to hell: news at 11

So this self proclaimed Hoochie Mama at the bar couldn't believe I don't have a television.

"You know," she said, "people without televisions are supposed to be very intelligent, but they don't socialize very well."

I knew exactly what she meant and guessed changed subjects and saved the fat I'd fed her she reminded me of that dumbs-new anchor on CNN.

I'm not trying to taint everyone into throwing their televisions into a pile and burning them, but I get a bad feeling that TV is the messenger of the Devil.

There's a study out in the recent Scientific America (that's a magazine kind of like, but a little different than Maxim or Hustler) that says television is addictive. Actually they don't like the word 'addictive' because addiction is usually thought of as bad. Rather, they say it is addictive like sex is addictive.

Hello. There's a good pick-up line that might just work. "Take off your pants I'm a junkie."

Seriously though researchers say that television stimulates an instinctive alert system in the brain. It's one of those things our grandparents relied on to keep the grizzlies and Indians and Czar's soldiers from smashing our skulls. Television keeps you watching because your primitive little brains think you're about to be eaten.

One would think that if this study is true, networks (television pushers) will go dark-start dealing in programming with a little more intensity – purity. Personally, I do more with a little more senseless violence.

Since most people are TV users, what the Hoochie Mama said is true: if you don't partake, you won't fit in. You're just left out on tidbits of knowledge that really help the world go round, like my buddy who tells me I'm beginning to look like an ax murderer. That's something most of us would never know if I wasn't told.

I find it funny when I get control of some television. It's not very cool. I flip through all the channels, make sure no one I'm related to is on "Jerry" then settle for some re-introduced Arctic Wolf movie where they zoom in on torn flesh and dribbling blood.

After I get my fix on, I go hunting for something with out a plot. Something real. The only shows that really aren't lying to you about the ways of the world are the religious fanatics station and "COPS." "COPS" is about how mostly minorities and poor people go to jail.

Unfortunately the religious fanatics are also telling the truth. We're all going to Hell.

I've always thought you can watch a person's lips to tell if they're lying – I'm sorry, I meant acting. Newscasters act, they don't lie. I always get that confused. But if you look at their lips and their lips look like they disagree with the words – well, that's a bad sign.

Watch the Home Shopping Network until you know what I mean. You actually can use these shows to learn about people. If you know someone is about to lie to you (act) you can watch to see what gives him or her away.

The psychic hotline girls will teach you plenty – remember, you've never met these people, but they claim they know everything about you.

Then there's my favorite fix, The Antique Road Show. That's the PBS show about crack addicts who hock their family heirlooms.

"This is a WWII bomber jacket worn by my Uncle Bo as he was shot trying to liberate a concentration camp. How much do you think it's worth?"

What's sad is that when it comes to television now, the anchors really aren't lying when they try to explain the world around us. Their job description isn't to know, it's to act like they know. Don't be distracted by their breasts, watch their lips.

When CNN's newest bimbo gives her best explanation as to why Enron executives are shooting themselves in the head ("It was apparently suicide") I'm tempted to shoot myself.

These bezebels don't even know what to ask. The question isn't where did he die? It's who was this guy and what did he do before he died? What did he know? Hey, I got one: Why is he dead?

And is this what happens when our sons-of-a-CIA-director President says he's going to separate himself from Enron?

Do you understand that when someone shoots himself in the head on CNN, it's different that when they do it on HBO?

Something like Enron needs more explanation than some game show hostess waving her hand over a box of shredded documents. Hey, this is personal for me. K-Mart, my favorite store, just went bankrupt thanks to Enron. Where am I going to buy clothes? I want answers.

What exactly did those documents say before they were shredded? See, someone actually knows the answer. This is the biggest bank robbery in the history of the world and we're settling for some should've-been-a-porn-starnoscaster that confuses Cayman Island tax shelters with a shady beach picnic spot. Hello! These guys put 692 businesses on an island a quarter of a mile long, never paid taxes, and then hundreds of billions just disappear.

See, if all you knew about the world came from TV, you'd think pirates had to have one eye, a patch, and a sword. You'd think they all get chased by fairies and eaten by alligators (Okay, crocodiles, you addicts). Well, that's only partially true: modern pirates drive Rovers, wear suits, and live in the burbs, but what gives them away is that they always hide their money on islands.

Since we aren't allowed to have lynch mobs anymore, we ought to send these Enron dons off to Cuba to hang out with the terrorists for a little while. Something tells me we'd find out where the money went real quick.

Let's televise it and call it Survivor.

Joshua Greene is a UMass student.

Of jerks and knee-jerks

SHARON MAHONEY

I've been thinking about Thomas Junta a lot lately.

He's the hockey dad who was recently convicted of beating another hockey dad to death in full view of a rink full of horrified kids, including his own and those of his victim, Michael Costin.

Mr. Junta is a man that some reporters described as "hulking", a 270-pound truck driver with a jutting jaw and, by all accounts, a serious anger-management problem. Is there anyone out there surprised to hear that this so-called "gentle giant" had a record of arrests for previous assaults? That Junta's own wife had sought a restraining order after being struck by him in front of their kids?

Mr. Junta described the altercation that led to Mr. Costin's death as "a stupid guy thing" that simply got out of hand. His attorney characterized Junta's response as one of self-defense. The prosecution scoffed at this description, noting the testimony of witnesses that placed Mr. Junta at the end of the fight sitting atop Mr. Costin's chest, slamming his opponent's head against the concrete rink floor, while bystanders screamed at him to stop.

How does a shouting match escalate into violence and death? How could anyone lose control that completely over something so trivial?

I was mulling this over as I drove home the other day. It was snowing and it looked like it was going to be a fairly substantial accumulation. The wind whipped huge white flakes around my windshield. I was more than a little anxious; our house is at the top of a continuous two-mile incline that rapidly becomes too slick to negotiate in icy weather.

As I turned the corner on the last quarter-mile before my driveway, I saw two vehicles stopped in the road, headed in opposite directions. The windows of both vehicles were open; the drivers, soccer-mom types, were holding an animated conversation in mid-road, oblivious to the snow and to my elderly little car rolling to a stop behind them.

I paused a few seconds for them to finish their talking and move on. No response – the conversation continued. I tapped my horn, thinking that perhaps they hadn't noticed me. Still no response. I waited a full half-minute, the snow falling faster by the second, and then tapped the horn again.

Their heads whipped around in my direction. One more second or so of conversation and then, finally, the Acura in the oncoming lane began to move. The driver, a thirtyish, expensively-dressed woman, her carefully made-up face contorted with rage, pulled up aside me just long enough to extend an immaculately-manicured middle finger at me through the open window, and then sped past. The driver in front of me sat there passive-aggressively in the road for another thirty seconds, and then took off suddenly with a roar, vanishing over the top of the hill.

Why this ugliness? All I had done was make them aware of the fact that they were blocking a public thoroughfare. I had tried to do this as politely as possible, short of getting out of my vehicle and saying pretty please. The sense of entitlement behind their ignorance was breathtaking. This wasn't suburbia, and a country road is not a shopping-mall parking lot. The idea that they had the right to hold up traffic, in a snowstorm, at a time of day when school busses were trying to drop off passengers, and then to flip me the bird when I was clearly justified in honking... well, it was beyond arrogant.

If you think, dear reader, that I'm going to compare that soccer mom to Thomas Junta, you're wrong. Because although I clearly had the right-of-way, and she clearly acted in a way that spoke of trailer park rather than country club manners, I had no right to the moral high ground. Because I lost it the moment I automatically returned her obscene gesture with one of my own.

Now if I can go from benevolent to self-righteous to stupid in a half-second, how can I hold myself above someone like Thomas Junta, a walking powder keg if ever I saw one?

Anger is a habit. It's addictive as any narcotic, and just as destructive. We learn it from any number of sources, and turn to it instantly when threatened or confronted. The more primitive center of the brain flames to overload, and the part making us "a little lower than the angels" is swamped by an overwhelming urge to strike out, to reduce that offending sonofabitch to road kill. Another flawed human being is instantly transformed into The Enemy, someone whom it is okay to hurt and degrade. And it feels good, doesn't it?

Except that it doesn't work. That kind of uncontrolled anger isn't expiated by acting out. Instead, the response becomes more ingrained, harder to shake, until the day when any little thing sets the monster loose. Like a junkie looking for his next fix, any wound to pride or self-esteem—no matter how insignificant, no matter how transient – is sufficient excuse to release that ol' adrenaline, to get our own back, to show 'em who's boss.

It would be nice if Mr. Acura had the good sense to feel as foolish about her reaction as I did about mine once I got home and out of the snow. But it really doesn't matter – because the only one whose behavior I can control is my own, and if I can't resist repaying boorishness in kind, then it doesn't matter who starts it.

So next time, I'll keep my hands to myself.

Sharon Mahoney is a UMass student.

Old Europe in the Age of Tourism

Among many fairytales of Prague, one might hear a story of a time not so distant when the city was "normal." The only vestiges of this "normalcy" can perhaps be sensed by the locals commuting to work, or walking upon the Charles Bridge in the early morning.

The only time of the day when "real people" ride the metro trains, and one of Europe's architectural wonders is free of picture-posing tourists. After the Nazis, after the Soviets, some call it the third invasion in recent memory, the one that brings out the arms of gawking souvenir peddlers to appease the crowds of novelty-hungry visitors.

What suddenly attracts so many tourists to Prague? Perhaps it is indeed the desire for novelty which is no longer available in the much-too-explored "West", which brings them to a city that only within the last decade had stopped being "over there" in "the East". Some people liken Prague of today to Paris of the 1950s, a hub of expatriate life and memory searchers. But the comparison has caught up with nostalgia, too: nostalgia now is manufactured and sold. The Golem, a famous invention of Rabbi Loew, has been resurrected from its mythical sleep in the attic of the Old-New Synagogue, to become a ubiquitous poster boy for travel agents and souvenir retailers.

Franz Kafka is no longer that solitary man who wanted his manuscripts destroyed: mass-produced nostalgia claimed him as an image for the best-selling T-shirts. More recent events and personalities have not escaped this phenomenon either. One can stay in a hotel, which was formerly a communist jail. If one asks in advance, it is possible to request room number six, formerly the cell where Vaclav Havel, the legendary dissident and current President, was once imprisoned. It is not advisable to stay there for longer than three days, then say – the spirit of communism really begins to wear down on guests.

On the way from Prague to Terezin, an infamous ghetto, which the Nazis presented as propaganda of an ideal city generously given to the Jews by the Fuhrer, and, in fact, "waiting room for Auschwitz," as the few survivors called it, I met an American family. Two kids, Mom, Dad and Grandma, they are excited about their trip to Bohemia, as the grandmother insists upon calling it, glad to share their impressions. They show me their digital pictures of a trip to Carlsbad from a day before, pictures of them swimming in the spa town's hot springs, in the middle of a snowstorm. A novelty, indeed.

Just a few frames later, they would have new family photos: by the ovens of crematoria, inside a model barrack, next to the execution wall. And images of Auschwitz itself, in the neighboring Poland, come to mind: its museum cafeteria with a big Magnum ice-cream commercial that's supposed to look as if it belongs next to the images of emaciated bodies; backpackers with undisguised Europe On a Shoestring in their hands, rushing through their only stop in Poland; giggling couples that take turns to photograph one another in front of Arbeit Macht Frei gate and inside gas chamber. Everything is a novelty, a picture for a family album: here we are, enjoying a thermal bath, and here, taking a tour of a concentration camp.

With everything having a tendency to become a fairy tale here, would the harrowing realities of the last century turn into myths as well, mere detached tourist attractions, much like the rumored-about habitat of the imaginary Golem?

In the Internet cafe, I catch a glimpse of a computer screen next to mine. "The castle was phat," a young man types in an email to his friend. "You should definitely visit. It's a cool place." Prague is cool and phat, its magnificent Castle full of mysteries that are not more than entertaining. But Prague is also heartbreaking – its anticipated beauties devoid of meaning, its dreams robbed by an intentional, commonplace, commercialized nostalgia of the crowds.

How many backpackers know about Libussa's prophetic dreams of the city whose glory would reach the stars, of Jan Hus and the Thirty Years War, of betrayal of Czechoslovakia in 1938? How many of them know of the communist coup, and of the Soviet invasion? How many have heard of Charta 77 and of intellectuals-turned-window washers? Prague of today seems to have been recreated by the same West that has betrayed it in Munich: Prague for the tourists, Prague with its classical music concerts advertised as "heated" to lure in the freezing crowds, Prague with its traditional marionettes manufactured and displayed alongside the Harry Potter dolls.

Prague is not unique in drawing hordes of tourists, not unlike many other cities of what tour books often inappropriately refer to as "Eastern Europe" in outdated Cold War terms. The spirit of novelty permeates most of "the other Europe", which has been forced into separation from the rest of the continent for so long. Yet, Prague serves the most striking example. Perhaps to its own surprise, the city where adversity once contributed to existential meaning, Prague was forced to become a city where the being for so many passers-by is indeed so unbearably light.

From the steps of the National Museum, one can place oneself on the spot where the most difficult battle (as some choose to refer to it) – one of the photographers competing for a good shot of the peaceful demonstrations was fought in November of 1989. The place is still there, the enormity of the Wenceslas Square, onto which one can project the images of students protesting the communist regime, from the equestrian statue of St. Wenceslas, to the entrance of the Old Town. The communism has fallen, and the demonstrators are long-gone; ubiquitous hot dog stands, bureaux de change and neon signs create an altogether new picture, a landscape barely distinguishable, almost identical to so many other homogenized cities of the world.

Yet, one can only eulogize so much. The Czech Republic is negotiating its accession to the European Union. Prague is speeding ahead of the time it has lost in its forced communist slumber. This city, which so many visitors fail to see beyond its commercialized magic, is indeed quite real. It's struggling to turn the tide of history against its prolonged oblivion. "The West" has arrived here indeed, with all its benefits and drawbacks, for better or for worse.

Sasha Senderovich is a former Collegian staff member. He is currently spending his junior year abroad at Trinity College, Oxford.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR:

It's been a rough ride.

Once upon a time, UMass had a strong debate team that competed nationally against other colleges and universities around the country. I had heard about it back when I was a member of my high school debate team down in New Jersey. And yet, when I first stepped on campus in the fall of 1998 as a freshman, there was no debate team. I was disappointed, and wanted to debate again. Since there wasn't a team here, I couldn't, and I didn't take the initiative to do anything about it.

As fate would have it, two years later I stumbled upon a flyer advertising a new debate team at UMass. It turns out that Mandlen towers, then a junior transfer student who had debated for the University of Vermont, and Molly Jane Layton, then a sophomore who had debated in a league for homeschooled students before coming to college, had teamed up and were trying to found a new team.

By then, I had already found my niche at UMass, and was reluctant to get heavily involved. I still got in touch with Mariellen and Molly, and I offered my services as an experienced debater in a coaching capacity. By this time, I'd been out of the game for two years, and I wasn't sure that I would be comfortable debating. Besides, I'd always enjoyed judging and coaching more. Until recently, I kept in touch with my old high school team and did some work for them and had a lot of fun. When I contacted Mariellen and Molly, my original intention was to just help out with the team a little, when I had time. Soon I was kind of sucked in, and I started leading training sessions and attending officer's meetings. I can now proudly call myself the coach of the debate team at UMass.

That first year was difficult. We managed to recruit a fair number of new team members, including Dave Ryan, now a sophomore who has come to be an invaluable fourth officer. Many of the new members seemed enthusiastic. They participated in our training sessions and we were on our way – until we started hitting snags. Debate is, after all, a somewhat expensive activity at the competitive level. If we wanted to go to tournaments, then we needed funding, and in order to get funding, we needed to become an RSO. This process was complicated when the SGA disbanded and held new elections last spring. We also needed to join the Cross-Examination Debate Association (CEDA), which is the national organization for collegiate policy debate, so that we could attend tournaments. Mariellen, Molly, Dave, and I paid for our dues to CEDA out of our own pockets.

We did not attend any tournaments that first year. We couldn't – we were too busy establishing ourselves as a legitimate organization on campus. But we were optimistic for the next year.

We held a meeting at the beginning of the fall semester for our old members, and only the four officers showed up. We were devastated.

We could have thrown in the towel then. We couldn't get funding from SGA because we hadn't been an RSO long enough. We only really had four members on the team. Was it worth it? Rather than giving up, we decided to recruit, and last semester we managed to get several new members on board. We worked hard and were able to attend our first tournament last November at Columbia University.

The UMass team had an impressive showing at that first tournament. We competed against teams from all over the country, most of which had money and faculty sponsors behind them. There were 42 novice teams in attendance at the tournament. Eric Mackin and Russell Ferri placed 17th while Molly and Bridget Henry placed 20th, which meant that the under-funded UMass team did better than half of the more experienced field at its very first tournament! I received a lot of praise and positive feedback from the debate community for how well the team was doing.

We now have a few dedicated members on our team, and are looking forward to our next tournament, which will be at Marist College at the end of February. In the meantime, though, we are recruiting!

A little more about the team: We participate in a kind of debate called policy debate, which is a lot like it sounds. It has a very specific structure and order of speeches, and teams of two debate affirmative and negative sides of a policy relating to a particular topic or issue. The topic is the same at every tournament for the entire academic year. This year's topic involves increasing control on Native American land, which has proved to be very interesting.

If you are a student and have even a remote interest in debate, you should come check us out. Look for our flyers around campus, and our table in the Campus Center this week, where you can get more information. We will have an information session on Wednesday, Feb. 20, at 7 p.m. in Campus Center Rooms 811-815.

We are also looking for a little support from the UMass community. I realize that in the climate of the recent budget cuts, monetary support is kind of out of the question, but it would be great if you could show your support in other ways. If you're reading this editorial and you know someone who might be interested, tell him or her about the team! Professors, make announcements in your classes! Let's spread the word! We've fought hard to get where we are as a fledgling team with no money that is overcoming adversity to be competitive on the national level. It's been a struggle, but it's been worth every bit of effort we've put in. Now all we need is you.

Erin O'Brien is a UMass student.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.19.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Alcohol & Older Men!

ASK ELENA

By Elena Panesis
COLLEGIAN ADVICE GODDESS

Hey Elena, Lately, I've been having feelings for this really attractive guy. In fact, I think about him all the time. I have a problem, though. The guy is so much more – he's a man and an older one at that. He's my professor. It's gotten so bad that I daydream about him. I feel so shameful! I know he's probably married with kids! What should I do to get over this?
- Daydreaming in Dickinson

There is nothing shameful at all about your situation considering that you have not acted on your feelings. Seriously, what would life be without fantasies and schoolgirl crushes? I would have never survived middle school without my precious posters of Jason Priestley and the rest of the "90210" hotties. In high school, I moved onto Mr. Brady, the gorgeous blond substitute that could even compete with Michael Vartan, the adorable teacher in Never Been Kissed.

Fantasies and daydreaming allow us to explore relationships without the fear of rejection or ending up heartbroken. I find it healthy in a way because you can explore what types of qualities you find attractive in the opposite sex.

However, these feelings can become dangerous if they escalate into obsession and prevent you from entering relationships with other people. For example, I know two young men that are quite smitten with "Dawson's Creek" cutie Katie Holmes (one used to have quite the shrine to this T.V. goddess). Yet, they both have normal relationships with other equally attractive young ladies and know that a fling or even a marriage with Katie would be nice but probably out of the question.

It sounds like you are well aware than you will never have a relationship with your professor, who I assume is a forty-something Clooney clone well worth eyeing.

Yet, make sure that you do not jade yourself into believing that you may one day be his future girlfriend, wife or the mother of his children for that matter. I also hope that it does not affect your work in class. Do you space out and think about the chemistry between the two of you rather than periodic table of elements?

Basically, forbidden fantasies are a fun escape that I would never discourage. As long as you keep the feelings to yourself, concentrate on the content of the class and meet other men in the 18-24 year old category, then I see nothing wrong with these innocent daydreams!

Elena, I'm a freshman living in the dorms with a bit of a social problem – I have no desire to drink. Personally, it's not really my thing but it seems to be everyone else's, and a full time occupation for that matter. I feel a lot of pressure to just go with the flow but I don't want to sacrifice myself for other people.

None of my friends in high school drank and this is all new to me. How can I have a normal social life without getting sucked in?
-Sober in Southwest

Dear Sober,
I actually found myself in your

Turn to ELENA, page 6

Suzanne Vega: not so much!

COURTESY UNIVERSAL

SHE MAY LOOK GREAT IN OPEN-TOE MULES, BUT SUZANNE VEGA DOESN'T KNOW QUITE HOW TO KICK IT ON THE IRON HORSE STAGE

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Suzanne Vega is a vocal dream and her career is carried by her magical voice. Not to be confused for a groundbreaking musical talent, Vega's crooning is her namesake, not the simplicity of her sound.

Which made her final performance at Iron Horse all the more disappointing. Her fourth show in two days – each featuring a two-hour set – seemed poorly organized and designed that which isn't her forte: her music. While it may have been a chance to explore something other than her beautiful voice, by Vega's fourth or fifth song, it was clear that the music was designed to accomplish another goal: cover her shot voice.

Four shows in two days had clearly taken their toll on the diminutive performer. Making frequent conversation with the crowd – including an ominous request for cognac because it "relaxes the throat" – Vega simply couldn't hit her notes on songs that required her suave vocal abilities. By her seventh song, "Widow's Walk" from her most recent album, she couldn't hit any of the notes that carry the song's solemn loneliness.

By the tenth, when Vega finally found some sort of on-stage flow, she had stopped performing songs that required the utmost of her voice. "Blood Makes Noise" worked only because the entire performance was loud, meaning her backing band drowned her out.

But even with that, the lowlights tended to dominate. On "Solitaire" (literally a tribute to her days spent playing the computer game), there was a musical mix-up and the bassist didn't play. Perhaps it was an intentional stunt (realizing his "mistake" he grabbed a stool and beat out a rhythm on his knees), but either way, the song was ended prematurely.

It came off as a confusing gaffe in a performance savaged by strange decisions. A joke made in the middle of a serious song undercutting the message. "Luka" (a song about child

Turn to VEGA, page 6

Lori McKenna brief opener before Suzanne Vega's two-hour set wasn't long enough. She only got to perform five songs, a tragedy considering her tremendous talent. On stage with one other guitarist, McKenna's short set was a great debut.

A bluesy mix of country and soul, McKenna's songs, almost all about aspects of family, found their lyrical mark. Talking to her unborn daughter on "Josephine" or inviting a condescending lover to hit the road on "Goodbye", McKenna's lyrical talent is evident.

She bolsters her booming voice – which reminds of the great country singers – with skillful picking, joined by a slide-guitar played on stage (whose name was, unfortunately, unintelligible), McKenna relied on only her two guitars to carry her lyrics. Yet there was a depth to their playing that made two seem like more or less, depending. On "Falter", McKenna's solo work while telling the story of a crazed local was inspired, even if the lyrics were problematic.

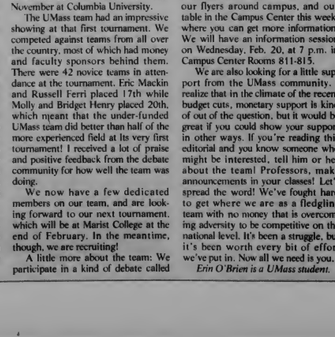
McKenna is hopeful, perhaps to a fault, but if that's her only one, she'll have a stellar career ahead of her. "Falter" suffered from her hope that humanity would come together, but she canceled out such hope with the stark honesty of "Goodbye".

She's a super talent, and she was wasted on twenty minutes of opening time for Suzanne Vega on a Sunday night. Frankly, she deserved better.

-Sam Wilkinson

Return to Never Land is never going to entertain

By Anna Cohen-Cole
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

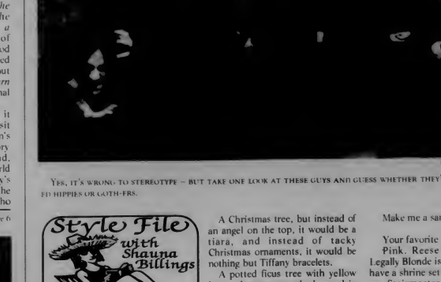


RETURN TO NEVER LAND
Disney—Animated
Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

So, was this Disney sequel a complete failure? Just about. Fortunately, the mere sixty-minute length of the entire film helped quell the torment of watching an underdeveloped sequel. But don't worry, Disney fans! The entire experience was a little longer than an hour. Preceding the film, the audience got to watch a five to 10-minute Pluto cartoon called "Pluto's Fledgling". As I sat watching Pluto, I began to notice how nice the cartoon was without any voices.

I immediately began to worry about the prospect of sitting through a Disney "sequel". Sometimes they have managed to carry the umph of the initial film, like Toy Story II or 102 Dalmatians. However, there are also countless sequels that are made for video, with not even enough effort and focus from the company to let them go to the theater. Let's consider all the Little Mermaids: The Little Mermaid Returns, The Little Mermaid Waits for a Boyfriend, The Little Mermaid Has a Baby, The Little Mermaid Hopes for a Blockbuster Hit. It's sad. None of them made it to the theater, for good reason. This said, I was a bit worried about the "feature film" I was about to submit myself to. Would "Return to Never Land" live up to the original Peter Pan?

Unfortunately as I suspected, it was absolute torment having to sit through sixty minutes of Peter Pan's strained high-pitched voice. The story unfolds during a war in England, which we are left to assume is World War II. We're introduced to Wendy's family: husband who's sent off to the war, a little boy named Daniel who



Turn to PAN, page 6

COURTESY DISNEY ENTERPRISES, INC.

PETER PAN'S ONLY CROWN WILL COME FROM BURGER KING – NOT FROM CRITICAL PRAISE FOR THE LATEST DISNEY SEQUEL.

Stereotypical style - take the quiz

COURTESY PARAMOUNT

YES, IT'S WRONG TO STEREOTYPE – BUT TAKE ONE LOOK AT THESE GUYS AND GUESS WHETHER THEY'RE PETA AFFILIATED HIPPIES OR GOTH-ERS.

Style File with Shauna Billings

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Stereotypes – they're evil, wrong and unfair. But putting all that aside... take the latest "Style File" quiz that pokes a little fun at some of the more prevalent style stereotypes on campus.

1. If you were a tree, what kind of tree would you be?
What kind of tree would I be?
What kind of question is that?
Make me a sandwich.

Your favorite color is...
Pink. Reese Witherspoon in Legally Blonde is my fashion icon. I have a shrine set up to her between my Stairmaster and my O-Town poster.
Golden brown. It's that tawny color of my favorite beverage that can be consumed by the pitcher for a mere $6.50 at McMurphs.
Black. It is the absence of light, the absence of color, the absence of life.
Yeah, it's also the color of death, in case I forgot to mention that.
White. It is bright, natural, and reflects the sun's healing rays back into the world so that others may partake of the joy I received from

A Christmas tree, but instead of an angel on the top, it would be a tiara, and instead of tacky Christmas ornaments, it would be nothing but Tiffany bracelets.
A potted ficus tree with yellow leaves, because somebody peed in the pot at the last beer pong tourney.
A dead tree, with dead branches and no leaves because I'd be dead.
A tall strong oak planted in soil free of pesticides and chemicals. And my plant loving human friends would hug me each and every day.
The strongest tree in the forest, with the biggest roots and the most amount of sap produced. Actually, I would be so powerful and so "in the zone" that instead of sap, I would actually pump Gatorade through my branches.

Turn to STYLE, page 6

Pan

...continued from page 5

LOVES Peter Pan stories, and a daughter named Jane who's thinks all those "stories" ARE just stories. She doesn't believe in "faith, trust, and fairy dust." Instead, she's taken on a role that is much older than her age. Since her father left, Jane has done her best to live up to his words of taking care of her mother and brother.

So, at this point, we see a bit of a dichotomy between mother and daughter. Wendy wants her daughter to be young and have fun. Jane wants to be grown-up (since those were her father's wishes). And yet there is an inconsistency in the film. During the bombing that's taking place in London, all children were sent to the countryside; Wendy then changes her tune, and begins telling her daughter that she "must always look after Danny and tell him those [Peter Pan] stories." But, but, but...didn't Wendy want Jane to be a child and not worry about responsibilities? How can she be expected to be a kid when both her father and mother are telling her to look after, take care of, watch over, someone else?

Anyway, I didn't have to fret over Jane being taken to the country with little Danny, since before the truck could come to pick them up, old Mister Captain Hook with his band of pirates took her instead; he mistook her for Wendy, of course. Poor Jane, never getting to be herself, always Wendy. Wendy. Wendy. Yet that doesn't much matter since Hook only wanted to trap Peter Pan. And yes, Peter comes a-flying to save Wendy. How shocked he was when instead of his love, he finds Jane with a whomping right hook. However, there wasn't much time to ponder Peter's love life, since he was just too annoying and mean to be the same Peter Pan we all grew to love in the first film.

He constantly pushes and laughs at people. Even the Lost Boys aren't all that fun. Shouldn't we want to live with them and be happy and have fun all the time? Weren't they part of that awesome look at Never Land?

Well, if that is what they are supposed to represent, they fail entirely. Nothing looked entertaining. Instead, I felt bad for Jane, for being stuck with those boring, annoying (albeit cute) boys (dressed up and looking more like animals than ever) that didn't even appear to be having any fun.

This depressing look at Never Land was only impaled by a brief look at the conniving nature of each character. Perhaps another Disney moral? Peter was nice to Jane (because he wanted Tinker Bell to get better). Jane was nice to Peter (because she wanted to go home). And Hook was nice to Jane (because he wanted to trap Peter Pan). Peter was nice to Jane. Jane was nice to Peter. It's like "See Spot Run" (with a manipulative undertone).

Fortunately, there were a few entertaining moments in the film where you could hear a child laugh in the audience and a smart line or two for the adults to appreciate. For instance, there is the exchange of an octopus for a crocodile.

In the original, you probably remember the crocodile and his incessant clicking. It was quite entertaining actually. This time, get this, there was an octopus, or what looked like one, but was referred to as "The Beast". It had eight squiggly legs and made a sucking-popping noise as it moved around. It had two eyes that were at the end of tentacles popping out of its head, along with two very odd looking teeth.

Imagine the largest canine tooth you've ever seen on a tiger. Now put that tooth in the center top and bottom of an octopus's mouth. There, that's it. We're left with an octopus that doesn't quite look like an octopus — an animal that wouldn't be able to close its mouth because both enormous teeth would have butted up against one another.

However, I looked beyond this. "The Beast" was actually entertaining and somewhat, cute.

So, to ask the question again, did this sequel, Return to Never Land live up to the original? A resounding NO. The story doesn't always ends the same. "Trust, faith, and straight to video."

Elena

continued from page 5

shoes a few short years ago. Coming from a Mediterranean family that allowed me to drink alcohol with meals, I never saw it as a forbidden fruit. In fact, I had limited experience with drinking until well after my twenty-first birthday. Yet, I still went out and had a good time! Most of the people I met freshman year of college drank and went to frat parties or played beer pong in the dorms.

They all respected my choice to not drink and even appreciated it as I often found myself designated driver.

I hope that you have not shied away from people for a whole semester already out of a fear that people will not accept your choice to abstain from alcohol.

Of course, I did have a few people question my reasons to not drink but they obviously had self-esteem issues as they foolishly rely on alcohol as the only way to enjoy life. You can still be the life of the party without getting completely inebriated.

Remember that a lot of partygoers won't even remember you the next day, so let loose!

Also, I did meet people my freshman year that did not drink or did so in moderation. Believe me, they exist and by sophomore year some of the heavy drinkers will case up enough to enjoy a non-alcohol related activity once in awhile like venturing to CineMark to see the latest flick.

In the meantime, go out and meet people while enjoying your sober status. If others do not accept you, then they are definitely not worth your time! It takes a strong person to stray from what is popular and I admire your courage.

Got a question for our resident Advice Queen? Elena will answer your questions about love, life, family, friends and feelings. Email her at askelena@yahoo.com.

style

continued from page 5

solar rejuvenation.

Maroon and white... GO UMASS!!! Also, blue, red and white... GO PATS!!! Basically anything except navy and white – [insert favorite Yankees hating comment here].

I don't know. Can I pick one later? Fine – blue. 'Cause I'm wearing jeans right now. There, I answered, are you happy?

What are you wearing right now?

Super-low rise jeans with that whisker effect (so that they look all old and worn-out), a tight white turtleneck sweater, high-heeled brown boots, lots of clunky silver jewelry, and some French manicured nail tips.

Plaid button-up shirt with the top two or three buttons undone, white T-shirt underneath that I got bungee jumping in Cancun, khaki pants and either a visor, knit hat and/or lots of hair gel.

It's not about the clothes that I wear, it's about my tortured soul and broken spirit... and my really cool snake ring and freshly dyed (oh, how I love that word) midnight black hair.

Only natural fibers and breathable fabrics washed in detergent free of phosphates. Come the warmer weather, I will bare my feet (and my soul) so that I can be one with the regeneration of spring.

A gray sweatshirt that says "UMass Athletics", and maybe even the coordinating sweatpants. I'll also be sporting some ripped biceps and tight quads.

Umm... isn't that, like, a question that phone sex operators ask? Anyway, I already told you that I'm wearing jeans.

The class that you've been trying to get into is...

Survey of Costume History. I already told you that I model my life around the characters of Legally Blonde. I'm also applying to get into Harvard for Law/grad School. Wish me luck!]

My Body, My Health. Dude, I heard that you talk about sex like the WHOLE time.

Abnormal Psychology. That way I can prove my family wrong when they question my mental stability. Why can't they just accept me for who I am?

Any Anthropology class. People fascinate me. So do monkeys. And tofu.

Nutrition for a Healthy Lifestyle. The rest of my team is taking that class too.

I just needed that one more Spanish class to graduate. But I didn't get it. So now I'll be here another semester. Ask me what class I want next year when this school is sucking more money out of me.

If you answered:

Mostly A's – You are a daddy's girl, a sorority girl or you write a fashion column. Uh-oh.

Mostly B's – You live in a large house with forty other guys and exist on a diet of beer, pizza and beer-covered pizza because "the damn pledge spilled his pint on my slice."

Mostly C's – You aren't a satan-worshipper nor do you eat the heads off live chickens. You're just misunderstood and like to freak out the old people with your sassy gothness.

Mostly D's – You are natural. Natch-O-Rall. Birds follow your hippie-self to class and bunnies scamper at your feet as you sip your root tea from a recycled material mug.

Mostly E's – You work hard, play hard, practice hard, eat hard, lift hard... and when you actually don't have a curfew before games, your party hard. Go athletes, and GO UMASS!!!

Mostly F's – You either didn't see yourself in any of the other categories, couldn't admit that you are in one of the other categories, or just really don't give a damn. Hey slackers, looks like you've got a category of your own too.

Yeah, yeah, yeah – I know. That was all a complete overgeneralization. But please keep in mind, no athletes, hippies or goth kids were hurt in the writing of this column. I may, however, have hurt some sensitive frat boy's feelings... Nah.

Vega

continued from page 6

abuse) being played right before the participatory "Tom's Diner". And finally, an abridged encores that seemed rushed.

Vega was clearly spent. If her strained voice wasn't evidence enough, she relied more on stories than her performance to keep the crowd into the proceeding. She often looked nervous singing her songs, wringing her hands.

Despite all of this, Vega managed to shine at times. The aforementioned "Luka" sounded amazing, with her voice crystalline because she didn't have to hit the notes that dominate her work.

"Liverpool", bookended by explanations of the song, was a gem, even if an over-amped bass drowned the song's truly great chorus. "Tom's Diner", easily Vega's biggest hit, was cutely made into a crowd participation song by her backing band.

Perhaps it was her final encore that told the night's story in totality: "Last Year's Troubles" is a beautiful song. Off her newest album, it details the disastrous end to her marriage to Mitchell Froom.

Despite finding musical balance between her vocals and backing band, Vega's voice was finally done – she couldn't hit any of her notes.

It's unfortunate that this review turned so negative. It is easy to believe that Vega, when vocally rested and not covering her own exhaustion with feedback, could put on an absolutely stellar show.

Unfortunately, four shows in two nights is just too much. While it might be excessive to write that she didn't give it her all, it seemed like she wasn't interested in delivering the best possible performance.

That's a shame.

www.dailycollegian.com

READ ARTS – WHERE YOU NEVER GROW UP

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
FRIDAY 2/15-THURSDAY 2/21/2002
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Hart's War(R) 12:50 4:45 7:45 10:40*
The Count Of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:55 7:00 10:00
John Q(PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
Black Hawk Down(R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
Collateral Damage(R) 12:40 4:30 7:40 10:20*
The Royal Tenenbaums(R) 12:20 7:50
Big Fat Liar(PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:10 9:50*
A Beautiful Mind(PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
Super Troopers(R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15*
Lord Of the Rings(PG13) 3:45 7:30*
Crossroads(PG13) 12:00 2:15 4:35 7:05 9:45*
Senior Movie 2/21/02 Collateral Damage
Return to Neverland(G) 12:35 2:30 4:40 7:15 9:20*
Senior Movie 2/7/02 I Am Sam doors open at 11:45am
I Am Sam(PG13) 12:30 4:15 10:25
* no passes/supersavers
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

New WORLD Theater
Save The Date!
April 12-13, 2002
INTERSECTION
FUTURE AESTHETICS
For conference information call 413.545.1972 or visit www.newworldtheater.com

Summer International Study Opportunities
Your Passport to a Memorable Summer
PASSPORT
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
Earn Valuable Credits (3–6 credits) While Experiencing Some of the World's Most Interesting Cultures. Be part of a UConn group accompanied by an expert UConn faculty member.
INFORMATION SESSIONS
March 13
March 28
6:30 p.m.
UConn's South Campus Community Room Rome Hall
OPTIONS AVAILABLE • ACT NOW
+ CUBA (7/8-26)
+ ECUADOR (5/27-6/14)
+ NEPAL (5/24-6/17)
For more information, visit us online at continuingstudies.uconn.edu, or contact Pat Harkins at 860-486-5985, Patricia.Harkins@uconn.edu
University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies
International Studies Transforming Lives

Domino'S Pizza
Two Weeks Only
ONLY .99 cents
Buy Any Pizza Get The Second Pizza For .99 Cents
GOOD Sun-Thurs ONLY
EXPIRES 3/5/02
$12.99 LARGE 1 TOPPING PIZZA +2-LITER COKE 10 WINGS $4.99
$19.99 EXTRA LARGE 2 TOPPING PIZZA 2-LITER SODA BREADSTICKS 10 WINGS
$9.99 MEDIUM 2 TOPPING PIZZA +2 SODAS
$11.99 LARGE PIZZA WITH 1 TOPPING +CINNA STICKS
$6.99 MEDIUM $7.99 LARGE 1 TOPPING PIZZA LUNCH SPECIAL GOOD 11 am TO 4pm 2 SODAS .99¢
AMHERST 256-8911
ENFIELD 741-3016
LONGMEADOW 567-2942
EASTHAMPTON 527-0821
$7.99 1 10-IN PIZZA +1 TWISTY BREAD +1COKE

Free 10-day trip to Israel!
Sun
History
Trekking
Jerusalem
birthright israel
oranim
Archaeology
Beaches
Masada
You!
Let Israelis show you Israel!
Register at:
WWW.Israel4Free.com
Multiple Departure Dates: May – August 2002
Departures from: NY, LA, Miami, Chicago & Toronto
info@israel4free.com

Town of Amherst, Massachusetts Charter Commission

Status Report to the Citizens of Amherst

February, 2002

Introduction

Since the Charter Commission was created by the voters on April 3, 2001, the Commission has held 19 meetings, including a public hearing on May 15, 2001. Several of our meetings were devoted to in-depth discussions of specific topics: Town Meeting; the Select Board; and the Town Manager. Members of the Commission have conducted research into forms of government in other communities, submitted position papers and other written statements, and developed specific questions for exploration with legal and other experts. The Commission spent one evening discussing legal and policy issues with Marilyn Contreas, the resident expert on the charter process at the state Department of Housing and Community Development.

Having had the opportunity to hear each other's views and receive answers to some pertinent legal questions, a majority of the Commission has developed some preliminary views on the form of government that seems best suited to our community. We have also agreed that we want to present our thinking — preliminary though it may be — to the community as a whole and solicit feedback to help guide us as we move forward in drafting a concrete proposal. While we are still far from voting on a specific charter proposal (which we anticipate releasing in preliminary form in August and bringing to the voters in the spring of 2003), we are rapidly narrowing our focus on some important questions. In a practical sense, now is the time at which we will have to choose which fork in the road to take as we move ahead.

Comments? Questions? Public Meeting • Tues., Feb. 26 7 p.m. • Amherst Town Hall

Town Meeting

Much of the Commission's discussion to date has centered on the Representative Town Meeting (RTM), the legislative body that has been in place in Amherst since 1938. We decided to start with the legislative function because we see it as the crucial element of local government. The local legislature — whether a Town Meeting or a Council — has sole authority to levy taxes, appropriate funds, borrow money, adopt local by-laws, and change zoning. Members of the Commission brought many insights and perspectives to this topic: all nine members have served as Town Meeting members, and eight are active members today. In addition, several members of the Commission have served as members of the Select Board, Finance Committee, or other boards and committees that interact with Town Meeting.

It is fair to say that a majority of the members of the Commission feel torn when evaluating the success and future prospects of the RTM. On the one hand, each member has had a strong personal commitment to the institution of Town Meeting, and understands the opportunities for participation and consensus-building that the Town Meeting form offers. On the other hand, a majority of the Commission's members have expressed deep concern over what they see as a widening gap between Town Meeting's promise and its practice. These concerns come in several areas:

• Participation

One of the chief benefits of the Town Meeting form is the opportunity for members of the community to participate directly in the local decision-making process. A healthy and vibrant Town Meeting would therefore be expected to attract strong interest and participation from a substantial number of citizens. Yet, over the past thirty years or so, there has been a steady decline in the number of citizens stepping forward to run for Town Meeting (see Figure 1). In the 1970s and even into the 1980s, it was not unusual to have nearly twice as many candidates for Town Meeting as there were seats available. In the past dozen or so years, however, candidates have barely been sufficient to fill the seats available. In five of the past seven years, in fact, there have not even been as many candidates on the ballot as there were openings. (See Figure 2). Another sign of trouble is the level of participation among Town Meeting members themselves. Thirty years ago, it was not unusual to find two-thirds of Town Meeting members present when the evening's business began. For the past twenty years, with a few rare exceptions, sessions have begun with the bare minimum of half-plus-one present. Participation has clearly declined, and with it has declined much of Town Meeting's vibrancy and legitimacy.

• Representation

A second argument often advanced to support the Town Meeting form is that local decisions will be more responsive to citizens' needs and more likely to win wide support because members of the community feel their interests are represented by Town Meeting members. A healthy Town Meeting would therefore be expected to draw candidates with strong support in their precincts. Yet, just as the number of Town Meeting candidates has been on the decline, so too has the number of citizens voting for Town Meeting members. During the decade of the seventies, on average 40% of Town Meeting members were elected with at least 200 votes. During the 1990s, that proportion fell to 17%. Perhaps even more telling, during the 1970s virtually no Town Meeting members were elected with fewer than 100 votes; during the 1990s, more than 40% were elected with so few votes (See Figure 3). In fact, it is now generally the case that individuals who wish to serve in Town Meeting can do so simply by filing a piece of paper with a single signature (even their own) attached. Clearly, Town Meeting members today have the support and mandate of far fewer citizens than was the case even twenty years ago, with profound implications for Town Meeting's ability to stand as a truly "representative" body.

• Accountability

A closely related issue is accountability. Without contested elections, voters do not have a meaningful opportunity to influence local decisions or to "throw the rascals out." And there are practical limits to accountability even if candidates were to become numerous. In order to really influence policy through the RTM form, voters in each precinct would have to keep track of the positions of their 24 representatives on a range of issues over a three-year period. Thus, even if all Town Meeting votes were recorded, it seems likely that very few citizens would enter the voting booth with a clear sense of how to make their votes count. The difficulty is especially clear when contrasted with the situation at the federal level, where citizens need to keep track of only a single Congressional representative whose positions are widely reported in the press and monitored by interest groups. An additional structural obstacle to accountability is the fact that each citizen gets to vote for only one-tenth of Town Meeting members. When elections are contested and participation is strong, this is perhaps not a critical issue. But with the kind of weak participation we have seen in recent years, the whole town must live with decisions made by Town Meeting members who may have received twenty or fewer votes (which occurred, on average, 15% of the time over the past five years).

• Contention and Consensus

One of the fundamental premises of the Town Meeting form is that it can serve as a forum within which to resolve contentious issues and build consensus within the community. This premise would suggest that Town Meeting should demonstrate a constructive approach to problem solving and a willingness on the part of all parties to give a bit in order to advance the common good. The Commission could not find any way to represent statistically Town Meeting's success in this area. A majority of members agreed, however, that there is a widespread sense within the community that Town Meeting is less able to resolve conflict and build consensus than it was in the past. Factionalism seems rampant; positions seem to harden, rather than soften, over time; a "we vs. they" mentality seems to permeate relations between some Town Meeting members and other Town boards, committees and officials; and there seems to be an unwillingness to allow a decision to be made, and then stick with it.

• Effectiveness and Efficiency

Commission members have heard many citizens voice the view that Town Meeting has become too lengthy, too dilatory, too unfocused, or not able to conduct its business in an effective and efficient manner. There is tangible evidence of such a trend. Throughout the 1960s and early 1970s, the business of the Annual Town Meeting was routinely completed in two nights (although often they were very late nights). Increasingly, however, the Annual Town Meeting stretches on to eight or ten or twelve nights, sometimes spanning three months in the spring. A record for the greatest number of nights was set in two of the past three years. Interestingly, the additional time cannot be explained by additional workload. Town Meetings today handle roughly the same number and type of articles as they did in the 1970s (although some capital and budget items are handled differently today). But the zoning, financial, and policy questions confronted by Town Meeting today are no more complex or challenging than in the past. Yet, the average number of articles completed in an evening has fallen dramatically: from 25 or 30 in the 1970s to four or five in recent years (see Figure 4). The Town's business has not materially changed, but the time it takes to complete it has.

No one can be certain what is behind these troubling trends. Many explanations have been advanced: people are busier, with less time for civic involvement; as Town Meeting has demanded more time, fewer citizens have been interested in serving; the process seems unnecessarily tedious; debate often seems poorly informed, or driven by personal agendas. A few have suggested that the dearth of candidates and low voter participation signal that "all is well," on the theory that if people were dissatisfied with Town Meeting they would run for office themselves. The majority of the Commission, however, is concerned by the trend and seriously considering whether the time has come to change from a Town Meeting to a Council form of government.

In our discussions, we have explored several potential benefits of a Council form:

- Accountability, with candidates running on articulated platforms and their records
- The likelihood of contested campaigns, drawing higher levels of voter participation.
- An expectation that Council members would "represent" — rather than be, in theory, "representative of" — the voters, thus giving them a legitimate claim to a mandate.
- Opportunities for more orderly, deliberate, and informed decision making.

Fig. 3. Percent Elected with Fewer than 100 Votes, 1970-2001

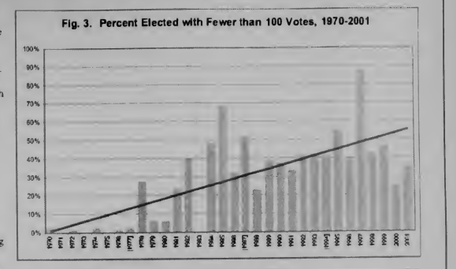


Fig. 4. Articles per Night (Annual Town Meeting), 1966-2001

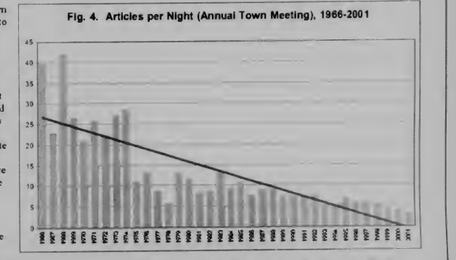

Fig. 1. Percent of Precincts with Contests, 1970-2001

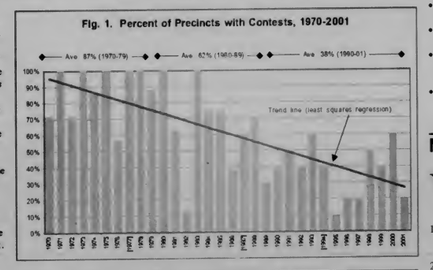

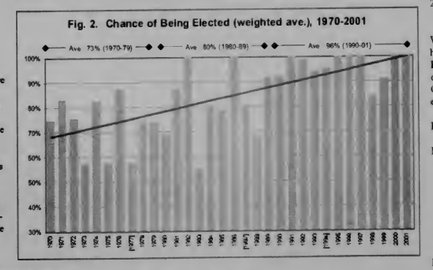

Fig. 2. Chance of Being Elected (weighted ave.), 1970-2001

Next Steps

We focused first on the Town Meeting vs. Council question because a majority identified it as central. Next, we will turn to some important related questions:

1. The size and composition of a Council, if one were to be adopted (e.g., total size, number to be elected at-large vs. from districts).
2. The nature and responsibilities of the executive (Town Manager and/or Mayor; role [if any] of a Council President).

We are eager to hear from the community. As part of that effort we will be holding a public meeting on Tuesday, February 26 at 7:00 p.m. in Town Hall. We will welcome comments on the issues outlined here as well as any others of interest to citizens. Written comments may be sent to Amherst Charter Commission, Town Hall, 4 Boltwood Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or emailed to chartercommission@town.amherst.ma.us.

Respectfully submitted,

Members endorsing:
Bryan C. Harvey, Chair
James Pitts, Vice Chair
Joan Golowich, Clerk
Stanley Dumakowski
Gordon Fletcher-Howell
Jerry Jolly
Zina Tillona

Members dissenting:
H. Oldham Brooks
Martha Spiegelman

Kurt gets ringside with NWO

There's no way out of it now: the NWO is back. As their classic adult film-like theme music blared through the PA system at the Bradley Center in Milwaukee, Hulk Hogan, Kevin Nash and Scott Hall made their way to the ring to cut their first promo in a WWF ring in years. Later that night, the threesome cost Steve Austin the WWF Title in his match against Chris Jericho, and in classic NWO fashion, they spraypainted the Texas Rattlesnake with those three letters that symbolize one of the most successful wrestling angles in history: "NWO". Now that the initial fun of seeing Hogan, Hall, and Nash in a WWF ring has subsided, what's next?

If "No Way Out" is any indication, the new NWO may not be the success that the WWF is hoping for. The most notable aspect of Hogan, Hall and Nash's appearance on Sunday night was just how old and unmotivated they looked. Sure, their characters are supposed to be "too cool to care," but the promos they cut (and the physical confrontation they had with Austin) seemed to be lacking something. What it was lacking was the fire that the other WWF main eventers bring every time they step through the curtain. Their blase attitude won't help them erase the doubts that many have that they are too old, and their egos too big.

IN THE RING

Let the revived NWO to be a success...a lot has to happen. For one, Hogan, Hall and Nash must put out their best effort every time they step through the curtain. Otherwise, it will quickly become apparent that they are not worthy of being in the same company as Austin, Rock, Angle, Jericho, and Triple H, who almost always deliver big time, every time. Second, the NWO must split its roster in half, with one half working on Raw and the other on Smackdown. This will prevent wrestlers like RVD, Booker T, and countless others from being lost in the shuffle now that the WWF has a glut of "big name" talent. Most of all, NWO needs to be a story line...that is written to best serve the WWF, not written to appease the egos of certain people.

Wrestlemania Matches

The top three matches for Wrestlemania were leaked by RAW magazine even before last Sunday's "No Way Out". Although obviously the WWF could change their minds, the main matches tentatively scheduled for Wrestlemania are Hogan vs. The Rock, Austin vs. Hall, and Triple H vs. Jericho for the WWF Title. Wrestlemania is March 17th in Toronto at SkyDome.

While Kurt Angle's win over Triple H would seemingly put him in the WWF Title shot against Jericho, one would expect somehow that that will be changed between now and Wrestlemania...if not by the time you read this since this is being written before the 2/18 Raw). The dreaded "three way" match between Angle, Triple H, and Jericho would be a disaster for this...although I doubt the WWF will go in that direction. Hogan vs. Rock was set up on Sunday's Pay Per View...as the two had a verbal confrontation backstage (Gene Okerlund, but I can already smell The Rock losing to Hogan at Wrestlemania. Hogan losing in what will likely be his first match back in the WWF is highly unlikely. Austin vs. Hall will be a match-up of wrestling's biggest drinkers (real life character, one in real life). Getting The Sandman to be the Special Referee would be a nice touch, seriously.

What will Nash fit in all of this? A match with Undertaker seems an obvious choice, or a tag match with a returning Shawn Michaels against Undertaker and Kane would be a possibility. And it would make sense, since it was in the Royal Rumble match with Taker in 1998 that Michaels suffered the back injury that has kept him out of action since then.

Bischoff Back (?)

Strong rumors circulated last week that former WCW boss and NWO on-air manager Eric Bischoff might be returning to the WWF as an on-air character affiliated with the NWO. The Pro Wrestling Torch reported that Bischoff coming in is almost a done deal, and that he will likely be brought in soon, possibly before Wrestlemania.

Bringing in Bischoff to manage the NWO would be a smart move on the WWF's part. Bischoff has always been a decent heel character, and he would give the angle a dosage of reality, as it was essentially his idea (that he copied from Japan) to have the NWO while he was in charge of WCW in the mid 1990s. The storyline that McMahon brought the NWO to the WWF to destroy it is too farfetched even for pro wrestling. Why would Vince want to kill the company that he and his father have been building for 40 years? Because Ric Flair owns half of it? It makes no sense. Having the NWO turn on McMahon, and bringing in Bischoff as their spokesperson would make sense, and lead to a logical McMahon-Bischoff feud. The original NWO was successful because there was a sense of reality to it, with "WWF wrestlers invading" WCW. A touch of reality will help it to work this time around as well.

XWF

Believe it or not, there is actually another wrestling promotion in the United States that is on television...well sort of. The XWF, which has months of television taped from Universal Studios in Orlando, is said to be close to landing a TV deal on the USA Network, the former home of the WWF.

The XWF is headed by former WWF/WCW manager Jimmy Hart and former WWF/WCW tag team The Nasty Boys, Jerry Saggs and Brian Knobbs (seriously), among others. Plus, Tony Schiavone is their announcer (fans, what a moment)! The XWF is made up of old men like Roddy Piper and Greg Valentine, WWF retreads like Sable, and some "hot young talent," as the XWF describes it.

Unfortunately, nobody wants to see 1980s "Superstars" and "hot young talent," but don't tell that to the USA Network, which has taken a sharp dive in the cable ratings since losing the WWF to TNN and MTV a year and half ago. Of course, just because somebody "says" they are about to land a television deal doesn't mean it's going to happen, especially in wrestling, just ask any of the out-of-work ECW wrestlers.

Send any letters, pithy comments, questions etc. to Collegianwrestling@yahoo.com. An incorrect email address was printed last time; this is the right one. Thoughtful emails may be published so include your name if you want it in print.

Kurt Poleshy is a Collegian Staff Member.

UMass BRIEFS:

Women's Water Polo

The University of Massachusetts women's water polo team (3-4) got back on track this weekend as it went 3-0 at the Princeton Invitational. On Saturday, the Minutewomen downed George Washington, 12-5, and No. 16 Indiana, 10-9. On Sunday afternoon, they topped Bucknell, 8-6.

Seniors Megan Perry (Fresno, Calif.) and Megan Thompson (Chesterfield, Mo.) led a balanced scoring attack against GW with three goals apiece. Junior Amy Black (Fremont, Calif.) and freshman Melissa Goldberg (Annapolis, Md.) each had two goals. Other scorers were juniors Kelly Chassy (Morgan Hill, Calif.) and Mattie Newell (Dillsburg, Pa.). Freshman goaltender Amelia Degenkolb (Berkeley, Calif.) made four saves in the first half, while sophomore Emily Knight (Watertown, Conn.) recorded seven in the second half.

The Minutewomen improved to 5-0 in their history against Indiana with a dramatic 10-9 win last night. Dagenkolb made a big save with just five seconds left in the game to preserve the upset win. Thompson recorded another hat trick, while Chassy, Perry, Newell and Black each scored two goals apiece. Dayenkolb made seven saves.

On Sunday, UMass upended Bucknell, 8-6, to complete the weekend sweep. Newell and Chassy each had a hat trick, while Goldberg and freshman Diana Campbell (Baie d'Urfe, Quebec) scored once. Knight made 11 saves in net.

The Minutewomen will host No. 19 Brown and Yale this upcoming weekend at the Amherst College Pool. The game with Brown is at 1:00 p.m., while the Yale contest will begin at 3:00 p.m.

Men's Track

The University of Massachusetts men's indoor track team finished fourth out of seven teams with 123 points at the 2002 Verizon Atlantic 10 Indoor Track and Field Championships held Saturday on the campus the University of Rhode Island. Leading the way for the Minutemen was junior Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng (Accra, Ghana) who won the 55M dash for the sixth time this season with a time of 6.34 seconds in the preliminary results, and then set a new school-record of 6.30 seconds in the finals. That mark also ties the Atlantic 10 Championship record set during the 1999-2000 school year by Andre Davis of Virginia Tech.

The 6.30 time broke the previous school record (6.37 seconds) set by Frimpong-Boateng earlier this season on Jan. 19 in the 2002 New England Challenge Cup at the Boston University Armory. Prior to this season Adrian Zullo held the fastest time in the 55M dash of 6.40 seconds set during the 1999-2000 season.

Frimpong-Boateng also finished third in the 200M dash with a time of 22.59 seconds, garnering UMass 6 points.

In the distance events, senior tri-captain Sal Nastasi (Merrick, N.Y.) turned in a time of 4:19.61 in the mile, placing him fourth overall, while senior Kevin Curtin (Chelmsford, Mass.) finished second in the 3000M run with a time of 8:38.90. Senior Mike Pieck (Guilderland, N.Y.) finished seventh in the 3000M run with a time of 8:49.24, and also finished second in the 5000M run with a time of 15:03.79.

Senior Ryan McNally (Attleboro, Mass.) finished fourth in the 55M high hurdles with a time of 7.88 seconds, while junior Ken Schneider (Wood Ridge, N.J.) finished second in the pole vault, clearing 15'9.00". Freshman Henry Smith (Ellington, Mass.) finished second overall in the triple jump at 45'6.25" and junior Eric Uliano (Haverill, Mass.) turned in his best throw of the season at 51'2.25 in the shot put.

Other schools that competed include Rhode Island (192 points), St. Joseph's (138), La Salle (129), Fordham (60), Temple (47) and Richmond (39).

The Minutemen begin their outdoor track and field season Mar 30, at the Sam Howell Invitational held at Princeton, N.J. Men's Track & Field.

Women's Track

The University of Massachusetts women's indoor track team finished seventh with 74 points at the Verizon Atlantic 10 Indoor Track and Field Championships held Saturday at the University of Rhode Island, winning the pole vault and weight throw, Leading the way for UMass was freshman Christina Bizon (Warwick, R.I.), who was coming off her A-10 Rookie of the Week award, and won the weight throw with a toss of 51'11.00". It was her longest throw of the season, and the third-best throw in UMass history. Last week Bizon had a throw of 51'0.25" which at the time was the third-best throw in school history.

Sophomore Brandy Green (Fitchburg, Mass.) won the pole vault clearing 11'5.75", the third-best jump in school history. Green also finished second overall in the 55M high hurdles with a season-best time of 8.33 seconds.

Senior co-captain Rhianna DaCruz (Pawtucket, R.I.) cleared 10'11.75" to finish right behind Green and second overall. On Feb. 9, DaCruz cleared 11'9.75" to set the school record at the Rhode Island Mega Meet held in Kingston, R.I. and qualify for the ECAC Championships to be held Mar. 2-3 at the Reggie Lewis Center in Roxbury, Mass. She also cleared a then-school record 11'0.00" Jan. 19 at the Tufts Invitational. DaCruz currently holds the top mark in the Atlantic 10 Conference.

UMass also finished second in the distance medley with a season-best time of 12:35.50.

Other schools that competed include Rhode Island (123.50 points), La Salle (101.50), Richmond (100.50), Temple (99), Dayton (89), Duquesne (75), St. Joseph's (60) and Fordham (17.50).

The Minutewomen begin their outdoor track and field season April 6 at New Haven for a quad-meet, including S. Connecticut, Fordham and St. John's.

■ hoops

continued from page 12

atrocious 5-for-17 shooting performance.

The Tullamore, Ireland native scored 21 points (11 from the line) and currently sits at 2,157 points for her career.

UMass junior Jen Butler earned her 17th double-double of the season with 10 points and 15 rebounds in just 26 minutes of action.

Turnovers – a major problem for the Minutewomen at the beginning of the season that seemed to improve as their young backcourt grew more experienced – were the major downfall for a team that struggled breaking the press all afternoon. The Maroon and White committed 23 turnovers Sunday – its most in seven games – and struggled to play together cohesively.

"We played very individually today," O'Brien said.

Junior forward Amber Sneed scored six points in overtime to lead the Massachusetts women's basketball team over first-place Temple, 64-56.

Junior Nekole Smith gave UMass a 10-9 lead at the 11:18 mark of the first half and then extended it to 11-9 with a free throw at 10:47 – the last time the Minutewomen led in regulation.

After seven ties in the first half alone and neither team leading by more than four points, Temple held onto the razor-thin lead at the break, 28-25.

Both squads went on 6-0 runs in the second half, and Butler sunk a basket at the 5:52 mark to even the score at 44.

UMass fell behind 49-46 after five Temple makes from the free throw line, when Nelson came around a double screen at the left elbow, received the ball, and drilled the three-pointer to even the score.

Butler, who grabbed 18 rebounds and scored 13 points, fouled Temple's Stacey Smalls with 1:11 left in regulation.

The Owls took a one-point lead when Smalls sunk one of two free throw attempts.

The Maroon and White unbounded the ball with 45.6 seconds left, but Pegues missed a forced shot and Temple grabbed the rebound.

After a UMass timeout, Temple's Athena Christoforakis ran the baseline while trying to inbound the ball – which is only allowed after a made basket – giving the Minutewomen the ball back.

Smith was fouled on the next possession and made one of her free throw attempts to tie the game.

Sneed scored UMass' first four points in overtime – giving her team its first lead in over 30 minutes of action – and when her sixth overtime point came on a nifty two-handed up-and-under, UMass lead by five, 58-53.

With little time left, the Owls were forced to foul the Maroon and White. Nelson, by far the team's best free throw shooter, made sure that she had the ball at all times and was thus sent to the line for six shots in the final 26.1 seconds. The freshman didn't disappoint, making all six shots and giving the upset win to UMass.

Florida St. sweeps past No. 5 ASU Sun Devils

By Harris King
FSView & Florida Flambeau (Florida State U.)

(U-WIRE) TALLAHASSEE, Fla. - Arizona State arrived in Tallahassee for its first road trip of the season owning the No. 5 ranking in the Baseball Weekly/ESPN Poll and a perfect 7-0 record. The Sun Devils left with a 7-3 record.

Florida State pounded ASU pitching in the series opener on Friday afternoon on the way to a 9-4 victory.

In the opening frame, Arizona State's designated hitter Steve Garrabrants, who has led off six of seven games this year with a hit, continued in game eight with a double. Dustin Pedroia immediately followed with a double of his own, leaving runners on second and third.

A groundout RBI by Rod Allen was then followed by a RBI double to the gap by cleanup hitter Jeremy West making the score quickly 2-0. It was looking like deja vu of the Stanford series from last weekend. FSU starter Matt Lynch then calmed down and escaped the first giving up just those two runs.

"I just made two bad pitches," Lynch said. "One I just left a curveball out over the plate and he hit it to the gap, the other I put down the middle."

Florida State would answer in the bottom of the second with two runs of its own produced by RBIs from Jeff Probst and Jerrod Brown.

ASU would get another run in the top of the third from two singles and a groundout RBI. That was its last run until the ninth as Lynch and reliever Daniel Hodges put on impressive performances that were much needed.

"To come back and throw well after last week was important," Lynch said.

Lynch retired eight straight batters in throwing shutout fourth, fifth and sixth innings.

While Lynch was settling down, Florida State bats were waking up.

Using only one extra base hit (by Probst), the 'Noles singled their way to put up three runs in the fourth and fifth respectively.

Brown led the attack going 3-for-3 with a walk.

"(Brown) has changed the complexion of the lineup, he's another tough out," Head Coach Mike Martin said.

The three-run fifth was also complemented by the inaugural appearance of Dominic Robinson in a Seminole baseball uniform. The top gridiron prospect has recently joined the team assuming the role of being a pinch runner. He pinch ran for Tony McQuade and his flamboyant style of celebration after scoring energized the team and crowd.

"It's all about having fun," Robinson said. "I hope to bring a little life, a little swagger, something that other baseball teams don't have."

FSU added one more run in the sixth, which was more than enough insurance.

Hodges pitched shutout baseball in the seventh and eighth until running into some trouble in the ninth. After giving up a run he was lifted for Eric Roman, who closed the game out. Hodges was credited with his first save of the season.

The Seminoles continued to shine on Saturday afternoon, claiming a 5-3 victory.

The game was a matchup of both school's No. 1 pitchers, staging ASU's Mike Esposito against FSU's Blair Varnes.

He pitched 5 2/3 innings, giving up only one run coming from a solo shot from Garrabrants leading off the sixth.

"I was looking for an outside fastball and I got it," Garrabrants said.

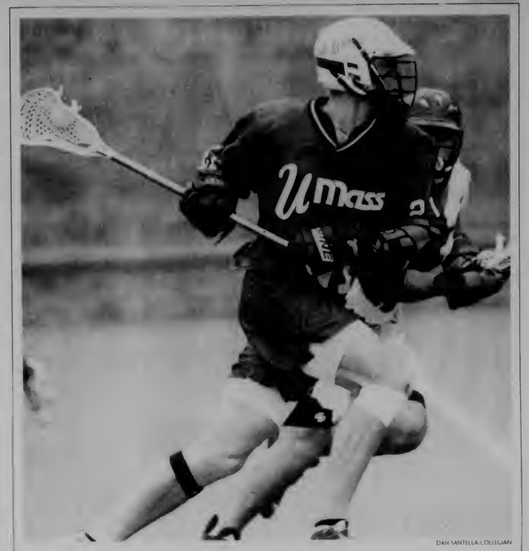
Varnes recorded six strikeouts and had no walks in the contest.

"Matt did a great job last night showing me some weaknesses of the hitters, and I had a good game plan coming into this game," Varnes said.

Esposito, on the other hand, was taken out of the game in the bottom of the fourth, after giving up four earned runs.

Tony McQuade hit a big two-RBI double in the second. Tony Richie got a RBI in the third and Bryan Zech hit a sacrifice fly in the fourth. Zech's sacrifice fly in the fourth was made possible by another double from the switch-hitting McQuade, who doubled from both sides of the plate.

"I feel equally as comfortable from both sides of the plate," McQuade said. "I work equally as hard from the left and the right."



FSU was on top 4-1 heading into the seventh. Reliever Marc LaMacchia got in a jam in the top of the seventh and was taken out with the bases loaded and one out. Kevin Lynch inherited the situation and got a big strikeout of Garrabrants, before giving up a two-run double to pinch hitter Nick Walsh. Lynch went on to get out of the inning and pitch a scoreless eighth.

Ryan Barthelemy hit a RBI double in the bottom of the eighth giving the Seminoles their fifth run, and extended his personal hitting streak to 30 games.

Roman entered in the ninth and picked up his third save of the year.

"Glad to get the win, hopefully we can sweep them tomorrow," Varnes said.

Sweep them they did, as Florida State capped of the weekend with a dramatic come-from-behind 6-4 win Sunday afternoon.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Lax attack

The No. 12 Massachusetts lacrosse team begins its season Feb. 23 when it takes on Hofstra.

UCard The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN Coca-Cola

Is This Your Smile?

If so, YOU just won $25 on your UCard, redeemable anywhere on campus! Just go to Daily Collegian Office in the basement of the Campus Center, with your UMASS ID for proper verification.

CONGRATULATIONS FROM THE UMASS UCARD AND COCA-COLA!

LOSING IT:
False Hope and Fat Profits in the Diet Industry
An evening with author Laura Fraser

A reformed dieter and ex-bulimic, LAURA FRASER talks about her journey from battling an eating disorder and, after recovering, taking on the American diet industry in an undercover investigation. She'll talk about the history of America's obsession with slenderness, and all the false hopes, scams and medical disasters that women have endured in order to attain an impossible ideal. She'll take on the paradox of why Americans are heavier than any other people, and yet diet the most, and she'll talk about some practical changes.

Monday February 25
7:30 to 9:00 pm
Campus Center
Room 174-176

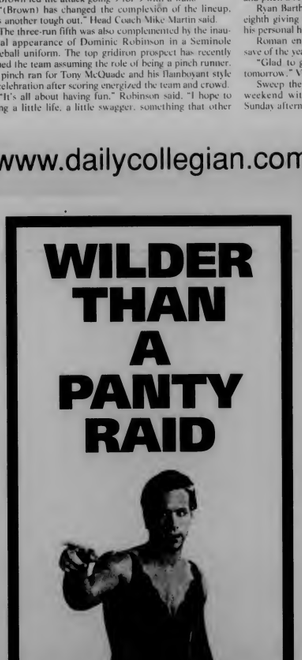
A FREE TALK sponsored by University Health Services, Everywoman's Center and Five College Inc.

Castaway Lounge
181 So. on Rt. 24, south on Rte. 5, Whately, Mass. (413) 665-8733
Will proudly present another successful
Amateur Night
Monday February 25th starting at 7 pm

PENTHOUSE PET DOMINIQUE ST.CROIX
- Cash prizes awarded
- All ladies over 18 must apply in person
- Open on Mondays at 3pm with 10 Beautiful Exotic Entertainers: Food and Prizes given away

Open Tuesdays - Saturday 11am - 1am
VIP Room available for private engagement parties
Phone# 413. 665 8733

Go USA Hockey!



Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
BACON'N'CHEESE SKINS 8.45 4.48
FRIED SHRIMP TEMPURA 7.25 3.63
SWEET POTATO FRIES 6.75 3.38
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
10CMP Welcome Here
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

www.dailycollegian.com

Head for the Mountains!
Enter To Win A FREE day of skiing at Berkshire East
For you and a friend on February 23, 2002
Including:
- FREE Lift Tickets
- FREE Transportation
- FREE Ski Lessons
- FREE Equipment Rental

Name:
Address:
Phone:
E-Mail:
Berkshire East Ski Area
Coca-Cola
Bring or mail entries to the Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center Basement: MDC 113 Campus Center, University of Mass., Amherst MA, 01003

We're not like every other high-tech company. We're hiring.

No one told you the hardest part of being an engineer would be finding your first job. Of course, it's still possible to get the high-tech work you want by joining the U.S. Air Force. You can leverage your degree immediately and get hands-on experience with some of the most sophisticated technology on earth. To find out how to get your career off the ground, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit our Web site at airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities + Sororities + Clubs + Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy CampusFundraiser.com three-hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact CampusFundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit [illegible]fundraising.com.

THE SPOT! Memorial Drive, Chicopee. Monday nights 18+ dance Party with DJ Stylze. Friday nights DJ Chris James top 40 Dance Party. Saturday 2/16 "Undertow" the Toole Tribute. 10 p.m. $3.00 cover. Sunday 2/17 "Countdown to St. Patty's Day" with just George the X rated comedian + "meet the guiness girls!!"

Contact your Axon Representative at Umass. Call 883-1613 or e-mail [illegible].com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3bedrooms, hard wood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone/Internet access, in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. [illegible] 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

CENTER OF TOWN
1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstholyoke-apts.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1993 Geo Metro Auto. Excellent transportation 65,000 miles $85-0599

1990 Plymouth Grand Voyager , 7 Passengers, 114,000, Very clean. $1875.00 585-0599.

1992 Ford Explorer 2 Dr. 5 Spd, 4X4, 75,000 miles $2850.00 585-0599

1990 Volvo Wagon 240 DL , 117,000 miles, Auto, AC, $3650.00 585-0599

1987 Ford F-150 Pick-up 8 Ft. Bed, 6 Cyl. Auto, 4X4, $2150.00 585-0599

1994 Acura Integra Auto, AC, CD, Am/Fm cassette, Power Steering Windows, Moon roof, single owner, Excellent condition $5500.00 O/B/O 546-6445.

AUTO FOR SALE

87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good. $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD-Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 866-291-1884 ext. 485.

Someone to watch vending booth $8.00 per hr. Tues. & Thurs. 11:00-12:15, Fri. 11:00-12:15 Call Mike 546-1326.

Substitute teachers needed for full day and part day $7.00 an hour. Cushman Scott Children's Center 549-1167.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont~35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary will train. Full and part time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

FOR RENT

Instructor, the Princeton Review, the nation's largest test prep company, seeks teachers for SAT and MCAS courses, held year-round in the Springfield area. Teaching experience helpful, but not required. Job involves teaching small groups of high school students basic math and English skills, as well as test-taking strategies. Starting pay is $13/hr; paid training and all course materials provided. Great part-time job; flexible hours. For more information call the Princeton Review at 413-584-6849. To apply, fax cover letter and resume to the Princeton Review at 413-586-4939.

Childcare needed for 2 children in our Amherst Home Mon. 3:15-5:15 Wed. 1:30-5:30 $8.00 an hr 253-5197.

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruisecareer.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE: DJ Loupe and SYB productions are now booking for spring semester, call 537-8527.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Mountain Bike www.bikes.com 99 Fusion 19" exc. cond. $400 413-374-0653.

Guitar Cort Acoustic/electric with Fishman preamp and case. Mint cond. $450 413-374-0653.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 days $279! Includes meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, night life! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Tickets! Get a FREE MTV audience tickets to select shows when you book your Spring Break though StudentCity.com! Go to MTV.com or call StudentCity.com at 1-800-293-1443 for details! Tours and tickets are limited.

TRAVEL

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida

SPRING BREAK! 2002

LAST MINUTE SPECIALS!! SAVE $100 PER PERSON!

Organize Your Group, Travel Free!

STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES

800-648-4849

www.ststravel.com

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Montreal Maddness Spring Weekends $99 Quad. Occupancy price includes round trip luxury motor coach 3 days, 2 nights deluxe hotel directly downtown, breakfast, dinner, free nightclub admissions, dome + more. Departs March 15-17, April 19-21, other weekends available. $10 security fee. Call Global Express Tours (781) 979-0076.

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlessvacations.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

SPRING BREAK

Where the Party Never Stops!

Jamaica Cancun Acapulco Florida

800.367.1252

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sunchaser.com

WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

NEED A NEW CAR????

STILL LOOKING FOR A JOB?????

NEED A ROOMMATE?

CHECK THE DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS!!!!!!

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network

2	CBS 13
4	NESN
5	Fox Sport NE
6	PBS 57
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	7/8/20
9	HSCN Movie Channel
10	TV Guide Channel
11	FOX 61
12	ABC 40
13	NBC 22
14	International Channel
15	UMATV
16	HSCN Ink-Channel
17	ESPN
18	ESPN 2
19	LIVE-19
20	ESPN Classic
21	Gavel-to-Gavel
22	CNN
23	CNN HL
24	Weather Channel
25	Learning Channel
26	Histore Channel
27	A & E
28	Discovery Health
29	Food Network
31	NASA
32	Home & Garden TV
33	Travel Channel
34	Lifetime
35	CNBC
36	Tech TV
37	BET
38	UPN-38
40	USA
42	TNN
41	MTV
42	CMT
43	VH-1
44	TNT
45	TBS
46	E! Entertainment
47	Sci-Fi Channel
48	Court TV
49	Nick at Nite
50	Comedy Central
51	Cartoon Network
52	Game Show Network
53	TV Land
54	FUN Family
55	Univision
56	Galavision
57	Telemundo
58	College TV Network
59	C-SPAN
60	C-SPAN2
61	Bloomberg Television

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 15, 2002

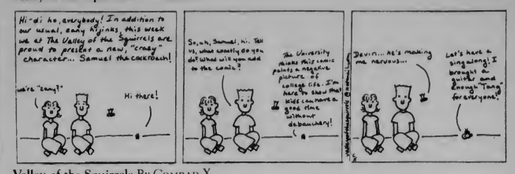
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH (P)	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Now With Bill Moyers (N)		Nova "Brilliance" (In Stereo)
WFSB (3)	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours (N) (In Stereo)		★½ "The Odd Couple II" (1998, Comedy) Jack Lemmon				News	Late Show
WBZ (4)	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours (N) (In Stereo)		★½ "The Odd Couple II" (1998, Comedy) Jack Lemmon				News	Late Show
WCVB (5)	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Funniest Home Videos		More Classic Bloopers (N)		In-Crowd and Social Cruelty		News	Nightline
WLVI (56)		Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Sabrina-Witch	Raising Ded	Reba (N)	Maybe It's Me	News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH (7)		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)							News
WTXX	20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Sabrina-Witch	Raising Ded	Reba (N)	Maybe It's Me	News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)							News
WTIC (61)	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	★★ "American Pie" (1999, Comedy) Jason Biggs				News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP (22)	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)							News
WGBY (57)	57	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Now With Bill Moyers (N)		Blackadder III	Red Green	Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB (40)	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Funniest Home Videos		More Classic Bloopers (N)		In-Crowd and Social Cruelty		News	Nightline
WSBK (38)		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	★★★ "The Fifth Element" (1997, Science Fiction) Bruce Willis				Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel (N)	Shipmates (N)
WTBS (22)		Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	★ "Wild Wild West" (1999, Western) Will Smith, Kevin Kline				★½ "Money Talks" (1997, Comedy) (PA) Chris Tucker
A&E (A&E)		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Angel" (In Stereo)		Biography: Burt Reynolds		Inside the Playboy Mansion				Law & Order "Cash-Off"
CNN (20)	24	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Live From...	The Point	Larry King Live		Newsnight		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM (45)	30	Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show	Geeks	Com-Presents	Com-Presents	Com-Presents	Com-Presents	Premium	Premium	Premium	Premium
DISC (23)		Turtles: The Shell Game		Vultures: Carrion Gang		Private Jets		Atlantis: The Ultimate Resort		Luxury Cruises (N)		Justice Files
ESPN (31)		Sportscenter		1963 NCAA Championship		Battle Lines (N)		College Basketball: Southern Miss.-Lipps at Cincinnati (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE (29)		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★½ "Conspiracy of Silence" (1991, Drama) Stephen Dorneltz, Michael Mahonen
MTV (32)		Tough Enough	Global Forum-Colin Powell		Music Videos (In Stereo)			TRL Show Us Your Hits (N) (In Stereo)		Charts	Making-Video	Music Videos (In Stereo)
NICK (25)		Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Spongeb	Oddparents	Oddparents	Cheers	Cheers	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI (26)		Star Trek	"The Lost Mission"	Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)		Strange World "Lullaby" (N)		Chronicle "Hot From the Oven"		Lexx "Prime Fodge" (In Stereo)		Strange World "Lullaby"
TLC (27)	28	Sasquatch Odyssey		Manhunt International		Protect and Serve "On Patrol"		FBI: Critical Incident		FBI: Critical Incident		Protect and Serve "On Patrol"
TNT (28)		Law & Order "Judge Dread"		Law & Order "True North"		★★★ "The Pelican Brief" (1993, Suspense) (PA) Julia Roberts, Denzel Washington						★★★ "Top Gun" (1986)
USA (33)		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Shadow" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Rebound"		★★★ "Out of Sight" (1998, Drama) George Clooney, Jennifer Lopez (In Stereo) R				Dennis Miller
HBO (50)		(5:15) "Charlie's Angels" (2000)		★½ "Black Sheep" (1996) Chris Farley PG-13		Time Machine		★★★½ "Fight Club" (1999, Drama) Brad Pitt, Edward Norton (In Stereo) R
MAX (65)		★★★★ "Almost Famous" (2000, Comedy-Drama) Billy Crudup R				★★★ "The Brothers" (2001, Comedy-Drama) Morris Chestnut R				★★★ "Bad Boys" (1995, Drama) Martin Lawrence R
SHOW (65)		(5:00) "Crocodile Dundee II"		Black Filmmaker Showcase		★ "Biracuta 2000" (2000) Christopher Plummer		Black		Stargate SG-1		Chris Isaak "Family Ties" (N)	Red Shoe

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas



Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Quote of the Day

"I am an honorary couple."

–Jason Bissonnette

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 47 LOW: 20	HIGH: 40 LOW: 33	HIGH: 53 LOW: 29

Horoscopes

Pisces (Feb. 19 - March 20) - Long weekends can be messy. Clean up your bathroom you slob!

Aries (March 21 - April 19) - Watch your temper. It's not worth jail time.

Taurus (April 20 - May 20) - You are going to have the best day of your life. Just watch out for swans. That's right, swans.

Gemini (May 21 - June 20) - Give your friends money. Lot's of money. They'll appreciate it, trust me.

Cancer (June 21 - July 22) - You life is full of sunshine. Avoid sunspots.

Leo (July 23 - Aug 22) - Roar really loud - but don't disturb the peace.

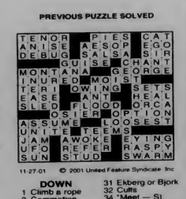
Virgo (Aug 23 - Sept. 22) - Buy a plane ticket to somewhere. You'll be happy you did it once you're somewhere else.

Libra (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22) - Watch your karma. 3 can easily turn to 21. Trust me.

Scorpio (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21) - Avoid frogs at all costs. You know what I'm talking about. You sicko.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21) - How the hell do you spell your sign? It must suck if you're dyslexic.

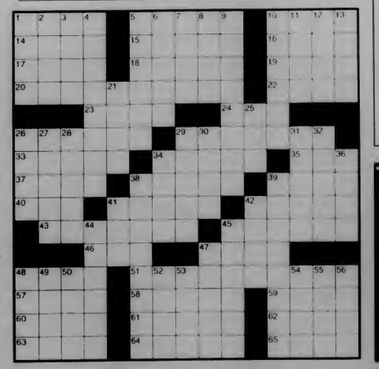
Capricorn (Dec.22 - Jan. 19) - You aren't a Cancer. That's a good thing.



Aquarius (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18) - Buy a car. And give it to someone. Then kick yourslef repeatedly for believing in your stupid horoscope.

Look out for Frosh later this week. Yeah Frosh!

THE HARP IRISH PUB
Crossword not challenging enough?
TUESDAY NIGHT!!
Team Pub Trivia
win money and prizes
9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition



ACROSS
1 Pupil's reward
5 Savory jelly
10 Killed
14 Wanderer
15 Kedik
16 Distinctive air
17 March 15, in Rome
18 Pasta covering
19 Slop working
20 Remarkable
22 "The Mammoth Hunters" author
23 Cakelike cookies
24 Drop the bait
26 Commuter origin
29 Summer flowers
33 All kidding —
34 New days
35 Wedding announcement word
37 Teases
38 Wish granter
39 Haysseed
40 Long, long —
41 Sautes
42 Davis of old films
43 Forbids
45 Bug
46 "Woot!"
47 Information
48 Leeway
51 End of the race
57 Light brown
58 Presses
59 Exit
60 Dance move
61 Seedless orange
62 British boys' school
63 Pitch
64 Catch
65 Copenhagen native

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-27-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DOWN
1 Climb a rope
2 Commotion
3 Help a burglar
4 Young flowers
5 Soak up
6 Goes hang-gliding
7 Mope
8 Tingle
9 Buffalo hunters of yore
10 Expedition
11 Hula feast
12 Pennsylvania port
13 Barrier
21 Merchandise
25 TLC providers
26 Paretsky of mysteries
27 Custom
28 Enthused about
29 Territories
30 Pupil's place
31 Ekberg or Bjork
32 Cults
34 "Meet — St. Louis"
36 — out: uses thriftily
38 Fabled monsters
39 Ushered in 41 Dedicated to 42 Shower, maybe
44 Traffic snarls
45 Dispute
47 Cheap restaurant
48 Take a snooze
49 Eight, to Caesar
50 Assayers' samples
52 Iraq neighbor
53 — Scotia
54 Least bit
55 Midday
56 Ocean bird of prey

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Six Bean Soup

Chicken Jambalaya

Broccoli & Cheese Casserole (vegetarian)

DINNER

Six Bean Soup

Breaded Pork Chops

Turkey Divan

Grilled Portabella Mushroom Steaks (W Basics) (vegan)

Vegan Cutlets

Today's Staff

Matthew F. Sacco
Scott Eldridge II
Andy Voet
Jess May
Frank DiMeglio
Erika Earl

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.19.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Owls swoop over low-scoring Minutemen

Sophomore Rick Lewis' five three-pointers were not enough for the Minutemen as Temple dropped UMass to 4-7 in conference play.

Temple avoids season sweep in Philadelphia

By Eric Soderstrom
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PHILADELPHIA – The Massachusetts men's basketball team hasn't lost two consecutive games this season without then dropping a third. So now – after Saturday's 64-47 loss to Temple inside the Owls' Liacouras Center – UMass is on the verge of its fourth three-game losing streak of this tragically fading 2001-02 campaign.

Somehow, Willie Jenkins remains positive.

"We still believe we can go into the Atlantic 10 Tournament and win it," assured the sophomore, whose team will remain in Philly until the completion of Tuesday night's game at St. Joseph's. "We didn't lose the last two games because we didn't play hard. We lost because we had bad starts."

But three days removed from Wednesday's 60-56 loss at home to St. Bonaventure, the Minutemen Saturday seemed to continue a rough beginning that may have begun in early November. And now three games under .500, UMass (10-13, 4-8 A-10) is again leaning toward the all-too-familiar style of come-from-behind basketball.

"It's the same old story," freshman point guard Anthony Anderson said. "We're always playing catch-up. But this time we just didn't catch up."

The Minutemen never led. And barring Temple's three-point lead just over a minute in, the closest they got was four points, 47-43, after a baby-hook from senior Kitwana Rhymer with 9:29 remaining in the final stanza.

But that threat soon stuttered, and sparked by a quick jumper from sophomore David Hawkins 30 seconds later, Temple (11-13, 8-4) finished the game on a 17-4 run.

"They're not a good team to dig a hole against," said Minuteman coach Steve Lappas, whose team didn't score until the 14:45 mark of the opening half. "Once you do, Temple is a tough team to come back from because they're not going to turn the ball over much, they're not going to get a lot of run-outs. And that really hurt us."

UMass started off slow as usual as Temple raced out to an 11-0 lead. Anderson's long-ranger just over five minutes in put the Minutemen on the board, but after a Shannon Crooks lay-up six minutes later the Owls regained a double-digit, 19-7, advantage. Freshman Brennan Martin's trey with 7:09 to go brought UMass to within 21-12 and a Jenkins put back with 2:31 left adjusted the count to 29-21, but the Minutemen faltered late in the opening half and Temple jogged into the locker room up 34-25.

"We played better in the second half than we did in the first half," Jenkins said. "We came out with more intensity. But the first half is what hurt us the most.

"And any time you're battling from a big lead, your adrenaline rushes so much that you lose a lot of energy," he continued. "So I think that's what happened to us in the end."

Temple senior Lynn Greer led all scorers with 19 points in a full 40 minutes of action and is now just 82 points away from 2,000. Hawkins followed with 17 points while seniors Alex Wesby and Kevin Lyde chipped in with 10 each.

JEN-RU TSENG/TEMPLE MEDIA RELATIONS

Lynn Greer's 19 points led all scorer's last Saturday at the Liacouras Center.

Anderson led UMass with 15 points, all coming from behind the arc. Jenkins and Crooks both added eight. Freshman Kyle Wilson, who scored 17 in the Minutemen's 63-55 win over the Owls back on Jan. 19, was held scoreless.

"Wilson killed us last time from 20-25 feet out," said Hall-of-Fame Temple coach John Chaney. "We were concentrating on him, making sure he couldn't spot up and shoot. We were also trying to rush Anderson and Crooks."

Anderson found his stroke from long range, going 5-for-12 from way back, but Crooks never found the same touch and finished 2-of-13 from the field.

"They kind of pushed out on everybody," Anderson said. "So it was kind of hard to get those open shots that you usually get."

Credit that to Chaney's age-old defensive setup, the match-up zone. Frustrating the UMass perimeter all afternoon, the Temple defense also shut down the Minutemen in the paint. Totaling only four points in the St. Bonaventure loss, Rhymer and junior Micah Brand combined for just six points on 3-of-13 shooting.

UMass shot just over 30 percent for the game.

"No matter how many times you play against it, no matter how much you go over the scouting reports, no matter how much you know what they're going to do," Anderson said. "That zone is tough."

Women's hoop splits weekend

By Jim Pignatiello
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PHILADELPHIA – Following back-to-back Atlantic 10 wins, including Friday's impressive overtime victory over Temple, the Massachusetts women's basketball team seemed to be putting its stride at just the right time.

Our biggest problem has been a lack of consistency in everything we've done [this year]," Coach Joanie O'Brien said.

Touche.

The Minutewomen (8-17, 6-8 A-10) hit the proverbial unstoppable force in Saint Joseph's (19-6, 10-4 A-10) offense Sunday, which ran roughshod through UMass' immovable object to a 75-50 victory.

The Hawks jumped out to a big lead early behind a 15-2 run in the first half and came out of the break with a 9-0 run that allowed them to coast the rest of the way.

The contest began as a tough back and forth battle. An Amber Sneed 18-footer six minutes into the contest brought the Maroon and White to within one at 9-8, but the St. Joe's backcourt of Jane Meade and Amy Snell responded with two quick treys.

The swarming Hawk press led to three straight Minutewomen turnovers and a pair of Sue Moran jumpers – including a gorgeous 15-foot fadeaway – that sparked the Hawks first big run and placed the game squarely in the hands of the home team.

"We allowed Saint Joseph's to control the tempo of the game from the tip," O'Brien said after the game.

UMass clawed back into the game with steady offensive rebounding that led to an 8-2 run to end the first half with the team down by 10, 30-20.

Any momentum O'Brien's team had heading into the break was immediately squashed by a 9-0 St. Joe's run to begin the second half. A pair of threes by junior Ebony Pegues and freshman Katie Nelson cut the lead to 13, but that was the closest the Minutewomen would get as they sent the nation's best free throw shooting team to the charity stripe 17 times in the second half.

On the day Moran was awarded with an honorary basketball after becoming the leading scorer in St. Joseph's women's basketball history – surpassing Dale Hodges' previous mark of 2,077 – the referees were the first to celebrate, sending the senior A-10 Player of the Year candidate to the line 11 times and hailing her out of an

Turn to HOOPS, page 9

Susan Moran, the Atlantic 10's leading scorer, dropped 21 points on the Minutewomen last Sunday.

Youngsters school older UMass

Sandwiched between a pair of vital conference weekends for the Massachusetts hockey team, an exhibition game just seemed like an intensity-starved affair for a team presently on the outside looking in at the Hockey East playoffs.

UMass hockey fans got a glimpse into the crystal ball on Friday night as prized prospect Stephen Werner and the U.S. Under-18 National Team Development Program paid a visit to the Mullins Center and dispatched the Minutemen 4-1, in an unexpectedly physical contest.

"We're above excited to play these college teams," said U.S. NTDP Head Coach Mike Eaves, father of the team's second leading scorer, Patrick Eaves. "When it happens, sometimes those teams don't expect that. It's like playing your little brother – when he starts to hit you, you want to grab him by the throat and throttle him."

Team USA still has eight players on its roster that have not yet made verbal commitments to any colleges, including Nate Radums and Ras Ortiz, who combined for two goals and five points against the Maroon and White. The visit of the USNTDP is a large step in landing top-notch recruits over the next few years. Showing recruits the Mullins Center, one of Hockey East's top facilities, and introducing them to the coaches, is a big step.

Werner, in the Mullins Center for a game for the first time on Friday night, seemed enthusiastic about joining up with the Minutemen for next season.

"It's the first time I've been on the ice down here," said the Chevy Chase, Md. native. "I really liked the coaching staff, and I like the idea of playing in a program trying to make the transition to the next level. I wanted to go somewhere that I could play immediately."

Ortiz seems to be a logical fit for the Minutemen, as he goes along with UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon's philosophy of bringing in people from the Bay State. Ortiz, who hails from Charlestown, Mass., has 16 points in 31 games this season for Team USA.

As for Werner, his performance on Friday night was somewhat strong, though he was minus-1 with only one shot in the game. However, he and linemate Eaves for the majority of the first two periods were on the ice at the same time as UMass' top line of Greg Mauldin, Tim Turner and Craig MacDonald.

"Speed is a really big part of my game, so the big ice surface really helps that," said Werner in reference to the Olympic-sized 200-by-100 foot Mullins Center.

"He's a tremendous skater who creates a lot of scoring chances on the rush," Coach Eaves said. "He's played center for most of the year, but we moved him to the wing for the Five Nations Tournament. He's been a top six forward all year."

In that tourney, Werner put home the only goal in a 1-0 win over Finland, one of three wins for the USA en route to a silver medal performance.

The exhibition break is short-lived for the Minutemen, however, as they will be back to business in a big way this weekend for a pair of games up north as they visit Maine. Following Merrimack's 5-2 win over Boston College Saturday night, UMass needs at least one win before their March 3 contest with Merrimack at the Mullins Center.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

GERALD LINGUOUGLIOSAN

Highly touted prospect Stephen Werner will join the Minutemen next year.

UMass PREVIEW
LACROSSE 2002
CAREER GUARDIANS

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The sun reaches its full brightness over the west end of Hofstra Stadium. Matt McFarland's eye black sucks in the solar rays so that his vision is clear, yet he still cannot believe his eyes.

Teammate Marc Morley's aggressive riding has forced Dutchman Evan Kostewka to loft a hanging pass right into Big Dawg's wheelhouse. Wet behind the ears defenseman Mike Allain turns his back on the 6-foot-3, 210-pound defenseman, as he leaps to snare the ball – is this for real?

McFarland fights off his doubts and patience prevails as he eyes his prey. In an instant he moves from a stationary position to full gallop, rushing toward his unsuspecting foe. In a perfect synthesis of pace and force, Big Dawg implodes his opponent – Allain lay prone on the turf in the fetal position, his stick is thrown from his grasp, the ball is bouncing out of bounds and yellow penalty flags fly from all directions.

"Those are the kind of penalties we'll take anytime," says UMass coach Greg Cannella.

"Last year we had the best man-down unit in the country." Big Dawg himself exclaims. "I'll sit in the box for crushing some dude. It's well worth it."

On this day McFarland's first-rate dismantling earns the Pride an extra man chance, but more importantly it administers a shot in the arm to his own club, enough to smother Hofstra's EMO and speed the Minutemen to a 17-13 win.

"I'm one of the biggest fans of those hits. There is an intimidation factor and it energizes a team and boosts confidence," asserts Cannella. Thirty seconds in the box is an acceptable exchange rate for the prime time flesh shot McFarland just delivered.

What is a flesh shot you ask?

"That's what those guys call it, I think flesh shots is their term," claims Assistant Coach Andy Shay. Big Dawg's crushing cohort, sophomore Tom Fallon, sometimes known as the Angel of Death, argues that Shay was the one who coined the phrase. Flesh shots, whatever they are, seem to be an underlying theme for the muscle of the UMass defense. "Coach Shay calls them flesh shots. We just try to hit them wherever there's no padding, wherever we see flesh."

"I just make sure that when they check a guy they are checking pretty hard," Shay says. "Anybody who comes through the middle, you want to make sure they know they're not going to come through without taking some punishment.

"They like that attitude."

Fallon and McFarland are the type of players that embrace the physicality of lacrosse and not so subtly sharing that attitude with their opponents. But entering last season, the pair, much like the whole of their team, was an unknown commodity on the national scene – but that didn't last very long.

"As the season went along the word got out. By the time we got to the Georgetown game their coach said, 'Jesus! Fallon is an animal,'" Cannella recalls. "For us that's great to hear because we know they're thinking about it. Because when a pass is up in the air, it's like Jack Tatum, like a great safety that comes and lowers the boom on a guy coming over the middle. They start thinking about it and they may not stretch as far for a pass."

Big Dawg calls it gator arm. "Cause he knows the ball's up there but he pulls back instead of reaching out to get it. He's looking upfield instead of concentrating on the ball because he knows we're coming. Gator arm, when he pulls his arms in real tight.

"He's hearing the footsteps."

Those are some pretty big footsteps. Both are well above six-feet and 200 pounds and through Bob Orlando's weight training program, the pair represents a formidable physical challenge to any attackman with the guts to take them on.

"Those two guys are relentless in the weight room," Cannella says. "I'm down there all the time and for a lacrosse guy, Tommy's got to be the strongest player in the country. Got to be!

"Some of our guys can't even visualize being that strong."

Strength is something that has become a staple on the UMass backline for the last few years and it is that physical presence that provided a perfect compliment to the explosive Minuteman attack a year ago.

"I think the top teams in Division I have that physical presence," Cannella explains. "And we established ourselves as one of the top defensive teams in D-I last year because of those guys.

"More than the physical presence, its their mental presence. They are out there every day and they have that inner desire that you just can't coach."

The inner desire that Cannella talks about and Fallon and McFarland employ stems from a unique feeling toward their opponents: hatred.

"We respect their skill as lacrosse players, but we don't like them," McFarland says. "There's a difference between respecting and liking."

Fallon agrees. "It's not like we're gonna help them up after we ring their bell or something."

At the commencement of last season, there was an underlying revenge factor that ran through the entire team, especially the "two goons" as former goalie Chris Campolettano called them. The Minutemen were a disappointing 4-8 in McFarland's sophomore season; also their first year in the ECAC, so there were a lot of repeat opponents to exact vengeance on. UMass did just that, going 12-2 and sharing the conference crown with Georgetown. But coming off a stellar season, Fallon and McFarland have found a new reason to be ill-tempered on game day.

KEVIN BAIN

On a steamy spring night in May the whole of the UMass lacrosse team congregated in the tight confines of the McGuirk Alumni Stadium pressroom. They were present to watch their fates expire via satellite dish. The NCAA tournament committee had decided that UMass was not worthy of an at-large bid and that did not sit well.

"I can't tell you what we really did after, it was just unbelievable," McFarland says. "We felt so cheated. We did everything that coach told us to do and we did everything that was expected and to not even be given a shot.

"It's like a kick in the balls."

Fallon recalls leaving Rutgers, the site of the Final Four, "after we kicked their ass on their home field and we said you know, we are gonna be back here."

So now the pair have a new reason to raise the intensity bar, making Garber Field that much more unsafe for visiting victims.

"I didn't watch one game of the tournament, I don't want to watch those bums play," Fallon says. "But anytime you can use something like that its just another thing to get going. We don't need it but it's just something to put in there, just a little something extra to get going.

"We're an angry team as it is so to have that just adds to our anger."

An anger that will be unleashed this weekend when Hofstra visits Garber Field for a rematch of last year's thrilling season opener.

"The whole offseason is just geared toward Hofstra and the first game. That drives a lot of us – we all have that taped in our lockers, Feb. 23. They are the guys that took our spot last year," says McFarland referring to the Pride's seemingly unjust inclusion in the NCAA tournament draw. "I wouldn't wanna be Hofstra."

Fallon and McFarland are in the business of intimidation, so it's no surprise that their game day demeanor compliments their punishing style of play. "We're pretty ill tempered on game day," McFarland says. "Every guy has his little thing that he does…I throw up, all the time, every single game, since high school I've done it."

"That's when we start getting fired up when he starts pukin'," Fallon says with a chuckle.

"It used to be that I'd feel better after he threw up, because I knew he was into it," says Shay. "And Fallon's got that war paint. That's what he likes to do but I think he's scary enough without it."

Shay is probably right. After all, if he wanted to scare somebody, he could just show them the tape of what he did to Fairfield's Joe Beaudet in a fall ball tournament.

"I think he broke two ribs and lacerated his liver," Shay remembers. "The kid had to go to the hospital and the Fairfield coach said that was his toughest guy."

McFarland is the consummate straight man of the two. As inclined as Fallon is to step up and croak an opponent, Big Dawg has his partner's back with a style that may not be as painful, but certainly as effective.

"Matt can be that type of player," Shay says. "But Tommy is a lot bigger and Matt is so good at covering it makes sense."

Just like Fallon leaves a physical imprint on an opposing player, McFarland's lasting impression will show up in the ensuing days of sleep deprivation – just ask Keith Cromwell.

"He's an All-American but a lot of people thought he was the best attackman in the country," Shay says. "Matt held him to a goal in garbage time. He is so versatile he can cover any type of player. And he always wants to cover the best guy."

The last thing any offensive player wants is visions of Big Dawg and the Angel of Death prancing through their heads. That's why when Cannella walks down the hallway adjacent to the UMass weight room and he hears the pinging of weights, that overture of intensity, he can't help but think, "I'm glad they're on our side."

The ECAC lax lowdown

Final National Ranking: 9th
Overall Record: 12-2
ECAC Finish: 5-1 (tie-first)

A late season loss to Georgetown cost the Minutemen the automatic bid to the tournament and considering the odds against the ECAC garnering two berths, UMass will have its sights set on an outright conference title, instead of last year's shared version.

With a big graduation hit Greg Cannella expects his talented youngsters to step up and produce immediately. Hulking defensemen Matt McFarland and Tom Falkon are already known commodities as is preseason first team All-American Kevin Leveille (45 points). The key will be how well young players such as sophomore Jeff Zywicki and freshmen Craig Conn play in their first full seasons of action.

Senior attackman Marc Morley will be there to mentor the young attackmen as will Dan Paccione. Paccione will also serve a larger role as UMass' new face-off man after the departure of all-ECAC ace Jeff Seals and Kevin Merchant.

Another big question will come in goal where junior college transfer Rob Schneider will replace three-year starter Campoltano. Schneider nearly dethroned Campoltano last year but division I experience prevailed in coach Greg Cannella's decision making.

The hidden strength of the Minutemen may lie in the defensive midfield. Few teams have the speed and tenacity that senior Paul Hutchen and company bring to the table.

Final Ranking: 7th
Overall: 11-3
ECAC Finish: 5-1 (tie-first)

The Hoyas boast the return of both the conference offensive and defensive players of the year. Senior Steve Dusseau, the man who clinched the ECAC title with his late-game heroics against UMass last season, returns to lead a potent Hoya attack. His counterpart, Kyle Sweeney, is the junior anchor of a very physical defense.

Georgetown and UMass are very similarly built in their explosive offense and take no prisoners defensive style so it won't be a surprise to anybody if the two teams go head-to-head for the automatic bid a second year in a row.

To do so the Hoyas, like their Bay State counterparts, will have to cope with a heavy graduation loss. Mike Henehan and Scott Doyle will be sorely missed on the offensive side of the ball while Rodger Colbert's physical play will leave a big gap on the other end of the field.

Coach Dave Urick will embrace the chance to welcome UMass to the nation's capital for another late season match up that will likely decide the conference champion. Navy and UMBC will likely have something to say about that but the Hoyas and Minutemen are the coaches' picks to finish at the top.

Final Ranking: 14th
Overall: 8-5
ECAC Finish: 4-2 (third)

The Midshipmen were the only team in the conference last year to boast a win over Georgetown. Unfortunately for head coach Richie Meade, Navy was far from consistent in it's other games.

An 8-5 record and a 4-2 conference mark landed them on the heels of the Hoyas and UMass, a spot they may become familiar with in the coming season. Although the Mids lost the least out of the top half squads, it's quality not quantity that counts.

Adam Borcz was the league's most prolific sniper in 2001 one and he proved he could succeed on any level by thriving in Major League Lacrosse after finishing out the season with the Naval Academy. To combat his loss, senior Eddie McKinnon will have to step up his production even more in 2002.

The 6-foot-one 190-pound attackman is a load to handle for most defensemen, look for him to explode this year.

The key for the Mids will be the ability to find scoring up front. Michael Cataffo and Brendan Power are gone so Meade will certainly be lacking experience at attack. If some not so common names can step up, Navy could challenge the Minutemen and Hoyas for the automatic bid.

National Rank: none
Overall: 5-7
ECAC Finish: 2-4 (sixth)

UMBC was as enigmatic as any team in the country. Ranked as high as tenth at one point in the season before falling 16-10 to UMass, the Retrievers had trouble finding and keeping their game. But last year that was expected.

After all, head coach Don Zimmerman was dealing with one of the youngest teams in the conference. This season's expectations are looming, as the Retrievers will look to rebound from a sixth place finish in conference.

The key losses for UMBC come up front and in the nets. Torrid goalscorer Josh Hahn was lost to graduation as was steady keeper Steve Cusa. Midfield anchor Brian Lawton, one of the nations leaders in ground balls, will also be missed.

But Zimmerman has more than enough young talent to counter that. The Retrievers sported 26 underclassmen on last year's roster and almost by default some unknown will step up to help replace the likes on Hahn and Lawton.

Joey Kestermann and Josh Gerber showed some potential at attack last year but again, the key lies in consistency. If UMBC can find their game early, like they did last year, but keep it for a whole season, they will be a tough team to play.

Final Rank: 15th
Overall: 7-6
ECAC Finish: 2-4 (fourth)

Like the rest of the team in the conference, Penn State may also fall victim to its ranks depleted by graduation. Matt Vallone was without question the best goalie in the ECAC last year and coach Glenn Thiel will not enjoy the search for a replacement.

The Nittany Lions rode on the back of Vallone's hot streak that seemed like a yearlong tear. He finished the year among the national leaders in both goals against average and save percentage and he nearly stole a win against UMass in Amherst as he held the second-highest scoring team in the country to just 10 goals.

Will Driscoll's departure will have a similar effect on the offensive side of Penn State's game. Driscoll was one of the Lions only consistent scoring threats and with his graduation, somebody is going to have to step up or the Lions might find themselves in the conference cellar.

Junior attackman Luke Ogelsby showed signs of breaking out last year but consistency is always a question. What won't be a question is Penn State's perennially physical play. In the past the Lions have gotten through games by pushing their opponents around but that strategy won't fly in the talented ECAC.

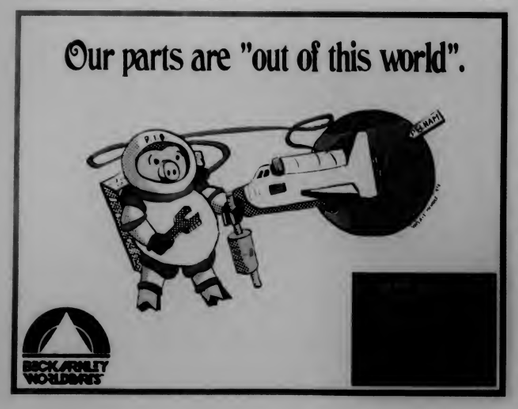
More likely than not this is a rebuilding year for Thiel and his squad, although it's doubtful that rebuild is even in the vocabulary of the University Park faithful.

Final Rank: none
Overall: 5-8
ECAC Finish: 2-4 (fifth)

Losing maybe the best attackman in the country would hurt any squad from national champion Princeton all the way down to Quinnipiac. So it won't be a big shock when Rutgers struggles to score goals this year, because the biggest gun in the history of the program, Keith Cromwell, is strutting his stuff on the fields of Major League Lacrosse, with his back to the ECAC.

Replacements anyone?

Junior Mike McLaughlin is the likely choice as heir to the twine singeing throne in New Jersey. He topped the 40-point mark as a rookie and was equally successful playing second fiddle to Cromwell last year.



But, after the junior New York native, Rutgers is short on depth and likewise short on a chance to compete with the rest of the stacked ECAC.

In goal Mike St. George is the likely pick at starter. St. George battled for playing time last year with departed senior Dan Shaiviz. In the end though, it probably won't matter who is in goal. The Scarlet Knights just have not made enough gains in the area recruiting circles to acquire the top-notch talent to compete in the ECAC.

It is a somewhat valid excuse when you think about who lies just down the road – Princeton. But excuses don't equal wins, especially not in this league.

Lacrosse Schedule

Sat 02/23/2002	Hofstra	Amherst, Mass.	1:00 PM ET
Sat 03/02/2002	Stony Brook	Stony Brook, N.Y.	1:00 PM ET
Sat 03/09/2002	Navy	Annapolis, Md.	12:00 PM ET
Wed03/13/2002	Vermont	Amherst, Mass.	3:30 PM ET
Sat 03/16/2002	Brown	Amherst, MA	1:00 PM ET
Wed03/20/2002	Albany	Albany, N.Y.	1:00 PM ET
Sat 03/23/2002	Hartford	Amherst, Mass.	1:00 PM ET
Sat 03/30/2002	Penn State	State College, Pa.	1:00 PM ET
Sat 04/06/2002	U of Maryland BC	Amherst, Mass.	1:00 AM ET
Sat 04/13/2002	Yale	New Haven, Conn.	1:00 PM ET
Wed04/17/2002	Harvard	Amherst, Mass.	3:00 PM ET
Sat 04/20/2002	Georgetown	Washington, D.C.	1:00 PM ET
Fri 04/26/2002	Syracuse	Syracuse, N.Y.	7:00 PM ET
Sat 05/04/2002	Rutgers	Amherst, Mass.	1:00 PM ET
Sat 05/11/2002	NCAA First Round	Southern Site	TBA
Sun 05/12/2002	NCAA First Round	Southern Site	TBA
Sat 05/18/2002	NCAA Quarterfinals	Northern Site	TBA
Sun 05/19/2002	NCAA Quarterfinals	Southern Site	TBA

ANOTHER [illegible] TODAY IN ARTS.
WORK FOR AMHERST TOWING ED/OP PAGE 6.
IT'S [illegible] SPORTS [illegible].

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
WEDNESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE EIGHTY FOUR ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.20.02

Chancellor's Medal given out at lecture

By Rachel Smith
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The University of Massachusetts Linguistics Department hosted the first annual Donald C. and Margaret H. Freeman Lecture Friday, Feb. 15 at Herter Hall.

UMass selected Steven Pinker, Professor of Brain and Cognitive Sciences at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, as the inaugural lecturer in the series. Pinker was flattered that the Linguists Department selected him to speak at the University.

"UMass has one of the world's great linguistics departments," Pinker said. "It was nice of them to ask [me to come]."

Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams presented the Chancellor's Medal to Donald C. Freeman in honor of his "intellectual passion" and role as founder of the UMass Linguistics Department. According to Lisa Selkirk, Freeman's relationship with UMass did not end when he retired.

"Don has had a long and continuous relationship to the department," Selkirk said. "He recently made a generous contribution to the Linguistics Department. We've all felt really indebted to Don."

"It's a little cliché, buts it's a culmination of everything I've worked for in my entire life," Freeman said after the lecture. "I'm a native son of the Commonwealth. It's something special. I'm very happy."

Chancellor Williams commented on the "the passion for language" she observed in the audience. Students and faculty crowded room 227 at Herter. People filled all of the chairs; so many lecture-goers crowded the aisles and even remained standing during the hour-long lecture.

Pinker's titled his lecture "Words and Rules: The Ingredients of Language" after his most recent best-selling book about language acquisition. Pinker has written three books to date, including the New York Times bestseller "The Language Instinct".

From the recent figure skating scandal at the Winter Olympics to Donald Duck, Pinker used various popular and accessible examples to illustrate his theories of how people memorize words and why we speak the way that we do.

Selkirk selected Pinker to lecture at UMass partly due to his unique delivery of complex ideas. "He's the public intellectual for linguistics these days," Selkirk explained. "He's brining linguistics to a popular audience."

The bulk of Pinker's lecture examined irregular verbs and why they exist in the English language. He used Selkirk's explanation for how irregular verbs form, and conceded that her theory normally held true. However, there are enough instances when her theory could not be used to form irregular verbs that he sought a different explanation. Pinker also looked to the physiology of the human brain to explain why people use irregular verbs in English when regular verbs are easier to remember and more common.

Pinker studied language acquisition patterns in children and learned that subjects under two correctly remembered irregular verbs more often than children three years and up. American children learn about regular verbs around the age of three, the time when their memory of irregular verbs seems to falter.

He used that research to refute the theory that children's memory being inferior to adults' memory is the sole explanation for children who say "catched," "fighted," or make other errors relating to irregular verbs. Pinker concluded his lecture with a brief history of irregular verbs in the English and German languages.

While Pinker's lecture was clearly relevant to linguistics students, UMass students from all disciplines benefited from his lecture

"Everybody speaks a language. Learning about language is like knowing yourself," Selkirk said. After the crowded lecture room emptied, Selkirk added, "In a way this first lecture has fulfilled our hopes for this lecture series. Attracting people who aren't normally interested in a language. I think it went very well."

University asks RAs to vote against union

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts is urging undergraduate resident assistants (RAs) and community development assistants (CDAs) to vote against the proposed RA union.

In a Feb. 14 letter sent to the RAs and CDAs, interim chancellor Marcellette Williams asked that they vote no in the upcoming election.

"As you know the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission will conduct an election on March 5, 2002, to determine whether a majority of eligible Resident Assistants and Community Development Assistants wish to be represented for the purposes of collective bargaining," Williams wrote. "I urge you to cast your ballot, and to vote against unionization.

"The University does not look at your activities as a "job," although we recognize that you render an important service to the University and your fellow students," Williams added. "I view you as a student first and always, and believe that your service in a leadership role should not be mischaracterized as "employment" in the traditional sense."

Further, the administration is cautioning that if a union is established any costs to the University will be passed on in fee increases to students.

"Unionization of our undergraduate RAs and CDAs, accompanied by the inevitable demands by the United Auto Workers for increased stipends, would create serious conflicts among groups of students," Williams wrote. "Because Housing must be a financially self-sufficient unit of the University, any increased benefits for RAs and CDAs would have to be paid for by increased fees charged to your fellow students."

The UAW is assisting the unionization effort on the UMass campus.

The University will use all its resources against unionization, the letter says.

"It is my very strong belief that unionization of undergraduate students is inconsistent with education at UMass Amherst," Williams wrote. "The University feels so strongly that our state's public employee collective bargaining law is incompatible with your position that the University intends to pursue all appropriate legal and administrative steps ... the University simply cannot and will not bargain with an outside union."

The tone of the letter may hurt the administration rather than help it, James Shaw, president of United Auto Workers Local 2322, sees the letter as disrespectful.

"Claiming that RAs aren't workers is just an absolutely ludicrous claim. They hold schedules, they get paid, and they pay taxes: they're workers in every sense of the word," Shaw said. "This letter shows that the administration is not interested in treating the RAs with respect."

UMass, in Shaw's eyes, should be ashamed of itself.

"What UMass is saying is that we don't respect workers," Shaw said. "I now would accuse UMass of being anti-union, and they don't seem to be ashamed of that. To me anti-union is like being anti-black or anti-woman."

And trying to pit RAs and non-RAs against each other is wrong too, Shaw says.

"That's outright intimidation. It's a threat. It's factually untrue. There's nothing that says Housing has to increase fees if the RAs unionize," Shaw said. "There is a planned increase of seven percent for next year anyway, without a dime going into a raise for RAs. That's one of the issues."

David Synnot, an RA in John Adams Residence Hall and a junior Arts and Sciences student has been active in the union movement since its inception. He feels that the letter may be illegal.

"My opinion, it's the statement that the University can and will not bargain. In my opinion that's an unfair labor practice," Synnot said. "Public employees are supposed to uphold the law and not violate, and that is my opinion."

The letter is already having an effect, Synnot said: it's making the union more appealing.

"I thought [the letter] was pretty patronizing. Calling the RA position an extracurricular activity instead of a job. We're sending letters to all RAs explaining our positions," Synnot said. "There are a lot of RAs who are very mad about this, and not just pro-union. I've had people who aren't the least bit interested in the union who have come up to me and said they're voting union/yes just because of this letter."

SCOTT HUTCHINS/COLLEGIAN
Some Pro-Union RAs may be wearing these t-shirts on voting day.

State of the schools

Science and Math losing 10 percent of faculty to early retirement

COURTESY RICHARD BLAKE
The College of Natural Science and Mathematics Dean Leon Osterweil.

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(This article is the third in a series dedicated to the impact recent budget cuts have had on the nine schools and colleges on campus.)

Leon Osterweil was having a busy Friday morning. Just before being interviewed for this story, he finished an important phone call; right after this interview, he rushed off to another meeting.

However, in the half-hour given to the Collegian, Osterweil detailed decimation. The College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics' Dean told of a college expecting to lose 15 percent of its total faculty to retirement. 10 percent of it to early retirement alone.

"We expect to lose 35 faculty members out of our 240," Osterweil said. "25 of those will be lost to offered early retirement."

Encompassing Astronomy, Biochemistry and Molecular Biology, Biology, Chemistry, Computer Science, Geosciences, Mathematics and Statistics, Physics and Polymer Science and Engineering, Osterweil's College expects to lose professors at all levels of scholarship and from all academic departments.

"It's Mathematics that's worst off," Osterweil said. The department expects to lose a staggering 12 professors to combined retirements. Astronomy will also be hard hit, Osterweil said. Further damaging the school will be the retirement of clerical staff.

"We're losing the individuals who keep track of chemicals, who do the storekeeping," Osterweil said. "This is a scientific loss as well as a clerical one."

Similar to other School and College chairmen – specifically the School of Management's Tom O'Brien and Education's Bailey Jackson – everything possible was being done to preserve programs that students have come to expect. As such, Osterweil expects to attempt to save as much money as possible while maintaining those same programs.

"There will be no program cuts this semester," the Dean confirmed, instead pointing to the fall semester as the place to look for possible pain. He is frank in saying that he expects to offer far fewer classes in the fall with fewer sections.

"We're hamstrung by the lack of resources," Osterweil says, saying that the University's only response, thus far, has been a reference to its bare cupboard. The Dean says that right now, the only answer anyone can expect is a collective, "we have no more resources to help with."

But unlike other Schools – who explain that the best way to hedge losses is to bring in adjunct professors to teach classes – Osterweil is iffy on such a proposal.

"There may be some money available for adjunct professors, but I am nervous we don't have as much of a window to hire as we might have had otherwise," Osterweil says, adding that he is unsure of the quality of people he can bring in to help.

"There is life after these cuts and it is that which we have to prepare for. We have a good school and we need to invest in keeping it at a level where a very high quality product can be delivered to students," Osterweil said. If anything could be cited as the Computer Science professor's main message, it was that. Like O'Brien in an earlier article, Osterweil argues that the University can't fold under the pressure of the cuts. "I don't want to see a watering down of our product so we're not going to hire sub-par faculty to fill in the gaps."

Turn to RETIREMENT, page 3

DIVERSITY CALENDAR

FILMS

UMASS – A "Video for Justice" on the subject of imprisoned Native American activist Leonard Peltier will be shown in room 805 of the Campus Center on Wednesday, Feb. 20 at 7:00 p.m. This film is part of a movement to free Peltier, titled, "Until Freedom is Won!"

UMASS – The Bosnian film No Man's Land will be broadcast in room 227 of Herter Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 20 at 7:30 p.m. The film depicts the struggle of three soldiers trapped in a trench, which serves as a microcosm for the ethnic strife in the Balkans. This event, part of the 9th Annual Multicultural Film Festival, is free.

AMHERST – The German film Gendernauts, in which an experimental filmmaker explores the subculture of San Francisco in a series of portraits which blur gender identity lines, will be shown in Merrill 4 on Thursday, Feb. 21 at 4:00 p.m. and 7:30. This event, part of the German Film Series, is free. Gendernauts has English subtitles.

MOUNT HOLYOKE/SMITH – The film, Lumumba, about the rise and fall of Congolese revolutionary Patrice Lumumba, will be broadcast in room 101 of Mount Holyoke College's Dwight Hall on Sunday, Feb. 24 at 7:00 p.m. The film will be broadcast at the same time in Smith College's Wright Hall Auditorium. Both screenings are free. The film will also be broadcast on Monday, Feb. 25 at 3:00 p.m. at Wright Hall and on Wednesday, Feb. 27 at 4:00 p.m. in Dwight 101. See "LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS" for information about an appearance by the film's director, Raoul Peck at Mount Holyoke College on Wednesday, Feb. 27.

UMASS – The German film Der Schwarze Kasten [The Black Box] will be screened on Monday, Feb. 25, at 8:15 p.m. in room 227 of Herter Hall. The film has English subtitles.

UMASS – The film Invisible Soldiers, a documentary on blacks in World War II, will be shown in Malcolm X Culture Center on Tuesday, Feb. 26 at 6:30 p.m. This event is free.

AMHERST – The film Rhyme and Reason will be shown on Tuesday, Feb. 26 at 7:00 p.m. in the Amherst College Campus Center Theater. The film presents a survey of musical talent and inflated political and social issues such as ghetto life and gun violence. It will be followed by a screening of La Haine (see below).

AMHERST – The film La Haine [Hate] will be broadcast on Tuesday, Feb. 26 at 8:50 p.m. in the Amherst College Campus Center Theater. The film, part of the "At Human Cost" series is about three young men who seek retribution for a friend who was critically wounded by police during a street riot.

UMASS – The film The Chinatown Files will be broadcast on the New Africa House's Augusta Savage Gallery on Wednesday, Feb. 27 at 7:00 p.m. The film explores the roots and legacy of the Cold War on the Chinese American community during the 1950s and 1960s.

UMASS – The film How's Your News? will be broadcast in room 227 of Herter Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 27 at 7:30 p.m. The movie, co-funded by South Park creators Trey Stone and Matt Parker, is a chronicle of the voyage of five adults with disabilities on a road trip across America. UMASS alumnus P.H. O'Brien, the film's cinematographer, will be on hand for a discussion.

PERFORMANCES

UMASS – Eve Ensler's The Vagina Monologues will be performed in the Campus Center Auditorium on Thursday, Feb. 21, Friday, Feb. 22, and Saturday, Feb. 23 at 8:00 p.m. Tickets sold in advance are $7 for general admission, and $5 for students. Tickets sold at the door are $10 for general admission, $5 for students. Proceeds will go to local charities that aid women in need. Call 545-0412 for tickets.

SMITH – Dona Nobis Pacem: an Entreats for Peace in the Middle East, a musical event featuring choirs from all five colleges, will be performed at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 23, in Smith College's John M. Greene Music Hall.

UMASS – The New England premiere of Slanguage, a fusion of poetry, theater, jazz, Hip-Hop, politics, down home blues, and Spanish boleros, will take place on Wednesday, Feb. 27, and Thursday, Feb. 28, at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

UMASS – The Children of Uganda Chorus will perform in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 27 at 7:30 p.m. The group is composed of 18 orphans, ages six to seventeen, who serve as ambassadors for the 1.4 million other AIDS and war related orphans living in Uganda. Tickets are $5, $7 and $10 for Five College students, $30, $23, and $13 for general admission, and $10 for under 17.

RELIGIOUS

UMASS – The Jewish Student Union will sponsor Purim Mask Making on Wednesday, Feb. 20. Meet at the Student Union Craft Center at 7:00 p.m. if interested, and bring money.

UMASS – A "Latke vs. Hamantaschen" debate featuring UMass faculty members will be held in Hillel House on Sunday, Feb. 25, at 12:00 p.m. The discussion will feature Eric Sommers, Sarina Ergas, Ilan Packer, and Ike Goldstein. The debate will be followed by a Jewish Women's collective baking of hamantaschen in the Hillel House Upstairs Kitchen at 2:30 p.m.

UMASS – A Jewish Student Union Purim Party will be held at the Monkey Bar in Amherst Center on Sunday, Feb. 24 at 9:00 p.m. Tickets are $5, $3 with a costume.

AMHERST – A Five College Purim Party will be held on Monday, Feb. 25 at 7:00 in Amherst College's Alumni House.

COUNSELING

UMASS – Everywoman's Center will be hosting "Lesbian Connection: Pathways to Healthy Relationships" – an eight-week educational support group designed to improve intimate relationships, beginning on Wednesday, Feb. 20 from 5:30 to 7:00. Registration is necessary – call 577-0077 if interested. This group is offered free of charge, and is open to lesbians from the five colleges and the surrounding community.

GAMES

UMASS – A spades tournament will be held in Malcolm X Cultural Center on Wednesday, Feb. 20. To register your team for $5, call 545-3600 and ask for Malcolm or Zatcha, or register upon arrival and pay $7. Throughout the tournament, the film Love Jones will be shown.

LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS

AMHERST – Lincoln Willis Jr. Zollar, artistic director of Urban Bush Women, will deliver a lecture/demonstration titled "Urban Bush Women: Working it Out," on Wednesday, Feb. 20 at 4:00 p.m. in Amherst College's Kirby Theater.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Dr. S. Allen Counter will deliver a lecture, "North Pole Legacy: Black, White, and Eskimo" at 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, Feb. 20, in Odyssey Bookshop. Dr. Counter will be discussing a novel about Matthew Henson, the African American who helped to discover the North Pole with Robert Peary. The bookshop is located at 9 College Street, South Hadley.

AMHERST – Diane Norman-Lentz and Gretchen Krull will lead a workshop, titled, "Women, Food and Body Image: Rewriting Our Stories, Restoring Ourselves," in the McGaffrey Room of Amherst College's Keefe Campus Center at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Feb. 20. Bring a notebook.

UMASS – Author Marge Piercy will read from her memoir, Sleeping With Cats, in the Student Union's Cape Cod Lounge on Thursday, Feb. 21 at 7:30 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Kate Kruckemeyer will deliver a lecture, "More Than Just a Pretty Face: Feminism, Race and Popular Culture for Girls, 1955- 1999," at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Thursday, Feb. 21 at 7:30 p.m. The Center is located at 83 College Street, South Hadley.

SMITH – Loïc Wacquant, a University of California-Berkeley Sociology Professor, will deliver a lecture, "Learning to Punish the Poor: The Transatlantic Export of American Penal Policy," on Friday, Feb. 22 at 2:30 p.m. in Wright Hall Auditorium. This lecture will be delivered during an open session of the course Urban Sociology.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Holly Thompson will discuss Ash, her novel of Japan, in Odyssey Bookshop on Saturday, Feb. 23 at 2:00 p.m. The bookshop is located at 9 College Street, Village Commons, South Hadley.

UMASS – Economics Professor Lee Badgett will deliver a lecture, "More Than a Family Resemblance: Making a Case for Same-Sex Marriage," in room 620 of Thompson Hall on Monday, Feb. 25, from 12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m. This event is part of the Center for Public Policy and Administration Colloquium Lecture Series.

SMITH – A panel on Humanistic Buddhism will take place on Monday, Feb. 25 in room 106 of Smith College's Seelye Hall at 4:30 p.m. Richard Seager of Hamilton College will deliver a presentation, titled, "Daisaku Ikeda and the Soka Gakkai," and Stuart Chandler of Indiana University will deliver a presentation titled, "Ning Yun and the Buddha Light Society." This event is the second panel presentation in the Buddhism in America lecture series.

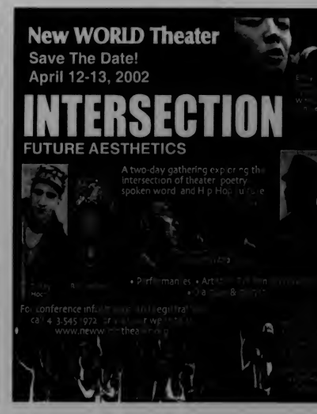
SMITH – Dan Diner will deliver a lecture, "Europe and the Jews: New Historical Perspectives," on Monday, Feb. 25, at 4:30 p.m. in room 201 of Smith College's Seelye Hall.

SMITH – Decision 2002: Elections in Zimbabwe, a panel discussion on the upcoming Zimbabwean presidential election, will be held on Tuesday, Feb. 26, at 4:30 p.m. in room 201 of Seelye Hall. Speakers will include Dr. John Makumbe, a professor of political and administrative studies at the University of Zimbabwe, and Dr. Mwesiga Baregu, the director of the African Regional Institute for Policy Studies in Harare, Zimbabwe. A reception will follow in Seelye 207.

SMITH – A teach-in on Globalization and Reproductive Rights will be held at Smith College on Tuesday, Feb. 26 in room 106 of Smith College's Seelye Hall from 7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Raoul Peck, director of the film Lumumba, will speak about the making of the film on Wednesday, Feb. 27 at 7:30 p.m. in Mount Holyoke's Gamble Auditorium. See "FILMS" for details about screenings of Lumumba at Mount Holyoke College and Smith.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Index 1890, became the Orange Index in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Massachusetts Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1962, and has been a recipient of numerous awards. Entered as second class matter at the Amherst, MA 01004 post office. Issues are published during the academic year, except during vacations and exam periods. Subscriptions are $150 per year, and $75 per semester.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Gargiulo Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tiboria Gracyzc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

STUDENT TRAVEL
It's YOUR trip, take it!
London.....$274
Amsterdam....$351
Paris.....$349
Los Angeles.....$198
New York.....$115
Washington D.C.....$78
Fares are round-trip from Hartford
Restrictions may apply. Tax not included
BUDGET HOTELS for as little as $18 A NIGHT!!!
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

New WORLD Theater
Save The Date!
April 12-13, 2002
INTERSECTION
FUTURE AESTHETICS
A two-day gathering exploring the intersection of theater, poetry, spoken word, and Hip Hop culture
For conference info, call 545-0111 or email
www.newworldtheater.org

Castaway Lounge
Will proudly present another successful
Amateur Night
Monday February 25th starting at 7 pm
PENTHOUSE PET DOMINIQUE ST CROIX
◆ Cash prizes awarded
◆ All ladies over 18 must apply in person
◆ Open on Mondays at 3pm with 10 Beautiful Exotic Entertainers Food and Prizes given away
Open Tuesdays Saturday 11am 1am
VIP Room available for private engagement parties
Phone# 413 665 8133

EWC and Stonewall Center hurt by cuts

By Jake Lilien
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last semester, the University of Massachusetts Stonewall Center's Lesbian/Gay/Bisexual/Transgender [GLBT] Lunch Lecture Series featured speakers such as University of Southern Maine English Professor Lisa Walker, historian Les Wright, and Concordia University Communication Studies Professor Chantal Nadeau. These speakers lectured on topics like same-sex marriage, gay adoption rights, racial issues within the GLBT community, and international gay liberation movements.

This semester, there will be no speakers. The LGBT Lunch Lecture Series has been cancelled.

The Series is one of many casualties of the recent UMass budget cuts. The Stonewall Center canceled the Series after receiving a 20 percent slash in funding.

"The academic validity that the lecture series presented is no longer present," said Stephen Pereira, Assistant Director of the Stonewall Center. "I feel that the queer voice on campus is being lessened. But we've tried to preserve as much as possible."

In addition to the Lecture Series, the Center has had to eliminate a graduate position in cultural and educational programming. Last semester, as the result of previous budget cuts, BLATANT, the Stonewall Center newsletter, fell by the wayside.

The Stonewall Center is hardly the only University student support center that has been forced to streamline its budget. The Everywoman's Center has endured a similar cut in funds.

"We made a decision to re-structure," said Carol Wallace, Director of the Center. "We've managed to absorb the cuts without having to sacrifice any particular services.

"But," she continued, "we have a new organizational structure as a result. We've re-written the description of almost every position."

Wallace added that, at the end of the year, the Center will two fewer operating positions than it has had in the past.

The Office of ALANA Affairs, which is funded by the Student Government Association's Student Activities Trust Fund, has not been directly affected the cuts.

But Shelley Perdomo, the Office's Assistant Director, still worries about the effect that the cuts will have on students of color. She says that suggestions have been made to consolidate the programs for minority students that are offered by Academic Support Services, such as the Bilingual Collegiate Program, and Native American Student Support Services.

"I'm really nervous about what's going to happen to diversity on campus," Perdomo said. She added that, with the proposed "second round" of budget cuts pending, it is possible that the SGA's funding for the ALANA Office would decrease.

Employees of the Stonewall Center, the Office of ALANA Affairs, and the Everywoman's Center are also aware that the most recent budget reductions are not likely to be the last.

"We were told to expect more cuts," Pereira said. "It's quite a shame."

Wallace shared Pereira's sentiments. The Everywoman's Center, she said, has already begun to factor upcoming losses into its future budgets.

"The picture sounds pretty gloomy," she added. "We're not particularly optimistic."

■ retirement

continued from page 1

It's a critical, honest and stunning statement, all at the same time. He goes on.

"If we hire those sub-par individuals, we will have made a terrible mistake," he says. Of course, he also acknowledges that the lack of adjuncts will be problematic.

Maybe.

Perhaps Osterweil's biggest problem is his inability to plan more than a few months into the future. While the College isn't pulling back from commitments right away (for instance, it will continue to recruit graduate students in the same numbers that it always has), Osterweil acknowledges that he is left to "work on conjecture" when it comes to planning.

Of some assistance is the University administration, which the Dean cites as supportive and helpful.

"I deal with the provost and the chancellor [Charlena Seymour and Marcellete Williams, respectively – ed.] and they've trying the best they can," Osterweil says. "I don't sense any hostility or reticence in trying to deal with them because they are daily trying to deal with tidal waves of bad news."

Despite such negatives description – which makes for great newspaper copy – The Dean is positively focused on his and the University's future.

"Look, I'm trying to focus people on the fact that we'll still be here, and that we go through ups and downs, and that right now, yes, there's a perfect storm of bad news. But we're blessed by a cadre of administrators and faculty who are dedicated to guiding us through this storm," Osterweil said. "We have to ready ourselves for two or three years down the road so we can be ready to do some incredible science."

After speaking with such grandeur though, Osterweil slowed himself down. He is defiantly in his final statement of the interview.

"This hurts," he said. "Students will be unhappy and rightfully so, but we're going to commit to our future. This has all been a tremendous shame, but we're committing ourselves to a better future."

He then had somewhere to be.

Ahoy Matey!
This 98-foot tree washed up on the beaches of Northern California

Gay students hope Connecticut will pass civil unions bill

By Kari Banach
THE INFORMER (U HARTFORD)

(U-WIRE) WEST HARTFORD, Conn. - University of Hartford junior Benjamin Rauch wants to get married someday. So does sophomore Robert Oswald.

But in most states — including Connecticut and New York, Rauch and Oswald's home state — the law would turn the gay men and their partners away.

Currently, civil unions for homosexuals are only legalized in Vermont. But California has laws to protect domestic partners.

And Connecticut looks like it may be following suit.

The Connecticut bill, introduced by the Judiciary Committee of the state legislature, would allow any two persons to enter into marriage, regardless of sex, providing the individuals are not related.

In October 2001, Connecticut legislators decided that marriage would only be recognized by the state between a man and a woman, according to the Connecticut legislature's Web site.

Although this has not yet been changed, students at the University remain hopeful for passage of the new bill, which was brought to the floor in the state legislature's February session and debated heavily this week at a public hearing at the Capitol.

"It's extremely important to have gay marriage," Rauch said. "I personally plan on getting married. I assume by the time that I'm ready it will be legal. We all deserve the same rights."

"In all honesty, I'd like to see the state as well as the country [make it a law]," Oswald said. "Because no matter what your sexual preference is ... if you're in love, you should be able to say, 'Yes, we are married' and 'Yes, we are recognized by the state.'"

Rauch and Oswald are members of Spectrum, the campus organization for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered students. The 25- to 30-member group was one of the organizations protesting Connecticut's anti-gay marriage decision at the Capitol in October, member Collin Howard said.

Oswald, the president of Spectrum, attributed the trouble legislators are having with passing the bill to the "many close-minded people" involved in lawmaking and the lack of young people contributing to the process.

"There are some legislators who are homophobic," Oswald admitted.

Rauch, who celebrated his one-year anniversary with his boyfriend on Feb. 12, said he is optimistic that all states will eventually legally recognize homosexual couples.

"I think it's going to become a law in Connecticut. I think it will [become a law] everywhere," Rauch said. "It's only a matter of time."

"When it's my time ... to get married, I assume it won't be an issue any more," Oswald said. "It's just marriage. It shouldn't matter who [it is] to."

News meetings Tuesdays at 5:30 for all current and intereted writers

ATTENTION
all students
Check your Spring course schedule now, on WISE
www.wise.umassp.edu
You will not receive a schedule confirmation in the mail.
If Undergraduates have questions, contact the Office of the Undergraduate Registrar at 545-0555 or come to 213 Whitmore. If Graduates have questions, contact the Office of the Graduate Registrar at 545-0024 or come to 534 Goodell.
Remember: Last day to drop with "W" (Undergraduate, Stockbridge, Continuing Education) is Wednesday, March 27.

Head for the Mountains!
Enter To Win A FREE day of skiing at Berkshire East
For you and a friend on February 23, 2002
Including:
•FREE Lift Tickets
•FREE Transportation
•FREE Ski Lessons
•FREE Equipment Rental
Coca-Cola
Name:
Address:
Phone:
E-Mail:
Berkshire East Ski Area
Bring or mail entries to the Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center Basement: MDC 113 Campus Center, University of Mass., Amherst MA, 01003

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Government Regulations needed in case

One of the most bizarre and sad cases of both mistrust and neglect came out of Noble, Ga. this week when a coffin with human remains was found behind the home of crematory operator Ray Brent Marsh. Upon further inspection in the area behind his home police found there to be as many as 200 bodies in the area behind his home.

While the why's of the case still baffle investigators the most disturbing part of all is that someone could simply run a business such as this and then not perform the services necessary to dispose of a body. In an effort just to simply make money off of the process, an owner of a crematory could simply throw bodies in the backyard in an effort to save money on repairs to a machine.

What is even worse is that there is no government regulations or supervision over places like crematoriums while there is at such places at funeral parlors, and wing careless neglect of bodies and often even not carrying out the last rights that someone asked and paid for.

While the government has regular inspections of funeral homes to be sure that they are performing their necessary operations and that they maintain sanitary conditions, they have yet to impose any such stipulations upon crematoriums.

This behavior has been going on in Noble, Ga. for years, long enough to make it difficult for investigators to even identify the bodies that they are finding in the woods, due to the fact that Georgia only began tagging corpses in 1994 due to flood reasons. So not only do people in that area of Georgia not know if their deceased family members were properly laid to rest, but now they may never get the chance to allow them the cremation that they originally wished for.

Marsh has been able to improperly dispose of human bodies in the backyard of his home for an estimated 20 years through his family business in an attempt to make some extra money off of the death of others and he only faces charges on the point of 16 counts of felony of theft by deception. Of course, the arguments can be raised that he was entrusted with the human bodies so therefore he did not literally steal them, however he did rob families of their peace of mind.

Whether any charges filed at all ensure that Marsh will face a trial for his crimes, or does nothing to prevent such acts from happening in other places. It also does not give the families of those that should have been cremated any peace of mind whatsoever.

Until the government does regular inspections of crematoriums in the same way that they inspect funeral parlors there is no way to be sure that the last wishes of individuals across the country are actually being carried out.

Information from CNN was used in this story.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian

Ed/Op: we need your love. Send it, along with columns and letters, to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com, or stop by our office at 113 Campus Center basement.

Working for Amherst Towing:

One night on the prowl

SAM WILKINSON

Last week I decided that I needed a new job. As much as I like the Collegian, I thought that it was time for me to try my hand at a new profession. After all, what is college without wanton experimentation?

I thought of all sorts of possible jobs, but none interested me as much as one: tow-truck driver. So I gathered my gumption, dropped off an application, and two days later, I was a full-fledged tower for the good people at Amherst Towing.

In case any of you were interested in working for the good people at Amherst Towing, I thought that I'd describe my first and, as you will read, last night on the job. Here's my journal.

Friday Night:

9:00 P.M. – First call comes in. "Sam, can you get down to the Post Office near Rao's? We have a contract to tow overnight parkers, but hey, it's fine if we get them now. It's the beginning of the evening for most people and they won't be expecting it. Sure, we know that nobody else needs to park there, but we'd rather make the money off the poor people whose cars we are going to legally steal."

So I went down the parking lot and towed nine cars, each at a cost of at least $95 to the individual who owns the car. One person, as I was towing her automobile, asked me why I was doing it. "Uh, town law ma am." I lied.

She didn't have the $95 or a ride to the parking place, so it cost her another $20 the next day.

Sucker.

10:50 P.M. – driving on Main Street in Amherst, I notice a car on the side of the street with its blinkers on. It looks like someone ran into Bueno or Pasta Y Basta or Thai Corner to grab dinner – and left me a car to tow. Even though everything about its stop was perfectly legal, I decide to tow anyway. Like I was taught at Amherst Towing, it's better to steal a legal car than not make any money at all.

11:00 P.M. – somebody just called me "a motherfucker" for towing a car from his, he claimed, "legal" parking space. He also alleged that he paid rent and his driveway was his to park in.

Of course, none of that matters to me, because I work at Amherst Towing. I don't care about things like "common courtesy" or "the law."

11:15 P.M. – excitement! A call comes in from the office. There's a bus that ran out of gas on 116. It was bringing orphans to UMass for a visit. It needs to be towed immediately, with the kids inside. If nobody from the orphanage can get the car out of hock tonight, everybody stays locked in the bus. If it gets too cold, we'll give them some gasoline soaked rags to burn for precious heat.

> "...anything would be better than towing trucks. I might be a jerk, but I'm not that bad."

11:45 P.M. – driving around. I notice that somebody has had the audacity to pay for parking in downtown Amherst. I tow him for being a "good citizen." When it comes to Amherst Towing, it's better to be a total jerk than a nice guy.

12:15 A.M. – hanging out at the office. the UMass student whose car I towed earlier has come in cussing a storm. We had previously called the police to protect our illegal thieving activities because, apparently, the local police are just as corrupt as we are. Anyway, the policeman stands by as he cusses and screams.

To have the audacity to be angry after we only steal your car and demand, with the muscle of the local police, $95 to return it to you makes me sick. We are honest, working people. We are god-fearing. We're just like everybody else in this community.

Except we steal cars.

12:37 A.M. – somebody just flicked me off, spit on my windshield and hit a sign. I'd started towing him while we were waiting at a light on North Pleasant. Hey, he was idling there while the light was red – that's illegal right?

12:58 A.M. – he just broke my window in a rage. He's claiming he did nothing wrong.

What do I care? I work for Amherst Towing.

12:59 A.M. – sue us? Please.

1:00 A.M. – just hanging out in the office figuring out different explanations for the $95 we charge on the first day.

Jimmy says, "$35 for towing, $35 for not damaging your car, $25 for not siphoning all of your gasoline?"

Jen says, "$1.50 for services rendered, $93.50 for a tip."

I offer, "You're getting a discount. We can charge anything we damn well feel like."

I am offered a raise.

2:30 A.M. – the night is slowing down now. Now it's just a matter of towing anybody parked that we feel like. We take special pleasure in towing cars with handicapped plates. They shouldn't be driving anyway.

"Have no soul" – that's the Amherst Towing motto.

3:00 A.M. – I towed a PVTA bus.

It was driving students around. I felt that was inappropriate.

3:33 A.M. – somebody just asked me if I feel good about the work that I do. I realize that I have stolen 33 cars tonight, all of them illegal tows that are defended by the Amherst Police Department because we offer them a tremendous payoff to ignore our illegality. I have towed a bus of orphans, cars in traffic, legally parked cars, busses, and anybody else that I damn well want to.

3:50 A.M. – Thinking about the earlier question, I get a pit in my stomach. I wanted to help people. I fear that I have become one of the bad guys who ruins things for everybody else.

4:00 A.M. – I turned in my resignation. After one night, it dawned on me that tonight's work wasn't satisfying enough. Instead, I think I might deal drugs to children, or fire low-wage employees, or collect debts. Maybe I'll rob the Salvation Army, or con old women, or piller pensions, or be an administrator for Enron.

Frankly, anything would be better than towing trucks. I might be a jerk, but I'm not that bad.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

© Arizona Republic. Dist. by UFS Inc.

Cruel intentions

BILL LARKIN

During last year's presidential election I was free from turmoil by George W. Bush's support (not the manner in which he won the presidency, that is). I believed that both candidates had similar interests long before pursuing rewards. As the ruthless fanatics within the Supreme Court handed the presidency to Bush, I feared for the future of America's electoral process and the potential [illegible]

[illegible] the country of the military industrial military complex to [illegible]. I cannot say, unfortunately, that Al Gore would have acted similar to recent terrorist executive bid. Yes, he was the Democratic darling, America's botched intervention in Somalia and the Kosovo bombing raids but those were not the biggest wars. Then, at least, the administration [illegible] Gore has many faults – I hope he [illegible] a second presidential bid – but he is far less [illegible] than our current president. Instead of slowing the slaughter, Bush continues to approve the deaths of civilians and soldiers overseas. Despite having neutralized much of the Al-Qaeda and Taliban militants, he continues to authorize and encourage terror.

The bombing campaign continues, now focused on those opposed to the new government in Afghanistan. These factions include political and economic activists, non-combatants who disagree with the interim administration's dependence on America. And even more terrifying: Bush has condemned the nuclear powers of Iraq, Iran, and North Korea, calling them an "axis of evil."

> "No modern American leader would initiate a military campaign if it did not benefit the wallets of some of their campaign contributors...Bush has taken this too far."

The root of their malignance? According to the president, the three powers threaten global safety by seeking out weapons of mass destruction. However, none of these powers possess the nuclear means to launch a doomsday attack against the United States. In fact, it is America that is far more threatening to global safety, considering our nuclear program dwarfs those of the "axis of evil," combined.

Bush has joined Ronald Reagan and Joseph McCarthy in a limited group of American leaders who tied their political careers to the visionless pursuit of suppression. Although Colin Powell told Congress that the administration does not plan war with Iran and North Korea, he supported the president's support of further action against Iraq. Remember that America has already strangled Iraq's economy with harsh economic sanctions that have starved millions.

When the "war on terrorism" first started, I heard Washington's war rhetoric and realized the country's goals were far from altruistic. Although I knew the president could accomplish anything - given the public support for war following the terrorist attacks - I couldn't pinpoint why we rushed towards Afghanistan with such zeal. A fourth-world nation, Afghanistan – like other neighboring regions – is little more to the United States than a geopolitical resource. But Washington wanted more than to quell a terrorist group and topple an unfriendly regime.

Perhaps my earlier concerns about the electoral process were more warranted than I thought. No modern American leader would initiate a military campaign if it did not benefit the wallets of some of their campaign contributors. However, Bush has taken this too far. Countless interests would profit from the suppression of the Middle Eastern bloc.

Dropping the Kyoto agreement, drilling in the Alaskan oil reserves, and dumping nuclear waste in Nevada represent but the pawns in this bloody chess match. As the ENRON scandal has illustrated, financial and energy companies nearly dominate Washington politics. What American-based oil producers or commodities traders wouldn't profit if the United States were to overthrow Saddam Hussein, a key figure in OPEC? And although their military is inferior to that of the United States, Iraq is not Afghanistan. An invasion would require great numbers of troops – probably close to 250,000 – and hardware, a fantasy to military subsidiaries such as the Carlyle group, who currently employs the president's father. Lastly, don't forget the president's missile defense plan. By grouping the three politically viable nuclear powers into the "axis of evil," Bush can easily generate further support for the costly defense shield, which will be largely constructed by domestic industries.

Although the year is 2002 and the Second World War is long over, the United States cannot wage war against an "axis of evil" without allies. Fortunately, the President's attempts at equating Iraq, Iran, and North Korea with the fascist regime of 1930-1940's Germany have appeared to fail. France, Germany, China and Russia have pledged to actively oppose war with these nations. Headstrong as it may be, the administration realizes it needs support to complete its plans. According to the New York Times, the Pentagon plans to produce phony public relations information to foreign press agencies in order to lessen hostilities to a new war.

Let's hope the global press treats covers America's actions with fairness and accuracy. If the Pentagon's misinformation campaign succeeds, we may find ourselves in war with Iraq, all for the sake of the wealthy few. Should men die for such a cause? As the knuckles of America's resource empire tightens, squeezing life from foreign lands, more are certain to rebel against what we are to interpret as the "axis of good." To me, an "axis of evil" would be any bloc of nations whose politics ensure the perpetuation of death. Are you sure to which axis we belong?

Bill Larkin is a Collegian columnist.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.20.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Jeph Loeb's Superman

When "major events" occur in comics—whether it is a character's death or a major new direction in the course of books—they seldom resonate beyond comic book fandom.

There is an exception, however, when it involves one character that transcends the medium: Superman. With his death, his subsequent return, and his marriage to Lois Lane, Superman always seems to grab headlines when his status quo shifts.

Writer Jeph Loeb continues this tradition with Superman #178, which ended with a self-satisfied Lex Luthor, saying to himself, "Clark Kent is Superman."

Having written Superman—one of four Superman books—Loeb and company has resurrected Superman from low sales and static stories.

The classic, seemingly eternal rivalry between Superman and Luthor is irrevocably changed. How does a writer get the kind of gig that allows him to continue a modern day myth in such a new way? Mr. Loeb attributes it to two major components: "Work. And Love. I loved the character. I worked a lot."

But to be more specific, he traces the beginnings of his work with Superman back to the very start of his comic book career, when he first partnered with artist Tim Sale, who "helped tremendously, because of his talent... I was working on my first comic, Challengers of the Unknown (COTHU), and was looking for an artist with DC. Barbara Randall-Kesel was my editor and brought me some samples of an artist named Tim Sale. It was wonderful and our friendship began. Tim then went on to do Legends of the Dark Knight #32-34 with James Robinson and that developed into a friendship with the late, great Archie Goodwin. Archie asked Tim to come back to LODK to do another arc. (Tim was the first person to be asked back since the idea of LODK was to use different artists) and Tim asked if it could be me. That became, through a series of mishaps and good fortune, the first Batman Halloween Special (Tears). Eventually, that would lead to doing The Long Halloween and after that, Paul Levitz asked if Tim and I would do something for Superman's 60th birthday. Tim had wanted to move from the dark to the light and that led to doing Superman For All Seasons. Folks seemed to like that and I'm very proud of that book. So, that was the first time I wrote him as the lead character."

But while his path to the writing job might have been sprinkled with "mishaps and good fortune," he also had endorsements from a legendary Superman creator. "Little known fact. I wrote Superman into COTHU #2. Two pages, no biggie. By then, Elliot S. Maggin – who is one of my heroes – was our editor. He had written Superman for 10 years and he sent me back the script with a note (that I still have) that basically said, 10 years from now people will go back and look at this issue and see you nailed the character. I was totally blown away and, of course, never thought I'd actually get to write the character again. Shows what I know!"

Many readers agreed with Maggin. Superman For All Seasons – a story that chronicled Superman's shaky, earlier years – was received with tremendous enthusiasm among critics and fans alike. But what was it about Loeb's rendition that clicked with Superman fans? Besides the strong characterization he brings to his work, Mr. Loeb tries to synthesize many of the incarnations of Superman over the past 60 years. "I try and take a bit from everywhere. [From] Maggin, of course. But, I can hear the voices of [Superman creators] Joe Shuster and Jerry Siegel; the old radio show I love; the George Reeves Adventures of Superman TV show; the animated series and probably the biggest influences are the first two Superman movies. Dick Donner is the greatest. And today, I have to say, the guts and gals on Smallville are doing an amazing job that I hear as well."

So it was through hard work, love for the character, and respect for his long legacy that got Mr. Loeb his job on Superman. But more than just nodding to the past, he is also moving into the future with the other three writers who write other Superman titles: Joe Kelly (Action Comics), Joe Casey (Adventures of Superman), and Mark Schultz (Man of Steel). The combined effort of these writers has given Superman's books a higher profile in the industry by keeping readers on the edge of their seats with some long-term changes to the Superman mythos. For instance, Lex Luthor was elected President of the United States last year and, as mentioned before, just became privy to a world-shattering secret. How does it feel to take part in shaping these characters for a new generation?

"It's all part of a dream and I'll keep my pillow, thank you very much! We all (it's a team that is led by Superman Group Editor Eddie Berganza) just try and tell stories to the best of our abilities. Folks seem to like them. That's very, very rewarding."

One thing that has kept readers coming back for more is the intricate set of subplots and mysteries that have readers guessing and coming back for more. A cliffhanger like the one at the end of Superman #178 is a prime example. "Luthor became President and one of the spoils of that would be uncovering The Secret. Now, what remains to be seen is what he does with it."

Luthor hasn't been the only one in the past year or two to discover The Secret. Superboy, Steel, and the entire Justice League recently found out. Is Superman's secret identity the worst kept secret?

"We think it is a natural outgrowth of what has happened to the character. Again, without giving it too much build up, all of these things are going to play into what eventually happens. A secret once it is discovered can be a very, very dangerous thing for everyone involved and as you've pointed out – there are a number of folks who... well, are in harm's way."

Superman's vulnerability doesn't only come in the form of Luthor and the information he holds. He has also admitted that he needs to sort things out in recent months and has begun seeing a therapist. This past summer a storyline called Our Worlds At War threw the Man of Steel into a middle of a war situation where he saw horrible things and was forced to make hard decisions. Consequently, he now sees a therapist that was introduced in Superman #176.

"My wife is a therapist and I believe that it can never hurt to share your innermost feelings in a professional environment. If one reader gets from the story that being in therapy or seeking any kind of help is not a bad thing; on the contrary it is the stuff of heroes, then we've done our job."

Superman also made cosmetic changes, putting black into his costume for the purposes of mourning was published just before the events of Sept. 11. Did Superman's change have added significance as a result of that tragic day?

"9-11 is... there really aren't words. And to put the significance of the costume change into that 'world' is to trivialize the importance of what happened that day. However, the costume change was intended to memorialize the fallen from OWAW and if it has more resonance because of 9/11 that is because the human condition makes it so. But, no, the two are not and never will be interrelated directly."

Mr. Loeb isn't the only one writing the adventures of Clark Kent. WB just scored a success with Smallville, which chronicles Clark's years in high school. Many Superman fans wonder if this will create a crossover effect, booking fans of the show to the comic. "We share the myth. We work on the legend. If one helps the other – fabulous. Their work is inspired and ours is the best we can do and we're all big fans of each other."

But Superman is not the only myth currently on Loeb's plate! He is also getting a chance to work on another blue-and-red icon from the competition, Spider-Man: Blue is a mini-series chronicling Peter Parker's earlier adventures, which is to be drawn by long-time collaborator Tim Sale. "Tim has great affection for the [Amazing Spider-Man] stories in the early days of John Romita, Sr. run on the book which included, among everything else, the first death of the Green Goblin and the introduction of Mary Jane Watson. We're having fun and hopefully it shows on the page."

But his long-term commitment is to the Last Son of Krypton. Superman fans can expect to see many surprises in the coming year, with many long-standing subplots being wrapped up. "In March, Clark and Lois take a trip to Transylvannia and meet a certain Count who is more than any of them imagine. In April, Ed McGuinness has been wanting to tell a story where Bizarro and Superman switch brains – we had a ball – and it turned out to be a very interesting look into how Bizarro works and thinks (or doesn't think as the case may be). Then in May/June, the deal Lois made with Luthor back in #151 comes to a head. It's a two-part story called 'The Secret' and I think folks will be very surprised by the outcome. What else? More Zod! You got it. The truth about Krypton! This year. Who killed Steel? You'll find out. And Joe Casey's upcoming Crime Syndicate [from the Morrison and Quitely's JLA: Earth-2] rocks the house." Looks to be an exciting year!

Chris Kenny is a Collegian columnist.

Gutter Culture with Christopher Scott Kenny

The Chemical Brothers... a picture says a thousand words, so that's it for the photo cutline.

EXIT PLANET EARTH

By Michael Delano
COLLEGIAN STAFF

THE CHEMICAL BROTHERS
Come With Us
Astralwerks

No one ever accused the inventors of 'big-beat' electronica of subtlety. So on the beginning of this, their fourth full-length, they forgo all means of poker faces and just slam their cards right down on the table. Jittery violins create the desired mood of ominous foreboding before ceding some space to a throbbing bass, all of which is just the red carpet for a commanding voice from the cosmos that bellows "come with us...and leave your world behind!" There's obviously no turning back now, so as a final kick to subtlety's groin the voice announces "they're coming back," as the general consensus on the Bros' last album Surrender was that it was a departure rather than a new arrival. Culminating with a drum loop worthy of comparison to Oasis' 'Fuckin' In The Bushes" and a bass drop that's the equivalent of planets colliding, your eyes juuuust might roll back in bliss before track 1 has even reached the two-minute mark.

Fatboy Slim talks about being halfway between the gutter and the stars, but the Bros walk it, as the mid-section of Come With Us finds spacey sound waves washing over a Noreaga "Superthug" style chant of "what, what, what?" Their beats are still block rockin', and the booty shakin' is not just in the rearview, either, as a funky, danceable bass loop marks the song's final surprise.

You may not get to track 2 for a while, depending on how many times your quivering hand reaches for the repeat button after Come With Us, but when you do it's almost a breather comparatively. "It Began In Afrika" is just fine, with drums aplenty and cute ferocious cat noises, but feels a bit by the books amongst the other standouts. For continuity's purposes, however, it bleeds nicely into "Galaxy Bounce," which in its current context sounds much livelier than it did on last summer's Tomb Raider soundtrack. If you're not dancing by now, ignore the invitation of the album's title, as The Chemical Brothers don't want you to come with them anymore.

The album's other seamless track2track connection is the highlight of the second half. "The State We're In," the first of two vocal collaborations, uses Beth Orton's soothing lull to maximize the slow-burn pace of the song. It's the ideal lazy summer night by the lake sound (fireflies optional), and the Bros even bust out that crazy digital waterdrip effect that the Deftones used on "Digital Bath." It doesn't stay grounded for long though...

Remember that scene in The Insider when Jeff Wigand is sitting in an office thinking how his life went down the toilet and the room around him morphs into his memory of playing outside in the yard with his daughter? It's the same here; you're sitting on a park bench with your arm around Beth Orton, watching the stars' reflections in the water, and bam! You're projected immediately to "Denmark," where shaking one's azz is not an option, and dancing at 4 a.m. on the astral plane.

The other collabo on Come With Us, "The Test" with Richard Ashcroft, is likewise excellent, but c'mon, this kinda good stuff ain't a test for the Bros! Like Handsome Dick Manitoba would say, it's just a hobby for them. A hobby!

The pure force of Come With Us defiantly shakes any contextual attempts to discuss the album from the outside in, as far as the state of techno 2002 or any such blab. It demands that you dive in and try to imagine things from the inside-out, as the musical landscapes forged – credited or not – after such an assured statement will be felt in the electrified air for awhile.

Britney's Crossroads take her to Hollywood

By Johnny Donaldson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CROSSROADS
Directed by Tamra Davis
Starring Britney Spears, Taryn Manning and Zoe Saldana
Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

It was only a matter of time before Britney Spears made a movie. It's not because so many musicians have tried their hands at acting that it just had to be Spears' turn (especially with the glut of recent crossovers). It's that movies always seemed to be a natural extension of the Britney empire. Everything about Spears – the music, the dancing, the lascivious madonna/whore image – has been packaged and processed with the corporate precision of maximum mass consumption appeal. Ever since the naughty schoolgirl video for "...Baby One More Time," Spears has become as much of a commodity as Disney, with Hollywood just another cog in the wheel. But she has always seemed to be in on the joke. Spears is a calculated living toy and knows it. She's a winking contradiction: a puppet who pulls her own strings.

COURTESY BRIAN WEISMAN

Three young-ish girls take the country by storm – shrieking earsplitting renditions of "I Love Rock-and-Roll" and "Bye Bye Bye." (As if the original 'NSync version wasn't earsplitting enough.)

Directed with primetime television efficiency by Tamra Davis, Crossroads is a superficial and fluffy Cosmo-Girl fantasy, the kid sister to female bonding flicks like Boys on the Side. Spears stars as Lucy, the valedictorian of her small town Georgia high school, who tentatively renews an extinguished relationship with her childhood friends. Kit (Zoe Saldana) is the self-centered, queen of popularity fashion plate engaged to be married and Mimi (Taryn Manning) is the self-described trailer trash who's pregnant and unwed. The three agree to road trip together just as an easy way to pursue separate goals: Lucy wants to meet the mother who abandoned her and her overprotective father (Dan Aykroid in a thankless role) at age three; Kit wants to visit her fiancé who's suddenly vague and evasive; Mimi wants to wade into the Pacific Ocean and enter a record company's talent contest. Driving them is Ben (Anson Mount), a mysterious musician Mimi kinda knows, who's rumored to have been in jail for murder. Along the way there are pit stops for heart-wrenching revelations, a few songs and much adorable, girlish mugging.

Crossroads is hardly a good movie, but it's a harmless, and sometimes even enjoyable lightweight drama. The movie is certainly a couple of notches above the histrionic, daytime TV desperation of Mariah Carey's Glitter or the flat indifference of pretty much any Madonna movie. It's also not as good as Mandy Moore's A Walk to Remember, a movie so sweet and sincere and romantic that one has to let down critical defenses.

There are moments of head scratching stupidity. Lucy reads a poem to Ben that turns out to be the

Turn to CROSSROADS, page 9

Troopers very nearly super

by D. Lewis

SUPER TROOPERS
Lyle Lovett and Kevin Heffernan and Paul Soter
Directed by Jay Chandrasekar
Starring Jay Chandrasekar, Steve Lemme, Erik Stolhanske, Kevin Heffernan, Paul Soter, Brian Cox, Marisa Coughlan and Daniel Von Bargen

[illegible] the first major film release from [illegible] Broken Lizard, is the [illegible] of the Police

[illegible] the surprisingly [illegible] some respect back [illegible] wouldn't think a [illegible] sound of it, where [illegible] how many times [illegible] routine pull-over, [illegible] a trucker, out [illegible] the [illegible] and acting [illegible] Broken Lizard group originally called Shallow Hal, have come the closest in recent years. Even so, many of their jokes are old-hat, have an anticipated gross-out level, and a predictable aura to the movie as a whole. One of the biggest treats about Super Troopers was that I had absolutely no expectations going into it, save being amused. I was given a no-name cast from a comedy troupe I had never heard of before. I figured that the laughable points would have been unveiled in the film's preview, clearly jaded from painfully redundant comedies in the past.

Is it possible that the coming-attraction didn't ruin all the good jokes in the film? Super Troopers fortunately sidestepped the pitfall of 99.9% of all other movies and saved many of its best moments for the actual ticket-buying audience to the film. This is partly due to the fact that it's rated R for a reason: many of the funniest moments contain frank sexual content, profane language, a good gross-out scene or two (such as the one where an obese trooper is deloused with sugar), or a combination of all three. When someone steals a Porsche in the film, the criminal is not arrested and tried by jury, but taken to the home of the trooper and made part of an orgy.

It's not possible for every joke to tickle the audience, though, and there were some awkward silences in the theatre where my neighbor turned to me and asked if that was supposed to get a laugh. A trooper pulls a trucker over and wants to handle it seriously for once, but his partner follows him and repeats everything he says. On paper, it probably sounded a lot better than how it comes off on the screen. It's perhaps the most awkward five minutes of the movie, but it's soon forgotten when, a scene later, the two are locked in the back of the truck and one of them utters the deadpan one-liner "desperation is a stinky cologne."

Depending upon the success of Super Troopers both financially, or probably more so in this case, critically among its twenty-something target audience, film critic Roger Ebert says that FOX is eyeing giving The Broken Lizard a television series in the near future. If that's the case, they would be almost equivalent to an American-made Monty Python, a tough standard to live up to, but at the same time warmly welcomed when comedy troupe variety shows are practically nonexistent anymore (even "Saturday Night Live" is getting stale). If it's your desire to, you can find many flaws in Super Troopers, as well as being turned off by some of its outrageous subject matter. But why knock a movie when it's such a guilty pleasure?

Smashmouth gets "moshing" reviews from our writer.

Aural canals remain pleased

SMASH MOUTH
Smash Mouth
Interscope

The boys of Smash Mouth, like their spiritual brothers in Sugar Ray, have come to the realization that they are no fit for ska-punk and/or rap-rock, but were made to play bopps, summers guitar pop nuggets. The songs that made them famous – "Walking on the Sun" for Smash Mouth, "Fly" for Sugar Ray – were not examples of selling out for a broader audience, but of discovering that they best play California-breezy pop songs that give the listener an oxygenated high. On their third album, Smash Mouth has entirely embraced the style, and has spun an album as light, as tart, and as sweet as lemon meringue.

Lead singer Steve Harwell dedicated the record to his late son Pre-fey Scott, who died of leukemia at six months. There are times when the album gets serious to reflect the tragedy (notably in the latter stretches) but it mostly keeps with the sunny, fee-good vibe. "Pacific Coast Party" begins with a sample of a '70s cop show theme (think "CHiPs") and takes off with a swirling disco beat. "Holiday in my Head", "She Turns Me On" and "Force Field" recall the fizzy airiness of previous Smash Mouth hits like "All Star." The band plays with bouncing drums, bass that is as crunchy but as light as Rice Krispies, and pogoing guitars, and then they layer on organs, harmonicas ad trombones. Ska, reggae and surf are subtly weaved in, while Harwell's gravel-inflected voice delivered in an easygoing good humor keeps the song from feeling like cotton candy. The only sour spot is the inclusion of "I'm A Believer," off the Shrek soundtrack. A cover of a Monkees tune, it retains fidelity to its source, while adapting to Smash Mouth's style. It catchy and hummable, but lacks theft life. Too many spins, and you won't want to hear it again anytime soon.

Smash Mouth hasn't put out that great, influential album. They haven't made an arty achievement, with a scope that vanquishes lesser albums. What they make are fun, shiny baubles that please the aural canals. Their album is like eating a tasty cake: sometimes it's better than a full meal.

Johnny Donaldson

From airfare to your hotel, parties and activities, these reliable tour operators will get you there

Sun Splash Tours
1.800.426.7710
www.sunsplashtours.com

Student Travel Services
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

FSP National CO-ED Honors Fraternity
Scholarship Fellowship Leadership
Informational Nights February 19 and 21 at 8pm in the Student Union Commonwealth Room.
Minimum GPA of 3.2 required.
Questions? Email: aileen_dh@hotmail.com

LOSING IT:
False Hope and Fat Profits in the Diet Industry
An evening with author Laura Fraser
A reformed dieter and ex-bulimic, LAURA FRASER talks about her journey from battling an eating disorder and, after recovering, taking on the American diet industry in an undercover investigation. She'll talk about the history of America's obsession with slenderness, and all the false hopes, scams and medical disasters that women have endured in order to attain an impossible ideal. She'll take on the paradox of why Americans are heavier than any other people, and yet diet the most, and she'll talk about some practical changes.
Monday February 25
7:30 to 9:00 pm
Campus Center Room 174-176
A FREE TALK sponsored by University Health Services, Everywoman's Center and Five College Inc.

THE MONKEY BAR
INTERNATIONAL NIGHT
Featuring:
EVERY WEDNESDAY
DJ Big Phil
SPINNING REGGAE AND HIP HOP
Midnight Snacks
Ski Pass Giveaways
Weekly Drink Specials:
Rum & Coke $2.50
Sex on the Beach $3.00
Bud + BudLight Pitchers $5.00

Doughty not skittish live onstage

COURTESY WARNER BROS

Mike Doughty doesn't want to walk around circles, walk around in circles, walk around in circles.

By Rachel LeBlanc
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

MIKE DOUGHTY
Iron Horse
February 13

The Knitting Factory
New York, NY
February 14

Mike Doughty kicked off his latest tour in Northampton, bringing his often playful and frequently poignant acoustic set to the Iron Horse Music Hall. Doughty's repertoire included songs from his brilliantly understated 2000 solo debut Skittish as well as music written with his former band Soul Coughing. While not yet a famous "rock star" this own fans barely recognize him when he walks by the crowd waiting outside the door). Doughty possesses more stage presence than the majority of the stars taking up space on MTV, the channel Doughty delights in ridiculing.

Doughty is a talented musician with a lot to say, as evidenced by the intensely personal nostalgia found in Skittish, an album that makes you want to give him a hug then set him up with your best friend. (Sample lyric from "Rising Sun:" "I swear I'd like to drink the fuel straight from your lighter. I resent the way you make me like myself"). Doughty played several songs from this album, the best of which was a plaintively sweet version of "Real Love," by Mary J. Blige.

However, his self-admitted nervousness showed in these newer songs, with one having to be restarted and another containing the improvised line "Hey I forgot the lyrics here...." He also debuted four brand new songs, including a new gem, "Sunken Eyed Girl," about the thoughts Doughty entertains of saving a broken coffee shop waitress. Unfortunately, the song was sandwiched between two lackluster counterparts. "Madeline and Nine" got old about as quickly as it began, and "The Truth is Marching On" certainly lived up to its description as "the fucking sappiest thing I ever wrote." "Lisa Ling and Lucy Liu" had potential, but ended up proving to not be particularly good.

More confident with his older, more familiar material, Doughty played his Soul Coughing songs with the same intensity and precision as could be expected from a genuine talent like himself. "Softserve" was especially good, as was the twangy "St. Louise is Listening." "Circles" from Soul Coughing's final album El Oso seems to be a favorite of Doughty, as he tends to tweak lyrics and delivery, substituting lines from pop culture to the amusement of the crowd. Most of the people at the show were hardcore Soul Coughing fans, singing along to every word with a near reverence for the music.

"Okay, now this is where I leave the stage for two minutes and come back." Doughty's encore was only two songs, the first of which was a funny cover of an obscure New York band, called "Drunk on the Train to Chicago." He then took a moment to remind us of what's wrong with our generation. "In my day, people from 'Road Rules' did not make out with people from the 'Real World'!" Doughty also noted his confusion at the pervasiveness of the word pimp."

His finale, as always, was "Janine," barely reminiscent of the quiet simplicity of the ending track of Soul Coughing's 1994 debut Ruby Vroom. Halfway through, Doughty stopped singing to say "I have a revolutionary new idea. Why don't we all have a big jerky sing-along?" He demanded that everyone sing "like big obnoxious jerks! Come on, sing like Axl Rose!" And so the evening ended with Mike Doughty leading a drunken crowd in a loudly ironic rendition of one of Soul Coughing's near lullabies.

Back home for his New York City Valentine's Day performance the next night, Doughty seemed much more comfortable being his irreverently funny self. "Ya know what?" he asked the tiny Knitting Factory crowd. "Girls like robots. Go up to the next girl you want to pick up, and just say 'Do you like robots?' Works every time." In between such valuable dating advice as this, and self-deprecating cracks at his own single status, Doughty flawlessly played several of his best songs. "True Dreams of Wichita" was beautifully performed, as were several other Soul Coughing songs, including "Softserve" and "Maybe I'll Come Down." Doughty's new music was noticeably improved from the night before, due either to more practice or less nerves. He wisely omitted the disappointing "Lisa Ling and Lucy Liu." However, "Sunken Eyed Girl" was again gorgeous in its emotional delivery.

Strange comments yelled by the audience were unfalteringly answered with a facetiously humorous "Right on." Robots were a trend for most of the night, as were repeated requests for the song "Fire Truck." "I don't think you're ready for Fire Truck," Doughty said, of the ten second song written by a four year old. Later, he launched into it, hollering "Fire truck! Fire truck! Fire truck!" followed by a high ending note. The audience was ecstatic.

The New York show ended in the same way as the previous night, with the same "loud jerky sing-along" to "Janine." While both were amazing performances, the New York show was slightly better as Doughty was able to shake off his nerves a bit more.

Any performance by Mike Doughty is always quite entertaining and different from what is normally expected from a solo acoustic guitarist. The next time he comes around, which tends to be somewhat frequently, check him out. There's something for everyone in a Mike Doughty show, even if you're not the biggest Soul Coughing fan. You might just pick up some dating advice.

■ crossroads

continued from page 7

Awwww, Anson Mount is so dreamy.

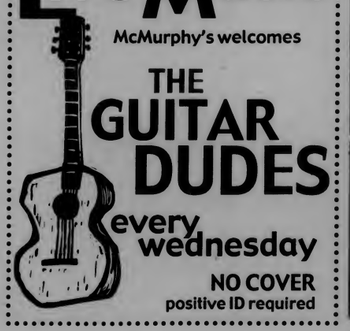
lyrics for Spears' ballad "I'm Not A Girl, Not Yet A Woman" (So Ben can later compose music for the song). The moment drew some bad laughs from the audience. The meeting between Lucy and her mother lacks the expected melodramatic payoff, and comes off as anticlimactic. The tragic reason for Mimi's pregnancy (the was date raped) is not given the weight it deserves; its quickly forgotten until a head-smacking plot twist that shows it really is a small world, especially in movies. The girls raise money for a major car repair at a backwoods Louisiana bayou that just may be the most prosperous backwoods Louisiana bayou ever (it also gives Spears a chance to warble her weak cover of Joan Jett's "I Love Rock and Roll"). There's also the niggling fact that the girls agree to ride with Ben, even though they think he's a killer. Oh, wait, I get it – he's not just an enigmatic hunk, he's a decent, sensitive enigmatic hunk.

The movie gives Spears plenty of chances to sing, but the question is: can she act? And the answer is: reasonably well. Unlike, say Carey or Madonna, who mistake blank-faced placidity for acting (there's a fine line between subtle and somnolent), Spears can display a range of human emotion on her face. What she can't do, exactly, is get to the emotional core of her character. She's able to convey simple and complex emotions, but she can't show us why without relying on the writing as a crutch. This is empty performance class acting, but it's still skillful enough to make one think she may have a career in movies, as long as she works at improvement.

The big talking point of Crossroads is the fact that Lucy has sex with Ben, despite Spears' constant public assertion of her virginity (wake up, people – she's acting). But Crossroads is as virtuous as any movie starring a certified Female Role Model should be. Alcohol and drinking are bad, friends are forever, and Lucy only loses her virginity to the guy she loves, not the high school boyfriend pressuring her to do it. Spears and Mount have an easy chemistry together, but the girls don't strike any sparks with each other. There's no sense of undying friendship. Of the actresses, Manning is best at displaying emotional wounded-ness and vulnerability.

People will hate Crossroads, I know, and I can't honestly think of anyone who isn't a 10-year-old girl will truly love it. But Crossroads is a pleasant, diverting and mollentisive trifle that didn't exactly bore me over the course of its 94 minutes.

Kim Cattrall, from HBO's "Sex in the City" plays Brit's mom. She's still a woman, not yet an old hag



COURTESY SIRE RECS

Three Pimps
The Sneaker Pimps' new album Bloodsport was released yesterday. C'mon, support your Pimps.

Write for Arts. Come down to the Collegian offices and ask for Mike, Julie or Shauna.

I'm not a girl, not yet a woman...
-Britney Spears

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Rte. 9 Hadley, MA 584-2431
FRIDAY 2/15-THURSDAY 2/21/2002
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND • REAL SEATS • FOOD • DRINKS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Hart's War(R) 12:50 4:45 7:45 10:40*
John Q(PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
Collateral Damage(R) 12:40 4:30 7:40 10:20*
Big Fat Liar(PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:10 9:30*
Super Troopers(R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15*
Crocodile(PG13) 12:00 2:15 4:35 7:05 9:45*
Return to Neverland(G) 12:35 2:30 4:40 7:15 9:20*
I Am Sam(PG13) 12:30 4:15 10:25
The Count Of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:35 7:00 10:00
Black Hawk Down(R) 12:05 3:30 7:30 10:25
The Royal Tenenbaums(R) 12:20 7:50
A Beautiful Mind(PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
Lord Of the Rings(PG13) 3:45 7:30*
Senior Movie - 2/21/02 Collateral Damage
Senior Movie - 2/7/02 I Am Sam- doors open at 12:45pm
*no passes/supersavers
Tickets & Info cinemark.com

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT IN THE CENTER OF TOWN•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
253-7279
www.amherstapartmentsrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2002

YOU COULD WIN A WEEK IN CANCUN
FROM Coca-Cola & Club Med
Grand Prize: Club Med Trip for Two
First Prize: Coca-Cola CD Players (1 per campus)
Visit a participating campus retail outlet for Entry Forms and Official Rules.

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups

Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Sigma Delta Tau would like to welcome their newest member Jennifer Chasen. Lynn Ditaranto, Meredith Hochman, Andrea Klein, Traci Popko, Kai Rawelson. Congratulations!

FAST CHANCE TO GO ON DOMESTIC EXCHANGE FOR FALL 02 AND SPRING 03!!! EXPLORE NEW PLACES!!!! INFORMATION SESSIONS WEDNESDAYS AND THURSDAYS 5:00-5:45 THROUGH FEBRUARY 21 IN 914 GOODELL OR CALL 545-5351. FINAL APPLICATION DEADLINE MARCH 1.

Contact your Avon Representative at Emass. Call 883-1613 or e-mail [illegible]

APARTMENT FOR SALE

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1992 Mazda Protégé 4dr/Lx Gray 174k, excellent condition $1400.00 533-3252 Guzmanoes.umass.edu

1994 Acura Integra Auto, AC, CD, Am/Fm cassette, Power Steering Windows, Moon roof, single owner, Excellent condition $5500.00 O/B/O 546-6445.

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good, $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

EARN $1000 FOR YOUR GROUP. Work on campus to raise money for your student group or organization. Make your own schedule and earn great money. Please call 1-888-923-3238 EXT. 115.

More than a summer camp, an experience of a lifetime. Trail's End Camp (Beach Lake, PA) –Baseball, Basketball, Golf, Volleyball, Mountain Biking, Tennis, Ropes Course, Hockey, Arts & Crafts (Woodworking, Photography, Fine Arts, Video/Film), Waterfront (Waterskiing, Boat Drive, Canoe, Sailing, Kayaking), Pool Instructors and Male General Counselors. TOP SALARIES AND BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! www.trailsendcamp.com or 800-408-1404

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid-May to Mid July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruiseareers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 866-291-1884 ext. 485.

Someone to watch vending booth $8.00 per hr. Tues. & Thurs. 11:00-12:15, Fri. 11:00-12:15 Call Mike 546-1326.

Childcare needed for 2 children in our Amherst Home Mon. 3:15-5:15 Wed. 1:30-5:30 $8.00 an hr 253-5197.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE; DJ Fooze and SYB productions are now booking for spring semester, call 537-8527.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Mountain Bike www.bikes.com 99 Fusion 19" exc. cond. $400 413-374-0653.

Guitar Cort Acoustic/ electric with Fishman preamp and case. Mint cond. $450 413-374-0653.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons with retired Pro, Djata Bumpus. In Amherst call 413-731-1450.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 days $279! Includes meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, night life! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Tickets! Get a FREE MTV audience tickets to select shows when you book your Spring Break though StudentCity.com! Go to MTV.com or call StudentCity.com at 1-800-293-1443 for details! Tours and tickets are limited.

TRAVEL

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Montreal Maddness Spring Weekends $99 Quad. Occupancy price includes round trip luxury motor coach 3 days, 2 nights deluxe hotel directly downtown, breakfast, dinner, free nightclub admissions, dome + more. Departs March 15-17, April 19-21, other weekends available. $10 security fee. Call Global Express Tours (781) 979-0076.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sunscoastvacations.com

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

Want to sell your old computer!!!!!

Need a Roommate!!!!!!

Come down to 113 Campus Center or call 545-3500

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network

2	CBS/3
3	NESN
4	Fox Sport NE
5	PBS/57
6	HSCN Movie Channel
7	WB/22
8	HSCN Movie Channel
9	TV Guide Channel
10	FOX/61
11	ABC/40
12	NBC/22
13	International Channel
14	UMATV
15	HSCN Info Channel
16	ESPN
17	ESPN 2
18	LIVE/19
19	ESPN Classic
20	Travel-n-Leisure
21	CNN
22	CNN HL
23	Weather Channel
24	Learning Channel
25	History Channel
26	A & E
27	Discovery Health
28	Food Network
29	NASA
30	Home & Garden TV
31	Travel Channel
32	Lifetime
33	CNBC
34	Tech TV
35	BET
36	UPN/38
37	USA
38	TNN
39	MTV
40	CMT
41	VH-1
42	TNT
43	TBS
44	E! Entertainment
45	Sci-Fi Channel
46	Court TV
47	Nick at Nite
48	Comedy Central
49	Cartoon Network
50	Game Show Network
51	TV Land
52	FOX Family
53	Univision
54	Galavision
55	Telemundo
56	College TV Network
57	C-SPAN
58	C-SPAN2
59	Bloomberg Television

WEDNESDAY EVENING C - Campus FEBRUARY 20, 2002

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH 2	12	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		G. Auriemma	College Basketball (Providence at Connecticut) (Live)				UCONN	American Family (In Stereo)		John Lennon in NYC
WFSB 3	3	News		CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		★★★ "Breakdown" (1997, Suspense) Kurt Russell (In Stereo)			News	Late Show
WBZ 4	4	News		CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		★★★ "Breakdown" (1997, Suspense) Kurt Russell (In Stereo)			News	Late Show
WCVB 5	5	News		ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	My Wife Kids	According-Jim	Drew Carey	Whose Line?	20/20 Downtown	News	Nightline
WLVI 6	6			Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)	Glory Days (N) (In Stereo)	News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH 7	7		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)					News
WTXX	8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Glory Days (N) (In Stereo)	News		Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT	9		News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)						News
WTIC 8	11	Simpsons		Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	That '80s	Grounded-Life	Bernie Mac	Titus (N)	News	Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP 9	22	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)						News
WGBY 10	6	World News		Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		American Family (In Stereo)		Old Settler (In Stereo)		Cemetery	Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB 40	40	News		ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	My Wife Kids	According-Jim	Drew Carey	Whose Line?	20/20 Downtown	News	Nightline
WSBK 38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News		Frasier	Enterprise "Breaking the Ice"		Enterprise "Fortunate Son"	Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel	Shipmates
WTBS 23		Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		★ "Wild Wild West" (1999, Western) Will Smith, Kevin Kline				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E 20		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Anybody"		Biography: Dolly Sings!		American Justice		City Confidential		Law & Order "Sanctuary"
CNN 20	21	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point		Larry King Live		Newsnight		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM 15	16	Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show	Geeks	★★ "Cheech & Chong's Next Movie" (1980) Cheech Marin				South Park	Insominac	Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC 23		Meet the Weasels		Beavers: Dam It All		Secrets of the U.S. Mint		Making of a Fed (N)				CIA: Escape From Terror	Justice Files
ESPN 21		Sportscenter			Zina Garrison	College Basketball Xavier at Temple (Live)						Black Star Rises: Alan Page	Sportscenter
LIFE 22		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)	"Before He Wakes" (1998, Drama) Jaclyn Smith					Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV 31		Who Knows?	Sports Illustrated		Making-Video	Music Videos (In Stereo)			Cribs		Diary	Dismissed	Kidsapped
NICK 26		Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Sponge b	Told by Ginger	Kids-Darndest	Kids-Darndest	Cheers	Cheers	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI 35		Star Trek: Turnabout Intruder		Earth: Final Conflict "Payback"		Outer Limits "Judgment Day"		★★ "Steel Dawn" (1987, Science Fiction) Patrick Swayze				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC 42	45	Smart Weapons		World of Crime Pursuits		Cities on the Sea		Junkyard Wars "Cat-Jousting"		Understanding (N)		Cities on the Sea
TNT 30		NYPD Blue "A Rose in Bloom"		Pretender "The Paper Chase"		NBA Basketball Charlotte Hornets at Toronto Raptors (Live)					Inside NBA	★★ "The Mighty Quinn" (1989)
USA 32			Walker, Texas Ranger	JAG "Dear Mom" (In Stereo)		★★½ "Black Mass" (1996, Action) Jet Li, Primevera (In Stereo)				Combat Missions (In Stereo)		Living Single	Martin
HBO 33		(4:30)		★½ "Sweet November" (2001, Romance) Keanu Reeves (In Stereo) PG-13				Six Feet Under "The Trip"		Six Feet Under "A Private Life"		Oz (In Stereo)
MAX 43		(4:30)		★★½ "The Perfect Weapon" (1991, Drama) 'R'		★ "Valentina" (2001, Horror) David Boreanaz 'R'			Doppelganger	★★★ "Men of Honor" (2000, Drama) Robert De Niro 'R'
SHOW 46		Filmmaker		★ "Supernova" (2000) James Spader PG-13		"Keep the Faith, Baby" (2002, Drama) Harry Lennix						Soul Food "The Aftermath"	Resurrection "Article 39" 'R'

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Monty By Jim Meddick

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"That's abominable. Like snowman even."

-Mike Kulak

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 47 LOW: 37	HIGH: 44 LOW: 27	HIGH: 43 LOW: 31

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Don't look too far back today, or you'll find yourself getting lost in a fog of memories that do not directly relate to your present life. Remember when that boy who sat behind you in your third grade class pulled your hair? Let it go!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Love is in the air – but very likely not in your heart! Someone may have a hard time getting you to respond in an amorous fashion today. But that's okay, because you have someone else in mind.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Someone in your inner circle may object to your methods or motives quite suddenly today. Does this promise that a major rift is on its way? Just throw him off the island. Survivor style.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – The closer you are to home today the stronger and more confident you will feel. If you find yourself far away, it's a good day for a phone call. Remember to call 1-800-collect!!!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You will discover today that your interests are similar to the interests of someone you've been avoiding. The fact is, you may get along well! But you probably won't because you have hangover paranoia and won't get along with anyone today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Your warm and sensitive side is likely to be revealed today through a chain of unusual and unsuspected circumstances. It's because you are obligated to be nice to the kid whose eyebrows you shaved off this weekend when he passed out drunk.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 21) – Despite what you have been saying all week long, luck is indeed a factor today. You'll have a brush with destiny before the day is out. Don't fear the reaper, man. Don't fear the reaper.

LIBRA (Sept. 22-Oct. 22) – Someone is likely to surprise you today by being right there for you, supplying your wants and needs in abundance. Take advantage of this!!!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You'll find yourself in a new, if not unexpected, situation today which requires you to solve routine problems in highly imaginative, creative way. That dream you had about forgetting to put your pants on and going to class is really a way of telling you not to forget to wear pants to class.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You're being a little too possessive today. Is it because you cannot admit that your emotions are getting the better of you? Yes it is. You really need to leave that stuffed animal at home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Someone may be trying to keep you emotionally off-center today in order to further his or her own personal agenda. Keeps your wits about you and don't listen to that crazy guy in your biology class.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Both people and situations are likely to prove far more forgiving than you may expect. You won't have to be as defensive as you have been recently. But beware of that sketchy guy on your floor.

Frosh By Megan Orosz

THE HARP IRISH PUB
TONIGHT
COME PARTY at THE HARP
in North Amherst
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900

ACROSS
1 Not dry
5 Not even one
10 Bombay attire
14 State firmly
15 Dote on
16 Scurries
17 Company emblem
18 Walked to and fro
19 Dutch cheese
20 Silly
22 Bargainers
24 Dueling powder
27 — over, capsize
28 Tree-dwelling
32 Brindled cat
36 Flying formation
37 Goes on a voyage
39 Weighing device
40 Altar end
42 Sketches
44 Bang
45 Castile or Dunnie
47 Nebraska hub
49 Previously
50 State-run game
51 South Pole conqueror
53 Art school subj.
56 Wild about
57 Tasteful
61 Recedes
65 Growing medium
66 Drama awards
68 Empty
70 Positive
71 Rations out
72 Heron cousin
73 Must have
74 End of a boat
75 Throat area

DOWN
1 Surrealist painter
2 Home-products brand
3 Part of MHz
4 On the double
5 Use a microwave
6 Actress Lupino
7 — Ness monster
8 Scary noise
9 Beat around the bush
10 Varnishes
11 Helper
12 Posterior
13 Doctrines
21 Corn servings
23 Obtains
25 Heavy metal
26 Egypt's capital
28 Be of use
29 Dupe
30 Harass
31 Pack animal
33 Bundles of cotton
34 Harsh noise
35 Mideast nation
38 Hindu teacher
41 Involved
43 Avoid
46 Many years
48 — up: pay
52 Patient old horse
54 They have nuclei
55 Dalai Lama's country
57 Part of NBA
58 Adventured
59 Car part
60 Make a footnote
62 Golf great Zaharias
63 Viking name
64 Office furniture
67 Ever, to Byron
68 Worker's ID

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

I	R	I	S	H		C	L	E	F		H	O	R	N
R	E	V	U	E		R	I	D	E		A	L	E	E
A	R	I	E	L		T	M	I	R		S	L	A	W
Q	U	E		P	O	T	A	T	O	C	H	I	P	S
I	N	S	P	I	R	E		C	H	E	E	S	Y
				P	R	O	N	G		A	I	L
P	R	O	N	G		R	A	I	T	T	I	S
R	O	D		S	W	O	R	D	F	I	S	H
E	T	E		K	L	O	B		P	E	B	K	Y
		L	I	N	E	N		R	A	E
A	C	C	O	R	D		S	U	R	F	E	E	R	S
B	L	O	C	K	B	U	S	T	E	R		L	O	P
D	A	N	A		A	H	O	Y		R	O	M	E	O
U	R	A	L		G	U	L	L		T	O	N	E	R
L	A	N	E		S	H	O	E		S	E	A	T	S

11-29-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information

LUNCH

Canadian Cheese Soup

Chicken Burrito

Fried Clams

Bean Burrito (vegan)

DINNER

Canadian Cheese Soup

Chicken Cacciatore

London Broil

Native American Stew (vegan)

Vegetable Cacciatore (vegan) (W Basics)

International Chile & Garlic Pork Vegetable Stir Fry with Tofu White Rice

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Matthew F. Sacco

Photo Technician — Tibora Gireeve-Blum

Copy Editor — Jim Pignatiello

Production Supervisor — Enrique Alcid

Production Staff — Shannon Farrington, Lizzy Nielsen

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.20.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Tennis overhand slammed by Yale, Colgate

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Despite a good effort, Scott Sans-Leeb and the rest of the men's tennis team fell to Yale and Colgate this past weekend without winning a match.

By Elena Panesis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sometimes overall wins and losses to a team's record do not predict ability or progress. The Massachusetts men's tennis team learned that lesson last weekend when it fell at the hands of two of the top programs in the Eastern region – Yale and Colgate University. Despite 7-0 losses to both squads, the Minutemen took some positives from the matches that will aid them in the upcoming Atlantic 10 conference schedule.

"It's good experience to play teams that are better even if the result is 7-0," assistant coach Scott Wilkins said. "They're quality matches that expose weaknesses and can give guys confidence when they do well."

Freshman Scott Sans-Leeb, who defaulted at Cornell due to a sore throat, came back at full strength against Yale with a hard-fought 7-5, 6-1 match.

"Thursday was Scott's first day back after being sick," said Wilkins. "He played very well against Yale and could have won the first set. He's frustrated right now but in reality he's headed in the right direction. Sunday he raised his level and if he has some good practices, he can win next weekend against BC."

Sunday at home, the Maroon and White will take on archrival Boston College at 1 p.m. Last year, the UMass men defeated the Eagles 5-2 on the road and hope to continue the winning streak this season with a home court advantage. Steve Prisco, the team's No. 1 player and captain, should be healthy enough to play Saturday after missing this past weekend in a last minute decision due to his ongoing back injury.

"We aren't favored in the BC match but with a healthy Steve and some good play out of guys like Scott Sans-Leeb and Todd Champeau, we have a shot," said Wilkins. "We beat them last year but they are a little better than last year and we're not quite as good. It's winnable but everyone has to be ready to go."

Defeating Boston College would definitely give the squad an emotional boost for its next vital conference match of the still young 2002 season, George Washington University. Last year the Colonials cancelled at the last minute due to poor driving conditions caused by a snowstorm, leaving the Minutemen with a score to settle.

"I'd say the next big match for us this season is George Washington," said Wilkins. "We have to get keyed up for that one since they are the second best team in the conference behind Richmond."

In years past the Minutemen, who placed second in the conference in 2001, traveled great distances to play its A-10 matches. This year, teams like Dayton and Xavier are making the trek to tackle the squad on the Upper Boyden Courts.

"We're just trying to do the best we can right now with what we have," said Wilkins. "If we keep working and stay positive then we may be able to knock off some teams if we can peak at the tournament. Last year we didn't get a chance to play as many teams in our conference but this year a lot of teams are gunning for us. Both Dayton and Xavier are coming to challenge us at home. Hopefully with a healthy roster and some good performances, we'll be ready to go."

Gretzky bitter over Canadian performance

Until Monday night, the Olympic hockey tournament in Salt Lake City had lived up to even the harshest cynic's expectations. Those who criticized the IOC and NHL for allowing professionals to compete were silenced as a wide open, fast-style of play delighted hockey fans worldwide with efficient end-to-end passing, lightning speed and incredible goaltending.

But then Wayne Gretzky had to put a damper on the entire celebration.

Gretzky, the executive director of the Canadian Olympic Team, has been frustrated with his team's lackluster play in its opening three games, and rightfully so. The Canadians are loaded with firepower up front (Kariya, Sakic, Shanahan, Iginla) a solid defensive corps (Pronger, Macinnis, Blake), and a trio of goaltenders among the NHL's elite (Brodeur, Cujo Belfour). Certainly no one expected Canada, one of the clear gold medal favorites to finish third in its group.

But Gretzky's sour grapes tirade Monday took focus away from a phenomenal tournament so far, and tarnished the Great One's likable personality. After his team salvaged a 3-3 tie with the Czech Republic in the final minutes, Gretzky went on a lengthy rant about the lack of respect his team has received and the poor officiating during the game.

"I'm tired of people taking shots at Canadian hockey," the Great One said. "We're very proud, and I guarantee you we'll be standing tall at the end." Gretzky called these shots "American propaganda," saying "it almost sickens my stomach to turn the TV on because I'm such a proud Canadian."

What Wayne conveniently forgot to mention was that the vast majority of this "propaganda" is coming from north of the border in his own homeland. Canadians take their hockey very seriously and will be satisfied with nothing less than a gold medal. With the talent their team has, these expectations are not completely unreasonable. But for Wayne to point the finger right here at the United States media, especially considering the tabloid headlines coming from his own country, seems petty and even silly. The United States isn't exactly pumping out stories filled with glee at the poor play of the Canadians, so Gretzky's comments seem not only petty but totally unsubstantiated as well.

The NHL's all-time leading scorer then went on to berate the officiating during the game against the Czechs, taking umbrage at the non-call on Roman Hamrlik's cross-check on Theo Fleury late in the game. Of the hit, Wayne said that "if a Canadian had done that, it would have been a big story. But a Czech player did it, and it's OK. He should be suspended for the remainder of the tournament."

First of all, although Hamrlik's hit was more than a mere love tap, it was nothing out of the ordinary. Players get cross-checked, slashed, elbowed and charged without penalties called every single night in the NHL. It's simply the nature of the game. You suck it up and play on. Furthermore, if Gretzky had been watching the same Canada/Czech game as everyone else, he would have seen that Fleury was completely interfering with Czech netminder Dominik Hasek. During the fiasco late in the last minute of the game, Fleury, amidst a slew of bodies in front of the net, fell on top of Hasek. But instead of getting up and continuing with the play, Fleury flailed around on top of Hasek, inhibiting him from making any sort of stop.

INSIDE THE OLYMPICS WITH ANDY VOGT

What is one of the most important credos of any defenseman? Thou shall not mess with my goaltender. Hamrlik sent a message that if Fleury was going to screw around in the crease, he was going to have to pay. Again, this is no different from any night in the NHL. Even Fleury seemed unfazed by the hit, saying, "I'm fine. It's part of the game."

To bring in any sort of Canadian bias into the play is ludicrous. You don't see the American media becoming outraged every time one of their boys in red, white and blue gets whacked. For someone who has stated the importance of winning the gold medal, Gretzky's comments sound like he holds this in about as much regard as a glorified All-Star Game.

If Gretzky was able to motivate the Canadian team with his angry outburst, then great. As a hockey fan, you want to see every team living up to its potential, and not a team getting blown out in its first game and then barely squeaking by a qualifier. It's just a shame Gretzky couldn't motivate them without looking like a crybaby in the process.

Information from ESPN.com was used in this article.

Andy Vogt is a Collegian columnist.

UMass out-maneuvers No. 18 Air Force

By Katie Landers
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Boyden Gymnasium has become the lucky rabbit's foot for the Massachusetts men's gymnastics team.

The Minutemen trounced Air Force in a meet last Saturday, 208.900-197.250. The win leaves UMass at 5-1 for the season while moving up to 9-1 at home since the 1999-2000 season.

"It's always great when you beat an academy," head coach Ros Johnson said.

The Minutemen dominated Saturday's competition, taking five events against Air Force for the nine-point deficit. Junior Darren Morace helped to carry the team, winning his sixth all-around this season. Sophomore Pat McFarlin wasn't far behind his teammate, taking first in two of three events – parallel bars, high bar and pommel horse, respectively, while honing an injured ankle.

Injury harped McFarlin two weeks ago while competing in the Winter Nationals in Las Vegas. Both Morace and McFarlin made the trip west hoping to earn a spot in the 2004 U.S. Olympic team, but were satisfied to walk away with top 15 finishes.

Fresh faces put their names on the board last weekend. Senior Clayton Kent took away his first career floor title, while Sean Monaco walked away with a first place finish on the vault and Brian Petersen scored a career-high on the pommel horse (9.250) to win his first ever event title.

"This was a great performance by the entire team," Johnson said. "We had to make some adjustments as the meet went on, but our guys had great focus throughout the meet."

Tonight, the Minutemen will be heading to New Haven to meet Southern Connecticut. With UMass currently seeded ninth in the country, the team is expecting a closer match than Air Force, a team that dropped to 18th nationally. The Maroon and White beat the Owls by just three points last season and are hoping to boost their national ranking.

"We're looking forward to the match against Southern Connecticut," Johnson said. "They're a similar team to Air Force."

The Minutemen have the advantage this time around, as they were sitting 4-3 on the season at this point last year. The Owls are coming off a second place finish last weekend against James Madison University and the University of Vermont, but SCSU was only able to post 165.40 points.

The Minutemen competed in front of nearly 500 fans over the holiday weekend, and will only host the New England Championship March 8 for the rest of this season. UMass will take on the Owls in Connecticut at 7 p.m.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The UMass men's gymnastics team continued its run toward equaling the ECAC championship 2000 squad (pictured above) with a win over Air Force last weekend.

■ Paccione

continued from page 14

ball," he says. "Some guys have great form and great technique. Me, I'm just learning technique. What happens is when I go down with that guy it's just like I want the ball more than him. And that's how I get it.

"It's not the most graceful way," he concludes, with a smirk. "But that's the way it works."

Back on Feb. 9 in a scrimmage versus Army, the Cadets had a difficult time combating the way Paccione labored. Because of his brute strength, the Army face-off guys struggled to counter Paccione, and he wound up winning 6-of-7 draws in a 14-3 UMass victory. With his strong upper body and powerful legs, Mangan says Paccione's low center of gravity allows him to get under his opponents better and box out – almost like in basketball – and get the ball when it pops out.

The first time the ball is dropped Saturday at Richard F. Garber field – signaling the commencement of UMass Lacrosse 2002 – Paccione will begin his compilation of face-off statistics, a new chapter in his dedicated career. And knowing the way he works, UMass should have the first scoring opportunity.

"I'm not going to take all of the face-offs, but I want to be the spark plug that comes in and takes the first three," says Paccione – who will be helped out by freshman Craig Conn and sophomore Jeff Zywicki – understanding the extra fatigue that comes with facing-off. "And then if the game is tied, or the fourth quarter comes around I want those face-offs."

But that fiery desire comes from something more than the pure admiration of a game. Going 12-2 (with both losses coming by one goal) and being left out of the NCAA Tournament by a board of representatives affiliated predominantly with schools that got in doesn't exactly fill one with glee.

"It's in the back of my mind, everyday," says Paccione, his eyes now squinted and his voice significantly lowered. "These teams have no understanding of what we've been through. I even tell our incoming freshman, they don't understand what it's been like."

Paccione's freshman year, friend and teammate Eric Soprecasa was hit in the chest with a lacrosse ball during practice in a freak accident that resulted in Soprecasa's death. That, along with his team's evident shafting from last year's post-season field, has caused inner fury.

"I have so much anger in me," he says. "People always say, you're a nice kid, why do you have so much anger in you?

"And I don't know, I just see that opposing helmet," continues Paccione, fists now clutched. "It's nothing against the kid."

Watch out Hofstra. UMass' foe on Saturday, the Pride will not visit Amherst feeling welcomed. Crushed, 17-13, by the Minutemen in the last year's opener on Long Island, Hofstra was given an at-large bid to last year's tournament.

Whoever steps to the middle of Garber Field wearing a blue Pride jersey on Saturday should be forewarned. He won't, but the pain might not be as surprising if he is.

There's a reason Cannella couldn't stop shaking his head while staring down at his clipboard. Even after Paccione left his office, the punishing image of him didn't.

"And that's without pads," someone directs.

"I know," says Canella, laughing. "I know."

■ history

continued from page 14

UMass was the third-most represented school in the MLL last season, behind only perennial powers Princeton and Syracuse. Millon was the MVP of the league's All-Star game while LoCascio and Hiller have both been recently hired as coaches of two of the league's six franchises.

UMass sports alumni throughout the lacrosse world, and unlike other sports at other colleges and at this one, these alums know how to spread the word.

"Guys like Mark [Millon] and Sal [LoCascio] and Tim [Soudan] are our biggest ambassadors," Cannella says. "They are big supporters of UMass lacrosse at games and camps. They get the word out to people about what we are doing here."

But no matter how you look at it, everything comes back to Garber.

"He's like John Wooden," Cannella says. "Not one guy that has played for him or knows him or has ever met him can say they weren't touched by Dick Garber. He was the most respected person I ever knew and they way he treated people on this campus and the way they treated him was amazing. He's done for us what a Bear Bryant did."

Better yet, coach. Those guys – Bryant, Wooden and their peers – they'd be lucky to hold a candle to Dick Garber.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

MARK MILLON IS THE SECOND LEADING GOALSCORER IN UMASS HISTORY WITH 155 GOALS.

If you have lacrosse
STATISTICIAN EXPERIENCE
AND FEEL LIKE
VOLUNTEERING
YOUR TIME,
PLEASE CONTACT
ANDY SHAY AT
ashay@admin.umass.edu.

BUSTA RHYMES
WITH SPECIAL GUEST
SUNDAY, MARCH 10, 2002
JOHN M. GREENE HALL, SMITH COLLEGE
8 P.M.
DOORS OPEN AT 7 P.M.
TICKETS ON SALE FRIDAY, FEB. 22ND
GENERAL PUBLIC, $22, AT:
FOR THE RECORD
NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE
TICKETMASTER
5-COLLEGE W/ VALID ID, $18, AT:
UMASS, TICKETS UNLIMITED
AMHERST COLLEGE CAMPUS CENTER, RM. 103
MT. HOLYOKE BLANCHARD CAMPUS CENTER, INFO. DESK
GENESIS 6 THE TOUR
PRESENTED BY SMITH COLLEGE REC COUNCIL

CFNR
OUTSTANDING TEACHER AND ADVISOR AWARDS
COLLEGE OF FOOD AND NATURAL RESOURCES
Students and faculty invited to submit nominations for the 2001-2002 awards
Nominations due March 1, 2002
Faculty in the following programs are eligible for nomination:
Animal Science • Building Materials and Wood Technology
Apparel Marketing • Entomology • Environmental Design
Environmental Sciences • Family and Consumer Sciences • Food Science
Forestry • Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration
Landscape Architecture • Microbiology • Natural Resource Studies
Plant and Soil Sciences • Resource Economics
Sport Management • Wildlife and Fisheries Conservation
• Forms available in 113 Stockbridge and departmental offices •

Then & Now

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

RICHARD F. GARBER IS CARRIED OFF THE FIELD BY ONE OF HIS GREAT UMASS SQUADS.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

GARBER'S RIGHTFUL HEIR, GREG CANNELLA, GATHERS HIS TEAM BEFORE THE NAVY GAME LAST YEAR.

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Greg Cannella sits hunched over in his chair, eyes toward the ceiling, as he ponders his 14-some-odd years in association with UMass lacrosse. On his right flank rests the program's latest advances – an ECAC Regular Season Champions trophy and certificates for his four All-Americans.

Out the window behind him is Richard F. Garber Field. It is there looking over him and standing behind him just like the late Garber himself did in Cannella's days as an attackman for the Minutemen.

"I think about Dick Garber all the time," Cannella says as his eyes level and refocus. "Whenever I am faced with something, I try to think about what he would have done in the same situation."

Considering what Cannella has accomplished both on and off the field, it's safe to say that Garber would be proud. Since he took over the reins in the winter of 1995, all he has done is orchestrate five winning seasons and received two NCAA tournament berths and a conference title in only the team's second year in the league. All this while turning a program not revered for its off-field behavior into a factory for solid lacrosse players, not to mention quality people.

But maybe his biggest contribution to the program is the recent installment of the retro high-octane UMass offense – a strategy Garber himself enjoyed.

"He liked to play up-tempo," Cannella says of his mentor's strategy. "That is something that I'm glad we have gotten back to because when you play exciting lacrosse and the product on the field is good, the people start to show up again."

In years past, especially near the end of Ted Garber's tenure and the beginning of Cannella's, UMass relied on a strong defense and solid goaltending to see them through. But now the Minutemen are stealing a page from a dusty playbook that has been on the shelf for about a decade, and why not?

It worked.

Rub the lax crystal ball and flash back to the golden age of UMass lacrosse and you'll see Garber's run and gun style dominating the national scene. Garber led the Minutemen to nine NCAA tournament appearances in his tenure, including a five-year streak in which the Minutemen never missed the postseason while not once being ranked above ninth at year's end.

UMASS LAX –TRADITION–
< 101 >
All-Americans
< 13 >
NCAA Tourney Appearances
< 300 >
wins Richard F. Garber, winningest coach in NCAA history

Leading Garber's attack for four of those years was two-time All-American Thomas Carmean. Cannella describes Carmean, now the head coach at Amherst College, as the "most complete lacrosse player I have ever ran with."

"We haven't had an athlete like him come around here in a long time," Cannella says with a grin. "I am convinced that he would have thrived at any position. We could have put him at midfield, short stick, long stick defense or even goalie and he would have gotten the job done."

Luckily for Carmean, Garber had another guy in mind when it came to defending the UMass crease. Salvatore LoCascio came to Amherst in the fall of 1986 and by the time he left the Pioneer Valley his footprints were clearly marked in the sands of UMass lacrosse lore.

LoCascio, who many consider to be the greatest goaltender of all-time, set the NCAA record for career saves during his four years under Garber while earning All-America honors four times. He is one of only two Minutemen to be named an All-American all four years, the other being Scott Hiller.

"He has the quickest hands I have ever seen. He made us so much better because we just couldn't beat him in practice," Cannella recalls. "I remember being so frustrated because we just couldn't score on him. He would just sit back on the goal line and beg you to shoot. But it is those hands that allow him to just jump right into a game with all these great players and without even training or practicing or being in shape and still dominate."

LoCascio did just that last summer when he backstopped the Long Island Lizards to the inaugural Major League Lacrosse championship. He made countless saves in the title game against the Baltimore Bayhawks, and one of the guys he was stoning was fellow UMass legend Mark Millon.

Millon, like LoCascio, is regarded by many as the greatest player to every play his position. Throughout his four-year career, Millon was the consummate sniper. Adept at shooting from any position and any angle with either hand, No. 3 racked up 155 goals, second all-time for the Maroon and White, and was twice named a first team All-American.

The number of great players that have passed through the UMass system is countless, and if anybody is wondering who to thank for that success, they need not look any further than the late, great Dick Garber and his 36 years of excellence.

Over 100 All-Americans have passed through the Amherst campus. UMass ranks eighth all time in NCAA tournament appearances with 13 and Garber is the winningest coach in NCAA history with 300 triumphs.

The list of accolades is endless.

Turn to HISTORY, page 13

Pacc-ing the face-off torch

By Eric Soderstrom
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Dan Paccione walks in, but his steps are cautious. Plus there's this look on his face that make any mother feel uneasy.

Summoned just minutes earlier by Greg Cannella, he isn't too keen on the idea of being called to coach's office just as Cannella begins to flip through some papers attached to his clipboard. Cannella finds the one he's looking for, slides his pointer finger down the page and yells to McFarland.

"Hey, how much do you bench? You wimp," he says, finishing his accusation without an answer, knowing it's less than the 280 pounds Paccione can put up. Not to mention the 360 pounds he can squat.

"Coming in as a freshman, I realized this was going to be a big transition and you had to be in shape," says Paccione, the 23-year-old from Amityville, N.Y. "And I always wondered what I'd be like as a senior if I was to do this every day. Now that I'm a senior, I can tell that it's paid off."

The swift 6-foot-1, 185-pound Paul Hutchen, by far one of the fastest athletes to ever hover this Amherst campus, also finds his way into coaching headquarters with Cannella's eyes still fixated on Paccione's statistics.

"Hey Hutch," Cannella says. "What's your record in the 300?"

"124," Hutchen answers.

"Paci ran it in 125," Cannella responds, the mark totaling the number of total seconds it took Paccione who runs a 4:36 40-yard-dash to run 300-yards three-times, with two-minute rests in between each attempt.

"I know," Hutchen answers, with a small laugh and the familiar shake of the skull. "I know."

"Dan is a really hard worker and he has been since day one," Cannella says. "Probably, in my view, over the last four years he has probably come the farthest out of anybody in his class."

His freshman year, Paccione played in six games and scored his first career goal against Holy Cross.

The next season he played in all 14 games and netted six goals including four against Stony Brook. Last year, Paccione again played in all 14 contests and managed 13 goals as part of the nation's most explosive offense, which led the country in shots and goals.

This season, Paccione will retain his role of attackman, but will start each game from an unfamiliar position.

"He came to us in the fall and told us he wanted to face-off," Cannella says. "He goes, I know we lost Sealsy, so I want to face off."

Sealsy is the simple reference for recently graduated face-off specialist Jeff Seals, who secured the circle for the Minutemen last year and most of 1998, medically redshirting the 1999 season. In 2001, he won 199 of 316 draws – a success rate of 63 percent – and was the reason for a multitude of quick UMass starts.

Although the present list of graduated seniors includes an All-American goalie and attackman, finding a face-off man was supposed to be the most difficult off-season task for Cannella and his staff. But Paccione's determination facilitated that endeavor.

"I've been practicing, trying it out in the summer leagues," he says. "I never really had much of a desire to do it until I realized that we could really use one. But I'm willing to give it all. In order to win this game you need the ball. And I don't win them cleanly all the time, but I scrap until I win that ball."

It's that disposition which makes his physical nature all the more intimidating.

"You look at kids and see who can really embrace the role," says assistant coach Terry Mangan, who has been working with Paccione as of late. "Sometimes your most talented guys aren't necessarily the ones to do it. You have to be tough and have a big heart."

When the ball drops, almost anything goes. Most face-off men have certain moves they depend on, but Paccione is too young in his maturation process to rely solely on style. For now, he's pretty much a goon. But that's exactly why he'll survive.

"Basically, it's just a scrap for the

Turn to PACCIONE, page 13

UMASS HEAD COACH GREG CANNELLA CELEBRATES A GOAL WITH ONE OF THE MINUTEMEN.

WANT SADE BACK? ARTS PAGE 5

TIME FOR CATHOLIC CHANGE ED/OP PAGE 4

SOFTBALL PREPS FOR GEORGIA SPORTS PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
THURSDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE EIGHTY FIVE ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.21.02

Linguistics professor honored

By Rachel Smith
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The University of Massachusetts Linguistics Department hosted the first annual Donald C. and Margaret H. Freeman Lecture Friday, Feb. 15 in Herter Hall.

UMass selected Steven Pinker, Professor of Brain and Cognitive Sciences at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, as the inaugural lecturer in the series. Pinker was flattered that the Linguists Department selected him to speak at the University.

"UMass has one of the world's great linguistics departments," Pinker said. "It was nice of them to ask [me to come]."

Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams presented the Chancellor's Medal to Donald C. Freeman in honor of his "intellectual passion" and role as founder of the UMass Linguistics Department. According to Lisa Selkirk, the Head of the Linguistics Department, Freeman's relationship with UMass did not end when he retired.

"Don has had a long and continuous relationship to the depart-

Turn to PINKER, page 3

Senators walk out of meeting after elections fight

By Kristin Shrewsbury
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Round one of the approval for a new Student Government Association Chancellor of Elections began and ended at yesterday's Senate meeting.

SGA members debated, fought and were kicked out of last night's Senate meeting over the candidates appointed to take on the position of Chancellor of Elections for the up and coming Presidential and Student Trustee elections.

Members of the Executive branch and Senate spoke on behalf of the appointed, as well as against. Much of the arguments made encompassed each candidate's experience within the SGA as well as experience with prior SGA elections.

Debate sparked between Senators when the motion calling to appoint Michael Ames for Chancellor of Elections was presented upon the recommendation of Southwest Area Governor Josh Seidman. Each year, the position of Chancellor is appointed by a different residential area, this year the appointment lies under the appointment of the Southwest Residential Area governor.

"I appointed Michael Ames because not only can he read and write, but I think that he would do a good job, and he wants to do the job," Seidman said.

SGA President John Sheehan debated against the motion explaining to the Senate that he felt that Ames would serve as a great Elections Commissioner, but not as a Chancellor.

"These elections are so important to me, and Limon Naval has the experience and will stay impartial as the Chancellor of Elections," Sheehan said.

The motion was voted on by the Senate and failed, but was called for reconsideration by the Senate thereafter. After a five minute recess, Senators and Executive cabinet members went back to further debate the matter.

"I've seen how these elections can screw up relationships and friend-ships in the past," Sheehan said. "I ask you to consult your consciousness and the spirit of our document when you take this motion into consideration."

The Senate failed the motion calling for a reconsideration of Ames as the Chancellor of Elections.

Senators further went on to debate the appointment of Naval as Chancellor of Elections. Naval was placed on the agenda originally under the appointment of an Elections Commissioner, but was switched under the approval of the Senate.

"This is probably one of the most important meetings of the year due to all of the issues that we've had with our elections in the past," chair of Ways and Means Mike Taugher said. "I just find it funny, that no one has stepped up to appoint a Chancellor of Elections yet, considering it was supposed to have been done three months ago. Why did members of the Senate and Executive cabinet try and sneak in another candidate?"

Taugher further explained that prior to this appointment of an Elections Chancellor, titles didn't matter.

"Last year we didn't want titles, just someone to get the elections done with," Taugher said. "Now things have chanced and experience is coming into play and I question why the Executive branch feels the need to put their hands in everything."

Naval spoke before the Senate explaining why he would like the job as the Chancellor of Elections and was interrupted by a call for quorum by Senate members. Due to a lack of quorum, the meeting was adjourned and motions not approved will be placed on next weeks Senate agenda.

"I think that there was a lot of confusion between members of the Senate and I'm confident that the elections will turnout alright in the end," Senator Dan Saunders said. "It's just too bad that people had to make a statement by calling quorum and leaving."

TIBORA GIRLYG-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION IS AGAIN FACING IN-FIGHTING.

March trip planned by Latino Studies

By Denise Nuñez
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Center for Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Studies will sponsor an alternative Spring Break trip to the Dominican Republic. This trip, called "The International Delegation: A View of the Dominican Republic" will be held March 15 to March 24.

This international community involvement learning experience is to be accompanied by enrollment in a Latin American study. Under the guidance of the director, participating students choose a topic.

"What is required to go on this trip is a basic knowledge of Spanish around level 240," Gloria Bernarbe-Ramos, director of the Center, said.

"The students will be exposed to Dominican and Caribbean culture. They will do workshops lecture to independence studies," Gloria Bernabe- Ramos said.

The fee is 1,000 dollars and 100 dollar deposit is due with the application and students are responsible for the fee. Another 100 dollars is due by March 4 and the remaining balance (800-875 dollars) must be paid full by March 11. The program fee will include room and board and cover all program activities. An up to date academic transcript and an evaluation form filled out by a Spanish instructor is also required.

Melassa Documentary Productions, a Dominican foundation, will organize ground transportation from the airport to the University Residence, to different places, including Mata Los Indios and the beach.

"This is the first initiative of students this nature of the Caribbean and they want it to be successful to offer it," Bernabe-Ramos said.

The general objectives of this fieldtrip are to familiarize the participants with the history and cultural traditions of the

Turn to SPRING BREAK, page 3

High price for revival

How much will it cost?

By Jennifer Lattwood

By Dan Lamothe
COLLEGIAN STAFF

You can feel the difference. This place has character like nowhere else on campus.

Walk around the building. If the granite sides of the building trimmed with brown sandstone seem imposing, it's only because they are. Its uneven base provides a glimpse of the history that the building has to it. Each date on the building's stones represents graduating classes. They date back to the very beginning of the 20th century.

Step up the lopsided, granite steps. They're over 100 years old – remember that. Feel the age under your feet. Appreciate it.

The big, creaky door swings open. Take a step in. Mustiness and dust meet your nostrils, but move on into the room. Take in your surroundings, or you will miss the charm offered to you here.

Welcome to the Old Chapel, the architectural gemstone of our aesthetically challenged campus and the second oldest building at the university – second only to South College.

The first floor used to be a library. Feel the floorboards beneath your feet as you walk in. The sun shining through the old, cold windowpanes reveals the discolorations in the floorboard where the shelves used to sit. The floor is a lighter shade where the bookshelves were. The discolorations are in nice, tight, even rows, like soldiers burnt into the wood.

Walk down the hallway. It's narrow, and the ceiling is low. The dirty floor with the warped boards seems quaint, but not too old. It leads into another room where the strong sun in the western sky streams in through the streaked panes of glass, turning your attention to the whittled windowsills, which have seen better days. The sills have been whittled away by a wayward squirrel that tries frantically to chew its way out the window that the light now pours through. Teeth and claw markets pock the lumpy windowsill, and a pile of wood shavings have been deposited on the sill neatly by the squirrel that is now, not surprisingly, no where to be seen.

The third room is much like the second, with plastered walls and a dusty floor. Blackboards line the room with musical staffs on them, hinting that the Music Department was one of the last to use the chapel regularly for anything. Long, antiquated wooden disks sit neatly in rows. Relics anywhere else, they are at peace here.

A straight and narrow staircase with small steps leads upwards through the middle of the chapel. At the top is a landing, with a set of large, double wooden doors. Above the doors sits a delicately painted word on the door jamb in gold, "Auditirium."

Behind these doors lies the centerpiece for the chapel, the meeting room itself. The room is much wider than would be expected – twice as wide as it is long. At the front and center sits a stage, raised three feet from the height of the floor and spanning approximately fifteen feet in width. Two red and blue stained-glass windows peak out from the back of the stage, one on each side. They are plain and geometric in pattern.

The room as a whole has an aura to it. The quietness makes it feel even larger than it is. Several hundred people could sit in here with ease. It is a forgotten space that, refurbished, would give professors and administrators a place to orate that has class, substance, and character, rather than the usual antiseptic auditorium.

On the landing outside the auditorium is another door. Once swung open, it reveals a most peculiar staircase. Pitched at around a 75 degree angle, it hikes up into the bell tower. One is not quite sure whether to approach these steps as a narrow, steep staircase or as a ladder.

The recently refinished bell tower has a different smell to it. A new hardwood floor lends a brightness to the tower that is absent in the lower levels. A long, unwound snake of a rope hangs down cantankerously, begging to be yanked on for dear life. A yank would sound the ancient bells themselves. Levers and knobs for the bell chimes lay in an evenly spaced maze on a board.

The whole chapel could have this sense of modernity. And some day, it may – but that won't be anytime soon.

****

The Old Chapel sits near the campus pond, stone silent. Built in 1884 by renowned architect Stephen Earle, it has been closed to the public since 1988 due to a variety of physical problems. "Basically, it's structural problems," Richard Nathorst, the Capital Project Manager of Facilities Planning Division, said.

The Old Chapel Reuse Study, a five-page summary published by and attained from the University of Massachusetts Physical Plant Division, detailed the problems that exist with Old Chapel today. There are several serious building code violations to address.

"Code upgrades include structural repairs, stair

Turn to CHAPEL, page 2

■ chapel

continued from page 1

replacement, creation of an egress door from the basement level, and restoration of noncomforming means of egress situations," the study stated.

Other basic modifications needed, according to the study, include construction of bathrooms to modern standards, repair or replacement of windows, replacement of the Chapel's slate roof, and general repairs to the exterior of the building, such as on walls. The university would also like to develop some roads that would allow for driving directly to the Chapel.

S/L/A/M/ Collaborative, Landmark Facilities Group, Boston Building Consultants, and D.G. Jones & Partners performed the study for the University. In it, several schemes were drawn up as potential options to revitalize the Old Chapel.

Scheme A called for a plan of "minimal intervention" or the bare minimum, which, unfortunately, is not cheap. Plan A is slated to cost approximately $3.8 million. It is outlined in several basic steps. "These include elevator, rebuilding the stairs, new egress, handicap accessibility, and basic repairs," the study explained.

It also called for some "systems" to be repaired rather than replaced, such as the windows.

Scheme B allowed for the "basic renovation" of the Old Chapel. Depending on the specifics, the plan called for between $5.5 and $6 million to be spent on restoration. The biggest difference between Scheme A and Scheme B is that B called for complete demolition of first floor walls and partitions.

According to the study, the "demolition would permit creation of flexible meeting and exhibit space on the first floor and a small elevator lobby space at the second floor."

Overall, Scheme B called for the creation of "support spaces in the basement," such as a practice room and a catering kitchen, in order for the return of the first floor of the Chapel to its original "open air" design. An addition to the scheme also suggested placing the Music Department's organ on the stage in the auditorium.

The final scheme in the Reuse Study, Scheme C, called for using the Old Chapel's location near the W.E.B. Du Bois Library to take advantage of the library's chilled water supply to cool the chapel. This would free up space in the cellar of the chapel because "a subgrade mechanical room connecting both buildings would house new mechanical equipment including air handling units, pumps, and auxiliaries," the study pointed out.

In addition, Scheme C called for a tunnel to be built between the Chapel and Du Bois Library for general public use. With the tunnel, the study estimated Scheme C at $8.2 million. Without it, the study was estimated at $6.7 million.

These schemes did not include the cost of restoring historical items in the chapel, such as the stained glass windows. Projects such as this and the restoration of the original lighting of the auditorium would drive the price of restoration even higher.

At this point in time, there are absolutely no plans in initiating any of these three schemes, according to Physical Plant. Money for any of these projects would need to be raised from alumni, and the University needs to okay the raising of money for that specific purpose before it can begin.

"The University can and must repair this building," the Old Chapel Library web page stated. "The assistance and support of our dedicated and concerned alumni will make a very substantial contribution to this project. The future of Old Chapel Tower lies in the hands of its alumni."

Some small repairs have been made, such as the Old Chapel clock, repaired during the break between semesters and now keeping time. The complex gear combinations in the Old Chapel will take a while to be accurately recalibrated in order to flawlessly maintain time. Daily adjustments to the clock have been made since the start of the semester and will continue to be made until no longer necessary.

The next and essentially last project planned right now for the Old Chapel is the installation of 30 Carillon bells. Financed with the money of Vincent Cooper, a late 1938 graduate, potato farmer and philanthropist, the carillon bells are most likely the last restoration project the Chapel will see in years.

"The University needs a place on campus where it can gather as a whole," Nathorst concluded.

It won't happen any time soon. Budget cuts put a stranglehold on all sorts of spending, and the Chapel restoration was one of the projects choked. At the current rate, it will take years before the heart of our campus is ever open again

TIBURA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

TIBURA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

LOYAL ALUMNUS RICHARD P. NATHORST '79 DEMONSTRATES HOW THE ORIGINAL CLOCK'S MECHANISM FUNCTIONED.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Pain is God's megaphone to rouse a deaf world

-C.S. Lewis

Evil, Suffering and the Role of God
by Dr. Greg Ganssle
8:00pm
Thursday Feb 21 in 176 Campus Center sponsored by
Campus Crusade

Life Sciences Career Fair

Wednesday, February 27
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
Campus Center Auditorium

Biotech, Environmental and Pharmaceutical Companies

Co-ops!
Internships!
Permanent positions!

For sophomores, juniors AND seniors!

Campus Career Network

Presented by the Campus Career Network, the College of Food and Natural Resources, the College of Natural Sciences and Math and the BioSci Club

For more information, call 545-6011 or see the Campus Career Network web site www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Video asks for pradon, justice for jailed Native-American

By Tom Coyle
Collegian Correspondent

On the 11th hour of the last day of his presidency, former President Bill Clinton issued a number of pardons that many found questionable. However one individual, seen by many as more deserving than others, was absent from the list. This is Leonard Peltier, a Native-American advocate imprisoned in 1975 after being convicted of murdering two FBI agents.

Last night in the Campus Center, the "Video For Justice" was shown to any who may have been interested in the plight of Leonard Peltier. What the video consisted of was various eyewitnesses and experts in human rights who testified in a Congressional hearing on March 17, 2000. This hearing was to determine the possibility of human rights violations by the FBI and the case for Peltier's clemency.

Peltier was an activist for the American Indian Movement (AIM). Through his work with the AIM, Leonard was brought to the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota in the early 1970s. At this reservation there was an ongoing conflict between the pro-assimilation group led by Dick Wilson and his Guardians of the Oglala Nation (GOONs) and the traditionalists who were aided by the AIM. However, the GOONs had one very powerful ally: the Federal Bureau of Investigation. During these years, the FBI viewed AIM as an organization that threatened the U.S. government.

Information has been brought forward that the FBI also provided members of Wilson's assimilation group with surveillance and details of the daily lives of individual AIM members. However, on June 26, 1975, it was the FBI with whom the AIM fought a bloody skirmish. After it was all said and done, keeping in mind that it is still very much in question what exactly was said and done, two FBI agents were dead.

The FBI claimed they were chasing a young Native-American fugitive when they entered Jumping Bull Ranch. They contended that the AIM had essentially ambushed the agents. However, the video said that the government failed to mention that there were many women children and elders at the compound at the time and most barely escaped with their lives. The government decided to level charges against three of the men at the camp that day, Dino Butler, Bob Robideau and Leonard Peltier.

Butler and Robideau were tried separately from Peltier and the jury found that they were acting in justified self-defense when they killed the agents. Peltier, being tried by a separate judge, and after the other two had been vindicated came up against what Peltier's supporters call a brick wall. Evidence and witnesses from the first trial were tossed out, and perjured testimony combined to win a conviction against Peltier.

The speakers in the video argued that Peltier and the members of the AIM were unfairly targeted by the FBI and by Wilson's pro-assimilation group for their political views.

They contended that in the 25 years since these trials occurred, too much of the evidence has been tainted and a new trial is at this time unfeasible. Their solution is for the president to issue a pardon of Leonard Peltier. In doing this, they say the government will end a gross miscarriage of justice as well as begin to heal the scars of oppression felt by many of the Native-Americans of this country.

■ Pinker

continued from page 1

ment," Selkirk said. "He recently made a generous contribution to the Linguistics Department. We've all felt really indebted to Don."

"It's a little cliché, buts it's a culmination of everything I've worked for in my entire life," Freeman said after the lecture. "I'm a native son of the Commonwealth. It's something special I'm very happy."

Chancellor Williams commented on the "the passion for language" she observed in the audience. Students and faculty crowded room 227 at Herter. People filled all of the chairs; so many lecture-goers crowded the aisles and even remained standing during the hour-long lecture.

Pinker's titled his lecture "Words and Rules: The Ingredients of Language" after his most recent best-selling book about language acquisition. Pinker has written three books to date, including the New York Times bestseller "The Language Instinct."

From the recent figure skating scandal at the Winter Olympics to Donald Duck, Pinker used various popular and accessible examples to illustrate his theories of how people memorize words and why we speak the way that we do.

Selkirk selected Pinker to lecture at UMass partly due to his unique delivery of complex ideas.

"He's the public intellectual for linguistics these days," Selkirk explained. "He's brining linguistics to a popular audience."

The bulk of Pinker's lecture examined irregular verbs and why they exist in the English language. He used Selkirk's explanation for how irregular verbs form, and conceded that her theory normally held true. However, there are enough instances when her theory could not be used to form irregular verbs that he sought a different explanation. Pinker also looked to the physiology of the human brain to explain why people use irregular verbs in English when regular verbs are easier to remember and more common.

Pinker studied language acquisition patterns in children and learned that subjects under two years correctly remembered irregular verbs more often than children three years and up. American children learn about regular verbs around the age of three, the time when their memory of irregular verbs seems to falter.

He used that research to refute the theory that children's memory being inferior to adults' memory is the sole explanation for children who say "catched," "fighted," or make other errors relating to irregular verbs.

Pinker concluded his lecture with a brief history of irregular verbs in the English and German languages.

While Pinker's lecture was clearly relevant to linguistics students, UMass students from all disciplines benefited from his lecture.

"Everybody speaks a language. Learning about language is like knowing yourself," Selkirk said. After the crowded lecture room emptied, Selkirk added, "In a way this first lecture has fulfilled our hopes for this lecture series. Attracting people who aren't normally interested in a language. I think it went very well."

■ spring break

continued from page 1

Dominican Republic and the Caribbean, to promote cultural exchange between students from different regions of the Americas, train participants in community based-learning techniques and other non-systematic forms of knowledge such as oral history and musical traditions, they participate in infrastructure projects such as the building of bathroom facilities, the construction of a medical clinic, and repair of homes and other buildings.

Information and applications for the 2002 alternative Spring Break in the Dominican Republic are available at 924 Thompson Hall, or by calling 413-545-4868.

TIM MACOMBER/COLLEGIAN

Jah-va
Elizabeth Linhoss washes out the day's excess coffee at the People's Market

Write for The Collegian

BUSTA RHYMES
WITH SPECIAL GUEST
SUNDAY, MARCH 10, 2002
JOHN M. GREENE HALL, SMITH COLLEGE
8 P.M.
DOORS OPEN AT 7 P.M.
TICKETS ON SALE FRIDAY, FEB. 22ND
GENERAL PUBLIC $22
FOR THE RECORD
NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE
TICKETMASTER
5-COLLEGE W/ VALID ID, $18
UMASS TICKETS UNLIMITED
AMHERST COLLEGE CAMPUS CENTER
MT. HOLYOKE BLANCHARD CAMPUS CENTER
GENESIS BY THE FOUR
THE NEW ALBUM
PRESENTED BY SMITH COLLEGE RHP COUNCIL
GENESIS IN STORES NOW

Don't Forget
All February Murphy's Stout Special
$2.50 PINT
Thursday
ALRUDA
Rock and Roll
Groove
THE HARP
$3.25 20oz.
Saturday
Hi8us
Funk, Rock
Blues
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
(413) 548-6900
Just off the bus route next to Cowl's Lumber
No Cover
"Start Your Own Tradition"

ATTENTION
all students
Check your Spring course schedule now, on WISE
www.wise.umassp.edu
You will not receive a schedule confirmation in the mail.
If Undergraduates have questions, contact the Office of the Undergraduate Registrar at 545-0555 or come to 213 Whitmore. If Graduates have questions, contact the Office of the Graduate Registrar at 545-0024 or come to 534 Goodell.
Remember: Last day to drop with "W" (Undergraduate, Stockbridge, Continuing Education) is Wednesday, March 27.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM WRITING IS A CONVERSATION BETWEEN WRITER AND READER ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Listening to the students:

A note from the editor

Everyday at the Collegian, we receive a number of comments and inquiries. They arrive by phone, email, written letters, visitors, fax and nearly every other method of communication imaginable.

Not surprisingly, then, the messages pile up. The emails requesting reply, the "While you were out" slips nesting in the mailbox, the disk- shouting up with "timely" and "must run" written across their faces.

With so many requests filtering in on a daily basis, something ultimately has to give. Five pages of editorial and opinion each week accommodates only so much; the rest, be it a lack of space, matter of timeliness or, yes, concern over content, simply don't see the light of print.

The practice is standard of any news outlet or publication: what runs is at the discretion of the editors, who, in an ideal situation, draw and present equally from the pool of opinion that collects and rapidly refills. In the case of this paper, on a campus this large (with four other significant institutions nearby) that pool can become overwhelming, but the same rules apply: some things fit, others don't. Everything is read, everything is considered; everything, however, cannot be published.

This does not mean, contrary to letters we've received, that we're taking sides with certain groups on campus, or pushing particular ideas more than others. This does not mean, as similar letters have stated, that we're pushing out "serious" issues in favor of more light-hearted fare. Both appear on these pages, and both have their place. Not everyone enjoys reading straightforward political pieces, or columns detailing the Mid-East crisis. In the same turn, not everyone enjoys the pieces intended as parody, that present themselves as, at the very least, attempts to bend the structure a bit. The responsibility of the paper is to offer, best as it can, both. To demand one exclusively over another is to ignore a large majority – a group that exists whether or not you butt into it.

One letter we received read, in part, "I find it irresponsible for the Collegian to publish on their papers that they are looking for "people to write for ED/OP" as if they are in need of them and then to refuse to publish or take severe amounts of times to publish submitted articles." The author of this letter went on to suggest we also reject "frivolous" columns. In other words, anything that doesn't fall into his/her own standard.

The Collegian, as we say day after day, is always soliciting student-penned pieces. Always. Why limit our options? Why dampen the student voice? It's absurd to think any publication would clamp off its readership in favor of a more manageable volume of mail. Every note we receive molds the paper in some way, published or not.

The aforementioned letter concluded with this: "The Collegian needs to manage its Ed/Op pages in a more responsible way, and this includes being selective about what articles and topics are spoken about in the page."

I absolutely agree. We do need to be selective. That means drawing equally from every submission, however, not just the ones a particular reader may want to see more of. If that were to happen, we'd not only be limiting our voice but, more thoughtlessly, yours.

Matt Despres is the Editorial/Opinion editor.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

ED/OP LIVES ON THE OPINIONS OF THE UMASS COMMUNITY. SHARE YOURS AT COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM.

Shaking up the faith

DAN LAMOTHE

Flashback with me for a minute.

It's spring and sometime after Easter, perhaps eight or nine years ago. I'm sitting around the table in the church hall of my parish. There are eight or nine other altar boys around me and three or four piping hot pizzas.

Father Bob is sitting at the end of the table, joking with us about football and schoolwork. The pizza get-together is his idea, a way of saying thank you to the kids for putting in so much hard work and making Holy Week a success in our parish.

Father says grace, and we dig in. We plow through the pizza, devouring perhaps ten pieces each while guzzling down gallons of soda. We're loud. We're boisterous. We joke around and yell and laugh like any group of boys ranging from ages nine to 14 would. Afterwards, we go outside in the schoolyard and play football.

This is the epitome of the typical Catholic parish. This is the typical relationship between Catholic boys and their priest. The kids trust him. The kids respect him. The parents trust him.

Don't get me wrong. Human beings have their flaws. Father Bob was forgetful. He gave dreadfully boring homilies at times. He had a short temper. Father Bob had our respect though, and played a part in us growing up in the Catholic faith.

This memory and others like it have floated through my head in the past few weeks, as another "priest" has been plastered through the news. They called him Father Jack. He, too, had the trust of his parishioners. The admiration of the kids. It went with his job. Catholics are brought up to trust the men in clergy.

Why should they now? In all seriousness, how many Catholics in the Boston Diocese right now are questioning their faith? What do you do when your spiritual leader turns out to be a pedophile?

The sad twisted tale of Father Geoghan boggles the mind. Six parishes. Thirty years. Potentially, as many as 130 people have been hurt by this monster.

Maybe it's the thought that it could have happened to me that angers me. I was in direct contact with my parish priests occasionally from kindergarten on, since I went to the parish's Catholic school. I was in direct contact on a regular basis from third grade on as an altar server.

Kids don't ask for these kinds of things to happen. They just do. I'd have known right away that what was going on was wrong. Mom and Dad raised a smart kid like that. But could I have stopped it? I'd like to think that the dear ol' priest probably even would have been on the receiving end of a swift kick to the nuts, because that's what I was taught to do in a situation like that. But how can I speculate? What do you do when one of the people you look up to the most does something like that?

"Kids shouldn't have trust issues with the resident man of God."

But once it happens, it happens. It can change a kid's life. Kids shouldn't have trust issues with the resident man of God. That's the biggest reason that it's damned foolish that they allowed this to happen. The Catholic Church doesn't have the numbers it did thirty years ago – it can't afford to turn off the people it has left.

Priests, obviously, are regular people in a robe. Sometimes that's easy to forget. It means that they screw up just like the rest of us. That means that they try to hide things that are embarrassing. And it means there are plenty of them just aren't right in the head. They're just like the rest of us.

The one subtle difference, though, is that robe. With that robe comes the respect of a parish. Maybe its naive, but I'd say that a fair share of Catholic parishioners would like to think that their priest is a good man at heart and feel like they can trust him. That trust been betrayed by Geoghan, and for that, he's been defrocked. I have hard time feeling bad if he gets worse later.

It's time for everyone involved to take some responsibility. For the kids' sake, this just can't happen anymore. Parents need to take some responsibility and realize that one cannot trust their kids with a priest simply because he is a priest.

An organization is only as good as the leaders in charge of it. Right now, it's painfully obvious that many of the leaders in the Catholic Church have their priorities totally messed up. The leaders of the Catholic Church need to be held accountable for transferring dangerous pedophiles from one parish of unsuspecting people to another, and they need to resolve that when they know there are problems, they will not let it happen again. The safety of America's and the church's future (the kids) should take precedence over scandal any day.

People should come first. Always. Politics and an unwillingness to face embarrassment don't belong as a part of the equation. Things only get worse when they get ignored. It better start changing now.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

Toys can't fix the world

ROB SCHULZE

So I'm at my job at the toy store, putting new batteries in one of the display toys, when a nicely dressed, middle-aged white woman politely asks me if I can get a Barbie styling head off of a high shelf for her. I fetch the ladder, climb up, and see that, in addition to regular old Barbie, we also have a lot of black ones. I ask what I think is a fair question:

"Do you have a racial preference?"

She freezes. She doesn't really answer me, kind of muttering through her fixed smile. This lasts for a couple seconds and so, being the experienced retail man that I am, I take the different models of disembodied Barbie heads (which are, by the way, really creepy) and show them to her. There's the classic Barbie, the black Barbie, and a white Barbie with black hair.

"Oh! I'll take that one," she said with obvious relief, pointing to the last option. "That's my racial preference. I'll take the brunette. My daughter's a brunette!"

So I rung her up the toy and went back to my batteries, but the whole incident got me thinking.

I mean, the woman obviously wanted a white Barbie for her white daughter. I knew it, she knew it, and the goddamn Rumble Robots across the room knew it. Why couldn't she just say it? Anyone who defines "brunette" as a category of race is definitely trying to cop out of something.

Minority customers have no problem asking me where the black dolls are. Quite the opposite: it we only have the white model of a certain doll in stock they will make their displeasure known in no uncertain terms, and they're absolutely right. Everyone should be able to buy toys that look like them. Why

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Compiled by Nick Pezolato Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

FILM SCREENINGS

UMASS – The Augusta Savage Gallery will be hosting a video screening of Ann Chen's "The Chinatown Files." It tells the story of Chinese Americans who were "hunted down, jailed, and deported for deportation" during the McCarthy era witch hunts. The event is on February 27 at 7 p.m. and is free for all that wish to come.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – The Student Union Gallery will show the exhibit "Marlene Dietrich: A Legend in Photographs" through February 22.

UMASS – There will be a showing of Terri Priest and her works of contrasting colors and optical illusions at the Hampden Gallery, Monday through Thursday 12 p.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5. The exhibition is free to the public and will run until March 4.

UMASS – An exhibition of work by eight UMass undergraduate students will be on display until Sunday, February 24 at Central Gallery. The gallery is free to the public and open for viewing Mondays through Thursdays 5 to 6 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5.

UMASS – The Augusta Savage Gallery will be displaying works of Pioneer Valley self-taught artists from Wednesday, February 13 to Thursday, March 14. It includes paintings, sculpture, photography, drawing and collage. It is available for viewing Monday and Tuesday between 1 and 7 p.m. and Wednesday through Friday 1 to 5 p.m.

UMASS – The University Gallery will be showing the exhibition "The Culture of Violence." It showcases works by twenty artists who explore violence in the U.S. and controversial issues of race, hate crimes, youth violence, and terrorism. It is available for viewing between the hours of 11 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. during Tuesday through Friday and 2 to 5 p.m. on Sunday. The showing is free to all.

AMHERST COLLEGE – The Mead Art Museum at Amherst College will present "Casa Manana: The Morrow Collection of Mexican Popular Art." The works exhibit the importance of Mexican folk Art in American culture. Amherst College alumni Dwight W. Morrow and his wife Elizabeth Cutter have donated the works of art. It runs through Saturday, April 21.

THEATER

UMASS – New WORLD Theater is sponsoring the critically acclaimed group Urayoan and their production of Slanguage. The show fuses poetry, theater, jazz, hip-hop, p-funk, and down home blues as it focuses on the different parts of the globe's community. It will be performed on the Bowker Auditorium on Wednesday, February 27 and Thursday, February 28. Tickets are $15 for the general public and $8 for seniors and $5 for students. For more information call (413) 545-2511 and 1-800-999-UMASS.

AMHERST COLLEGE – Residential Arts, a program of the Fine Arts Center will bring Urban Bush Women to the five college community for a three-day residency. The residency, which explores culture as an expression of social change, will be at the Kirby Theater at Amherst College on March 5 and March 6 at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $20 for general admission and $5 for Five College Students. For more information call (413) 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMASS.

CONCERTS AND DANCE RECITALS

UMASS – The Department of Music and Dance will sponsor a program that will showcase new works by UMass faculty and student composers. The concert will be on Friday, February 22 at 7:30 p.m. in the Newman Center Chapel. The show is free and all are welcome.

UMASS – On February 21, 22, and 23 – The Five College Dance Department Faculty Concert will take place featuring the premiet of a commissioned work by Jawole Willa Jo Zollar. The event will take place in Bowker Auditorium in the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. General admission is $12 and for students, seniors and children $5. For reservations call 413-545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMASS.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Five College Music Departments present the premiere of Pulitzer Prize winning composer Lewis Spratlans Duma Nobis Pacem: An Entreaty for Peace in the Middle East on Saturday, February 23 at 7:30 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College. The show is free and open to the public.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

UMASS – Novelist political activist and poet Marge Piercy will be in the Cape Cod Lounge in the UMass Student Union on Thursday, February 21 at 7:30 p.m. She will be reading and signing her new memoir Sleeping With Cats. The book tells the story of her struggle from being raised unappreciated in a poor working class family in Detroit and her trials to becoming one of the top voices for women's rights. The event is free to the public and all are welcome to attend.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Music Department presents Owen Jander, Professor Emeritus at Wellesley College, who will lecture on the Orpheus legend as interpreted by Beethoven in the Adante con moto of the fourth Piano Concerto. Monica Ikkac and the Smith College Chamber Orchestra will perform the piece. The event will be on February 21 at 4 p.m. in Sweeney Concert Hall at Sage Hall and is free and open to the public.

AMHERST – Poet Ellen Dore Watson will be reading from her new book of poetry called Ladder Music. The event will take place on Wednesday March 13 at 7 p.m.

AUDITIONS

The Country Players will be holding auditions for three one-act plays. The auditions will be held on Saturday, February 23 at the Northfield Church in Northfield from 6 to 7:30 p.m. and on Sunday February 24 at the Shea Theater in Turners Falls from 2 to 3:30 p.m. For more information call Jeanne Closson at (413) 498-2205.

COURTESY PHOTO/MERIAN

Author, poet and social activist Marge Piercy will read from her new memoir, Sleeping with Cats, tonight in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union at 7:30 p.m.

Tonight, author and poet Marge Piercy will be reading from and signing copies of her new memoir, Sleeping with Cats. The reading will take place at the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union at 7:30 p.m., followed by a question and answer session.

Piercy has authored 15 volumes of poetry and 15 novels, including City of Darkness City of Light, Women on the Edge of Time, Gone to Soldiers and He, She, and It. But, more then an author, Piercy has been a dedicated social activist throughout her life.

An avid reader and writer from a young age, she was born into a poor, working class family in Detroit. However, she persevered in her education, and attended the University of Michigan. But she found it difficult to reconcile her beliefs, sexuality and ambitions with the school's traditional image of what women were supposed to be.

Piercy has known hardship. After receiving her M.A., she struggled to get her work published. While writing, she was also politically active (including being involved in Students for a Democratic Society and a supporter of women's rights) and lived in such places as France, Chicago and Brooklyn.

She is now a successful, influential and established author. She resides in Wellfleet, Cape Cod, with her five cats and her husband, writer Ira Wood, with whom she has co-authored the manual So You Want To Write.

Sleeping with Cats is, Piercy says, "primarily about me, but my life has a spine of cats, and it is also about them."

Along with chronicling her life of writing, it chronicles her life of being a fiercely independent woman in a time when being so was far from an easy feat. Each of the chapters also ends with an original poem.

—Julie Burrell

■ metal

continued from page 5

between a fine entry in the Slayer canon and the much more current and lively "Chop Suey!," I'll take the latter.

Best Hard Rock Performance
"Smooth Criminal" Alien Ant Farm
"Crawling" Linkin Park
"Your Disease" Saliva
"Renegades of Funk" Rage Against The Machine
"Alive" P.O.D.

Someone stab me in the eye. This is the sorriest bunch of nominees I have ever seen. In a parallel universe, this is Grammy's sarcastic way of showing how pathetic radio "rock" is nowadays by spotlighting it for ridicule. Taken at face value, the inclusion of TWO cover songs is simply laughable, while choosing between Linkin Park, P.O.D. and Saliva as the 'best' of hard rock is a tear worthy mission.

Best Rock Album
Hybrid Theory Linkin Park
All That You Can't Leave Behind U2
Stories From the City, Stories From the Sea P.J. Harvey
Gold Ryan Adams
Just Push Play Aerosmith

Wow. Why doesn't Grammy just drive around in a van, stop at kids' garages, and pull the plugs right out of their amps? There's certainly no point in starting a band when flaccid dinosaurs like Aerosmith's latest bomb gets the recognition of the 'best rock' of the year. Then again, if ya care what Grammy thinks, there are bigger problems ahead...

Linkin Park is beyond out of the realm of consideration here, but the remaining three are all surprisingly solid picks, so it comes down to your personal preference. Always a big sucker for girls that rawk, I'll be rootin' for Polly Jean.

Galaxy Bounce

Slingshot (the band) @ Bailey Auditorium on Wednesday, February 20 and Thursday, February 28.

The Vagina Monologues: Spread the word

Vagina. Say it. Vagina.

The Vagina Monologues will run through this weekend (except tonight) at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Playwright Eve Ensler toured the unconventional night of theater via interviews with women. She asked questions like "what would your vagina wear"? But, she also delved into profound and sometimes disturbing issues. For instance, one monologue examines how systematic rape is used as a tool of war. Sexual violence against women is addressed. One woman talks about reclaiming the word "cunt" while another talks about being coerced into allowing her vagina to be her husband.

Not surprisingly, The Vagina Monologues has run into its share of criticism.

"It's not anti-male it's pro-female," said director Emily Ackman responding to some of the common critiques that she has heard. "And it's not obscene. It's positive, uplifting and affirming."

"Some women and men are uncomfortable with issues surrounding vaginas," said senior Communication major Tyita Dorsey, who is an actor in the Monologues. "This play helps people deal with and confront those issues."

Ackman adds, "and it will help you feel more comfortable about saying the word vagina."

All proceeds will benefit Safe Passages, a Northampton shelter for battered women and Afghan women who have suffered under the rule of the Taliban. The organization that will receive the latter portion of these funds will be announced.

The Vagina Monologues will be presented tonight, Fri. and Sat. night at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Advance tickets are available at Tix Unlimited located in the Student Union, and are $5 for students. Student tickets will be available at the door for $5.

Vagina. Say it. Love it. Vagina.

WESTERN MASS' ONLY HONDA DEALER TO WIN HONDA'S PRESIDENT'S AWARD 2001 2001
You Can't Be #1 Unless You Sell For Less!
2002 Honda Civic LX
2002 Honda Accord LX
PRESIDENT'S AWARD
Northampton Honda
2 GREAT ADDRESSES
171 KING STREET, NORTHAMPTON • WWW.NORTHAMPTONHONDA.COM
OPEN: Mon.-Thurs. 9-8, Fri. & Sat. 9-6, Sun. 12-4
(413) 586-8626
CLEAR HOTLINE: 1-800-733-3206 • www.creditoncemore.com
OPEN SUNDAY 12-4
MSRP $16,350 Discount -1,355 SALE PRICE $14,995
Attention! 2.9% Financing on Civic
MSRP $20,130 Discount -2,135 SALE PRICE $17,995
C06652 Auto., 4 Dr., P. Windows, P. Locks, CD, Cruise, Fold Down Rear Seat

FSP National CO-ED Honors Fraternity
Scholarship Fellowship Leadership
Informational Nights February 19 and 21 at 8pm in the Student Union Commonwealth Room.
Minimum GPA of 3.2 required.
Questions? Email aileen_dh@hotmail.com

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
BEER WINE LIQUOR ICE
KEGS CIGARS CLOVES
CIGARETTES TOBACCO
Amex, Disc, MC, Visa, Debit Accepted
Home of the 50 lb bag of ICE
Largest selection of Cigars in Hadley and Amherst.
Special Orders Welcome

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

OOO WEE to K.D.

Best there is, was, will be

COURTESY MURRAY CLOSE

Bruce Willis climbs to the top of the World Wrestling Federation in Hart's War, a biography of Bret "The Hitman" Hart.

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

HART'S WAR
Starring Bruce Willis, Colin Farrell
Directed by Gregory Hoblit
Now playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

"I don't know about you, but it always makes me sure when I see those war pictures...all about flying leathernecks and submarine patrols and frogmen and guerillas in the Philippines. What gets me is that there never wins a movie about POWs — about prisoners of war. —Cookie Stalag 17

Well Cookie, they heard you.

Hollywood has made a POW film, but it's actually more of a courtroom drama, complete with a racial tension plot. The movie pays homage to the two great POW films (Stalag 17 and The Great Escape) while developing its own plot.

Lieutenant Tommy Hart (Colin Farrell) is a second year law student whose Senator daddy gets him a nice safe assignment behind the lines of WWII. He is then sent to Stalag VI-A – well, the movie version of the camp anyway – and meets the Senior American Officer, Colonel William McNamara (Bruce Willis) of the First Infantry Division. McNamara is a West Point man, son of a West Point man. McNamara assigns Hart to an enlisted men's barracks, saying there isn't any room in the officers' barracks.

Hart is soon joined by two new other officers – lieutenants Lincoln Scott and Lamar Archer. Scott and Archer are Tuskegee Airmen, black fighter pilots. Of course, the barracks chief in the enlisted men's barracks is a racist named Bedford, and lets Archer and Scott know just how much he hates them. He plants a weapon in Archer's bunk and rats to the guards, who drag Archer out of the barracks and shoot him.

Scott has now lost his only friend, and worse, Bedford is telling the Germans all kinds of things; like where the officer's hidden radio is.

So when Bedford turns up dead and Scott is found standing over the body, the Nazis and Bedford's friends are just itching to kill him.

Hart is assigned to defend Scott at the court martial. Thus begins the courtroom drama, which is actually well written and acted, with the appropriate amount of give and take between the prosecution and defense.

There's something more though, and Hart's investigations turns up not only the real reason why Bedford died, but also a secret that people are more than willing to kill for.

First of all, this is yet another war movie with amazing technical effects. Hollywood is getting a lot of things right when it comes to the look and feel of war. They're still getting a lot of things wrong, but hey, it's progress. The pyrotechnics are good, as is the dogfight between American and German fighters. It looks so great that it's almost impossible to tell how it was done.

Willis is, of course, good at playing a tough guy. He's not exactly playing John McClane goes to war, but he's still eating nails and asking for seconds.

Farrell is good in the role of the clean-cut idealist, and Romanian Marcel Iures is cold and calculating as the Nazi commandant.

It is difficult to praise this movie, simply because it doesn't show us anything that hasn't already been done at one point or another in other movies. While the cast and crew did a very good job, the story just was not compelling enough to seem fresh. It was as if someone handed Hollywood John Katzenbach's novel of the same name and tried to make a movie out of almost all of it. Instead of deciding what it wants to be (either a POW intrigue story like Stalag 17, an escape tale a la The Great Escape or a legal thriller such as A Few Good Men) the film tries do all of them. Instead of doing one brilliantly, it does an average job at all three.

It's not a bad film; it's simply a film. It's a good way to spend a couple of hours, but if you're looking for a new and solid effort from Hollywood, then you may want to try another screen.

■ Grammy

continued from page 5

break your neck to. And you shouldn't, of course. It's just that we have this huge Grammy cover page to fill and Mr. Delano, the Arts Editor, knew I could fill up several lines with Grammy-bashing wordplay.

Alas, fo' schnizzel eat a pretzel.

All critical hyperbole in this world falls back to opinion, anyway. I mean the only reason you're still reading this is because, for some outlandish reason, you want me to piss you off.

You want me to say that you're an idiot for listening to that new Mobb Deep jam, "Hey Love," over and over.

You want me to say that DMX should have joined Mase in retirement after his first album.

You want me to explain that Pain really isn't Love.

And you want me to tell you that Ludacris doesn't even know his own area code.

You want to get mad at me. You want to get all riled up because deep in that thick skull of yours, you know you're listening to complete and utter nonsense.

The Roots? Who are they? You Got, what? Common's nightlight, huh? Next Wednesday, Jay-Z will win twice, for "Izzo (H.O.V.A)" and The Blueprint. OutKast will win for "Ms. Jackson" and Eve will win for "Let Me Blow Ya Mind" which features Gwen Stefani.

Now listen up. Let's do some connecting. Last year at UMass-Dartmouth's Spring Concert, OutKast opened up for The Roots. Read carefully; they were the opening act (shutup. The AreaOne tour was way too commercial). Now, Eve (an idiot for signing a Ruff Ryders contract) delivered the female verse on The Roots' Grammy-winning song "You Got Me." And then there's Jay-Z who begged The Roots band to back him in his MTV Unplugged set, and sounded so incredibly better for it.

I don't know. Just a thought.

■ music

continued from page 5

nominee that people are glad was just nominated and not overlooked, so even if it doesn't win, people can still be glad it was one of the contenders. Mania Mia! has a lot going for it, from the huge box-office success on Broadway to the catchy rock-n'-roll songs, and despite last year's winner being Elton John's Aida, the true victor will most likely be The Producers, one of the biggest things to hit Broadway since pavement.

Hands down, Moulin Rouge should take the gold in the Best Compilation Soundtrack category. It's got some tough competition, from O Brother, Where Art Thou? which made bluegrass music kind of cool again, and Shrek, a soundtrack which gives further testimony to the film's wide appeal (who can say that they don't love that Smash Mouth rendition of The Monkees' "I'm A Believer"). The Best Score Soundtrack is equally compiled of big honchos, from John Williams and his nod for A.I.: Artificial Intelligence to Danny Elfman and Planet of the Apes. I'd love to see it go to Rachel Portman, however, one of the only female film composers around, whose Chocolat score was just as tasty as the title of the movie.

Finally, in Best Original Song for a Movie or TV Show, it's surprisingly drab. Diane Warren is, of course, on the list (so what else is new?) for penning the Pearl Harbor anthem "There You'll Be," plus Sting's "My Funny Friend & Me" from The Emperor's New Groove and Tan Dun's oddly appealing "A Love Before Time," from the blockbuster Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon. It's a disappointing bunch of contenders overall, neglecting some of the best songs from the movies of the past year (like Randy Newman's contribution to Monsters, Inc., "If I Didn't Have You"). When it comes to this last award, I'll have no qualms with seeing it glossed over after a commercial break.

Britney has she or hasn't she? Who cares?

T.V. addiction, Britney's lament

Think you might be addicted to television? Chances are that you're addicted to drugs, sex and alcohol also. Well, not exactly, but a new study by Scientific American finds that "people who watch higher than average amounts of television exhibit similar behaviors to people who suffer from other forms of addiction."

The study was conducted by Michael Kubey, director of the Center for Media Studies at Rutgers University in New Jersey, and Mihaly Csikszentmihalyi, a psychology professor at Claremont Graduate University in California. According to the study subjects were given beepers and paged several times a day. Those who were watching television described being "relaxed and passive." The subject's relaxation "ended after they turned the set off." The study theorizes that "viewers may be conditioned to know their relaxation will stop when they turn off their TV's, so they continue watching." The mystery of why people fall asleep in front of the television can now be explained. Is there no end to the good that science can bring?

But alas, watching tons of television isn't a stress cure all. The study concludes that people who watch more than four hours of TV a day enjoy the experience less than those that watch two hours or less. It also concludes that self-described TV addicts "also report getting bored more easily than others and are less likely to interact with others."

Britney Loses Virginity

She may be a virgin in real life, but in the make believe land of HBO's "Sex In The City," the Britney pop princess has certainly begun a "man-eating tango." In the [illegible] series, Zap2it.com reports, Spears will be portraying the [illegible] niece of Samantha." In the [illegible] "Samantha gets a shock when her niece, who she thinks [illegible] seduces and steals his best [illegible]."

Spears, who is engaged to N'Sync's Justin Timberlake, has maintained publicly that she is saving herself for marriage to have sex. However, The New York Post reported a few months ago that Spears has never heard at a European Awards show bragging about its great sex that she and Justin have. Britney's real sexual status now ranks alongside whether her breasts are real or not as two biggest mysteries of modern times. Bigfoot, who lost IDs and the Bermuda Triangle round out the top five.

X-Treme Return

David Duchovny will reprise his role as F.B.I. agent Mulder during [illegible] season series finale of "The X Files" set for May 19th. The show's [illegible] website states that "the final episode of the series will examine many of the pieces involved in the long-running mythology that has constructed throughout the show's nine seasons." Maybe they will actually determine whether aliens exist or not. Oh wait, they already did that six years ago.

Survivor Scam?

It wouldn't be possible, this Survivor wasn't totally 100% legitimate, right? Well according to a [illegible] on the Internet, the fast [illegible] of the game was not. TV Guide has reported that "Survivor fans" on the internet have pointed out that an alleged mistake of one of the show's [illegible] challenges may have tarnished the entire [illegible] sessions. Apparently when [illegible] female player had [illegible] Kim. I won by N'Sync's [illegible]." However, it turned out [illegible] Rex answered [illegible] that he [illegible] may have been right, but [illegible] the final ruling, so I could have made my prediction that Rex would win a reality.

TV Guide also reported that an [illegible] Internet group making [illegible] allegations is claiming that CBS provided "monetary settlements" to some of the contestants due to [illegible] infraction.

Information from TV Guide.com and zap2it.com was used in this article.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member.

Tube Note with Kurt Polesky

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT & MORE!
$500.00 BONUS
JOIN OUR TEAM OF SELECT ENTERTAINERS AND RECEIVE A $500 CASH BONUS!!*
*TERMS AND CONDITIONS APPLY
BEAUTIFUL PEOPLE ONLY NEED APPLY!
(413) 532-3621

CINEMARK
The best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
36 Russell St 413-567-4233
FRIDAY 2/15-THURSDAY 2/21/2002
DIGITAL SOUND • DOLBY SURROUND • ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Hart's War(R) 12:50 4:45 7:45 10:40*
John Q(PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
Collateral Damage(R) 12:40 4:30 7:40 10:20*
Big Fat Liar(PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:10 9:50*
Super Troopers(R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15*
Crossroads(PG13) 12:00 2:15 4:35 7:05 9:45*
Return to Neverland(G) 12:30 2:30 4:40 7:15 9:30*
I Am Sam(PG13) 12:30 4:15 10:25
The Count Of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:30 7:00 10:00
Black Hawk Down(R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
The Royal Tenenbaums(R) 12:20 7:50
A Beautiful Mind(PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
Lord Of the Rings(PG13) 3:45 7:30*
Senior Movie - 2/21/02- Collateral Damage
Senior Movie - 2/7/02 - I Am Sam doors open at 11:45am
* no passes, supersavers
Tickets & Showtimes Subject to cinemark.com

UMass BRIEFS:

Women's water polo

The Massachusetts women's water polo team (3-4) this week end got back on track this week end as it went 3-0 at the Princeton Invitational. On Saturday, Feb. 16, the Minutewomen downed George Washington, 12-5, and No. 16 Indiana, 10-9. This after noon, they topped Bucknell, 8-6.

Seniors Megan Perry and Megan Thompson led a balanced attack against GW, scoring three goals apiece. Junior Amy Black and freshman Melissa Goldberg each had two goals. Other scorers were juniors Kelli Chassy and Mattie Sewell. Freshman goal tender Amelia Degenkolb made four saves in the first half, while sophomore Emily Knight recorded seven in the second half.

"This was a really good game for us because the perimeter people started producing," coach Donna Heinel said. "In Stanford, all of our scoring was from the inside so it was nice to see some outside production."

The Minutewomen improved to 3-0 filleting against Indiana with a dramatic 10-9 win last night. Degenkolb made a big save with just five seconds left in the game to preserve the upset win. Thompson recorded another hat trick, while Chassy, Perry, Sewell and Black each scored two goals apiece. Degenkolb made seven saves.

"In goal, Amelia Degenkolb played the entire game and was clutch in the fourth quarter with five big saves, including having the entire last minute played in our end," Heinel said.

UMass upended Bucknell, 8-6, Sunday to complete the weekend sweep. Sewell and Chassy each had a hat trick, while Goldberg and freshman Diana Campbell scored once. Knight made 11 saves in net.

"Once again, Mattie Sewell stepped up and delivered her usual two to three goals a game," Heniel said. "She has really become a force offensively.

"We played a little flat, but we know that we need to play more consistant offensive play if we intend to fulfill our goal of winning the Eastern Championship. I am very proud of the team this weekend and was glad to see them walk away from three tough games at 3-0."

The Minutewomen will host No. 19 Brown and Yale this week end at the Amherst College Pool. The game with Brown is at 1:00 p.m., while the Yale contest will begin at 3:00 p.m.

Men's indoor track

The Atlantic 10 named Junior Kwesi Trimpong-Boateng first team All-Conference for his performance Feb. 16 at the 2002 Verizon Atlantic 10 Indoor Track and Field Championships held at the University of Rhode Island.

Trimpong-Boateng won the 55M dash for the sixth time this season with a time of 6.34 seconds in the preliminary results. He then set a school record in the finals of 6.30 seconds which ties the A-10 Championship record set during the 1998-2000 school year by Andre Davis of Virginia Tech.

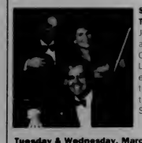
His time of 6.30 seconds in the 55M dash breaks his previous school record set Jan. 19, in the 2002 New England Challenge Cup at the Boston University Armory. Prior to this season, Adrian Zullo held the fastest time in the event with a time of 6.40 seconds set during the 1998-2000 season.

Trimpong-Boateng also finished third in the 200M dash with a time of 22.59 seconds garnering UMass six points as the Minutemen finished fourth out of seven teams with 123 total points. The Maroon and White got great team balance scoring in all 19 events, setting 20 season-best performances, and utilizing 26 different people to accumulate their team score.

"What a great championship meet performance from Kwesi," said head coach Ken O'Brien. "This is his first season of indoor track and he is getting better every meet. This honor has not come easy as he suffered a serious hamstring pull at the spring A-10 meet, and a stress fracture over the summer. He has been diligent with his rehab and training, and this achievement is a great reward for his efforts."

Courtesy Media Relations

FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
SPRING 2002



Where the Arts and Audiences Come Together
Tickets only $5, $7, $15 for five college students

Saturday, February 23
Academy of Ancient Music
Christopher Hogwood, Conductor
Robert Levin, fortepiano soloist
A night of Mozart! Renowned for their baroque and classical performance style including playing instruments of the appropriate period, the Academy of Ancient Music gives audiences the experience of hearing music as it might have sounded at the time it was written. Their program includes the Symphony No. 35 in D Major, and Piano Concertos No. 21 in C Major, K. 467 and No. 24 in C Minor, K. 491
Concert Hall at 8pm
Sponsored by TIAA CREF
With generous support from the Frederick C. Tillis Endowment for the Arts

Wednesday, February 27
Children of Uganda
Tour of Light 2002
With the abundant vitality of East African music and dance – infectious rhythms, quicksilver movements, powerful drums, lyric flutes, songs of joy and hope – the award-winning Children of Uganda come to the Fine Arts Center. Hailed as "first rate" and "inspiring" by The New York Times, the group is composed of 18 orphans – ages six to seventeen – who serve as ambassadors for the 1.4 million other AIDS and war related orphans living in Uganda.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by WRNX 100.9FM and FamilyFun Magazine

Saturday, March 9
The Kalichstein-Laredo-Robinson Trio
Joseph Kalichstein, piano, Jaime Laredo, violin, and Sharon Robinson, cello
Celebrating 25 years together, the Kalichstein Laredo-Robinson Trio is one of the best-blended, most sensitive and intelligent piano trios in the world today. Join them for a special program titled "Two Faces of Struggle: Beethoven and Shostakovich." Bowker Auditorium at 8pm

Tuesday & Wednesday, March 12 & 13
The Who's Tommy, The Musical
It began as a revolutionary rock album throwing off dazzling sparks such as "Pinball Wizard," "We're Not Going to Take It," "See Me, Feel Me" and "Acid Queen." This infamous tale of the "deaf, dumb and blind kid" speaks to each generation. This latest touring production has been hailed as "the latest, and maybe the best version of one of rock music's grand creations."
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Florence Savings Bank, The Daily Hampshire Gazette and WRNX 100.9FM

For tickets call: 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
or go on-line to www.fineartscenter.com

Kuiper

continued from page 12

years old. My brother was a goalie and my parents were really eager."

But defense hasn't always been Kuiper's cup of tea. Like the majority of young players, he started his puck life up front and moved back later in his passion.

"I played forward for a little while in Novice – that's when you're, like, seven years old – and I also spent one year in Pee Wee and I did pretty well, but I didn't think I have the puckhanding abilities or the agility to be a good forward. I picked defense because I like to read the play."

But defense has seemed a natural fit for No. 37, as he has emerged as one of the best defensive players for the Minutemen. He was selected to the MSBC Holiday Tournament All-Tourney team over winter break, where the Minutemen finished second.

"He's a very strong player defensively and he's gotten better in all areas," Gilligan said. "He's not an overly aggressive player, but he's strong and he skates strong. Being a defensive player, a lot of the time your play is neutralizing, and there he's very good. He's really a difficult player to play against because of those attributes."

This year, Kuiper has played a large portion of the season alongside freshman Sean Regan, and the two have been a couple of the more pleasant surprises for the Maroon and White. The two are a combined minus-10 on a team that has more than its fair share of players deep in the red.

"I've enjoyed playing with Sean," Kuiper said. "This year Coach put me with Sean and we've played well together. He likes to keep [defense pairs] together, so we'll probably play together next year as well. We've played pretty solid in our own zone most of the year."

***

This season has been a dismal one for the Minutemen, as they have played the third-hardest schedule in the nation and played as well as, if not better than, many of the teams on their slate, but have come away with just a 8-20-2 record. Of those 20 losses, exactly half have come by one goal. Still, the young defenseman who came to Amherst with hopes of turning a program around is not phased by the results.

"To be honest, it's really frustrating, but in Hawkesbury, I have to say our team sucked there," he said. "We were brutal – we lost all the time and we had coaching problems, but I learned a lot then. That's made this easy, because I know how to handle the losing. What I do is if I have a bad game, the next day I come to the rink and just work harder."

Hard work is something that is easily noticeable in the 20-year-old. Those paying visits to the Mullins Center practice rink probably don't know his name, but the tall, imposing figure of Nick Kuiper is usually one of the last Minutemen off the ice.

"I just love the game," he said. "I love to come to the rink and practice. I love to play and the thing I love the most is to see myself improve and when I know I'm getting better I want to come to the rink more often. I've played it since I was so young and I want to play it when I leave here, that's for sure."

According to Gilligan, playing after college is a distinct possibility for Kuiper.

"We've talked to NHL scouts and they're always asking about him. He's one of the players we mention to watch because he has the physical attributes that very few players have. He's doing 100 percent of what he can do to be the best player he can."

But during a season in which his team is playing well below .500 hockey, a player who was supposed to be going to a top-notch Central Collegiate Hockey Association school must be wishing he was elsewhere, right?

"We played teams like Michigan St. and St. Cloud, and of course those teams are ranked really high, but I felt the rink and honestly said, 'I don't think I'd trade this in to go there.' It sounds like a lie, but I honestly thought about it. I really like it here. I like the guys. I like everything. I wouldn't trade this in for any other school and that's the truth."

So with the potential for a bright future in front of him and in the stretch run of a playoff hunt, Kuiper sets his attention on the issue of present – making the Hockey East playoffs, for which a victory over eighth-place Merrimack is certainly a necessity. Earlier in the season, the Minutemen went 0-1-1 in a home-and-home set with MC, a two-game series that the sophomore missed due to a concussion. Kuiper treats the Warriors just like he would any other victim – with no pity.

"We're both in the basement. I was so upset that I had to miss those games," Kuiper said. "We play them in the last game and that's the game that I'm excited for. We've got something to prove – that we don't want to be the last-place team. I would love to play Merrimack and kick their ass – that's it, just kick their ass."

It was an unfortunate injury to Nick Kuipers (above) that landed him at UMass. Good fortune for the defensemen and for the program.

LOSING IT:
False Hope and Fat Profits in the Diet Industry
An evening with author Laura Fraser
A reformed dieter and ex-bulimic, Laura Fraser talks about her journey from battling an eating disorder and, after recovering, taking on the American diet industry in an undercover investigation. She'll talk about the history of America's obsession with slenderness, and all the false hopes, scams and medical disasters that women have endured in order to attain an impossible ideal. She'll take on the paradox of why Americans are heavier than any other people, and yet diet the most, and she'll talk about some practical changes.
Monday February 25
7:30 to 9:00 pm
Campus Center
Room 174–176
A FREE TALK sponsored by University Health Services, Everywoman's Center and Five College Inc.

www.dailycollegian.com

New WORLD Theater
Save The Date!
April 12-13, 2002
INTERSECTION
FUTURE AESTHETICS
A two day gathering of convergence of theater, dance, spoken word, and the new media

Shortstop Emily Robustelli hit the Minutewomen's first home run of the season against Texas Tech in the third game of the season. More will follow.

Hoping for hospitality

Softball's elite will meet in Leadoff Classic

By Andy Vogt
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Going into its first tournament, the Massachusetts softball team was facing a big question: Would it be able to compete with the best teams in the nation? After handily dispatching Kansas, Texas, and Texas Tech, and then losing a heartbreaker 1-0 to No. 1 Arizona, the answer was a resounding yes. Now, as they head to the Leadoff Classic this weekend to clash with another batch of the nation's elite, the No. 25 Minutewomen will be looking to not only compete, but pick up a few wins along the way.

"I think overall our mentality will be up a notch, knowing what we did in Arizona," Head Coach Elaine Sortino said. "We learned from things mentally in our two losses and in our three wins, so I think we'll be able to be a little bit more capable and far more challenged by this field in terms of how we handle our game."

The Maroon and White head to Columbus, Ga. for the Classic, fresh off a quality performance in its last tournament in Tempe, Ariz. UMass will face two more formidable challenges in the Peach State, in the form of No. 14 Cal State-Fullerton on Friday and No. 2 Stanford on Saturday. The team will also take on Missouri Friday afternoon. According to Sortino, after pool play is complete, the Minutewomen will participate in a medal round with other teams invited to the tournament to determine the overall winner.

Stanford enters the Classic as arguably the most dangerous team in the field. The Cardinal is a perfect 9-0 on the young season, including two wins over No. 12 Pacific and another win over the same Cal State-Fullerton participating this weekend.

At the Fiesta Bowl Classic in Tempe, UMass received solid pitching throughout the tournament, surrendering an average of only two runs per game. Junior Kaila Holtz led the way, dominating her competition in 16.1 innings of work while giving up only one earned run. Freshman Kelli Arnold also shined in her first collegiate work, earning her first win against Texas Tech.

Lest one think the Minutewomen were engaged in tight pitching duels all weekend, they also took care of business at the plate as well. Aside from the battle with Arizona's Player of the Year Jennie Finch, the Minutewomen averaged eight hits and almost seven runs in their other four games. Center fielder Teri Rooney led the way with a blistering .533 average, totaling eight hits in five games. Five other Minutewomen hit over .300 in the five games, and shortstop Emily Robustelli notched the team's first home run of the year against Texas Tech.

Sortino said her team gained gained an abundance of valuable lessons during the Fiesta Bowl Classic and will put these lessons to use against two of the top teams in the nation.

"Our pitchers gained a lot of information... I think [they] will be a little bit more formidable," she said. "I think our hitters, having faced that field of competition, will probably be a little bit more willing to swing at pitches they probably would have taken two weeks ago.

"Because in this field of play, you're not going to find too many pitchers making mistakes over the plate. You have to be able to play the inside and outside extremities of the plate."

Sortino emphasized the necessary offensive mentality her team must have to compete with this type of opposition, saying "you have to have a tough mentality that you can manufacture a run, that you can do more than just get a hit or take one swing, hit a home run and win the game."

"I think we've worked on some things offensively to expand our opportunities," she added.

Obviously, the Minutewomen hope to emerge from the weekend victorious in each of their games. Defeating two nationally renowned programs in one weekend would definitely be a shot in the arm for any team. According to Sortino, however, the most important part of this tournament is the improvement UMass sees in its game as it moves towards the Atlantic 10 regular season.

"You hope to have a successful trip, but the greatest success is shown in 'are we a better team than we were two weeks ago?'" she said.

Leprechaun finally lucky again

Full Court Press

with Glen Straub

A feeling so consistent for so many years in the state of Massachusetts has finally made its long awaited resurgence.

After failed draft picks, player deaths, overpaid head coaches and multiple years of losing, the Boston Celtics are winning again and Celtic Pride has resurfaced among Boston sports fans.

Through the help of a new head coach, two emerging stars and a monumental attitude adjustment, the Boston Celtics have become one of the best teams in the Eastern Conference.

With a 31-23 record, the Celtics are currently third in the Eastern conference standings and second in the Atlantic division standings – five games behind the leading New Jersey Nets.

Tuesday night marked the pinnacle of the Celtics' season so far when they remarkably defeated the dominant Los Angeles Lakers, 109-108, in the Staples Center of L.A.

With some last second heroics by born-again star Antoine Walker and a little help from some very good officiating, the Celtics were able pull off their most impressive victory of the season.

The matchup of coastal juggernauts spurred flashbacks of Magic Johnson and Larry Bird butting heads in the 1980s, but this time it was Paul Pierce and Kobe Bryant in the 21st century. There is a new generation of the greatest rivalry in the history of the NBA.

The Pride is back and is embodied by the players.

On their current five-game West Coast road trip, the players have all sported green headbands as a sign of team unity.

Before Head Coach Jim O'Brien took over for Rick Pitino last season, team units among the guys who wear green and white was non-existent. Former coach Rick Pitino had no control over his team and he was unable to communicate his philosophy to anyone on the team – especially the two stars, Walker and Pierce.

Walker was always able to put up a lot of points, but, as shown by Nets points guard (and MVP front-runner) Jason Kidd, a pass can get you far in this league.

Walker has finally come to trust his teammates and the results are paying off immensely. He is truly a bonafide star.

In the victory over L.A., Walker displayed superstar play when he posted a triple-double with 30 points, 14 rebounds and 10 assists.

His running mate, Pierce, has flourished into one of the best scorers in the league. With 26.3 points per game, Pierce is currently the second-leading scorer in the NBA.

The chemistry between the dynamic duo has been the catalyst for the resurrection of the Celtic winning ways.

Despite being eight games over the .500 mark, the Celtic management is not completely satisfied.

Last night, Boston and the Phoenix Suns pulled off a five-player deal sending point guard Tony Delk and small forward Rodney Rogers to Boston for guards Joe Johnson, Randy Brown, Milt Palacio and a first round draft pick.

The deal will most definitely help Boston. Delk is a quality point-guard and he will be a perfect backup for the ailing Kenny Anderson.

Rogers was the 2000 sixth-man of the year for the Suns and he will provide much-needed offense and toughness off the bench for Boston.

The eyes of Celtics fans across New England have been glistening with the hope of the championship tradition making a comeback.

The Celtics are having a fantastic year so far, but championship thoughts are a little far-fetched.

But that's what they said about the New England Patriots.

Glen Straub is a Collegian Columnist

Crunch time for UMass, O'Brien

By Jesse Greenspan
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last time the Massachusetts women's basketball team competed against St. Bonaventure, it played one of its best games of the season, defeating the Bonnies 60-46.

Tonight, the Minutewomen will go for the season sweep in Olean, N.Y., as they try and equal SBU in the Atlantic 10 East Standings.

A UMass (8-17, 6-8 A-10) win would propel it into a tie with St. Bonaventure for fourth place, as the Bonnies have mustered a 13-12 (7-7 A-10) record thus far.

And if history does in fact repeat itself, the Maroon and White will indeed pull out the much-needed victory, as coach Joanie O'Brien has gone 16-3 lifetime against SBU. However, even though the Minutewomen shut down the potent Bonnie attack on Feb. 10, it does not mean that St. Bonaventure is short of offensive firepower.

In their last contest against Richmond, the Bonnies struggled to a hard-fought 104-95 loss to Richmond in one of the highest scoring women's basketball games of the year.

Guard Courtney Mattingly leads the squad in both scoring and rebounding, averaging 13.0 points and 6.6 boards a game. She is complimented by Stefanie Collins (10.6 PPG), who has shown moments of brilliance from the outside. Against UMass in their last meeting, the freshman guard was St. Bonaventure's only offensive bright spot, going 4-for-8 from behind the arc on the way to 14 points.

Against Richmond she was even more impressive, leading her squad with 23 points on 8-for-13 shooting.

However, on Feb. 10, the Maroon and White were able to shut down the rest of the SBU attack, as Mattingly was able to total only eight points while third-leading scorer Angela Scott (10.2 PPG) did not even score.

Meanwhile, Jennifer Butler was a dominant force inside, scoring 16 points and hauling down 18 boards. Her partner in crime down low, Nekole Smith, also stepped up her play with a 6-for-7 (13 points) shooting performance.

Throughout the year, Butler has been UMass' most consistent player, as she is leading the team in both points (13.4) and rebounds (12.0). Her rebounding total is good enough for first place in the A-10, while also putting her among the nation's elite.

Katie Nelson and Amber Sneed have been the other two important Minutewoman scorers, although both have at times struggled to find their shot. Nelson is second on the team with an 8.6 ppg average while Sneed is close behind at 8.1 ppg.

Against the Bonnies on the 10th, both players notched seven points, a shade below their average.

Today's match-up is the second-to-last regular season contest for the Maroon and White, as only A-10 west leading George Washington is remaining on the UMass slate.

After Sunday's game against the Colonials, the Minutewomen will travel to Philadelphia for the Atlantic 10 tournament, where they need to win the entire tourney in order to qualify for the NCAA tournament in March.

Tip-off time for the game against St. Bonaventure is slated for 7 p.m

ARE YOU A HIDEOUS TROLL-BABY WITH EXPLODING EYEBALLS? REGARDLESS, WRITE FOR SPORTS!

LIQUORS 44

EVERYDAY PRICING!!
DOMESTIC ½ KEGS
BUD, BUD LIGHT ..... '49
COORS LIGHT ..... '48
MICHELOB, MICH. LIGHT '49
NATURAL LIGHT & ICE ... '41
ROLLING ROCK ..... '47
MICRO BREW ½ KEGS
SIERRA NEVADA PALE '112
SAM ADAMS, ... '112
SAMPOON ..... '99
KILLIANS IRISH RED ..... '73
MAGIC HAT #9 ..... '109
*MUST BE ORDERED IN ADVANCE. ALL KEGS PLUS DEPOSIT

LITE & GENUINE DRAFT 30-12OZ CANS $17.49 + tax
BUSCH & BUSCH LIGHT 30-12OZ CANS $12.49 + tax
HARP LAGER 12PK BOTTLES $9.99 + tax
DOS EQUIS 12PK BOTTLES $9.99 + tax
PABST BLUE RIBBON 24-12OZ BAR BOTTLES $9.49 + tax
BUSCH NA 12PK CANS $5.49 + tax

FEBRUARY WINE SPECIAL
Australian WINE SALE
FEB. MARCH, MAY'S, WINDHAM, MCEY'S, CHEE, CHRISTMAS
20% OFF ANY 750ML
CK MONDAVI $11.99 + tax
GEORGES DUBOEUF $7.99 + tax
FOXHORN $5.49 + tax
CLINE CELLARS ZINFANDEL $7.99 + tax
KENWOOD SONOMA CHARDONNAY $9.99 + tax
FRANZIA 5.0L BAG IN A BOX $6.99 + tax

BACARDI RUM SILVER & GOLD 1.75L $17.99 + tax
SMIRNOFF VODKA 80 PROOF $18.99 + tax
GORDON'S GIN 1.75L $13.99 + tax
JOHN JAMESON IRISH WHISKEY 750ML $16.99 + tax
CLUNY SCOTCH 1.75L $12.99 + tax
BLACK HAUS SCHNAPPS 750ML $14.99 + tax
BARTON'S VODKA 1.75L $9.49 + tax

AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344
NORTHAMPTON 586-3007
HOLYOKE 534-4555
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
DON'T DRINK & DRIVE

LINCOLN LABORATORY
MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY
www.ll.mit.edu

Put some power behind your ideas. At MIT Lincoln Laboratory, your research and ideas will be transferred directly into the development of leading-edge, real-world applications, including air defense, space surveillance, communications and air traffic control systems.

If you are pursuing a degree in:
- ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING
- PHYSICS
- MATHEMATICS
- COMPUTER SCIENCE
- MECHANICAL ENGINEERING
- AERONAUTICS/ ASTRONAUTICS
- MOLECULAR BIOLOGY
- BIOCHEMISTRY

maybe you have the power to succeed at Lincoln Laboratory

For more information about our scheduled on-campus recruiting activities, please visit our website or your Career Services Office.

If you're looking for a way to power up your career, please forward your scannable resume by e-mail, fax or mail to: resume@ll.mit.edu; Fax: 781-981-2011; Office of Human Resources, MIT Lincoln Laboratory, Job Code CN01, 244 Wood Street, Lexington, MA 02420-9108.
An Equal Opportunity Employer; M/F/D/V. US Citizenship is required.

DISCOVER the power to innovate
CELEBRATING 50 YEARS OF INNOVATION
COLLEGE RECRUITER PROGRAM

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups

Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com.

If you are interested in studying the ancient art of Buddhist swordsmanship, please contact DeSilva Sabom-Nim at 413-684-0113.

Contact your Avon Representative at Umass. Call 883-1613 or e-mail avonerica@hotmail.co

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlink.com/realty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR SALE

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstlink.com/realty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Mazda Protege 4dr/Lx Gray 174k, excellent condition $1400.00 533-3252 Guzman@cs.umass.edu

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good. $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 866-291-1884 ext. 485.

Sell Khach Card Packets in Campus Center, Dorms, Etc. More you sell, more money you make. Call Mike 781-929-2818.

Wanted student to assist new web based business located on Cape Cod. Must have Marketing web skills, Contact Howie @ info@dashpa.com

Custodian Wanted first Congregational Church of Hadley. P/T 15 hrs/ week. Respond by e-mail kwood@crocker.com

Childcare needed for 2 children in our Amherst Home Mon. 3:15-5:15 Wed. 1:30-5:30 $8.00 an hr 253-5197.

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941) 329-6434 www.cruiseareers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary–will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE; DJ Fooze and SYB productions are now booking for spring semester, call 537-8527.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons with retired pro, Djata Bumpus. In Amherst call 413-731-1450.

ROOMATE WANTED

Cheap rent, 1 bedroom, female preferred, Colonial village bus rte 253-0920.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon; the warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is ELSI giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break Super Sale! Book your trip with StudentCity.com and save up to $100 per person to Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, Padre and Florida. Most popular student hotels including the Oasis and the Nassau Marriott Crystal Palace! Prices start at $399! Sale ends soon! CALL NOW! 1-800-293-1443 or go to StudentCity.com!

TRAVEL

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other worldwide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sunCoastvacations.com

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network

1	CBS/3
4	NBSN
5	Fox Sport NE
6	PBS/57
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	WB/20
9	HSCN Movie Channel
10	TV Guide Channel
11	FOX/61
12	ABC/40
13	NBC/22
14	International Channel
15	UMATV
16	HSCN Info Channel
17	ESPN
18	ESPN 2
19	UVC/19
20	ESPN Classic
21	Cinemax-Gravel
22	CNN
23	CNN HL
24	Weather Channel
25	Learning Channel
26	History Channel
27	A & E
28	Discovery Health
30	Food Network
31	NASA
32	Home & Garden TV
33	Travel Channel
34	Lifetime
35	CNBC
36	Tech TV
37	BET
38	UPN-38
39	USA
40	TNN
41	MTV
42	CMT
43	VH-1
44	TNT
45	TBS
46	E! Entertainment
47	Sci-Fi Channel
48	Court TV
49	Nick at Nite
50	Comedy Central
51	Cartoon Network
52	Anime Show Network
53	TV Land
54	FOX Family
55	Univision
56	Galavision
57	Telemundo
58	College TV Network
59	C-SPAN
60	C-SPAN2
61	Bloomberg Television

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 21, 2002

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Little Pandas: The New Breed		Frontline (N) (In Stereo)		Bob Marley, Rebel Music: American			This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Raymond	King	CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Agency (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Raymond	King	CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Agency (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	My Wife-Kids	According-Jim	Drew Carey	Whose Line?	Primetime Thursday		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends		Raymond		★★ "Look Who's Talking Now" (1993, Comedy) John Travolta		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News		NBC News		Hollywood		Extra (N)		Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)
WTXX	20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends		Just Shoot Me		★★ "Look Who's Talking Now" (1993, Comedy) John Travolta		News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT	30	News		NBC News		Extra (N)		Hollywood		Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)
WTIC	61	Simpsons		Friends		Seinfeld		Raymond		Glutton Bowl: The World's Greatest Eating Contest (In Stereo)		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	22	News		NBC News		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!			Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)
WGBY	57	BBC World		Business Rpt		Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Drs. on Call	Frontline (N) (In Stereo)		Mystery: Unsuitable Job	Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News		ABC News		Seinfeld		Frasier		My Wife-Kids	According-Jim	Drew Carey	Whose Line?
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune		Jeopardy!		News		Frasier		WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)		Ent. Tonight	Frasier
WTBS	72	Cosby Show		Roseanne		Friends		Roseanne		★★★ "The American President" (1995, Comedy-Drama) (Cc) Michael Douglas		★★★ "Twins" (1988) Arnold Schwarzenegger
A&E	69	Night Court		Newsradio		Law & Order		Biography: John W. Gacy		★★½ "Longitude" (2000, Drama) (Part 2 of 2) Michael Gambon		Law & Order (In Stereo)
CNN	50	Moneyline				Wolf Blitzer		Crossfire		The Point		Larry King Live
COM	39	Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)				Daily Show		Geeks		★★★ "Blazing Saddles" (1974, Comedy) Cleavon Little		South Park	Man Show
DISC	29	Deep in the Lion's Den				Animal's World				Science Mysteries		Science Mysteries
ESPN	33	Sportscenter (Cc)				College Basketball: Minnesota at Michigan State (Live)				College Basketball: Duke at Wake Forest (Live)		Sportscenter
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls			Intimate Portrait: Brandy				Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Legacy of Sin: The William Coit Story" (1995) Neil Patrick Harris
MTV	53	Who Knows?	Music Videos									Fashionably Loud
NICK	63	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Hey Arnold!		Rugrats		Spongeb	Told by Ginger	Kids-Darndest	Kids-Darndest	Cheers	Cheers
SCIFI	68	Star Trek: The Cage				Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)		Outer Limits: The Inheritors		★★ "Kull the Conqueror" (1997, Adventure) Kevin Sorbo
TLC	79	Metal Monsters				Secrets of Forensic Science		Supersleuths: Ivan Milat		Mystery of Easter Island (N)		Ancient Apocalypse-Maya
TNT	70	NYPD Blue (In Stereo)				Pretender (In Stereo)		Law & Order (2000) (In Stereo)		NBA Basketball: Sacramento Kings at San Antonio Spurs. (Live)
USA	59	Walker, Texas Ranger				JAG "Dog Break" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Payback"		JAG (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 2)		JAG "Rules of Engagement"
HBO	8	(5:45) ★★★ "Space Cowboys" (2000) Clint Eastwood. PG-13						Janet Jackson: In Concert From Hawaii (In Stereo)				Oz (In Stereo)
MAX	74	(5:45) ★★½ "The Whole Nine Yards" (2000)						★★★ "Strange Days" (1995, Science Fiction) Ralph Fiennes. (In Stereo) R				★★ "The Craft" (1996, Horror) Robin Tunney. R
SHOW	65	★★★ "Dirty Dancing" (1987) Jennifer Grey				Hero's Story		★½ "Blues Ha Child" (2000, Horror) Kim Basinger. R				★ "Highlander: Endgame" (2000) Adrian Paul. R

Reel Sex 27: Slippery

Real Sex 19: Sinful

Real Sex 20: Sinful

Real Sex 21: Sinful

Real Sex 22: Sinful

Real Sex 23: Sinful

Real Sex 24: Sinful

Real Sex 25: Sinful

Real Sex 26: Sinful

Real Sex 27: Slippery

Real Sex 28: Sinful

Real Sex 29: Sinful

Real Sex 30: Sinful

Real Sex 31: Sinful

Real Sex 32: Sinful

Real Sex 33: Sinful

Real Sex 34: Sinful

Real Sex 35: Sinful

Real Sex 36: Sinful

Real Sex 37: Sinful

Real Sex 38: Sinful

Real Sex 39: Sinful

Real Sex 40: Sinful

Real Sex 41: Sinful

Real Sex 42: Sinful

Real Sex 43: Sinful

Real Sex 44: Sinful

Real Sex 45: Sinful

Real Sex 46: Sinful

Real Sex 47: Sinful

Real Sex 48: Sinful

Real Sex 49: Sinful

Real Sex 50: Sinful

Real Sex 51: Sinful

Real Sex 52: Sinful

Real Sex 53: Sinful

Real Sex 54: Sinful

Real Sex 55: Sinful

Real Sex 56: Sinful

Real Sex 57: Sinful

Real Sex 58: Sinful

Real Sex 59: Sinful

Real Sex 60: Sinful

Real Sex 61: Sinful

Real Sex 62: Sinful

Real Sex 63: Sinful

Real Sex 64: Sinful

Real Sex 65: Sinful

Real Sex 66: Sinful

Real Sex 67: Sinful

Real Sex 68: Sinful

Real Sex 69: Sinful

Real Sex 70: Sinful

Real Sex 71: Sinful

Real Sex 72: Sinful

Real Sex 73: Sinful

Real Sex 74: Sinful

Real Sex 75: Sinful

Real Sex 76: Sinful

Real Sex 77: Sinful

Real Sex 78: Sinful

Real Sex 79: Sinful

Real Sex 80: Sinful

Real Sex 81: Sinful

Real Sex 82: Sinful

Real Sex 83: Sinful

Real Sex 84: Sinful

Real Sex 85: Sinful

Real Sex 86: Sinful

Real Sex 87: Sinful

Real Sex 88: Sinful

Real Sex 89: Sinful

Real Sex 90: Sinful

Real Sex 91: Sinful

Real Sex 92: Sinful

Real Sex 93: Sinful

Real Sex 94: Sinful

Real Sex 95: Sinful

Real Sex 96: Sinful

Real Sex 97: Sinful

Real Sex 98: Sinful

Real Sex 99: Sinful

Real Sex 100: Sinful

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

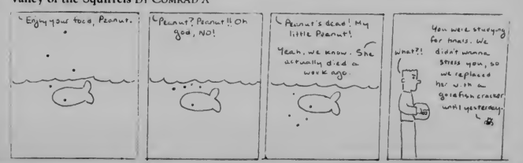
Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Scarecrow By W. Bird



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"I hope I never have a little girl. And if I do, I hope she's a lesbian, so she doesn't hook up with guys like me."

-Overheard at the Holyoke Mall

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 55 LOW: 32	HIGH: 47 LOW: 23	HIGH: 46 LOW: 23

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Duties and responsibilities may take you far from home today. You may want to divide a long journey into shorter distances. Be realistic.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Keep plugging away at that stubborn problem, and you'll work it out by day's end. Any lapse of attention or commitment will set you back, however.

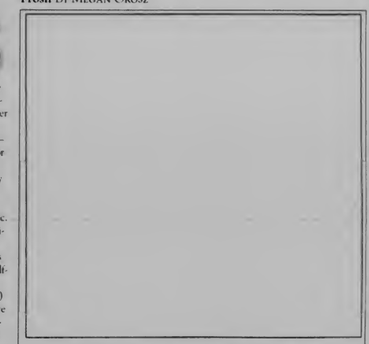
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Organization may not be the key to success today. Perhaps it is best to "wing it" and react to circumstances instinctively as they arise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You do not want to be wasting time now; once you get started today, you must be efficient in all you do. Be economical; consolidate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You have what it takes – but you must resist the temptation to take what others have. If you do so, you will surely risk all you've been working for.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You will find yourself going off-course a few times today, but you can quickly get yourself back on track if you catch the error soon enough.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Your energy is likely to wax and wane all day, but when the time comes, you should be able to satisfy someone who has been depending on you.



LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A little excitement goes a long way today. In fact, you may be more in the mood for the kind of routine that would bore you at other times.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Put yourself into the running for something spectacular today, and, even in defeat, you'll enjoy perhaps more than you had before.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You can delight your family and friends with your antics today, provided you keep things light and lively. Avoid being self-indulgent.

AQUARIUS (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You may be unusually sensitive today, and yet, toward the afternoon, you still have to face and obstacle that will demand nerves of steel.

Frosh By Megan Orosz

"Due to fee increases, I can no longer afford pencils"

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Vegetable Tortellini Soup OneyGa

Beef Stroganoff

Honey Garlic Chicken Wings

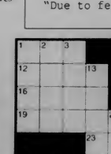
Vegetable Chow Mein (vegan)

DINNER

Vegetable Tortellini Soup

Roast Turkey

Ratatouille (vegan)

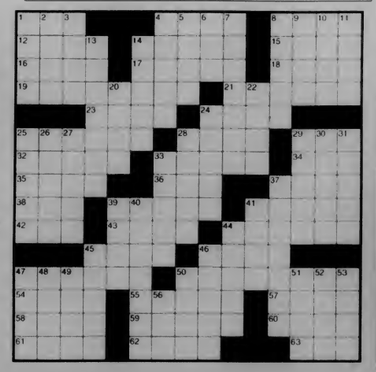


Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
&
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thursday Hip Hop Funk $2 cover
Saturday Love Bomb Seventies Dance Music $4 cover
Sunday Jazz no cover
36 N. Pleasant Street • Amherst
413 - 253 - 4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

ACROSS

1 Winner's cry
4 Rooster's sound
8 Tripe skin
12 First-aid plant
14 Japan neighbor
15 Unkind
16 Walk heavily
17 Less polite
18 Alaskan port
19 Flood protection
21 Herman or Reese
23 Cravings
24 Savoir faire
25 Say by heart
26 — helmet: safari wear
29 Cultural Revolution figure
32 Ladd and Shepard
33 Like Rambo?
34 Pixie
35 Zingy taste
36 Wapiti
37 Londoner, casually
38 Frat letter
39 Caleraeuts
41 Perhaps
42 Md. neighbor
43 Keats' works
44 Sheet material
45 Elmer of cartoons
46 Florem and Beatty
47 Very or too
50 Clerical garments
54 Writer of verse
55 Luncheonette lure
57 Aloud
58 Entertainer Adams
59 Cares for
60 Columbus' ship
61 Hawked
62 Isn't straight
63 Implore



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

12-1-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DOWN

1 Pussy cries
2 Singer Fitzgerald
3 Right away
4 Pulls along
5 Disposes of
6 — track mind
7 On the — angry
8 Poet Stephen Vincent —
9 Say frankly
10 Icy coating
11 Swiss painter Paul
13 Making whirlpools
14 Heron
20 Poker stakes
22 Nymph who pined away
24 Bloodsuckers
25 Had lots of status
26 Make happy
27 Vance "street"
28 Becomes tiresome
29 Streep, of the movies
30 It may be airtight
31 Again and again
33 Asked for milk
37 Woodwind
38 "Annie Get — Gun"
40 Weirdo
41 Beauty packs
44 High plateaus
45 Honored
46 Reputations
47 Mimics
48 Dull-witted one
49 Nun's apparel
50 Inlet
51 Baby bed
52 Batman creator
53 Smelting residue
56 King, in France

Sam Wilkinson
Tibora Girczyc- Blum
Jess May
Mike Kulak
Andrea Mangini
Shannon Farrington

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.21.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Minutemen falling hard in late stages

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PHILADELPHIA – Offensive woes have plagued the Massachusetts men's basketball team all season long. In the team's first meeting with St. Joseph's back on Jan. 5, those woes reared their ugly heads with a season-low 58 points on 28 percent shooting.

But in Tuesday night's return visit at Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse, the Minutemen found a new way to lose. Despite shooting 51 percent and 50 percent from three-point range the Minutemen dropped their third straight and sixth out of seven, falling 72-67 to St. Joe's.

Bill Phillips led the way for the Hawks with 19 points and 12 rebounds while Damian Reid and Na'im Crenshaw each added 16 points for St. Joe's, which never trailed in picking up its tenth conference victory of the season.

St. Joseph's	72
UMass	67

Shannon Crooks paced the Minutemen (10-14, 4-9 Atlantic 10) with 21 points including five-of-six from three point range, but scored just six points in the second half before fouling out with 1:06 to play.

St. Joe's was able to finish off its first season sweep of UMass since the 1996-97 season thanks in large to a 40-22 edge on the glass, including 18-5 on the offensive boards. The Maroon and White inside duo of Kitwana Rhymer and Micah Brand pulled down just seven total boards while Hawk counterparts Reid and Phillips amassed 21.

"You have to get rebounds," Lappas said following the loss, which guaranteed the Minutemen of a sub-.500 conference record for the first time since the 1988-89 season. "We played well on offense, we played pretty good on defense at times, but you have to get rebounds. It's not like we played small in this game, we played big most of the game and we didn't get any rebounds."

With 4:54 left in the second half, sophomore point guard Anthony Anderson (eight points, four assists) fed Rhymer on the baseline for a layup and foul. The senior center finished off the three-point play to tie the game at 58. It marked the first time since the opening tip that the two teams had been all square. However, after digging themselves out from as much as a 13-point deficit, the Minutemen just ran out of gas, allowing the Hawks to score the game's next nine points and put the game out of reach.

Once again it was rebounding that sparked St. Joe's during this stretch, as the Hawks were able to convert second and third opportunities into points while UMass would go one-and-out – going more than four minutes without registering a point.

"This team can't be digging itself a hole like that," said UMass small forward Willie Jenkins, who had eight points and three rebounds on the night. "It takes so much energy to come back and you're playing a good team, they got a great team. You're wasting all your energy to come back and then they still have all their energy left."

St. Joe's (16-9, 10-3) was able to pick up the win despite playing without its leading scorer, pre-season All-American Marvin O'Connor. Just a half hour before the game it was announced that O'Connor was in a Philadelphia area hospital after coming down with a bout of food poisoning.

The 6-foot-4 senior was the catalyst in the Hawks victory back in January, scoring 13 points and pulling down four boards. In his absence Hawk Head Coach Phil Martelli looked to freshman Delonte West to pick up the slack. But Rhymer knew that even with O'Connor on the shelf, it was still up to the Minutemen to play their game.

"We just said he's not there. Sazonov's not there, it doesn't really matter, whichever way we still have to play hard," he said.

The Minutemen return to action on Saturday afternoon when the look to exact some revenge on Fordham at the Mullins Center. The Rams took the first meeting between the two squads 95-86 last month.

GERALD INGOLIA/COLLEGIAN

Anthony Anderson's eight points and four rebounds weren't enough to propel UMass to victory against St. Joe's Tuesday night at the Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse.

GERALD INGOLIA/COLLEGIAN

In just 14 months at UMass, sophomore defenseman Nick Kuiper has increased his bulk by 15 pounds and NHL scout word-of-mouth intimately.

The Dynamite Kid

Kuiper's explosiveness a knockout on the ice

By Matt Brady
COLLEGIAN STAFF

David Booth is skating toward the offensive zone, thinking about what he can do to put home a goal for the U.S. National Developmental Team in an exhibition contest. Out of nowhere, a Maroon and White blob is there to greet Booth at the blueline, slamming him off his feet and onto the ice, injuring him on the play.

Nick Kuiper, the man who just annihilated his opponent, shrugs and skates away, giving no indication that he even felt the contact with the opponent he just delivered to the ice, let alone felt even a morsel of concern for his victim.

"The perfect hit would be when the guy stays on the ice," said the sophomore blueliner. "The perfect hit is when you know he's hurt – when his knee is out or his shoulder is out – and you did that – and it's clean. If you step up and you hit him solid and he's hurt, it's a good feeling."

Thirteen months ago, a tall, lanky defenseman came to the Massachusetts campus with high hopes, but only a slight 6-foot-2, 185-pound frame. With him, he brought tremendous potential and dedication, but barely the muscle to compete in a top-notch conference like the Hockey East.

"He's made a big improvement in his overall conditioning and strength," said Minuteman assistant coach Bill Gilligan. "Last year when he came, he was probably 15 pounds lighter. He worked really hard this summer and put on a lot of muscle and gained a lot of strength."

These days, Kuiper has bulked himself up significantly, officially listed at 200 pounds, a number that seems to be increasing by the day.

"He's a really hard worker – one of the hardest workers on the team – he's very focused, very prepared," Gilligan said. "That type of attitude and that type of mentality is very healthy for a program and the more players you have like that who really want to play hockey and want to get the most out of hockey, it really helps the whole program because everybody follows that type of example."

But Kuiper was not always destined to come to UMass. Last year, while playing with the Hawkesbury Hawks of the Central Junior "A" Hockey League, the Beaconsfield, Quebec native saw his deal with Ohio State fall through the cracks only to find the Minutemen ready to scoop up his talent.

"I committed to Ohio State when I was 16, and every school thought, and I thought, that I was going there," Kuiper said. "But I hurt my back real bad and I missed three months of my first season in Hawkesbury, so [Ohio State] pushed it back a year. It was so bad, we had three different coaches before I got here in January and Ohio State got really nervous and they pulled out.

"I missed the signing date and a few teams were talking to my coaches, but coach Cahoon brought me in before another team would," he continued. "I was glad to come here – right away I heard some really good things from scouts back home. The facilities are great, I heard good things about the coaching and the program was coming around."

So his freshman campaign shortened because of the Buckeyes, the 18-year old came to Amherst hoping to bring blueline depth to a team that was trying to turn its program around. While most young hockey players might have been frustrated losing half a year of eligibility, it was beneficial in Kuiper's eyes.

"The best thing coming in last year was that I had the springtime and the summer – especially the springtime with all the other guys – learning what I have to do to get stronger and improve on the ice," he said. "I knew what I had to do coming in to this year if I wanted to be a good defenseman."

***

After a freshman campaign in which he played in 13 games and registered a single assist, Kuiper headed back to his native Canada for a summer of rest and relaxation. That is if, like Kuiper, you see heavy workouts three times a week as a way to kick back.

"He's gotten bigger and stronger," assistant captain Randy Drohan said. "He's definitely worked hard in the weight room and you can tell. He's banging guys around out there a little more."

But Kuiper didn't have the help of any old personal trainer. Instead, he met up with Dave Arsenault, who, according to Kuiper, was the Canadian Tae-Kwon Do champion.

"He trained us the last two summers and we did a lot of explosive stuff," Kuiper said. "We went to this place in downtown Montreal and we were there three days a week doing Olympic lifts and a lot of squats and so many sprints because it's similar for his training – everything was explosive. I said to him, 'Dave, if I want to be good in this league I'm going to have to gain a lot of weight too,' so I did extra workouts – reps of eight and a lot of sets to gain the mass."

But now that he's added the weight, there is still a long way to go for Kuiper, who makes no bones about the fact that he wants to move on to the next level. So this summer, though his parents have moved to Toronto, Kuiper is heading back to Montreal for more work with Arsenault, in hopes of improving his game some more.

"This spring and summer I'm going to even go harder than last summer and then there's the summer after next," said the sophomore. "If I really want to do well next year, I'm going to try to gain 10-15 pounds and get quicker and stronger."

***

Growing up in Canada, like most youngsters, hockey was a game that was in his blood from an early age. Born in Montreal, possibly the world's most hockey-oriented city, Kuiper was on skates soon after he learned to walk.

"It was great growing up in Montreal," he said. "My parents got me on skates when I was about two

Turn to KUIPER, page 8

WE INT[illegible] YOU DID [illegible]. ART[illegible] DAILY DOSE OF AFFIRMATION ED/OP PAGE 4. LACROSSE IS COMING... SPORTS PAGE 12.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
FRIDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE EIGHTY SIX ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.22.02

Parents rally to save child care

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Children rally with their parents in an effort to save the UCC.

Pennybanks bound for Chancellor's office

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Parents at the University of Massachusetts are still upset over the announced closing of University Child Care (UCC).

Over one hundred people gathered outside the Fine Arts Center at noon yesterday, holding signs, signing songs and speaking out on their feelings about the closure. The event was organized by a coalition of student, faculty and staff parents as well as childcare advocates from the University community. Piggybanks and petitions circulated the crowd. The pennies are bound for the Chancellor's office.

But there's no one there to receive them. Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams is on a fund raising trip to California. Vice Chancellor Javier Cevallos is on vacation. While there is no official response to yesterday's demonstration, sources within the administration did say that the decision to close UCC would not be reconsidered. However, it may be reopened if parents can raise the money.

"We will win this fight. We've won it before, and we'll win it again," Leslie Edwards, president of the Graduate Employee Organization, said. "We can shame this University into giving us child care because it is our right."

One little girl held a finger-painted sign reading "Budget cuts hurt me." A little boy held one that read, "My mom can't go to school. She will just work in some big factory."

Without childcare, one speaker said, students with children would not be able to finish their educations.

"Welfare reform has placed a clock on my education. This is my gateway to my livelihood," Amanda Stephens, a freshman Pre-Medical major, said. "All I'm asking for is to earn my education. Daycare is vital to my education."

Childcare in the Pioneer Valley is scarce. UCC advocates say, and closing UCC would add another burden on an already overtaxed system.

"The market is saturated. Every childcare center in the area has an extensive waiting list," Lynn Hatch, a doctoral Economics student, said. "I called one day care in Amherst, and they told me that they had already received 50 calls for one spot. That one spot won't open for another eight months. [UCC] is closing in three months."

According to the administration's previous statements, UCC was closed because it was not a vital part of the University's educational mission. That reason incensed some speakers.

"The mission of this University is directly linked to early education," Robin Jurs, the Educational Coordinator for StoneyBrook Childcare Center in South Hadley, said. "Will someone please tell me how a football program that loses over one million dollars a year is more vital?"

Some speakers are still upset that UCC seems to have taken the brunt of the cuts.

"When they said that all departments were going to get cut, they told us it was important for all of us to 'share the pain'," Andrew Coler, a teacher at UCC said. "There's only one problem. Our department got eliminated."

Several labor organizations took part in the rally, which lasted a little more than an hour. Members of the United Auto Workers Local 2322, Service Employees International Union Local 509, Hospital Workers Local 767, and the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local 1776 participated in the event.

LDSS affected by Cutbacks

By S.J. Port
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Learning Disabilities Support Services (LDSS) department has announced that it will no longer be able to proctor exams for students. The loss of LDSS proctoring is the most recent casualty to budget cuts.

The process of phasing out the job to academic departments will begin following this semester. Students who are part of LDSS or Program for Students with Psychological and Medical Disorders should continue to follow the same routine to have their exams and tests proctored but should be aware that the process will be changing when they return in the fall. The only change for this spring is that the hours LDSS will have proctors available to students will be limited.

Come September, LDSS will only be proctoring special one-on-one exams that may need more careful attention, and as much proctoring time as possible during the final exam period. This means that students who need to have tests during the regular semester period will have to work with their professor and his or her department to arrange a time and place to take their exam.

Under Massachusetts State law and the federally protected American Disabilities Act, the university must provide accommodations for students they accept who have documented learning or psychological disorders. Thus professors will now be dealt the responsibility of arranging for the accommodations their students require at test-time. Accommodations regularly requested are extended time on tests and exams, and the use of a distraction free environment for the participating student.

Currently students needing such accommodations are sent to take their tests in a room operated by an LDSS proctor. Proctors are trained to help students with learning disability needs during the test period and work out of the LDSS office.

The LDSS department has sent memos to all department heads informing them of the upcoming changes and how it will affect their professors and students during exam time. To assist with this transition, the LDSS department's memo will detail common reasons for proctoring requests, typical requests and suggestions on how best to address proctoring within a department. The memo will also recommend what students with LDSS needs require and how to help them during the test.

It has yet to be determined whether the department will be able to continue to proctor exams after the fall semester of 2002. Eventually the responsibility of arranging accommodations will fall squarely on the shoulders of professors.

Hillel and Chabad to host Purim festivities

By Jake Lilien
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University Jewish groups will begin celebrating the holiday of Purim beginning at sundown on Monday, Feb. 25. Planned events include meals, costume parties and performances of skits.

Hillel House and Chabad House both have festivities scheduled for the upcoming days. Hillel House will be sponsoring a "Latke Versus Hamentaschen Debate" on Sunday, beginning at noon. The debate, which will feature Eric Sommers, Sarina Ergas, Ilan Pader and Joe Goldstein, who will humorously judge the merits of the two traditional Jewish foods, both of which are typically associated with Purim festivities. The debate will be followed by a Jewish Women's collective baking of haruantaschen (triangular jelly cookies) in the Hillel House Upstairs Kitchen, to take place at 2:30 p.m.

Hillel House will also sponsor a Five College Purim Party on Monday at 7 p.m., at Amherst College's Alumni House. This event, open to all Five College students, is free.

The party will feature a complete reading of the Megillah (the scroll on which the Book of Esther, which contains the Purim story) in Hebrew. At 8 p.m., sketches featuring different chapters of the Purim story will be performed, and at 9 p.m., a free party featuring food and a DJ will be held. Costumes are strongly encouraged.

The Jewish Student Union will be sponsoring a Purim Party, to be held at 9 p.m. on Sunday at the Monkey Bar in Amherst Center. Tickets are $5, $3 with a costume.

Chabad House is also planning a variety of events in honor of the holiday, and will throw a separate party on Monday, starting at 6 p.m. The party will also feature a reading of the Megillah and will include a guest juggler.

On Tuesday, Feb. 26, an "Early Bird's Megillah Reading" will be held at 7 a.m. A "Not So Early Bird's Megillah Reading" will be held later in the day, at 4:45 p.m., followed by a Purim meal. Students interested in attending these events should be aware that Hillel House is located at 388 North Pleasant Street in Amherst, along "fraternity row." Chabad House is located at 30 North Hadley Road, near Southwest Residential Area, between Lincoln and Sunset Avenues. Alumni House is located on the Amherst College campus, between College and Spring Streets.

Purim takes place on the fourteenth and fifteenth days of Adar, the twelfth month of the Jewish calendar. The holiday commemorates a story from the Book of Esther, in which Jews were delivered from oppression in Persia.

Traditionally, parties take place in synagogues on the holiday, in which children rattle noisemakers and often dress as their favorite Purim characters. It is one of the few times of the year in which such festivities are allowed in typically austere synagogues.

Customs typically related to the festival included the exchange of gifts, especially of food, the giving of alms to the poor and the presentation of Purim plays. A large Purim carnival is held annually in Israel.

MassPIRG to fight hunger

By Catherine Turner
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a very successful kick off meeting last Tuesday, the Massachusetts Student Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG) is preparing for several upcoming campaign events.

During the meeting in which 95 students turned out to be turned on to the organization, student organizer Laura Kysser spoke along with Student Government Association member Aaron Saunders.

"[Saunders] spoke about the importance to get involved," sophomore Political Science major and MASSPIRG member Adrienne Girard said. "Especially in the administration right now, to stand up."

Among the activities aimed at attracting interest were skits from each of the five currently running campaigns: Water Watch, Hunger and Homelessness, Promoting Higher Education, Saving the Arctic Refuge and Protecting our Public Parks and Forests.

"The skits were really fun," Girard said. "The energy group did a rap about conservation, and another group did a game show."

The meeting was also a chance for the organization to promote its approaching events, which include a conference on hunger and homelessness taking place at Smith College on Mar. 2 and 3. The conference is expected to draw over 250 people and costs $35, with half the money going to local agencies, 35 percent to the National Student Campaign against Hunger and Homelessness and 15 percent to an international project for women in Zimbabwe.

MASSPIRG will also be outside of CVS Pharmacy this weekend asking consumers to purchase extra tubes of toothpaste and other hygiene products for their Necessities Drive.

For more information or questions about MASSPIRG activities, their office is located at 425 Student Union, or call 545-0199.

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Sleeping With Cats

Marge Piercy lectured about her book, among other things, yesterday in the Cape Cod Lounge in a lecture series put on by The Every Woman's Center and Food For Thought Books.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS

COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.21.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Minutemen falling hard in late stages

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PHILADELPHIA – Offensive woes have plagued the Massachusetts men's basketball team all season long. In the team's first meeting with St. Joseph's back on Jan. 5, those woes reared their ugly heads with a season-low 38 points on 28 percent shooting.

But in Tuesday night's return visit at Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse, the Minutemen found a new way to lose. Despite shooting 51 percent and 50 percent from three-point range the Minutemen dropped their third straight and sixth out of seven falling 72-67 to St. Joe's.

Bill Phillips led the way for the Hawks with 19 points and 12 rebounds while Damian Reid and Na'im Crenshaw each added 16 points for St. Joe's, which never trailed in picking up its tenth conference victory of the season.

St. Joseph's	72
UMass	67

Shannon Crooks paced the Minutemen (10-14, 4-9 Atlantic 10) with 21 points including five-of-six from three point range, but scored just six points in the second half before fouling out with 1:06 to play.

St. Joe's was able to finish off its first season sweep of UMass since the 1996-97 season thanks in large to a 40-22 edge on the glass, including 18-5 on the offensive boards. The Maroon and White inside duo of Kitwana Rhymer and Micah Brand pulled down just seven total boards while Hawk counterparts Reid and Phillips amassed 21.

"You have to get rebounds," Lappas said following the loss which guaranteed the Minutemen of a sub-.500 conference record for the first time since the 1988-89 season. "We played well on offense, we played pretty good on defense at times, but you have to get rebounds. It's not like we played small in this game, we played big most of the game and we didn't get any rebounds."

With 4:54 left in the second half, sophomore point guard Anthony Anderson (eight points, four assists) fed Rhymer on the baseline for a layup and foul. The senior center finished off the three-point play to tie the game at 58. It marked the first time since the opening tip that the two teams had been all square. However, after digging themselves out from as much as a 13-point deficit, the Minutemen just ran out of gas, allowing the Hawks to score the game's next nine points and put the game out of reach.

Once again it was rebounding that sparked St. Joe's during this stretch, as the Hawks were able to convert second and third opportunities into points while UMass would go one and out – going more than four minutes without registering a point.

"This team can't be digging itself a hole like that," said UMass small forward Willie Jenkins, who had eight points and three rebounds on the night. "It takes so much energy to come back and you're playing a good team, they got a great team. You're wasting all your energy to come back and then they still have all their energy left."

St. Joe's (18-9, 10-5) was able to pick up the win despite playing without its leading scorer, pre-season All-American Marvin O'Connor. Just a half hour before the game, it was announced that O'Connor was in a Philadelphia area hospital after coming down with a bout of food poisoning.

The 6-foot-4 senior was the catalyst in the Hawks victory back in January, scoring 13 points and pulling down eight boards. In his absence Hawk Head Coach Phil Martelli looked to freshman Delonte West to pick up the slack. But Rhymer knew that, even with O'Connor on the shelf, it was still up to the Minutemen to play their game.

"We just said he's not there, Sazonov's not there, it doesn't really matter, whichever way we still have to play hard," he said.

The Minutemen return to action on Saturday afternoon when the Rink to exact some revenge on Fordham at the Mullins Center. The Rams took the first meeting between the two squads 93-86 last month.

GERALD LINDO/COLLEGIAN

Anthony Anderson's eight points and four rebounds weren't enough to propel UMass to victory against St. Joe's Tuesday night at the Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse.

JERAULD KOTTIGAN

In just 13 months at UMass, sophomore defenseman Nick Kuiper has increased his bulk by 15 pounds and NHL scout words-of-mouth intensely.

The Dynamite Kid

Kuiper's explosiveness a knockout on the ice

By Matt Brady
COLLEGIAN STAFF

David Booth is skating toward the offensive zone, thinking about what he can do to put home a goal for the U.S. National Development Team in an exhibition contest. Out of nowhere, a Maroon and White blob is there to greet Booth at the blueline, slamming him off his feet and onto the ice, injuring him on the play.

Nick Kuiper, the man who just annihilated his opponent, shrugs and skates away, giving no indication that he even felt the contact with the opponent he just delivered to the ice, let alone felt even a morsel of concern for his victim.

"The perfect hit would be when the guy stays on the ice," said the sophomore blueliner. "The perfect hit is when you know he's hurt – when his knee is out or his shoulder is out – and you did that – and it's clean. If you step up and you hit him solid and he's hurt, it's a good feeling."

Thirteen months ago, a tall, lanky defenseman came to the Massachusetts campus with high hopes, but only a slight 6-foot-2, 185-pound frame. With him, he brought tremendous potential and dedication, but barely the muscle to compete in a top-notch conference like the Hockey East.

"He's made a big improvement in his overall conditioning and strength," said Minuteman assistant coach Bill Gilligan. "Last year when he came, he was probably 15 pounds lighter. He worked really hard this summer and put on a lot of muscle and gained a lot of strength."

These days, Kuiper has hulked himself up significantly, officially listed at 200 pounds, a number that seems to be increasing by the day.

"He's a really hard worker – one of the hardest workers on the team – he's very focused, very prepared," Gilligan said. "That type of attitude and that type of mentality is very healthy for a program and the more players you have like that who really want to play hockey and want to get the most out of hockey, it really helps the whole program because everybody follows that type of example."

But Kuiper was not always destined to come to UMass. Last year, while playing with the Hawkesbury Hawks of the Central Junior "A" Hockey League, the Beaconsfield, Quebec native saw his deal with Ohio State fall through the cracks only to find the Minutemen ready to scoop up his talent.

"I committed to Ohio State when I was 16, and every school thought, and I thought, that I was going there," Kuiper said. "But I hurt my back real bad and I missed three months of my first season in Hawkesbury, so [Ohio State] pushed it back a year. It was so bad, we had three different coaches before I got here in January and Ohio State got really nervous and they pulled out.

"I missed the signing date and a few teams were talking to my coaches, but coach Cahoon brought me in before another team would," he continued. "I was glad to come here – right away I heard some really good things from scouts back home. The facilities are great, I heard good things about the coaching and the program was coming around."

So his freshman campaign shortened because of the Buckeyes, the 18-year old came to Amherst hoping to bring blueline depth to a team that was trying to turn its program around. While most young hockey players might have been frustrated losing half a year of eligibility, it was beneficial in Kuiper's eyes.

"The best thing coming in last year was that I had the springtime and the summer – especially the springtime with all the other guys – learning what I have to do to get stronger and improve on the ice," he said. "I knew what I had to do coming in to this year if I wanted to be a good defenseman."

***

After a freshman campaign in which he played in 13 games and registered a single assist, Kuiper headed back to his native Canada for a summer of rest and relaxation. That is if, like Kuiper, you see heavy workouts three times a week as a way to kick back.

"He's gotten bigger and stronger," assistant captain Randy Drohan said. "He's definitely worked hard in the weight room and you can tell. He's banging guys around out there a little more."

But Kuiper didn't have the help of any old personal trainer. Instead, he met up with Dave Arsenault, who, according to Kuiper, was the Canadian Tae-Kwon Do champion.

"He trained us the last two summers and we did a lot of explosive stuff," Kuiper said. "We went to this place in downtown Montreal and we were there three days a week doing Olympic lifts and a lot of squats and so many sprints because it's similar for his training – everything was explosive. I said to him, 'Dave, if I want to be good in this league I'm going to have to gain a lot of weight too,' so I did extra workouts – reps of eight and a lot of sets to gain the mass."

But now that he's added the weight, there is still a long way to go for Kuiper, who makes no bones about the fact that he wants to move on to the next level. So this summer, though his parents have moved to Toronto, Kuiper is heading back to Montreal for more work with Arsenault, in hopes of improving his game some more.

"This spring and summer I'm going to even go harder than last summer and then there's the summer after next," said the sophomore. "If I really want to do well next year, I'm going to try to gain 10-15 pounds and get quicker and stronger."

***

Growing up in Canada, like most youngsters, hockey was a game that was in his blood from an early age. Born in Montreal, possibly the world's most hockey-oriented city, Kuiper was on skates soon after he learned to walk.

"It was great growing up in Montreal," he said. "My parents got me on skates when I was about two

Turn to KUIPER, page 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

FRIDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE EIGHTY SIX ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.22.02

WE INT[illegible]VIEWED KEVIN SMITH AND YOU DID[illegible]T. ART[illegible]

DAILY DOSE OF AFFIRMATION ED/OP PAGE 4.

LACROSSE IS COMING... SPORTS PAGE 12.

Parents rally to save child care

Children rally with their parents in an effort to save the UCC.

Pennybanks bound for Chancellor's office

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Parents at the University of Massachusetts are still upset over the announced closing of University Child Care (UCC).

Over one hundred people gathered outside the Fine Arts Center at noon yesterday, holding signs, signing songs and speaking out on their feelings about the closure. The event was organized by a coalition of student, faculty and staff parents as well as childcare advocates from the University community. Piggybanks and petitions circulated the crowd. The pennies are bound for the Chancellor's office.

But there's no one there to receive them. Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams is on a fund raising trip to California. Vice Chancellor Javier Cevallos is on vacation. While there is no official response to yesterday's demonstration, sources within the administration did say that the decision to close UCC would not be reconsidered. However, it may be reopened if parents can raise the money.

"We will win this fight. We've won it before, and we'll win it again," Leslie Edwards, president of the Graduate Employee Organization, said. "We can shame this University into giving us child care because it is our right."

One little girl held a finger-painted sign reading "Budget cuts hurt me." A little boy held one that read, "My mom can't go to school. She will just work in some big factory."

Without childcare, one speaker said, students with children would not be able to finish their educations.

"Welfare reform has placed a clock on my education. This is my gateway to my livelihood," Amanda Stephens, a freshman Pre-Medical major, said. "All I'm asking for is to earn my education. Daycare is vital to my education."

Childcare in the Pioneer Valley is scarce. UCC advocates say, and closing UCC would add another burden on an already overtaxed system.

"The market is saturated. Every childcare center in the area has an extensive waiting list," Lynn Hatch, a doctoral Economics student, said. "I called one day care in Amherst, and they told me that they had already received 50 calls for one spot. That one spot won't open for another eight months. [UCC] is closing in three months."

According to the administration's previous state memo, UCC was closed because it was not a vital part of the University's educational mission. That reason incensed some speakers.

"The mission of this University is directly linked to early education," Ruhin Jurs, the Educational Coordinator for StoneyBrook Childcare Center in South Hadley, said. "Will someone please tell me how a football program that loses over one million dollars a year is more vital?"

Some speakers are still upset that UCC seems to have taken the brunt of the cuts.

"When they said that all departments were going to get cut, they told us it was important to all of us to 'share the pain'," Andrew Coler, a teacher at UCC said. "There's only one problem. Our department got eliminated."

Several labor organizations took part in the rally, which lasted a little more than an hour. Members of the United Auto Workers Local 2322, Service Employees International Union Local 509, Hospital Workers Local 767, and the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local 1776 participated in the event.

LDSS affected by Cutbacks

By S.J. Port
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Learning Disabilities Support Services (LDSS) department has announced that it will no longer be able to proctor exams for students. The loss of LDSS proctoring is the most recent casualty to budget cuts.

The process of phasing out the job to academic departments will begin following this semester. Students who are part of LDSS or Program for Students with Psychological and Medical Disorders should continue to follow the same routine to have their exams and tests proctored but should be aware that the process will be changing when they return in the fall. The only change for this spring is that the hours LDSS will have proctors available to students will be limited.

Come September, LDSS will only be proctoring special one-on-one exams that may need more careful attention, and as much proctoring time as possible during the final exam period. This means that students who need to have tests during the regular semester period will have to work with their professor and his or her department to arrange a time and place to take their exam.

Under Massachusetts State law and the federally protected American Disabilities Act, the university must provide accommodations for students they accept who have documented learning or psychological disorders. Thus professors will now be dealt the responsibility of arranging for the accommodations their students require at test time. Accommodations regularly requested are extended time on tests and exams, and the use of a distraction free environment for the participating student.

Currently students needing such accommodations are sent to take their tests in a room operated by an LDSS proctor. Proctors are trained to help students with learning disability needs during the test period and work out of the LDSS office.

The LDSS department has sent memos to all department heads informing them of the upcoming changes and how it will affect their professors and students during exam time. To assist with this transition, the LDSS department's memo will detail common reasons for proctoring requests, typical requests and suggestions on how best to address proctoring within a department. The memo will also recommend what students with LDSS needs require and how to help them during the test.

It has yet to be determined whether the department will be able to continue to proctor exams after the fall semester of 2002. Eventually the responsibility of arranging accommodations will fall squarely on the shoulders of professors.

Hillel and Chabad to host Purim festivities

By Jake Lilien
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University Jewish groups will begin celebrating the holiday of Purim beginning at sundown on Monday, Feb. 25. Planned events include meals, costume parties and performances of skits.

Hillel House and Chabad House both have festivities scheduled for the upcoming days. Hillel House will be sponsoring a "Latke Versus Hamentaschen Debate" on Sunday, beginning at noon. The debate, which will feature Eric Summers, Sarina Ergas, Ellan Puder and Joe Goldstein, who will humorously judge the merits of the two traditional Jewish foods, both of which are typically associated with Purim festivities. The debate will be followed by a Jewish Women's collective baking of hamantaschen (triangular jelly cookies) in the Hillel House Upstairs Kitchen, to take place at 2:30 p.m.

Hillel House will also sponsor a Five College Purim Party on Monday at 7 p.m., at Amherst College's Alumni House. This event, open to all Five College students, is free.

The party will feature a complete reading of the Megillah (the scroll on which the Book of Esther, which contains the Purim story) in Hebrew. At 8 p.m., sketches featuring different chapters of the Purim story will be performed, and at 9 p.m., a free party featuring food and a DJ will be held. Costumes are strongly encouraged.

The Jewish Student Union will be sponsoring a Purim Party, to be held at 9 p.m. on Sunday at the Monkey Bar in Amherst Center. Tickets are $5; $3 with a costume.

Chabad House is also planning a variety of events in honor of the holiday, and will throw a separate party on Monday, starting at 6 p.m. The party will also feature a reading of the Megillah and will include a guest juggler.

On Tuesday, Feb. 26, an "Early Bird's Megillah Reading" will be held at 7 a.m. A "Not So Early Bird's Megillah Reading" will be held later in the day, at 4:45 p.m., followed by a Purim meal. Students interested in attending these events should be aware that Hillel House is located at 388 North Pleasant Street in Amherst, along "Fraternity row." Chabad House is located at 30 North Hadley Road, near Southwest Residential Area, between Lincoln and Sunset Avenues. Alumni House is located on the Amherst College campus, between College and Spring Streets.

Purim takes place on the fourteenth and fifteenth days of Adar, the twelfth month of the Jewish calendar. The holiday commemorates a story from the Book of Esther, in which Jews were delivered from oppression in Persia.

Traditionally, parties take place in synagogues on the holiday, in which children rattle noisemakers and often dress as their favorite Purim characters. It is one of the few times of the year in which such festivities are allowed in typically austere synagogues.

Customs typically related to the festival included the exchange of gifts, especially of food, the giving of alms to the poor and the presentation of Purim plays. A large Purim carnival is held annually in Israel.

MassPIRG to fight hunger

By Catherine Turner
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a very successful kick off meeting last Tuesday, the Massachusetts Student Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG) is preparing for several upcoming campaign events.

During the meeting in which 95 students turned out to be turned on to the organization, student organizer Laura Kiser spoke along with Student Government Association member Aaron Saunders.

"[Saunders] spoke about the importance to get involved," sophomore Political Science major and MASSPIRG member Adrienne Girard said. "Especially in the administration right now, to stand up."

Among the activities aimed at attracting interest were skits from each of the five currently running campaigns: Water Watch, Hunger and Homelessness, Promoting Higher Education, Saving the Arctic Refuge and Protecting our Public Parks and Forests.

"The skits were really fun," Girard said. "The energy group did a rap about conservation, and another group did a game show."

The meeting was also a chance for the organization to promote its approaching events, which include a conference on hunger and homelessness taking place at Smith College on Mar. 2 and 3. The conference is expected to draw over 250 people and costs $35, with half the money going to local agencies. 35 percent to the National Student Campaign against Hunger and Homelessness and 15 percent to an international project for women in Zimbabwe.

MASSPIRG will also be outside of CVS Pharmacy this weekend asking consumers to purchase extra tubes of toothpaste and other hygiene products for their Necessities Drive.

For more information or questions about MASSPIRG activities, their office is located at 425 Student Union, or call 545-0199.

JEN SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Sleeping With Cats

Marge Piercy lectured about her book, among other things, yesterday in the Cape Cod Lounge in a lecture series put on by The Every Woman's Center and Food For Thought Books.

Campus Perspectives

by Jeff Swartz

"What is your favorite party theme?"

Lacey Thomas '03 STPT
"A Rock Star Party."

Jay Bosco '03 Computer Science
"A Beach theme in the middle of winter with everyone wearing beach clothes, sun tan lotion, and the room smelling of coconuts."

Brittany Wolf '03 Landscape Architecture
"A Halloween Costume Party."

Francis Sloman-Hacken '03 Philosophy
"A Dudes and Blunts Night."

Lacey Clinger '05 Communications
"Drinking." I went to a forties and blunts night, that was pretty fun."

Yet Voong '04 Undeclared
"A Sleep Over. (Wink, Wink)."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Sam Wilkinson Editor in Chief
Matthew E. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Gargantia Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Ellien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siminski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

www.dailycollegian.com

it's not for everyone, but that's
[the point].

In Army ROTC you'll push yourself. Test your limits. And in the process, learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. You could even get a scholarship. Register today for an Army ROTC class. Because you're not just like "everyone."

LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Partners included in housing

By Roopa Raman
Daily Bruin (U. California Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – Same-sex domestic partners won a victory at UCLA this month when they became eligible to live in university housing that was once restricted to heterosexual partners only.

Chancellor Albert Carnesale approved policy amendments on Feb. 7 – after years of lobbying by the Graduate Students Association and lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender members of the UCLA community.

In the past, some students decided not to attend UCLA after being rejected from family student housing, said GSA President Charles Harless, who pursued the issue following efforts by former GSA President Martin Griffin.

"We're losing some graduate students because of this issue, which is a very easy thing that can be fixed," he said.

All University of California campuses now allow domestic partners to occupy family housing, which was previously exclusive to heterosexual couples and single parents.

"There is more of a perception that the university wasn't welcoming before, but they are now," Harless said.

Carnesale's announcement followed a statement issued Jan. 29 by UC President Richard Atkinson to all UC chancellors clarifying system-wide guidelines for eligibility in family student housing.

The guidelines established that housing would be accessible to students with dependent children and to students who have a mutually dependent relationship with a spouse or family member. Campuses can choose to give priority status to students who have legally dependent children living with them.

Atkinson also gave the chancellors individual powers to determine categories of eligibility based on the campus enrollment management goals and local market condition.

Ronni Sanlo, director of the UCLA LGBT Resource Office, along with the Chancellor's Advisory Committee for LGBT issues, drafted a revised copy of the housing policy that was inclusive of LGBT students last summer.

Included in the proposal were three tiers identifying the priority at which domestic partners should be eligible for family housing: single parents with children; couples with children; then married couples or partners with a domestic partnership certificate.

The proposed policies were submitted to the division of Student & Campus Life, and a majority of the deans and directors accepted them. The policies became official after Atkinson reassigned authority to the chancellors to approve housing policies.

It was discriminatory for housing to not admit domestic partners before, Sanlo said.

"UCLA must be safe and welcoming for any student that comes to UCLA," she added.

BY SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

News Flash

The path between the Student Union and the Campus Center is always filled with new and exciting things that are going on and around campus.

Syracuse U. Interfaith Middle Eastern Experience trip postponed

By Ashley Hirt
Daily Orange (Syracuse U.)

(U-WIRE) SYRACUSE, N.Y. – Fifteen months ago, bombs exploded and gunfire rang out as an old conflict began to rage anew in Israel and surrounding areas.

Israelis are accusing Palestinian violence of blocking peace options, while Palestinians are saying there is no alternative but to use violence against Israeli policies to restrict their movement in the area.

This ego struggle has left 22 members of the Syracuse University community disappointed but understanding they too have no alternative.

They are the members of the Interfaith Middle Eastern Experience, a group sponsored by Hendricks Chapel. The group consists of five Jewish students, two Muslim students, five Christian students and a group of seven faculty or retired faculty members. The organization is dedicated to breaking the social and religious barriers that exist between these groups and promoting peace among them, said Thomas Wolfe, the dean of Hendricks Chapel and leader of the IMEE.

The IMEE's original plan was to travel to Israel and gain first hand knowledge of the conflict between people there and to visit the most holy sites. This dream was squelched when the violence erupted yet again.

The violence, which has been occurring on and off for years, is really a "struggle between ideologies," Wolfe said. He also said there is no end in sight. The trip, originally planned for fall 2000, was rescheduled for January 2001 when the violence first began.

Now the trip has been postponed a second time and students and faculty involved are worried they may never get the chance to go.

The trip was funded by a Vision Fund Grant, which gave $20,000 to the group. The money already has been held for a year and can be guaranteed to the group only for one more year because of other organizations the Vision Fund supports.

The Vision Fund is an organization dedicated to serving SU by giving grant monies to faculty who have ideas for new projects that would help the university reach its goal of becoming a "student-centered research university," Vice Chancellor and Provost Deborah Freund said.

It was Freund who had the initial idea for such a fund.

The fund began three years ago, with approximately $1 million coming directly from the university. The fund gives grants from $5,000 to $25,000, said Hank Wilbur, associate vice president for undergraduate study and Project Advance.

Wilbur is also disturbed by the postponement of the trip to Israel but is realistic about the fate of the money and the IMEE program.

"We think it's a great idea, and I would love for them to be able to swing it," Wilbur said. "But conditions would have to get a lot better, and I can't hold the money forever."

Wolfe and the others involved in IMEE understand this as well.

"I'm committed to the trip and the group but it's not looking good," said Wolfe, who, having been to Israel a few times already, knows what it can be like.

"Would I travel there today? Yeah, probably, but the intricacies of this [conflict] are mind blowing," Wolfe said, shaking his head.

He stressed especially with the diverse group they are attempting to bring there, a lot of caution would be needed.

Wolfe said in some places they were planning to visit, some members of their group wouldn't be allowed near the sites because of their faiths and ethnicities.

Places on the agenda for the trip included many important religious sites. The Western Wall is one of the surviving walls of the holy temple in Jerusalem. The Via de la Rosa is the traditional route Jesus walked to the site of his crucifixion. The tomb of Jesus is the most holy site in all of Christianity, and the Al Asqa mosque is one of the most holy sites in the Muslim tradition.

"That's intense stuff," Wolfe said. "We've tried to anticipate the consequences of someone having to stay behind, but we have no clear picture."

For now, no clear picture is needed. The trip won't happen until Israel becomes more socially and politically stable.

Involved students seem somewhat relieved but still disappointed.

"It's so sad," said Jessica Wintringham, a Jewish political science graduate student in the group. "That land means so much to so many different people and it's just not a safe place to travel and learn."

"I'm disappointed that violence won't subside, but no doubt it was a good call," said Adam Chodak, a Jewish senior in the College of Arts and Sciences and S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications.

Despite the disappointment of another postponement, the group still is trying to stick together by having meetings, dinners and speakers. At a recent event, students got the opportunity to hear what Chodak described as a heated debate between Palestinians and Israelis.

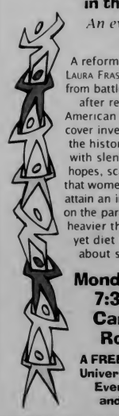
"It was amazing to hear the anger, mistrust and blame among complete strangers," Wintringham said.

This is one poignant example of events that are keeping the group going. They are hoping to continue with the meetings and to do a service project in the wider community.

"We're finding ways to become close," Wolfe said, "past what some people see as insurmountable barriers."

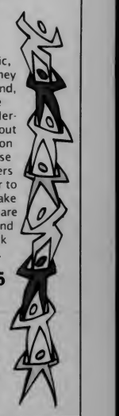
WRITE FOR NEWS

UMass Student Legal Services Office



FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!

545-1995
CALL TODAY!

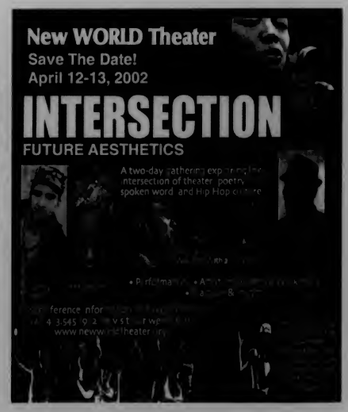


922 CAMPUS CENTER

LOSING IT:
False Hope and Fat Profits in the Diet Industry

An evening with author Laura Fraser

Laura Fraser talks about her journey from battling an eating disorder and, after recovering, taking on the American diet industry in an undercover investigation. She'll talk about the history of America's obsession with slenderness, and all the false hopes, scams and medical disasters that women have endured in order to attain an impossible ideal. She'll take on the paradox of why Americans are heavier than any other people, and yet diet the most, and she'll talk about some practical changes.



Monday February 25
7:30 to 9:00 pm
Campus Center
Room 174–176

A FREE TALK sponsored by University Health Services, Everywoman's Center and Five College Inc.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
FRIDAY 2/22 THURSDAY 2/28/2002
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
In the Bedroom(R) 12:20 4:15 7:15 10:20
The Count Of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:35 7:00 10:00
Hart's War(R) 12:50 4:45 7:45 10:40*
Black Hawk Down(R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
John Q(PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
A Beautiful Mind(PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:30
Collateral Damage(R) 12:30 4:30 7:40 10:20*
Lord Of the Rings(PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
Big Fat Liar(PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:10 9:30*
Sneak preview 40 Days & 40 Nights 2/23/02 7:30
Crossroads(PG13) 12:00 2:15 4:35 7:05 9:45*
Senior Movie - 2/28/02 John Q doors open at 11:45
Super Troopers(R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15*
• no passes/supersavers
Return to Neverland(G) 12:35 2:30 4:40 7:15 9:20*
Tours & theater outlines at cinemark.com

New WORLD Theater
Save The Date!
April 12-13, 2002
INTERSECTION
FUTURE AESTHETICS

A two-day gathering exploring the intersection of theater, poetry, spoken word and Hip Hop culture
www.newworldtheater.org

CJ's Stables Restaurant
C.J.'s Country Cookin'
Route 9 Hadley • 586-4305
Stables has a Bakery!
Homemade Pastry, breads & more
all made from scratch
Don't forget to come in for our Homemade Soups &
Daily Luncheon Specials or call ahead for Take Out.
Monday - Friday 5:30-3:00 Closed Tuesday
Sat. & Sun. 6-2 Breakfast only

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM WRITING IS LIKE SEX: IF IT'S NOT ONE'S BEST IT'S WORTH LITTLE. FITZGERALD ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

News coverage needs to have new priorities

Since September 11, the question, "When will American life return to normal?" has been asked repeatedly.

Well, we can rest assured that things are, in fact, back to normal. Or, at least, back to normal in the sense that America's news is fixated not on news of terrorism or war, but rather on irrelevant, banal human-interest stories.

It was, of course, very sad when Canadian figure skaters Jamie Sale and David Pelletier were denied a gold medal for what was clearly the best performance in the Pairs Figure Skating event in the Olympics. And it made for a great photo opportunity when the pair were granted gold medals and ascended the Olympic podium with their new co-winners, Russians Yelena Berezhnava and Anton Sikharulidze.

Certainly the propensity for scandal within figure skating deserves attention from the sporting world. It would be a shame had the scandal been ignored, and viewers simply accepted the decisions of the potentially corrupt judges involved.

But does the Pairs Figure Skating controversy merit front page headlines and the cover of national news magazines at a time when the terrorist threat is far from over, and when America is considering broadening the scope of its current military actions?

President Bush and his advisors are mulling over the possibility of expanding war to Iraq, Iran and North Korea. Bush's recent State of the Union address made war with Iraq seem imminent. Meanwhile, Osama bin Laden and a number of Al-Qaeda operatives remain uncaptured, and have the potential to strike again.

Not to mention that tensions have flared in the Middle East. A suicide bomber killed two Israelis in a pizzeria on Saturday, and new bombers killed four Israelis on the Gaza Strip on Monday. Israeli air strikes have killed at least twenty Palestinians over the past several days, and gunmen at a checkpoint killed six Israeli soldiers on Tuesday.

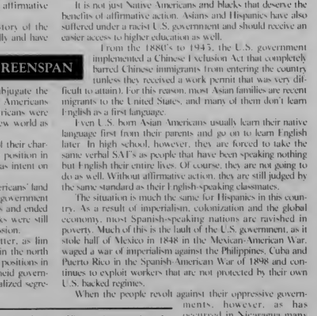
And finally, the U.S. Supreme Court is hearing arguments about the constitutionality of a school voucher system. Their ruling will answer long-asked questions about private education and the separation of church and state, as well as the potential for President Bush's proposals for "faith-based" solutions to America's problems.

One would think that these would be the news stories that keep us captivated. But instead, our interests are focused on the world of Olympic figure skating. The press coverage of the Women's Figure Skating gold medalist will surely prove to be awesome. And we will doubtlessly be bombarded with updates on the changes being made to figure skating judging in light of the recent controversy.

Sale and Pelletier have announced that they would like the press to let them be. They called a press conference on Saturday, which they termed their "last," and pleaded for some privacy.

"All I ask is for my life to be normal again," Pelletier said. "But I'm not naive and stupid and think this is going to happen in the next few days."

Can't we give him his wish?



Information from CNN.com was used in the writing of this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

Why just a month?

JAMIE LOO

"If there's anything to feel guilty about it's that these statistics are not more familiar to us and that we're not doing more about it."

Primetime sports take a Daytime slant:

Olympics becoming just another forum for disappointment

SHARON STIMPFLE

Passions 300-year old witch, Tabitha, and her "one-of-a-kind" friend, Jimmy, should be warned. Push over Hope and Bo, a new duo is taking the NBC center stage: "Like corruption through the judging system, so are the days of our lives." The figure skating scandal has become one of the biggest soap operas in Winter Olympics history.

For those of you who missed last week's episodes, here's the storyline:

Canadians Jamie Sale and David Pelletier had to share the Olympic podium — and the gold — with Yelena Berezhnaya and Anton Sikharulidze of Russia. The Canadians' silver was exchanged for gold medals once reports of corruption in the judging system surfaced.

Reliable sources within the International Skating Union (ISU) reported that French judge, Marie Reine Le Gougne, told ISU members that she had voted for the Russian pair skaters at the direction of the French skating federation and its president. It is alleged that the French and Russians agreed to trade votes: pairs skating for ice dancing. In effect, Le Gougne favored the Russian couple to ensure a gold medal for the French in the ice dancing competition.

We've seen it with horse racing and boxing — and now the Olympics. It's called "fixing." The standing ovation and crowd roar following the Canadian performance made it clear, Sale and Pelletier won the gold... or so one would have thought. It was only on the part of the Canadian Olympic delegation, after requesting an investigation as to why the Russians won the gold medal despite Canada's worthier performance, that "Viva les Canadiens" could be heard.

The International Olympic Committee has just officially licensed a new video game, Salt Lake 2002 allows up to four players to compete in reproductions of six outdoor venues currently underway in Utah. Available for Sony Playstation 2 and personal computers that run Microsoft Windows software, players can compete for the gold in the world's finest winter sports events. Producer of the game from Eidos Interactive, Tom Marx, released a statement that it has taken two years of hard work to make the game a reality.

But let's explore the changing reality of the Olympics.

Will the new video game be featuring drug testers in green jackets at every finish line? Samples brought to the Olympic drug testing lab, where it is determined whether or not the athlete is clean, already cost United States bobsledder Pavle Jovanovic his seat after testing positive. He is banned from the sport for two years for trying to boost his performance with drugs.

"Are the Olympics becoming just another arena in which countries can inject personal and national prejudices against one another?"

Five months after the Sept. 11 terror attacks on the United States, the opening ceremonies of the Winter Olympics closed air space above Salt Lake City to aircrafts and involved a search of all spectators. Security is tight. However, the question now posed is whether there are sufficient security measures to secure the integrity of the Olympic games.

Hippias of Elis, a sophist of the fifth century B.C., was the first to compile the initial victor list of the Olympic games. From him, we learn that the first athletic contest, the foot race, was held in 776 B.C. at the sacred place of Olympia in western Peloponnese in honor of the Olympian, Zeus. Olympic festivals later gained considerable importance, ranking among the largest and most famous Panhellenic festivals by the early 1ifth century. The Olympic festival and being victorious in the games became a symbol of spirit and unity. To gain victory was not only a major achievement that gave credits to the athletes and the city, in addition to crediting the personal achievement and wide recognition of the athlete's physical and moral values.

To what credit can we give the French and Russian judges who have tarnished a world sport founded on spirit and unity? To what credit can we give the athletes from around the world augmenting their physical performance with drugs?

Though an international event, the opening ceremonies at Salt Lake City adopted a patriotic tone due to last year's terror attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. "United We Stand"...or do we? Sale and Pelletier must share the status of "gold medallist" with the Russian pair skaters who were chosen in order to guarantee a place on the Wheaties box for a French ice dancing pair. Are the Olympics becoming just another arena in which countries can inject personal and national prejudices against one another?

I can remember watching the Winter Olympics as a young girl. Figure skating has always been my favorite. I would put on my dad's flop-py white socks and glide across my parent's wooden bedroom floor, envisioning an awed audience before me. I would think about my flying quad jumps, elegant spins and intricate footwork. I would think how honored I would feel to be a part of such a respected world tradition. I would think about representing my country. Never in these childhood fabrications did I think that my technique and artistry would be tainted through the scoring of a corrupt judging system.

I suppose the value of young idealism can never be compromised.

It's only once you've grown up when you realize how most other things can be.

Sharon Stimpfle is a Collegian columnist.

Hooray for Ed/Op!!!

Helping right the wrongs:

The role of affirmative action

JESSE GREENSPAN

"I just think everyone should be treated equally."

This one quote is the main defense for why affirmative action should not be employed at UMass.

Unfortunately, however, throughout the history of the United States, people have not been treated equally and have been judged by the color of their skin instead.

From the time the first Europeans arrived in North America, they were already planning how to subjugate the non-white people of the continent. The Native Americans were continually pushed off their lands while Africans were stolen from their homeland and brought to the new world as slaves.

These people were not judged by the content of their character, but were instead forced into a submissive position in society by a racist white, Christian culture that was intent on spreading its faith to the entire world.

By the mid-1800's, nearly all of the Native Americans' land had already been stolen (in part because the U.S. government made over 400 treaties with the American Indians and ended up breaking every single one of them), and blacks were still slaves after more than 200 years of horrible oppression.

After the end of slavery, things were no better, as Jim Crow laws in the south and de facto segregation in the north made it impossible for blacks to move up to high positions in society. People now look at South Africa's apartheid government with disdain, but the U.S. government's legalized segregation was absolutely no better.

With the Civil Rights Act of the mid-1960s, blacks finally gained political equality, but by that time, the majority of African Americans were already living under extreme poverty in either urban or rural sections of the United States.

However, the United States has done virtually nothing to help the black poverty it created through slavery and legal racism. In fact, the government has never even apologized for the institution of slavery, and of course, has never even considered paying reparations for the wrongs it has committed.

As far as the Native Americans go, the government has also never apologized for the blatant robbery of every square inch that now encompasses the United States (and also for robbing a people of their way of life). Instead, it has thrown them onto poverty stricken reservations where there is virtually no hope of economic prosperity.

Leaving the reservation for the American Indian means abandoning their people and assimilating into the culture of their oppressors, while staying on the reservation undoubtedly leads to a life of extreme poverty. It is a no-win situation.

One of the ways to help cure this is to make it easier for Native Americans and blacks to receive a higher education. Both of these groups on average make a lot less money than white people, live shorter lives than white people, and generally live a much harder life than white people. And it is not because they are lazier or stupider than whites, but is instead a result of past and present racism.

"...to deny affirmative action is to say that the economic problems of non-whites are their own fault."

It is not just Native Americans and Blacks that deserve the benefits of affirmative action. Asians and Hispanics have also suffered under a racist U.S. government and should receive an easier access to higher education as well.

From the 1880's to 1943, the U.S. government implemented a Chinese Exclusion Act that completely barred Chinese immigrants from entering the country (unless they received a work permit that was very difficult to attain). For this reason, most Asian families are recent migrants to the United States, and many of them don't learn English as a first language.

Even U.S. born Asian Americans usually learn their native language first from their parents and go on to learn English later. In high school, however, they are forced to take the same verbal SAT's as people that have been speaking nothing but English their entire lives. Of course, they are not going to do as well. With out affirmative action, they are still judged by the same standard as their English-speaking classmates.

The situation is much the same for Hispanics in this country. As a result of imperialism, colonization and the global economy, most Spanish-speaking nations are ravished in poverty. Much of this is the fault of the U.S. government, as it stole half of Mexico in 1848 in the Mexican-American War, waged a war of imperialism against the Philippines, Cuba and Puerto Rico in the Spanish American War of 1898 and continues to exploit workers that are not protected by their own U.S. backed regimes.

When the people revolt against their oppressive governments, however, as has occurred in Nicaragua many times, the United States comes in and violently crushes the revolution in order to benefit its own economy at the expense of human rights.

"...to deny affirmative action is to say that the economic problems of non-whites are their own fault."

When Hispanics immigrate to the United States looking for a better life, they generally speak nothing but Spanish and cannot advance economically. Their kids also learn Spanish first, and will obviously not receive the English training that whites tend to receive. However, even though their poverty has a lot to do with U.S. foreign policy and even though they are held to the same standards on the SAT's as English speakers, they were barred the benefits they deserved with the end of affirmative action at UMass.

Granted, there are non-whites in this country that do not deserve affirmative action. Asians and Hispanics that grew up speaking nothing but English generally do not deserve affirmative action. Michael Jordan's kids do not deserve affirmative action. But to deny affirmative action is to say that the economic problems of non-whites are their own fault.

Sometime in the future, when affirmative action has run its course, one day maybe everyone will actually be treated equally. Until that time though, it is the proper decision to help right the wrongs committed by a white U.S. government throughout its history.

Jesse Greenspan is a Collegian staff member.

We are always accepting submissions, and encourage new writers to contact us at collegianeditorial@yahoo.com.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.22.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Sap Rising:

Realism in rural south

By Kelly Wilson
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Christine Lincoln's collection of short stories, Sap Rising, offers a poignant and touching glance into the lives of African Americans living in Grandville, a rural southern town. The artistic way in which the stories intertwine serves to illustrate the typical small town familiarity of the characters. Lincoln's characters are brought to life with realistic details and the human struggles that they face in their daily lives.

The collection's overall themes include the desire for freedom, the difficulty of making choices and the fear and reality of abandonment. Each of the characters are torn between the temptation to explore the bright lights of distant and mysterious worlds, yet frightened by their preconceived notions and the small-mindedness of those around them.

It is the classic inner struggle that we all face, between what is comfortable and safe and what is foreign and unknown. The things that they know and trust seem tiresome and mundane. To them, the outside world has temptations and excitement they have never known. One character who does journey to the city in search of a better life returns with a broken spirit and a child in tow, only to face the humiliation of trying to reestablish her place in society. The others, mostly young and easily influenced children, are disappointed by her failed effort.

Another character, Sonny, sees the city and country worlds collide when his uncle brings a strange woman to visit. Sonny is a young boy who lives on a farm where he works with his parents day after day. The woman, Miss Annie, is from the city and tells Sonny enchanting tales of Africa and other far away places. His mother, however, is adamantly against this woman, worrying that she will corrupt the young boy's mind with distant fantasies.

And she's right. After hearing Miss Annie's stories, Sonny is never again content to chase lightning bugs with his little brother in the fields, for he has gotten a taste of something much grander than the cherry and maple trees that line their modest properties in Grandville.

These stories are beautifully told, evoking a sense of sadness and longing in the reader. The language Lincoln uses is both simple and poetic, revealing everything about her vastly dimensional characters without being overzealous. She seems to exhibit a gentle and genuine affection for the people about whom she writes. As a reader, I felt by the time I finished the book that I knew all of them as well as my own family. Sap Rising is an enjoyable time out, a book that will transport you to another time and place, when life was much simpler.

Sap Rising, by Christine Lincoln, was published by Pantheon.

Sap Rising, by Christine Lincoln, is a moving collection.

COURTESY OF STEVE GRANITZ

Kevin Smith: the man, the myth, the interview

COURTESY LIONS GATE FILMS

Smith as Silent Bob and Jason Mewes as Jay in Mallrats, perusing the classics of American lit.

Smith, Mewes and the cameo-er Ben Affleck.

By Nicholas Pizzolato
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Kevin Smith has had his fifteen minutes of fame.

Oh, not really. But in fifteen minutes, six others and myself threw our questions at him in a whirlwind of an interview.

He spoke of his brilliant and controversial career as a filmmaker, which started with his Gen X film Clerks, and has given him eight years of notoriety and success. Smith remarked on things ranging from his future plans to questions about the fifth Jay and Silent Bob film.

With the release of the double DVD of Jay and Silent Bob Strike Back (available Feb. 26), people are doing to know what filmmaker Kevin Smith is doing. Repeating many times that this is the fifth and final movie starring (or appearing with the duo) Kevin Smith is moving on to become more of a complete filmmaker.

Smith's new film, Jersey Girl, has already begun production. He says that he is extremely happy about the future of this film and his career.

"[Jersey Girl] is a complete 180 from Jay and Silent Bob. You're not dealing with the last five movies and their characters," he said, referring to the fact that throughout the five films characters or the mentioning of characters appear frequently.

"I feel it's the best thing I've written," Smith said. "Jersey Girl was freeing, because I didn't have to worry about the past.

"The film is about parenthood, but it's also about people finding themselves," he said. "What do they say? There are just three types of movies... man vs. man, man vs. himself, and man vs. the universe...this movie is man vs. himself."

And he's not afraid of losing the fan base that Jay and Silent Bob have created for him.

"After five Jay and Bob movies with their same antics (the dick and fart jokes) there is only so much you can do. The people who don't like Jersey Girl are going to be the same people who didn't like Chasing Amy (Smith's third film) and they are going to watch Mallrats for like the fiftieth time."

Other things on Smith's plate include the premiere of a short film next week on the "Tonight Show."

"It's a short film, that basically answers the question 'What do we do after Clerks?' In it we (Smith, Brian O'Halloran, and Jeff Anderson) are having a conversation."

He then started to discuss Jay and Silent Bob, starting with recognizing what went into getting all the cameos.

"Some people contacted me, and some I got in touch with. Like, Matt [Damon] and Ben [Affleck] were in from the get go. We sent the script to Mark Hamill on a lark, thinking how cool would this be. David Duchovny was actually interested in playing that role, but got tied up in Evolution. And then Hamill said yes after reading the script," Smith said. "Who wouldn't want Luke Skywalker? Sometimes we thought it out, and other times, it just happened."

In the film, Ben Affleck poses the question, "who would pay to see a Jay and Silent Bob movie?" and then gives the audience a tongue in cheek look.

How did Smith feel about the film grossing over thirty million dollars?

"Pretty good," responded a happy Kevin Smith. "Considering it's a film about me and [Jason] Mewes going across the country, I think it's pretty awesome."

And his thoughts on comedian Will Farrell who plays Federal Wildlife Marshall Willenholly?

"He is a twisted, comic genius. You either love him, or you hate him, and I think he's great. I'm a big Will Farrell fan," responded Smith who became upbeat just talking about him. "And it's a shame that his best stuff is on the cutting room floor, because when the film was shown to test audiences, any scene without Jay and Bob, the audience became restless. Will ended up suffering the most; he had some really really funny shit. You can see some of it on the DVD, but he was great."

Speaking of the DVD, the question was posed about how Smith felt about the process of bringing everything to a DVD. Smith said simply, "I don't think it adds anything to the movie, but it makes it fun to watch, for the fans and for myself. When I took it home and saw all the stuff on the second disc, I fell in love with the flick again. It's sheer pleasure to watch the outtakes and listen to the commentary."

Toward the end of the conference call interview (which is a story within itself), someone pointed out that Jay and Silent Bob's trek across America to go to Hollywood was very reminiscent of Pee Wee's Big Adventure.

"I actually head that a lot while we were filming it," Smith said. "I saw Pee Wee once, so it really had no immediate influence on me. When we came up for the idea, I envisioned it like a Muppet movie." A Muppet movie on acid.

Brilliant Monster's Ball examines love and race

COURTESY LIONS GATE FILMS

Halle Berry and Billy Bob Thornton in the acclaimed Monster's Ball.

COURTESY LION GATE FILMS

Sean "P. Diddy" Combs as Lawrence Musgrove.

COURTESY LION GATE FILMS

Heath Ledger, P.Diddy and Thornton in death row.

By Jake D. Lewis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

MONSTER'S BALL
Starring Billy Bob Thornton, Halle Berry, Heath Ledger and Peter Boyle
Directed by Marc Forster

In recent years, Billy Bob Thornton has truly wowed me, performing one amazing role after another. Ever since his breakthrough in the 1996 sleeper hit Sling Blade (which he wrote), he has had hardly any misfires (even the peculiar Pushing Tin was an interesting character turn for him). Nominated only once for an Academy Award for Best Supporting Actor in A Simple Plan, he can be compared to his contemporary Sean Penn – an actor who delivers jaw-dropping performances one after the other, but gets very little due recognition from the public and critics. This year more than ever before, Thornton has turned in two bravura performances, one in last Fall's Coen Brothers film noir imitation The Man Who Wasn't There and now the deeply absorbing Monster's Ball.

Thornton plays Hank Grotowski, a quiet, Death Row prison guard who lives with his disabled, racist father (Boyle) and his vulnerable son, Sonny (Ledger), also a guard. Sonny is a disappointment to both older men, especially when he bonds with Lawrence Musgrove (Sean Combs), a black inmate about to be executed. (A "monster's ball" is old, English slang referring to a prisoner's last night before being put to death.)

As Musgrove is taken to the electric chair, Sonny vomits, expelling the hatred that has been implanted in him growing up, showing that he, unlike his father and grandfather, has feelings and cannot swallow them anymore. Hank, too, has emotions bottled up inside, and at the smallest hint of them, his father chides him. So instead, he keeps them corked, but the viewer finds reassurance in the fact that Hank is not as bigoted as his father and is a good person somewhere underneath all those damaged layers.

Thornton magnificently captures the inner torment and anguish that Hank experiences, stuck between the overbearing grasp of his father and where his true feelings lie. From the slightest bit of body language to the delivery of particular lines, Thornton makes Hank neither sin nor saint – he's merely a lost soul who has made damaging life choices and has no personal connections to anyone. He has sex with the same prostitute as his son, both men never in a face-to-face position, in order to spare any chance of an intimate and emotionally connected experience.

Sonny is in training to be the spit of his father, but shortly into the story, he decides to opt out of the self-destructive lifestyle earlier than expected. After seeing Ledger in 2000's Mel Gibson-Revolutionary war epic, The Patriot, he showed traces of being a Hollywood megastar. He seered off-course with last year's dreadful A Knight's Tale, but has now rejoined the path he was previously on, sinking his teeth into a juicy part, which he handles masterfully.

In the quiet Georgia town where the story is set, it's a pretty small world, and Hank soon encounters Musgrove's widow, Leticia (Halle Berry), all the while never knowing the connection between her and the inmate. She, too, has gone through a transitive time in her life like Hank, and the two begin a relationship out of necessity. Because of their shared experience, they are able to transcend the color barrier that might have previously existed. The tension of their relationship builds to its boiling point, at which time Leticia and Hank engage is a passionate, lovemaking free-for-all. I say love, but at this point it's still not clear what their intentions are. Is it merely an act so that they can have some feeling back in their lives, or have these two broken individuals found their other halves?

The film never really answers this question, only hinting at one outcome more than the other, but not quite settling on it. Even as the camera pans away from the two at the end of the film, and Thornton mumbles the last line with a small smirk on his face, you'd think that it was a clear-cut culmination, yet doubt tends to remain.

After seeing how the film has progressed, it is hard to believe that a conclusion is so cut-and-dry, much like real life where there are sometimes no real answers.

Halle Berry is well deserving of the Academy Award she is up for in this role. She goes out on a limb, baring both body and soul, and should be bestowed a prize if just for the sheer guts it took to carry out such a daring task. Ask me three years ago if I ever thought Halle Berry, the vixen of The Flintstones movie who was the driver involved in a hit-and-run, would be up for one of the most prestigious awards in the film biz, and I would've laughed in your face. While I think that the Academy is still too "white" for Berry to achieve this well-deserved statue, Monster's Ball is a clear turning point in her career.

Also strutting their stuff are the first-time screenwriters Mike Addica and Will Rokos, penning a script reminiscent of an Andrew Dubus story, like its fellow Oscar candidate In the Bedroom. The script is powerful with its silence, leaving more unsaid that out-in-the-open, much like acting newcomer Coronin Calhoun as Berry's obese son Tyrell. Incidentally, he was only cast in the movie because he lived in the same town where it was being filmed, having no prior experience in front of a camera.

Director Marc Forster is also a newcomer, his two previous films being Sundance Film Festival favorites. Despite glowing reviews for this film, he is in no hurry to convert to the mainstream of Hollywood. Monster's Ball is aimed directly for the art-house and independent film audiences and may not fare as well in the same megaplexes as, say, Hart's War and Return to Neverland.

Monster's Ball is a very important movie because of its cultural significance. A movie like this is a diamond in the rough, sneaking on to the radar, hitting dead-on with some audiences, and then riding into the sunset with a silent hurrah

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups

Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

If you are interested in studying the ancient art of Buddhist swordsmanship, please contact DeSilva Sabom-Nim at 413-684-0113.

The sisters of Sigma Kappa would like to welcome the arrival of their national president, Angela Guillory.

Contact your Avon Representative at Umass. Call 883-1613 or e-mail avonrep@hotmail.com.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstmeadows.com 253-7879

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstplace.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Mazda Protege 4dr/Lx Gray 174k, excellent condition $1400.00 533-3252 ...@umassmail.com

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00, Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary, 20hrs/week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 866-291-1884 ext. 485.

Sell Khach Card Packets in Campus Center, Dorms, Etc. More you sell, more money you make. Call Mike 781-929-2818.

Wanted student to assist new web based business located on Cape Cod. Must have Marketing web skills. Contact Howie @ ...@adelphia.net

Custodian Wanted first Congregational Church of Hadley. P/T 15 hrs/week. Respond by e-mail ...@msn.com

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont. 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary will train. Full and part time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941) 329-6434 www.cruisecareers.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE: DJ Looze and SYB productions are now booking for spring semester, call 537-8527.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Game Boy Advance system, three games, power supply $100, 413-527-3319.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich/P Mulrey, I Mekeown, R Polenzani/ 15+ yrs teaching, all levels, 413-374-6310 D Goodrich@hotmail.com

Private Boxing Lessons with retired pro, Djata Bumpus. In Amherst call 413-731-1450.

ROOM FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

ROOMATE WANTED

Cheap rent, 1 bed room, female preferred, Colonial village bus rte 253-0920.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Days $279! Includes Meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $ 459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Tickets! Get a FREE MTV audience tickets to select shows when you book your Spring Break though StudentCity.com! Go to MTV.com or call StudentCity.com at 1-800-293-1443 for details! Tours and tickets are limited.

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other worldwide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email ...@sunsplash.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.ststravel.com/collegesplash

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtravel.com 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network

3	CBS/3
4	NBC
5	Fox Sports NE
6	PBS/57
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	WB/22
9	HSCN Movie Channel
10	TV Guide Channel
11	FOX/61
12	ABC/6
13	NBC/22
14	International Channel
15	UMATV
16	HSCN Info Channel
17	ESPN
18	ESPN 2
19	CNN/HN
20	ESPN Classic
21	Travel-n-Living
22	CNN
23	CNN/HL
24	Weather Channel
25	Learning Channel
26	History Channel
27	A&E
28	Discovery Health
30	Food Network
31	NASA
32	Home & Garden TV
33	Travel Channel
34	Lifetime
35	CNBC
36	Tech TV
37	BET
38	UPN 40
39	USA
40	TNN
41	MTV
42	CMT
43	VH-1
44	TNT
45	TBS
46	E! Entertainment
47	Sci-Fi Channel
48	Court TV
49	Nick at Nite
50	Comedy Central
51	Cartoon Network
52	Game Show Network
53	TV Land
54	FOX Family
55	Univision
56	Cultivision
57	Telemundo
58	College TV Network
59	C-SPAN
60	C-SPAN2
61	Bloomberg Television

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 22, 2002

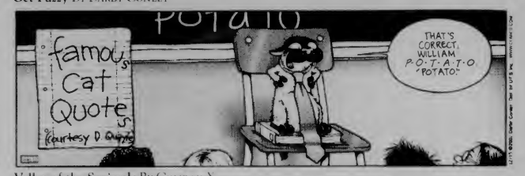
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Now With Bill Moyers (N)		Gladiators: Bloodsport
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours (In Stereo)		 "Primal Fear" (1996, Suspense) Richard Gere, Laura Linney (In Stereo)				News
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours (In Stereo)		 "Primal Fear" (1996, Suspense) Richard Gere, Laura Linney (In Stereo)				News
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	My Wife Kids	According-Jim	Drew Carey	Whose Line?	20/20		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Sabrina-Witch	Raising Dad	Reba (N)	Maybe It's Me	News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)						News
WTXX	20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Sabrina-Witch	Raising Dad	Reba (N)	Maybe It's Me	News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)						News
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	 "Lost in Space" (1998, Science Fiction) William Hurt				News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)						News
WGBY	57	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Now With Bill Moyers (N)		Blackadder III	Red Green	Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	My Wife Kids	According-Jim	Drew Carey	Whose Line?	20/20		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	 "Little Kingdom 2" (1992, Drama) Mel Gibson, Danny Kaye (In Stereo)						Frasier	5th Wheel
WTBS	29	Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	 "Robot Wars" (1967, Suspense) Kerwin Mathews, Judy Meredith				 "Fallen" (1997, Suspense) (PA) Denzel Washington
A&E	10	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	Star Struck	Biography: Al Capone		Empire of Crime: A Century of the New York Mob				Law & Order: Fiocca a Fiocca
CNN	20	Money line		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point		Larry King Live		Newsnight		Greenfield	Money line
COM	15	Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show	Geeks	Com-Presents	Com-Presents	Com-Presents	Com-Presents	Premium	Premium	Com-Presents	Com-Presents
DISC	23	Giants: Lizards and Snakes		Giants: Spiders and Bears		Hot Pursuit		Crash Files: Inside the NTSB		C.I.A.: Stars on the Wall (N)		Justice Files: "Young Killers"
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Marquette at Cincinnati (Live)				College Basketball: Louisville at St. Louis (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	24	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		 "Degree of Guilt" (1995, Drama) Daphne Zuniga, David James Elliott
MTV	22	Grammy's Unc	Making Band	Making Band	Making Band	Making Band	Making Band	Making Show	Making-Video	Fashionably Loud		Charts	After Hours
NICK	28	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Spongeb	Oddparents	Oddparents	Cheers	Cheers	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	25	Star Trek: The Next Gen.		Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)		Strange World	Arzael: Breed	Chronicle (N) (In Stereo)		Lexx: Mid (N) (In Stereo)		Strange World	Arzael: Breed
TLC	27	Disasters at Sea		Crime Fighting Gadgets		Greatest Monument		Statue of Liberty: Building		Ultimate Ten		Greatest Monument
TNT	59	NYPD Blue (In Stereo)		Pretender: A Virus Among Us		 "The Terminator" (1984) Arnold Schwarzenegger				 "Pete Dexter's Paperboy" (1997, Drama) (PA) Steven Seagal			"Sliver" (1994)
USA	29	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG: Pilot Error (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		½ "MIMIC" (1998, Drama) Mira Sorvino, Josh Brolin
HBO	63	 "Anywhere but Here" (1999, Drama) Susan Sarandon, PG-13				 "Red Planet" (2000) Science Fiction) Val Kilmer, PG-13				½ "The Superbowl 3: Winner Takes All" (1999)		Dennis Miller
MAX	64	 "The Art of War" (2000, Action) Wesley Snipes, R				 "The Program" (1993, Drama) James Caan (In Stereo) R				½ "The Bodyguard" (1992, Suspense) Kevin Costner R
SHOW	65	 "Blackout" (1998, Adventure) Thora Birch, PG				½ "Kalifornia" (1993, Drama) Brad Pitt, TV (In Stereo) R				Stargate SG-1	Chris Isaak (N)		Red Shoe

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

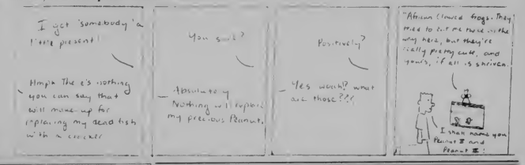
Monty By Jim Meddick

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"...There are only two ways to live your life. One is as though nothing is a miracle. The other is as though everything is a miracle."

-Albert Einstein

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 48 LOW: 25	HIGH: 44 LOW: 24	HIGH: 46 LOW: 28

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – The weather may not be cooperating with you, but you can alter your plans in such a way as to come through an unpleasant situation.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may have to do things in a manner that will attract some criticism today, but the fact is that you have no real choice in the matter.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You won't have a great deal of time to tend to personal affairs today, but if you consolidate your efforts, you can do more than expected.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You'll enjoy spending time with a friend or loved one whom you may not see on a regular basis. Take the opportunity to extend a special invitation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – The most valuable thing for you to do today may be that which others consider a "waste of time." Remember the adage "To each his own."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – The moment you give someone else permission to do something that others are not allowed to do, the floodgates of trouble will open up wide.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – The same old thing again and again may be just what you're in the mood for today. Why go for something new when the familiar is what pleases you?

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – The speed with which you can develop is likely to be cause for some talk among the "experts" at this time. You may be doing the "impossible."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Though a good friend may be giving you some trouble when it comes to work, it's a good day to set aside differences and enjoy some playful fun.

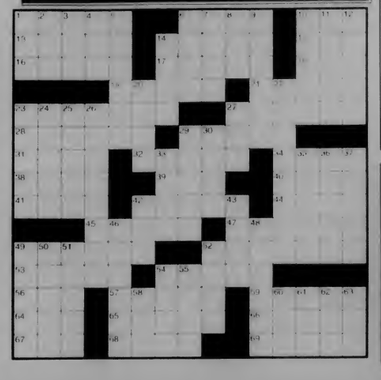
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may be racing around throughout much of the day trying to tie up loose ends. Delegate some responsibility to those you trust.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Personality differences may be too much for you to handle on your own today; get in touch with someone who can start the healing process.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – The "same old thing" will be your best friend throughout the day. You can rely on routine to see you through an unpleasant situation.

ACROSS

1 Quartet member
6 Slapstick projectiles
10 Lynx or panther
13 Licorice-like flavoring
14 "Sour grapes" comer
15 Type of trip
16 Remove errors
17 Tex-Mex dip
18 Isaac Newton's title
19 Semblance
21 Say over and over
23 Quarterback Joe
27 Dragon slayer
28 Accustomed
29 Damp
31 Actress Garr
32 Not yet paid
34 Hardens, as cement
38 Soften
39 Picnic intruder
40 Cure
41 Snow coaster
42 Deluge
44 Whale like Shamu
45 Willow shoot
47 Sunroof or tape deck
49 Take for granted
52 Biggest, as a shirt
53 Get together
54 Abounds
56 Cram
57 Quit napping
59 Ogling
64 Sci-fi craft
65 Send elsewhere
66 Hoarse
67 Heat source
68 Small earning
69 Colony of bees



DOWN

1 Smidgen
2 Capt.'s heading
3 Bird beak
4 Buckeyes' sch.
5 Jamaican music
6 Early vegetables
7 Ocean sighting
8 Aurora, to Socrates
9 Blanks
10 Labor activist Chavez
11 Mellowing, as whiskey
12 Rich cake
14 Orient
20 Reverse
22 Show-offs
23 Small amounts
24 NBA's Shaquille
25 TLC provider
26 Auditioned
27 Musician's job
29 Child
30 Is — suspects
33 Corduroy rib
35 More than odd
36 Tortilla treats
37 Lean
42 "For shame!"
43 — and gloom
46 Smudges
48 Tough questions
49 Cookery term
50 Big mix-up
51 Playwright Neil
52 Suggestive look
54 Soy product
55 — out made do with
58 Sodden
60 Swerve, as a ship
61 "There — tide
62 PBS relative
63 Fenway center

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

M	O	B	I	L	E		A	G	A		C	A	P	P
A	N	I	M	A	S		R	A	N		A	L	A	I
R	O	B	I	N	S		B	I	N		S	I	T	E
		T	E	A	R	O	N	E	S		H	A	I	R
V	I	S	A	S		E	R	S		P	E	S	O	S
E	D	I	T		B	A	S		B	I	D
R	E	N	E	G	E	D		K	A	N		M	O	T
S	A	U	S	A	G	E		A	N	E	M	O	N	E
A	L	S		M	I		B	E	S	I	D	E	S
		P	E	N		B	U	S		N	E	A	T
S	P	A	R	S		Y	A	K		S	I	L	L	Y
N	E	G	O	T	I	A	T	I	O	N	S
A	D	O	S		R	H	O		R	O	T	T	E	D
P	A	R	T		I	O	N		C	R	E	A	T	E
S	L	A	Y		S	O	S		A	E	R	I	A	L

11.06.01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

New England Clam Chowder

Pot Roast

Fish & Chips

Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

Spinach Noodle Bake (vegetarian/Dr. Bates)

Pasta Bar
Pizza Casserole

Grill Station
Reuben Sandwich

International
Chicken Wing Bar
Buffalo Chicken Wings
Terriaki Chicken Wings
Mozzarella Sticks

DINNER

New England Clam Chowder

George Washington Birthday Special

Grilled Pork Chops with Bourbon-Mustard Glaze

Pan Seared Snapper Fingerlings with Mushroom and Leek Ragout

Grilled Portabella and Arugula Burgers (vegan)

Pasta Bar
Pizza Casserole

Grill Station
Reuben Sandwich

International
Chicken Wing Bar
Buffalo Chicken Wings
Terriaki Chicken Wings
Mozzarella Sticks

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Melissa Hammel
Photo Technician	Jeff Swartz
Copy Editor	Jen Eastwood
Production Supervisor	Glen Watson
Production Staff	Micke McCormick, Riki Alcid, Adam DeYoung

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.22.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Commencement hostilities

Chris Doyle, a freshman, doesn't understand what some of his teammates went through last year.

Hofstra visits Amherst for annual lax clash

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When Hofstra and UMass get together for their annual season-opening lacrosse match-up, you can put records, rankings and expectations on the shelf because anything can happen.

These two teams have a history. Hofstra has long dominated the college lacrosse-loving community of Long Island, and that's not a fact that sits well with the dominant FI faction on the UMass roster. Then there is that whole Minuteman tournament-snubbing on the heels of a 12-2 season that included a 17-13 dismantling of the Pride in Hempstead.

"The way we look at it is they are the ones that took our spot in the tournament," sophomore defenseman Tom Fallon said. "We are angry enough as it is but something like that just makes us more focused."

Fallon, now in his junior season, is one of the key components on a strong and aggressive UMass defense. With the loss of Chris Gabrielli, the Minutemen not only lost one of their best defenders but the leader and the heart of the entire backline.

"You know they called Chris the Warden," assistant coach Andy Shay said. "Whatever he said it was done (snap) like that. He could lead those guys off a cliff."

With Gabrielli gone, senior All American Matt McFarland takes over the leadership role. But aside from his troop guiding duties, Big Doug will likely draw the other team's best player on a weekly basis. Tomorrow that player will be Hofstra's Tom Kessler.

"He is going to cover Kessler, Hofstra's leading scorer," Shay said. "Matt is especially good against lefties, and Kessler is a lefty, so we are excited about that."

After Kessler, Scott Doyle is the Pride's most dangerous scoring weapon. Fallon will likely draw that assignment. If Fallon and McFarland can shut down their counterparts then Hofstra will be starving for offense, especially with the loss of National Player of the Year Doug Shanahan.

Shanahan served the Pride's cause from two angles. Not only was he a lethal midfielder on the offensive side of the timeline, but he was also one of the nation's top face-off men. With the recruiting inroads that Hofstra has in the Long Island area and the return of Kessler, rebounding on offense will be less of a problem than the gap in the face-off circle.

But the Minutemen also know something about finding a replacement for an elite draw man. Jeff Seals was also among the nations best on draws last year, but he was lost to graduation. His departure, coupled with the exceal of Kevin Merchant leaves exactly zero players with any face-off experience.

Senior Dan Paccione is the most likely candidate for the job with his low center of gravity and pit bull like strength, but his skills are raw, and it may take some time for coach Greg Cannella to have a legitimate ace in the circle.

What the Minutemen lack in experience in the circle, they certainly make up for with firepower up front. Despite the graduation of All American attackman Rich Kunkel, UMass returns one of the most potent offense's in the country. Mars Morley will again be expected to fill the net up front, and he will have plenty of midfield support from the likes of Kevin Leveille, Don Little and Chris Fiore.

The only real question on the UMass roster as far as offense goes, is how far the Minutemen's young guns - Jeff Zwicki, Craig Conn, Kevin Glenz - can go in just a small window of time.

But just like last year, when the Minutemen had all the odds stacked against them, they will rely on passion and an utter dislike for their opponents to carry them through.

Like Fallon said, "I wouldn't want to be Hofstra."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

But senior Dan Paccione remembers all too well. And like most of the Minutemen, he's not happy.

Prisco finally back for stuggling Minutemen

By Elena Panova
Collegian Staff

With [illegible] in his possession in the [illegible] Dixon's Massachusetts men's swimming team has [illegible] at Boston University. Beating Bill [illegible] Dixon's crew [illegible] Yale [illegible] Saturday's meet [illegible] Minutemen [illegible] Dixon [illegible] Yale [illegible] [illegible] Yale [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

INTERNATIONAL BRIEFS

International Briefs

China WTO member-ship has ups and downs, says U. New Mexico speaker

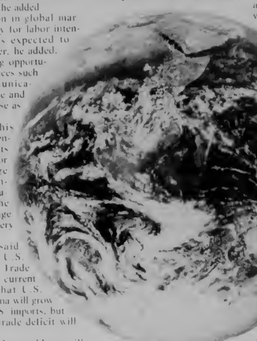
By Angela Williams
DAILY LOBO (U. NEW MEXICO)

(U-WIRE) ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. – China's recent admission to the World Trade Organization will ease – but not eliminate, barriers to international trade, visiting professor Peter Walters said Thursday.

Walters, head of the Department of Business Studies from the Hong Kong Polytechnic University, outlined the positive and negative aspects of potential international trade in China after the nation officially joined the WTO in December. He said the new opportunities would certainly increase trade but added that current problems in the main land won't disappear just because of the WTO.

His presentation organized by the University of New Mexico's Anderson Schools of Management was prompted by the debate surrounding China's role in the WTO after a 15-year struggle. The main objection to China joining the WTO was based on alleged human rights violations. Chinese officials finally agreed to the WTO terms, which led to China becoming the organization's 143rd member.

Walters said China's restrictions on foreign companies will loosen over several years while the opening of Chinese markets will create many opportunities. Exports to the Chinese market and foreign direct investment should become easier with the new regulations reduced tariffs and the eventual elimination of import quotas, he added.



Competition in global markets, especially for labor intensive goods, is expected to become tougher, he added, stating that big opportunities for services such as telecommunications, insurance and banking will rise as well.

Despite his belief that opening the markets will be good for the average Chinese consumer, he cautioned that the nation's average consumer is very poor.

Walters said the U.S. International Trade Commission's current forecast is that U.S. exports to China will grow faster than U.S. imports, but a large U.S. trade deficit will still remain.

He stated that problems will occur due to many Chinese trade regulations that need to be revised to comply with the WTO, in addition to local opposition to the organization. The Chinese government, Walters said, still has ways of getting around the new trade regulations.

Walters cited the case of Chinese farmers who import soybean products, which are sometimes genetically engineered. He said the Chinese government demands authorization for import of any product that has been genetically engineered.

However, he said, no authorization forms have been designed yet making it impossible to ship those goods.

Walters pointed out that trade with China is also government and business "relation-ship based." He said the need to develop a good relationship with the government and local officials is much more important than in the United States.

Some areas, such as the media, will be excluded from the liberalized trade, he said.

The United States, Walters added, shouldn't assume that it wouldn't encounter domestic or other foreign competition.

He said China has very strong local competition in many parts of the country.

He raised other concerns, such as whether Chinese exports and foreign direct investment would be treated fairly in overseas markets.

"It's not just a question of whether China's going to implement the WTO, the other aspect is foreign countries," Walters said. "Are they going to implement the WTO in full spirit when they have to compete against very cost effective Chinese enterprises?"

Illinois to participate in Middle East water research project

By Nadia Malik
Daily Illini (U. Illinois)

(U-WIRE) CHAMPAIGN, Ill. – Tensions in the Middle East have risen lately with retaliatory killings in Palestine and Israel, and Congress wants to prevent future problems with new appropriations that involve the University of Illinois.

The International Arid Lands Consortium, created by Congress in 1990, received $2.5 million this month to continue research on water issues in the Middle East. The University, as part of the consortium with eight other universities and organizations, helps decide which research projects receive the money.

"It's a partnership of organizations that explore problems and solutions of arid and semi-arid regions of the world," said Earl Kellogg, member of the consortium board and director of international affairs at the University.

Congress aims to increase collaboration among people in the Middle East and America, Kellogg said, which is why groups from Jordan, Egypt and Israel are part of the consortium.

Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) advocated the appropriations because the consortium has a reputation for studying pollution and researching problems involving arid lands, said Stacey Zolt, Durbin's press secretary.

"It feels it's important because of the looming issue of water and energy in the Middle East," Zolt said.

Jeff Dawson, University representative on the research and development advisory committee for the group, said proposals for grant money receive more weight if they show scientists in the United States working with scientists in Jordan, Egypt and Israel.

"One of the purposes was to bring people in the Middle East together on projects," Kellogg said. "There's a bigger purpose to it, in a sense."

Dawson said the money they receive from Congress is minisculine compared to other expenditures, but the purpose is to address a water shortage problem in the Middle East so the shortage cannot be used to ignite problems in the future.

The projects focus on the ecosystem of arid lands and ways to allocate water in the regions, Dawson said. Many University professors who propose projects collaborate on the research with other universities, which is later presented to the Middle Eastern countries.

Kellogg said the research projects are expanded to show the effects of the research in specific areas.

The consortium also sponsors peace fellowships that allow students from the University to travel to Egypt, Jordan or Israel for research.

"We're moving in a small way to help the prospects for peace in the Middle East," Dawson said.

International students mean business at Cal State-Long Beach

By Ako Sakurai
Daily Forty-Niner (California State U. Long Beach)

(U-WIRE) LONG BEACH, Calif. – Practicality and diversity at U.S. universities attract many

Turn to BRIEFS, page 5

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Gargantia Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Gircyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniuwski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING
✓ Student Discounts
✓ Professional Bartending Training
✓ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✓ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✓ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
-MARCH 8TH - 10TH
-LEWIS-SEBRING ROOM
-VALENTINE HALL
-AMHERST COLLEGE
Call Now, Space is Limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT IN THE CENTER OF TOWN•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2002

New WORLD Theater
Save The Date!
April 12-13, 2002
INTERSECTION
FUTURE AESTHETICS
For conference inform... call 413 545-1972 ...
www.newworldtheater.org

Munchie Madness 3-6PM
TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Veggie Potato Skins 4.48
Nachos Especial 4.48
Sweet Potato Fries 3.38
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

IN SHAPE NUTRITION
GET IN SHAPE!
Burn Fat, Build Muscle!
SPECIALS
XENADRINE Fat Burner 120 capsules $23.95
CREATINE 500g. $15.99
WHEY PROTEIN 6 lbs. $27.99
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
65 University Drive
Amherst, Massachusetts
PHONE: 549-7434
HOURS:
M thru F 10 - 7
Sat 10 - 5
Met-Rx Cytodyne Ephedra Twinlabs Next Proteins Sportpharma Molecular Nutrition Ensure Balance Bar
Soltec Nutrition AST Sports Science EAS American Bodybuilding Solgar Flora

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON
Travel to Learn this Summer!
These programs provide a dynamic learning experience—a lively blend of classroom and field activities resulting in a true appreciation of the host country.
Field School in Prehistoric Archaeology in Belize
After Cuba Today: People, Culture, and Historical Environment
Ireland Today: Politics and Society
Spanish Language and Culture in Mexico
Vietnam Today: Culture, History and Politics
For more information, contact University of Massachusetts Boston Division of Corporate, Continuing and Distance Education 100 Morrissey Blvd. Boston MA 02125-3393
UMASS BOSTON
call us 617.287.7913
visit us www.conted.umb.edu

WHEN SOMEONE ASKS YOU WHAT YOU DID IN COLLEGE, WHAT WILL YOU TELL THEM?
THE AMHERST FIRE STUDENT FORCE WILL BE RECRUITING NEW MEMBERS FEB 25-27 AT THE CAMPUS CENTER.

OR COME TO OUR OPEN HOUSE FRIDAY MARCH 1ST AT THE NORTH FIRE STATION (UP THE HILL FROM SYLVAN) @6PM.
OR CALL AT 549-5419.

Police Log

February 16

Larceny

A laptop was taken from a locked dormitory room.

Suspicious Person

A caller reported that while his girlfriend was taking a shower a white male walked in and looked at her. He then apologized and left.

A caller reported hearing a suspicious conversation. Individuals were spoken with and it was determined to be a conversation about financial matters.

February 17

Vandalism

The windshield of a vehicle in Lot 21 has spider webs from being hit by something.

A windshield was reported smashed and a car stereo reported missing in a car in Lot 22.

February 18

Larceny

An individual reported that she brought her bicycle to campus and locked it in a rack outside of the library and that it was stolen when she came back.

Suspicious Person

A person reporting that they found a bike was advised to return the property to the place where it was discovered.

Vandalism

POLICE LOG

A person reported that the windows in his vehicle were smashed while it was parked in front McKimmie overnight.

February 19

Annoying Behavior

A caller stated that 3 individuals were walking on the roof of the Fine Arts Center.

A caller informed the police that a group of children were skateboarding on the Campus Center directly under a no skateboarding sign. The children were asked to move along.

February 20

Suspicious Person

Skateboarders were being very noisy along the Fine Arts Center. They were told to leave by police.

February 21

Annoying Behavior

A caller requested police assistance at the Forestry Building for a subject who refused to leave the office area.

Suspicious Person

A caller reported a trespasser in Kennedy dormitory – the suspect was not found.

A caller reported that ten well-dressed males walked by security in Brown Dormitory in search of a female party that lived in the building.

February 22

Annoying Behavior

The police received a report of five to six males throwing a Frisbee at vehicles and causing their alarms to go off. An officer talked to the individuals.

Present ... arms!

The Air Force ROTC color guard at the men's basketball game in the Mullins Center.

■ briefs

continued from page 2

international students to study business and engineering. California State University-Long Beach is no exception.

In the fall 2001 semester, 1,553 international students were enrolled at CSULB, 4.5 percent of the whole student population. Among those students, 388 majored in business and 366 majored in engineering.

"Business is a popular major for all students, including international students," said Paul Frantz, director of the International Business Program. "International students, though, who are interested in business realize that a business education from a United States institution will enable them to understand the business culture of the U.S. as well as the business culture in their home country. They will be uniquely qualified to work for either U.S. companies or companies back home."

Nobuo Ehine, senior international business major, agreed.

"There's more opportunity to work with foreign business people," he said.

His home country, Japan, has universities with business degrees, but studying the subject in the United States lets him learn "how to communicate with Mexican and foreign people and learn their culture by working with them."

Kathy Leu, a management information systems major from Taiwan, said she has similar motivations for studying in the United States. She decided to complete her college education here because studying in English is easier than studying in Chinese.

Leu said studying for her major in the United States is more practical. Business majors are popular, and it's easier to get a job, Leu said. She is looking into Web site design as her career objective.

Veena Kondapalli, from India, who is working toward her master's degree in electrical engineering, also mentioned the practical aspects of studying at American universities. At U.S. universities students need to be "good at communication skills, marketing and interpersonal skills," she said. "That will help us understand all aspects of life."

Lily Gossage, director of admissions and advising in the College of Engineering, said she realizes "math-ready" international students have an advantage in majoring in engineering. The College of Engineering requires mastery of Calculus I for students to be accepted.

"Math-ready international students are joyful to the faculty," Gossage said. "The level of math and science are much higher outside of the U.S., and students usually gravitate toward their strength."

The percentage of international students majoring in engineering increased from 5 percent of the total CSULB student body in Spring 1997 to 12 percent in Spring 2002.

"It will be interesting to see the data for the next spring," Gossage said.

Tuition is a factor, Gossage said. Though international students pay an average $19,420 a year for their education at CSULB, it is still less expensive than a year's tuition at a school in the University of California system.

The College of Business Administration at CSULB is the largest business college in California and among the 10 largest colleges of business in the United States. Enrollment has increased more than 60 percent in the last four years, and it is the most popular major pursued by incoming freshmen.

Student loans cause issues for payment

By Danielle Ritchie
The Oracle (U. South Florida)

(U-WIRE) TAMPA, Fla. – For many people, the cost of attending college is far too expensive to consider. Financial aid – grants, scholarships, loans – is a necessity.

A majority of available scholarships, however, require brains and good SAT scores. Most grants require low income. As a result, students look to loans to subsidize the excessive fees; however, many students find themselves with more than $10,000 to repay upon graduation.

Robert Sanchez, an engineering student who graduated from the University of South Florida in 1993, was faced with about $12,000 in loans after he finished school. He was able to find an entry-level job with a local engineering firm.

Luckily for him, the salary was high enough that he repaid his loans within his first three years – significantly sooner than his initial 20-year repayment agreement.

"Not that I was expecting it when I first got the loans, though," he said. "I would have been happy enough to repay them with the minimum agreed payment at the total length of the loan. I've got a lot of friends who are still paying off their loans and are hardly halfway there."

Upon graduation, every student with a school loan is given six months of deferment before repayment must begin. For a majority of these students, having the extra post-graduation months gives enough time to procure a job that allows enough leftover money to repay school loans.

On the other hand, others find this time period is not enough – especially in such a bad economy. Finding a good job in a harsh economy can prove to be too difficult for an already-tight budget.

As a result, the loan goes into default. So how does one rectify this situation?

The Florida Department of Education reports there are several steps taken in order to recover outstanding balance debts. First, the U.S. Treasury may withhold tax refunds towards repayment of the loan.

Susan McGrath, a previous USF student who decided to leave the university to pursue full-time employment halfway through her junior year, said repaying her loans has become more of a problem than it was originally worth.

"I actually haven't started repaying them because I don't have the money," she said, adding she's been out of school for more than four years.

Her loan, which totals more than $5,000 before interest, originally was obtained to foot the bill for the fees that were not covered by her Florida Pre-Paid College Program.

"Two years ago, they started taking it out of my taxes," McGrath said. "I didn't know they'd be doing that until I got a letter in the mail saying that the money I was expecting as a return would be going straight to the government for defaulted loans."

In addition to the tax refund withholdance, the ex-student may have to pay additional collection costs, much like when a credit card balance is put into collections. According to the Department of Education, this can be as much as an additional 25 percent more than the original loan amount. Having an account reported in collections can cause great damage to a person's credit rating.

If payment still has not been made even after these steps have been taken, the Department of Education can require the person's employer to forward 10 to 15 percent of the ex-student's disposable pay towards repayment of the loan. A federal employee's paycheck automatically will have 15 percent taken out, no questions asked.

If this step is unsuccessful, the department still can take legal action to force the person to repay the loan. In this event, the student could be sued in state or federal district court for the outstanding balance plus attorney's fees and court costs. In any case, credit bureaus may be notified, and credit rating will suffer.

"What's the point of going through four years of school to find a good-paying job, when all you do is beat up your credit rating?" Sanchez said. "Then you can't get a mortgage, a car loan or any credit cards. What was the point?"

Write for News

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
FRIDAY 2/22 THURSDAY 2/28/2002
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND • ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
In the Bedroom(R) 12:20 4:15 7:15 10:20
Hart's War(R) 12:00 4:45 7:45 10:40*
John Q(PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
Collateral Damage(R) 12:30 4:30 7:40 10:20*
Big Fat Liar(PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:10 9:30*
Crossroads(PG13) 12:00 2:15 4:35 7:05 9:45*
Super Troopers(R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15*
Return to Neverland(G) 12:35 2:30 4:40 7:15 9:20*
The Count Of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:15 7:00 10:00
Black Hawk Down(R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
A Beautiful Mind(PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
Lord Of the Rings(PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
Sneak preview 40 Days & 50 Nights 2/21/02 7:30
Senior Movie 2/28/02 John Q doors open at 11:45
* no passes / superservers
$ DAY ASSURANCE POLICY: SALES ON ALL PASSES NO SUPERSERVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

BUSTA RHYMES
WITH SPECIAL GUEST
SUNDAY, MARCH 10, 2002
JOHN M. GREENE HALL, SMITH COLLEGE
8 P.M.
DOORS OPEN AT 7 P.M.
TICKETS ON SALE FRIDAY, FEB. 22ND
GENERAL PUBLIC, $22, AT:
FOR THE RECORD
NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE
TICKETMASTER
5 COLLEGE W/ VALID ID, $18, AT:
UMASS, TICKETS UNLIMITED
AMHERST COLLEGE CAMPUS CENTER, RM. 103
MT. HOLYOKE-BLANCHARD CAMPUS CENTER, INFO. DESK
GENESIS I-THE TOUR
PRESENTED BY SMITH COLLEGE REC COUNCIL

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Protests mar Olympics
Medals still shine bright

Last night the closing ceremonies of the 2002 Winter Olympics marked the conclusion of one of the most controversial Games in recent memory. And let us be the first to say, thank God it wasn't delayed by protest.

Any avid viewer of this year's Games must be wondering what all the whining has been about. All the Olympic griping has just proved the theory that it only takes one person to start an avalanche.

After the controversy over the French judge's tilted scores in pairs figure skating and the ensuing debate over the awarding of two sets of gold medals, the floodgates were effectively opened for any athlete or official with an issue.

Following Skategate, as it has been effectively dubbed by the media, there were protests about drug tests, ice hockey refereeing and yes, more figure skating. The Russians were the most outspoken, as their team was easily the most affected.

Not only did the Russian figure skating pair have to share their victory with Canada, but they also had two athletes suspended from the Games by substance tests and some questionable refereeing in the men's ice hockey semifinal game against the United States.

In light of all the controversy, there was actually some talk about a mass boycott of the remainder of the Games by every Russian athlete.

That threat has since been quelled but the fact remains, all of these protests have amounted to nothing besides a distraction from one of the most intriguing Winter Olympics in history.

For hometown fans, the United States gave its best ever Winter Olympic performance with over 30 medals (ice hockey final pending) and a second place finish to Germany.

Highlighting the Americans' performance was third generation Olympian Jim Shea, a skeleton sledder who claimed gold, and Apolo Anton Ohno, who won both a gold and silver in speed skating events.

But the Olympics are not just about the hometown Americans – after all, the Germans were seemingly omnipresent on the podium, taking 35 medals, including 10 golds.

Usual powers Austria and Norway were also near the top, but the one thing about these Olympics above most others is that competition flourished. Sportsmanship reigned through most of these games and the athletes themselves relished in it.

Competitors from every country spoke of the joys of just being in the Olympics, let alone winning a medal. The Olympics and their participants finally exhibited the spirit that the Games were meant to exemplify.

Athletes from nations all over the world came together and the goal of exciting competition was accomplished.

For the first time in a long time, the medal count wasn't the most important part of the Games, and luckily, these athletes didn't let the protest count get the best of them either.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

The death of Daniel Pearl:
Looking closer at the lines journalists must cross

KEN CAMPBELL

Daniel Pearl is dead.

I'm not sure why that bothers me so much. I obviously feel whatever it is people feel when they hear of another human being's death. Usually that feeling is more detached; usually more of a "that's too bad." But the murder of Daniel Pearl at the hands of Pakistani kidnappers is greeted not just with a general sorrowful feeling but a genuine hurt and sense of grief. I never met the man. Never read his articles that I know of. I didn't even bother to learn his name when I first learned of the kidnapping. That kidnapped Wall Street Journal reporter was all he was to me – at first.

As the weeks went on, though, he became more human. I knew what his wife looked like. I saw that she was pregnant. Daniel Pearl would soon be a dad. Constant media scrutiny didn't turn up anything scandalous about him. He was just a reporter. He was just a clean-cut, capable reporter.

So am I.

We aren't supposed to be targets. We aren't supposed to be really anything at all. Reporters and journalists exist to observe and relate. We aren't part of the story. We are just the storytellers. And that was all Daniel Pearl was at first, a fellow storyteller. News is a lonely business. There isn't much recognition. Very few reporters are well known or recognized. The job isn't about that, it's about telling the story as accurately as possible, and as quickly as possible without sacrificing objectivity.

But Daniel Pearl was lured into a trap. He was promised an interview. He was promised a scoop, something that reporters love to get. We love to be in the front, before everyone else. We love knowing everything just a few minutes before the rest of the world. Pearl was no exception to this rule, and he gladly went off to Pakistan in search of his source.

He was kidnapped, and later killed.

The United States government could do nothing to help him, and the Pakistani government did all it could. Still, Pearl's child will grow up without a father; a young wife has lost her husband.

> "...Pearl's sacrifice just sanctifies that part of journalism that seems to be overlooked in the glitz and glamour of television and celebrity gossip: real, honest-to-God reporting."

But still, I don't know them – not really. I feel for Pearl and his family because he was killed by men who decided to murder an innocent. Worse, it was someone who would have gladly listened to whatever the men had to say and would have made sure the outside world heard it too. The kidnappers cut out their own tongue when they killed Pearl.

I think that's what bothers me the most. The press has a responsibility to do the best it can, and it cannot do that if it's afraid to cover stories because reporters might die. It's like combat journalism. Those men and women go into battle armed not with guns but with cameras and notebooks. A lot of them have died for their efforts to do nothing more than tell the world what was happening. Pearl was killed by a people we were not at war with. Not directly, at least. To use the media as a hostage is an atrocity, as dishonorable as using children or clergy as hostages.

The only solace I can take in Pearl's death was that he died doing what he was committed to do: reporting the facts. The facts killed him in the end, but Pearl's sacrifice just sanctifies that part of journalism that seems to be overlooked in the glitz and glamour of television and celebrity gossip: real, honest-to-God reporting.

I'm not sure if that's going to be enough for Pearl's wife and child. I'm not exactly sure if knowing that reporters everywhere respect and revere Pearl's sacrifice for the craft will help them sleep at night. I don't think that knowing how or why Pearl was killed will ease their suffering. I can take comfort in the thought that Pearl did not die in vain. They can't. What good is a story to them? Can they hug a story? Can they lie in a story's arms and know that everything will be ok? Can they laugh, cry, yell, whisper with a story?

No. So while I can sit here and say, "Well, he died for something," those words sound as cheap as every other news outlet's "heartfelt condolences." Even though I really believe it, and even though I really am heartily sorry and grieved that Daniel Pearl was murdered. Maybe that's what bothers me so much about Pearl's death.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

Write for Ed/Op: if Bob Dylan were a student here, he would.

Some helpful tips on overcoming the senior slump

BRIAN LOHNES

So you're in a funk, a rut a bland state of being. I'm right there with you. This is the weird phenomenon called the senior slump. I'm in it and I'm assuming a bunch of you are too. You know what I mean: the beer isn't as cold, you haven't found a job yet, and you have lost the motivation to make the most of your precious time left at school. Alright, folks, it is time to get back to basics and figure out the ways that we can beat the senior blues.

Do something completely insane as a group – I don't mean a bar crawl. I mean something really wacko, such as running full-steam into the campus pond or perhaps heading back to the dining hall for a dinner. This is all about bringing the spark back into the group of people you have spent four years hanging out with. Remember when it was all new and exciting? No one knew each other and everyone was looking for a group to call their own – now's the time to relive those memories.

Get a damn job – Sounds easy, doesn't it? Seriously, one way to have an easy going full-on fun time here is to have a job already and not have to really worry about anything, except what to wear under your gown at graduation. Hell, even if you have resigned yourself to the fact that you will be the head toilet scrubber at the local public restroom, at least it's something! Honestly, if you are spending too much time reading the latest unemployment reports and hiring rates in your field you will probably have a nervous breakdown (or you already have).

Catch up with a random person from freshman year – Sounds weird? Hell no. Let's set the scene. You are running to class and you happen to see a person from a huge lecture class you had freshman year. We all had a buddy in those classes and you probably haven't seen them since you took the final. Take a minute and ask them how they are doing and how the rest of their life is shaping up. Chances are you probably will have some kind of meaningful conversation, unless of course the person you were stuck sitting next to was the weirdo who actually answered questions in that lecture. In that case, look the ground and mumble to yourself...loudly.

> "Friends don't let friends beat each other in the nads with nerf swords."

Do not play "Magic the Gathering" – Let's say that you have spent the better part of four years with a bunch of people playing fantasy board games. All is not lost. There is time to make a turn-around. First off start by taking a shower and buying something called "deodorant." After that you will want to shave the weird scraggly looking beard that you have been growing for years. Once that is done, you're a new person and no one will recognize you anyway, so head out and reinvent yourself...it's not too late.

Do not "Boff" – I have written a lot of anti-boffing stuff over the years and I stand by the fact that if you "boff" people think you are insane. In case you are wondering "boffing" is, it's sword fighting with nerf swords. The "boffers" perform this activity in areas ranging from the bottom of the Campus Center to the green in Amherst center, and yes, it is college students doing the "boffing." Friends don't let friends beat each other in the nads with nerf swords.

Do place less emphasis on class – Hey, if you've got your ducks in a row, and all you have to do is pass the classes that you have, and you aren't taking say, 23 credits, ease off. Look, as much as that A in Theater 100 means to you, screw it, you have too much more important stuff to do than worry about your grades. At this point your GPA is pretty much cement unless you go completely off the deep end, so relax and head out more. Go out and close the bars on a Monday night. Why? Because you can damnit, you're a senior!

Disrupt a campus tour – Pre-freshmen are invading the campus and touring like a bunch of crazed, well, tourists. Image the reaction when you walk up to a tour group and completely take it over. I have friends that are tour guides; they probably wouldn't mind it that much! Moon a tour group out of a library window, run around in circles screaming Go....Go U..... Go UMass.....GO UMASS! Maybe pretend that you are a freshman yourself and at every stop grab a beer out of your bag and scream, "College rules!"

No whining, crying, or sadness – We are all sad to be leaving this place soon, so do not, I repeat, do not, burden everyone else with your crushing depression and sadness. If you feel the need to get all sad and weepy, start dialing up random people in the phone book and see if they will listen to your tale of woe. This serves a dual purpose – one, it will probably crack you up when dozens of people quizzically ask you what the hell you are talking about, and two, you may run into someone you know.

All you seniors out there that are stuck in a rut, snap out of it. After all they don't call this the "happy valley" for nothing.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.25.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Award shows:
Enough is enough

'Tis award show season and with it comes a barrage of dolled up celebs strolling down the red carpet in designer gowns ready to accept their respective gongs. But over the years the credibility of award shows has been rightfully questioned and they are at risk of devolving from coveted trophies to shiny party favors.

The Oscars ceremony is the biggest night in Hollywood. While there are far more albums released in a year than movies, for the amount of product released, movies rule. A film opening with $30 million in its first three days equals to roughly 5.2 million tickets sold. Couple that with last year's $6 billion in ticket sales and its no big surprise that the Oscars are a huge media presence.

The Grammys make the biggest night in music but it's not valued as highly as the Oscars. Looking at the history of nominees and winners, the Oscars have gotten it a heck of a lot better than the Grammys (though, as with any awards organization, there have been occasional head-scratchers). Even when the Oscars have awarded commercial blockbusters (i.e., Titanic), at least the movies were major critical hits (which Titanic surely was).

The Oscars have a lot fewer categories than the Grammys, which is a good thing. Heck, it seems anyone can win a Grammy these days, with a whopping 101 categories; more than half of which aren't even broadcast on the show. The National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences continues to add microscopically distinct categories without tossing out others.

And if you think the three-hour show has been long and drawn out in previous years, it's only going to get worse. Wednesday's Grammys ceremony is becoming so overstuffed with performers that CBS is extending the telecast an extra 30 minutes. New additions include Billy Joel and Tony Bennett, who will perform their Grammy-nominated duet of Joel's "New York State of Mind," and Patti LaBelle, who will join Christina Aguilera, Pink, Lil' Kim, and Mya on the cover of their '70s hit "Lady Marmalade." India.Arie has finally been granted a slot, but she has to share it with Brian McKnight, Al Green, Hezekiah Walker, for a presumably gospel-themed medley. They join at least another dozen previously announced acts including U2, Alicia Keys, Bob Dylan and 'N Sync. Phew!

It's sad that India.Arie, the night's most nominated artist, are some 35 award shows televised in the U.S., and as the number balloons, we're left asking why?

Obviously, the answer is to appease money-hungry execs with high ratings. But if the Nielsen ratings are to be believed, the public is growing immune to the scores of award shows – and apparently so are the stars. The first AFI Awards for movies and TV, broadcast live from the Beverly Hills Hotel on Jan. 5, drew a TV audience of an embarrassing 5.5 million and failed to attract many nominees for the telecast. Only 15 individual achievement categories attended the subdued ceremony. The awards show ranked 76th for the week in household ratings and CBS has not yet decided whether to air it next season. Similarly the Screen Actors Guild Awards ran for three years on NBC with low ratings. Eventually, the movie award show was downgraded to the TNT cable net in 1998.

Perhaps a special award should be given this year to Blockbuster Video for apparently recognizing the overkill. In November, the chain announced the suspension of the Blockbuster Entertainment Awards, its April shower of silly honors such as "favorite villain" and "favorite action hero," citing "the uncertainty of the times." There was no immediate determination whether the ceremony will return whenever times become more certain.

There is a limit to how many award shows people can be interested in. It is to no one's benefit to proliferate them. Awards shows should be about artistry or important contributions to humanity. But if that were true, networks would broadcast the Nobel Prize ceremony.

Nikolas Markantonatos is a Collegian Columnist.

Sounding Off with Nick Markantonatos

Michelle Branch rocked Paradise with refreshingly real self

COURTESY JIM GAYLORD

Michelle Branch charmed the Paradise last week.

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

MICHELLE BRANCH
Paradise, Boston
Feb. 19

You know what sort of crowd you'll find when you walk into a concert to find that it is sponsored by birth control and that there is a free henna tattoo booth in the main lobby. Tuesday night, the Paradise was crammed with groups of high school-age girls, clutching their free makeup bags and shrieking for the "hotties" of opening act Transmatic, as they awaited Michelle Branch's arrival on stage.

Transmatic, with their wish-I-were-punk style, would never have gained the love of the audience if it were not for their spiky hair and "renegade bad boy style." They were the kind of guys that every high school student wants to fall in love with because of that mysterious "I'm dangerous" look and they were the kind of guys that every high school student's dad wants his daughter to fall in love with because they probably have great dental plans and send their moms Valentine's Day cards every year. They played a respectable set, with loud guitar riffs resonating while the lead singer cradled the microphone as he belted out less than edgy lyrics. But sadly, the act and their songs were completely forgettable.

The crowd grew in the break between acts, and older persons, college students, young couples and a few packs of middle aged women (who may have been moms waiting to give rides) mingled with the throngs of high school girls. Surprisingly, there were a large number of guys at the concert, although due to the ratio, in a male v. female rumble, the girls would have definitely won.

The crowd went wild when Branch and her band took the stage and went right into "Sweet Misery." The audience swayed and sung along to the songs off her debut gold album, giving the most cheers to the omnipresent "I Verywhere." Branch went on to play every song of her album, except for the ethereal "Drop in the Ocean" and added a few brand new songs, as well as a cover of The New Radicals' "You Get What You Give."

The eighteen-year-old Branch proved herself as a singer and musician alternating between jamming on acoustic guitar and moving about the stage singing and mingling with the crowd. Her band, of which three members from Boston's Berklee, was in its element before the throngs of girls. The four men flirted and bilked their "rock god" status for the boys of young ladies. The keyboardist sported a certain Backstreet Boy je ne sais quoi, while Chad the guitarist, played with perfection, looking blankly above the crowd then leaning backwards and pursing his lips during solos.

The crowd adored Branch, and it was easy to see why. She was completely at ease on stage, chatting with fans, and even accepting a Patriots' Super Bowl Championship hat, which she wore for half her set. She thanked Patrick, a fan upfront, for his homemade Valentine that included his number, and dedicated "Here with Me" to him. And two young women sent up a note thanking Branch for inspiring young singers/songwriters with her success.

Branch has received much acclaim from reviewers for her natural style and musicianship. In an industry that rewards cookie-cutter blond lip-synchers, (Hanson, who on earth could that be? Oh wait, which one???), Branch's honest, self-written lyrics are acclaimed as refreshing and inspiring to those who wish to be poets of modern music. Add to that the fact that she actually enjoys what she's doing, and doesn't starve herself, get plastic surgery, or squeeze into mid-riff baring ensembles, young girls have finally found a role model that they can actually look up to.

John Q creates the blue-collar hero

COURTESY NEW LINE CINEMA

Denzel Washington and Kimberly Elise rush to save their son.

COURTESY NEW LINE CINEMA

Ray Liotta, Anne Heche and Robert Duvall star in John Q.

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the time post Sept. 11, there has been a glut of movies released about military heroism: Black Hawk Down, Hart's War and the upcoming We Were Soldiers. All these movies touch the patriotic emotions felt by so many during these times of news anchors wearing flag pins and every home proudly waving the Stars and Stripes. These films honor the great shows of heroism made by groups of individuals throughout our country's history. They bring tears and a sense of pride, but due to the grandiose scale of the characters and settings, these feelings can be somewhat detached.

John Q is a movie that brings heroism close to home. It's the story of a man down on his luck who must do what it takes to save his son's life. It is the kind of tale that we can put ourselves into, and we therefore feel the agony of all John Q's decisions and moments of desperation.

John Q Archibald works in an industrial factory that has been facing downsizing and layoffs. His job, cut to part-time, puts the family into a time of financial hardship. But even when their car is taken by the bank for missed payments, the family finds the joy in driving all together in the father's pick-up truck to drop the son off at school and the wife off at the grocery store where she is a clerk. The Archibalds are the kind of family who play word games in the car, who go to church together, and who all go to Little League games wearing the team colors.

Then trouble strikes. As little Mike Archibald is stealing a base, he suddenly clutches at his heart and falls. Mike is rushed to the hospital where the family finds out the terrible news that their son is going to die, unless he gets a heart transplant. But the surgery isn't covered by insurance. The family goes through everything – taking donations from the local church, selling everything they own, accepting the tip money of the family friend who waitresses at the local diner. But still they can't even come close to the $75,000 down payment needed to get Mike's name put on the donor list.

"Give a father no options and you leave him no choice," the movie uses as its advertising catch phrase. But the phrase is made into a reality when John Q does the only thing he hasn't tried – he takes the emergency room hostage. To go any further with a plot synopsis would ruin the intricacies and twists of the movie.

This movie is full of goodness, heart, laughter and tears, but most of all, there is bravery. Even though the audience realizes the terrible consequences of taking an entire emergency room hostage, the audience cheers John Q on and can see itself doing the same thing.

Washington is amazing in this film. He portrays John Q as the every-man – one who bravely holds his family above all else. Anne Heche plays her role of the heartless hospital administrator with surprising skill, and with every utterance she becomes more and more hated. Ray Liotta plays his role perfectly, embodying an image-obsessed Chicago police chief.

The storyline is solid, the acting is exceptional, and the message is poignant. We live in a country where 50 million people have no health insurance at all, and where many of those who have coverage do not have enough. At one point John Q tells his son a sad truth: "Do what brings you joy, but if you have to sell out once in a while to make some money, do it.

Everything is so much easier when you have money." It's a sad truth that does not bode well for our society.

It is refreshing to see a movie that doesn't rely on racy sex scenes, the "50 Most Beautiful" actors or the flashiest car chases. John Q is a "down home" story that really represents the working class of America.

So often Hollywood portrays everyone as living life so glamorously – they don't pay attention to the world of the blue-collar workers, the people who make up the majority of our nation. Finally, here's a movie that honors family, hard work, love and ethics.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups

Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

The sisters of Sigma Kappa would like to welcome the arrival of their national president Angela Guillory.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, south area in base-ment, cable/telephone jack/net access, in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstliving.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstliving.olnreal-ty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00, Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Pet Sitting, spring break and some week-ends this semester. N Amherst area 3 times per day for pets. 545-4013.

Wanted seamstress-simple alterations 545-4031

Wanted student to assist new web based business located on Cape Cod. Must have Marketing web skills, Contact Howie @ [illegible]

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 866-291-1884 ext. 485.

EARN $1000 FOR YOUR GROUP. Work on campus to raise money for your student group or organization. Make your own schedule and earn great money. Please call 1-888-923-3238 EXT. 115.

Sell Khach Card Packets in Campus Center, Dorms, Etc. More you sell, more money you make. Call Mike 781-929-2818.

Custodian Wanted first Congregational Church of Hadley. P/T 15 hrs/ week. Respond by e-mail [illegible]

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941) 329-6434 www.cruisecareers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE; DJ Fooze and SYB productions are now booking for spring semester, call 537-8527.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742.

FOR RENT

Game Boy Advance system, three games, power supply $100, (413) 527-3319.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons with retired pro, Djata Bumpus. In Amherst call 413-731-1450.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich(P Mulrey, E Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_Goodrich@hotmail.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

ROOMATE WANTED

Cheap rent, 1 bedroom, female preferred, Colonial village bus rte 253-0920.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other worldwide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoast-vacations.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Super Sale! Book your trip with StudentCity.com and save up to $100 per person to Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, Padre and Florida. Most popular student hotels including the Oasis and the Nassau Marriott Crystal Palace! Prices start at $399! Sale ends soon! CALL NOW! 1-800-293-1443 or go to StudentCity.com!

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

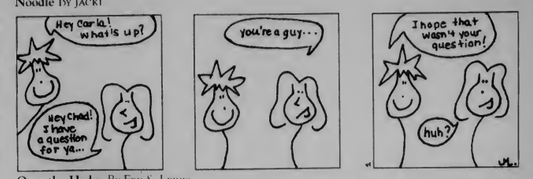
WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network

2	CBS/3
3	NESN
4	Fox Sport NE
5	PBS-57
6	HSCN Movie Channel
7	WB-27
8	HSCN Movie Channel
9	TV Guide Channel
10	FOX/61
11	ABC/40
12	NBC/22
13	International Channel
14	UMASTV
15	HSCN Info Channel
16	ESPN
17	ESPN 2
18	CNN/17
19	ESPN Classic
20	Gavel-to-Gavel
21	CSN
22	CNN/HL
23	Weather Channel
24	Learning Channel
25	History Channel
26	A & E
27	Discovery Health
28	Food Network
29	NASA
30	Home & Garden TV
31	Travel Channel
32	Lifetime
33	CNN
34	TechTV
35	BET
36	UPN-38
37	USA
38	TNN
39	MTV
40	CMT
41	VH-1
42	TNT
43	TBS
44	E! Entertainment
45	Sci-Fi Channel
46	Court TV
47	Nick at Nite
48	Comedy Central
49	Cartoon Network
50	Game Show Network
51	TV Land
52	FOX Family
53	Univision
54	Colorvision
55	Telemundo
56	College TV Network
57	C-SPAN
58	C-SPAN2
59	Bloomberg Television



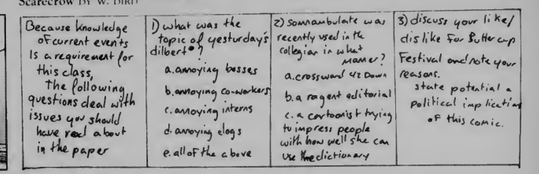
SORRY, NO TV LISTINGS TODAY!*

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

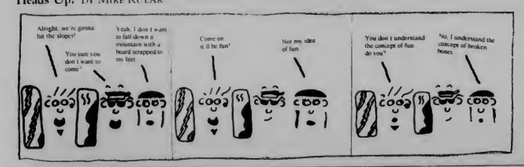
Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Noodle By Jacki

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas



Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Quote of the Day

"I'm not hitting on you or anything, but it would be great if you could straddle that for me."

-Mark LaPlante

Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 30	HIGH: 56 LOW: 30	HIGH: 41 LOW: 16

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Are you really ready or willing to risk it all on a pipe dream? Today, many around you may ask you to be a little more realistic about work.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Once you've set your heart on a goal today, you can follow a path directly to it – provided you've done your homework. Get the info you need.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Someone has his or her eye on you, but what is expected of you may exceed your ability or willingness. Be sure to talk about a coming arrangement.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – While looking for one thing around the home or in the work place, you'll come upon something else that proves even more valuable to you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may near a turning point today, but you must still focus on the tasks that others have assigned to you. Don't let them down.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You won't have to wait very long today, before you get the answers you're after. Once you ask the right questions, the result is inevitable.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You're going to want to pay attention to all environmental influences today as they steer you in a direction that can be most pleasant and profitable.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A little intrigue can work wonders for you today. You've been after a good mystery to solve for some time, and now you have one.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – The credit you receive today is sure to be well deserved. You needn't be at all bashful. What's coming to you can surely be enjoyed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Though you are not usually compulsive, today you may actually benefit from throwing caution to the wind and going with your instincts.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Who follow the fads? The way you do things – and the way you look doing them – suits you perfectly. Why change because others do?

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Your sense of humor is likely to save the day for you again and again – even when you are not aware of it! Your instincts are keen.

Write for the Collegian!

ACROSS

1 Pony's gait
5 Story
10 Cookbook direction
14 Smirk
15 Not in a whisper
16 Ripped
17 Olden times
18 Wooden shoes
19 66 and I-80
20 Wire-haired pooch
22 Clues
23 Bellyache
24 Diva's solo
26 Woven outerwear
28 Stocky
32 Glass bottles
33 Take a rain —
34 Beer container
35 Purposes
36 Kermit's comment
37 Graceful wraparound
38 Grifter Woosnam
39 Squash
40 Theme
41 Most of the air
43 Skermish
44 Throw a party
45 Toupee cousins
46 Plunged
49 Bubble machine
52 Wading bird
53 Wisdom tooth
55 Concept
57 PC list
58 Theater cheer
59 Fossil fuel
60 Ballot marks
61 Daisy Mae's friend
62 Goofs up

DOWN

1 Quaker word
2 Kind of squad
3 Man-eating giant
4 Long johns
5 Mudtack
6 Funny Steve
7 Oaf
8 Carry weanly
9 Sullivan and Murrow
10 Run of luck
11 Scintilla
12 A Flintstone
13 Kinski role
21 Plies the oars
22 Dampen a stamp
24 Winning
25 Bogie role
26 Red Sea peninsula
27 Lacked
28 Rose feature
29 Go to the rink
30 Like a haunted house
31 Pre-weekend shout
32 Ore deposit
33 Vinegar jar
36 Machine teeth
37 Winter's start
39 Yummy
40 Part of MHz
42 Lab monkey
43 Bathroom feature
45 Use a loom
46 Two nickels
47 Wild mountain goat
48 Honeysuckle, e.g.
49 Comedian King
50 Smell
51 Be a parent
53 CEO's degree
54 Planet, poetically
56 Hirt and Gore

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

Y	E	S		C	R	O	W		B	A	R	K
A	L	O	E		C	H	I	N	A		E	V
P	L	O	D		R	U	D	E	R		N	O
S	A	N	D	B	A	G	S		P	E	E	W
E	E			Y	E	N	S		T	A	C	T
R	E	C	I	T	E		P	I	T	H		M
A	L	A	N	S		N	A	C	H	O		E
T	A	N	G		E	L	K		B	R	I	T
E	T	A		Y	O	W	L	S		M	A	Y	B	E
D	E	L		O	D	E	S		M	U	S	L	I	N
			F	U	D	D		N	E	D	S
A	D	V	E	R	B		C	A	S	S	O	C	K	S
P	O	E	T		A	R	O	M	A		O	R	A	L
E	D	I	E		L	O	V	E	S		N	I	N	A
S	O	L	D		L	I	E	S			B	E	G

12-3-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Draw comic here.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Garden Vegetable Soup

Chicken Nuggets

Chili Nachos

Broccoli-Cheese Casserole (vegetarian)

California Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER

Garden Vegetable Soup

Chicken Mamou

Baked Ham with Raisin Sauce

Six Bean Stew (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Ken Campbell
Photo Editor	Richard Blake
Copy Editor	Matt Brady
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	Alicia Upano, Shannon Farrington

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.25.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Minutewomen crush Colonial rebellion

UMass forward Jackie Dubois (12) scored a career-high 23 points on Wednesday as the Minutewomen defeated George Washington 62-53. Dubois added 11 points and two steals.

GW suffers first Atlantic 10 loss of year

By Jim Pignatiello
COLLEGIAN STAFF

AMHERST – Who are you and what have you done with the Minutewomen?

In its final regular season game of the 2001-02 season, the Massachusetts women's basketball team (10-17, 8-8 Atlantic 10) uncharacteristically shot 77.8 percent (a season-high) from the free throw line and forced 23 turnovers to upset A-10 powerhouse George Washington (20-7, 15-1 A-10) 62-53.

Yesterday's win over the Colonials at the William D. Mullins Center ended the visitor's dreams of finishing with an undefeated A-10 record.

"[UMass] didn't play like a team that was 9-17 today," GW Head Coach Joe McKeown said after the game.

McKeown was right. The Maroon and White stepped onto the court in a contest that many expected to be over by halftime and fought harder, played tougher and made fewer mistakes than a team that had been undefeated in every conference game it had played in – until this one.

UMass	62
GW	53

"We made them play our style instead of us playing their style," coach Jeanie O'Brien said regarding what must be one of the sweetest of her 157 victories at UMass.

This wasn't the team O'Brien saw start out 1-9; this was a team that has finally found its game face and won four of its last five games heading into the A-10 Tournament – a feat that is sure to increase the team's confidence heading into the climax of the season.

"This gives us a great push [into A-10's]," said Caroline Nehls on a Senior Day in which she was the only senior. Nehls scored six of her team's first eight points in her last game at the Mullins Center.

The Minutewomen weren't the only ones that didn't look like themselves yesterday. The Colonials looked more like their city's – and Harlem Globetrotter perennial whipping boys' – Washington Generals than the dominating A-10 squad that has gone 292-107 in 13 years under McKeown and is a big favorite to leave next week's postseason tournament in Philadelphia as Atlantic 10 Champions.

"I hope this is just a hiccup today and we play well next weekend," McKeown said after watching his team make 25 turnovers and shoot 29 percent from the floor in the second half.

GW's Ugo Oha tied the game at 26 with 36 ticks left in the first half, but freshman Monique Govan drove the lane and spun the ball off the backboard and into the net to give UMass a lead it would never relinquish.

A 7-0 Minutewoman run started the second half and the team extended the lead to 46-33 with 7:07 left in the game. But the Colonials answered with a 12-1 run capped off by a deep trey by junior Cathy Ioens.

Nehls killed the run with a pair of free throws, but a Lindsey Davidson three-pointer cut the lead to one and swung all remaining momentum over to the GW squad.

Jennifer Butler grabbed a loose ball off the floor and hit the layup to extend the lead to three with 2:06 left. Amber Sneed's offensive rebound off a Nehls missed free throw and subsequent putback put some more distance between the teams and forced the Colonials to start fouling.

On GW's next possession, Ebony Peguies stole the ball, which ended in the arms of freshman Katie Nelson – the team's top shooter from the charity stripe. Nelson was fouled and sank both shots with 47 seconds left to extend the lead to 55-48. And she did the same 27 seconds later to extend the lead to 57-48 that essentially clinched the UMass win.

"UMass played really well today," McKeown said. "I give them a lot of credit. They made us take tough shots."

O'Brien agreed: "I thought we were really solid on defense. We didn't give them too many open looks."

Despite facing the A-10's top shot blocker in Oha (3.04 blocks per game), Butler led UMass with 14 points. The junior also grabbed a game-high 12 rebounds for her 19th double-double of the season. Butler played aggressively against Oha, going at her instead of backing away from the imposing 6-foot-4 sophomore.

"You can't fade away from a shot blocker," O'Brien said. "That's why Jen [had success] today."

Butler was also successful in getting Oha, who had scored 13 points in the first half, into foul trouble in the second, which was a big reason that the reigning A-10 Rookie of the Year scored just three points in the final 20 minutes of action.

Nelson finished with 15 points, while Nehls (12) and Peguies (11) joined her and Butler in the "double-digit scoring club".

Comeback all for naught for men's lax

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

AMHERST – A quick tour of the dedicated UMass lacrosse locker room would reveal what was on every player's mind in the days and weeks leading up to Saturday's season opener against Hofstra.

Hofstra	12
UMass	11

"July 25, we all have it taped up in our locker and that's all we've been thinking about," junior defenseman Tom Fallon said three days before the Minutemen's first game of 2002. "The way we look at it, they were the team that took our spot [in the NCAA tournament] last year."

But unfortunately for the Minutemen, they couldn't find a way to formulate all of their pent up anger into a much needed win.

Last year's 17-15 UMass win over the Pride in Hempstead, NY added one of the best seasons in recent history – a 12-2 record, co-champions of the TCAC and an NCAA tournament snubbing. Coach Grey Cannella is hoping that this year's 12-11 overtime loss won't defer to failure.

"This is only one game there are 15 left," Cannella said following the loss. "It's a tough loss but we showed a lot of heart coming back."

Junior college transfer Paul Rao notched the game winner just seconds after the commencement of the extra session in front of a raucous crowd in Amherst. Rao slugged a ground ball near midfield before dashing down the right wing and lacing a slap shot past UMass goalie Rob Schneider for the win.

The fact that the Pride even made it into the overtime was a small miracle courtesy of Steve McTigue. The junior attackman picked up a ground ball on the edge of the crease before whipping a behind-the-head shot past Schneider to tie the game at 11 with just 2.8 seconds remaining.

McTigue's tally gave Hofstra the momentum that it had somehow forgotten in the locker room at halftime. Entering the third quarter the Minutemen looked completely outclassed, as they were down 9-6. But UMass stormed back, and on the strength of two Kevin Leveille goals, the Minutemen went on a 5-1 run to take an 11-10 lead with just over three minutes remaining in the game.

"We didn't feel comfortable at halftime," Hofstra coach John Danowski said after his team surrendered a five-goal lead. "But jeez what a game to start the year."

All-American Tom Kessler's two first half goals spurred the Pride's domination of the opening thirty minutes. After Dan Paccione tied the game for the Minutemen, Hofstra went on a 6-1 run to take a five-goal cushion at 9-4. For the first time in over a year, UMass looked out of sync on offense.

"We were way out of control in the first half," Cannella said of his team's first half output. "We were sloppy with the ball at times and we got a little ahead of ourselves."

Two late UMass goals by Chris Fiore and Paccione made the halftime score respectable, but at the midway buzzer it looked like the Minuteman defense was in for a long afternoon.

"The first half was tough but we came out refocused," Fallon said. "It's a real frustrating loss, especially because it came on a lucky bounce."

The luck that Fallon was referring to came with under 15 seconds remaining in the game when senior Matt McFarland made a takeaway for the Minutemen. But instead of trying to keep possession he slung the ball downfield. Hofstra's Nicky Polanco intercepted the pass and started the rush that ended in McTigue's equalizer.

"That wasn't his fault," Cannella said after the loss. "We told him to do that. We told him if he got the ball to just chuck it."

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, McFarland's deep toss came up just short of a streaking Marc Morley, while UMass' valiant comeback fell just shy of nabbing the victory.

"It's just frustrating to lose," Cannella said. "You have to give Hofstra credit, they came in here and they were ready to play. Our guys showed a lot of heart coming back, but we just didn't finish the job."

For Hofstra, the win was crucial because it gave them some momentum going into a huge home contest with No. 8 Loyola. The Minutemen, on the other hand, have a chance to right the ship next week at perennial doormat Stony Brook.

Lax defender Matt McFarland's errant pass is intercepted by Hofstra and taken in for the game-tying score with 2.8 seconds remaining.

Rebounds and 3-pointers butt Rams back to Bronx

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

AMHERST – If you're in need of some proof that rebounding remains of consequence in the present age of college hoops, go talk to Kitwana Rhymer.

"If you don't rebound, you won't win games – that's a cardinal rule," said the big man, who grabbed 11 rebounds (eight in the first half) in UMass' 67-54 win over Fordham Saturday at the Mullins Center. "Coach made it a point this week in practice. We did so many drills, threw each other around and fouled each other just to get rebounds."

Outrebounded 40-22 in their 72-67 loss at St. Joseph's Tuesday, the Minutemen spent the rest of the week working to keep the glass clean, something they didn't do in a 93-86 loss at Fordham mid-January when the Rams killed UMass, 55-38, in that category.

UMass	67
Fordham	54

"It was an easy thing to pay attention to for two reasons," coach Steve Lappas said. "We got destroyed on the glass the other day and we got destroyed the last time we played Fordham. If I couldn't convince them to rebound, I can't convince them that the ball is round. And that was important."

Lappas' knack for persuasion did the job as the Minutemen ended the first half with a 26-16 edge on the glass, and finished the game with a 45-36 advantage.

Anthony Anderson, possibly on his way to the Atlantic-10's Rookie of the Year award, scored a game-high 19 points for the Minutemen (11-14, 5-9 A-10) to help his team end a three-game slide and take sole possession of fourth place in the A-10 East standings. Rhymer had 14 for UMass while Eric Williams added 10.

Adrian Walton led Fordham (8-17, 5-9) with 15 points and Mark Jarrell-Wright netted 12 for the Rams, who have lost seven in a row. Fordham's demise came from the charity stripe, where the Rams connected on a 9-of-25 clip.

"We have a free throw shooting problem, anyone got any suggestions?" asked Fordham coach Bob Hill after the game. "It's been there all year long. I've done everything I can think of. If we make our free throws, we're right there."

The worst free-throw shooting team in the conference (.548), Fordham found itself in the bonus with an atypical 17 minutes left in the second half. But because of its shaky stroke and UMass' defensive switch to zone, the Rams couldn't find a way to dispose of the Minutemen's 37-29 halftime lead.

Fordham shot 38.6 percent from the field and 12.5 percent from behind the three-point arc, while star-to-be William "Smush" Parker scored one point on 0-for-8 shooting in 27 minutes. The freshman, one of the A-10's leading scorers (17.4 points per game), did not start because he missed study hall earlier in the week.

UMass managed only 39.7 percent from the floor, but connected on 43.5 percent of its long-range attempts.

Kyle Wilson's two consecutive treys midway through the second half extended the Minuteman lead to 61-44 with just over seven minutes remaining. UMass failed to score in the next four minutes of action, but the Rams' inefficiency from the stripe forbid any comeback. The Minutemen, who host Rhode Island on Wednesday, went 6-of-9 in the final 5:39 to secure the victory.

Fordham began the game strong and led 15-12 with 11:12 left in the opening stanza after a layup from Jeff McMillan. Rhymer, however, scored the game's next four hoops, Rhymer's swat of Jarrell-Wright with 8:12 left led to his two-handed jam under a minute later to give UMass a 21-15 advantage – one it would not relinquish.

GERALL LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Kit Rhymer's hard-earned rebound was just one of many reasons the Minutemen defeated Fordham on Saturday, 67-54.

Aaliyah's finale? Arts page 5.

Shut your mouth. Ed/Op page 4.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
TUESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE EIGHTY-EIGHT ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.26.02

Fifth annual Haitian Student Conference big success in DC

By Rahwa Asmerom
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Three vans loaded with University of Massachusetts students made their way to Washington, D.C. to take part in the fifth annual Haitian Student Conference at Georgetown University on Feb. 22.

The three-day event is a yearly gathering of students aimed at exploring and discussing Haitian culture, politics and society which started in New York five years ago initially catering only to students of that area but has now grown to include students from all over the country including MIT, University of Pennsylvania, and Rutgers University. The conference's theme for this year was "Haiti Kounya, Haiti Now."

The trip was organized by the Haitian American Student Association, (HASA), and sponsored by Black Mass Communication Project (BMCP), and the Black Student Union, (BSU). UMass students arrived late Friday night and were greeted by organizers there and paired up with their respective Georgetown student hosts.

The conference kicked off Saturday with a welcome/opening session where the event coordinators outlined the weekend's activities. The mission statement of the conference, said organizers, read that "the gathering hopes to create a community of students sympathetic to Haitian causes and incite participants into taking an active role on the shaping of Haiti's future."

Chief economist and top executive of SogeBank (Haiti's number one commercial bank) Pierre-Marie Boisson made the first presentation on the evolution of the Haitian economy over the last five years. He gave some history on the country's economic structure and shared some tentative plans for its future.

"What Haiti needs to do is increase exports drastically in order to catch up to the rest of the world," Boisson said. "It is a very small country and large exports are crucial."

Students then split up into different workshops and discussions that met on different issues ranging from the language and culture to diplomacy and politics.

"I liked all the seminars I went to but I especially enjoyed the Kreyol language workshop that I attended," said sophomore BDIC major Scune Thelemaque. "I learned a lot from those sessions."

After a day of conferences, students then went back to the rooms to prepare for the nights activities, which included a formal banquet at the Haitian Embassy. The participants were shuttled to the dinner where the

Turn to HAITIAN, page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Economics professor Lee Badgett gave a lecture arguing the benefits of same-sex marriage yesterday. The lecture was sponsored by the Center for Public Policy and Administration.

Economics professor argues in favor of same-sex marriage

By Rachel Smith
COLLEGIAN STAFF

M.V. Lee Badgett, a University of Massachusetts professor of Economics, conducted a lecture Monday afternoon in Thompson Hall called "More Than a Family Resemblance: Making a Case for Same-Sex Marriage". Badgett authored the book Money, Myths and Change: The Economic Lives of Lesbians and Gay Men along with editorial news articles and policy analysis papers. She has also testified in same-sex marriage trials as an expert witness.

Same-sex marriage is a debated issue among many communities for many reasons. "In the big external debate, people think they (gay unions) are immoral or a threat to civilization and that they will somehow present a compelling alternative to people in heterosexual marriages," Badgett said. "Then there are people who are not as extreme who think marriage should be reserved for heterosexual couples."

"The internal debate is about whose values in the community we should adopt," Badgett continued. "Should we try to create our own kinds of families?"

Badgett is clear about her opinion of same-sex marriages.

"Allowing same-sex couples to marry under existing law is a good thing," Badgett explained. "It's also a good thing socially, in a broader sense." She supported her same-sex marriage during her lecture in political, sociological, and economic terms.

By Western European standards, America is lagging in regard to same-sex marriages. "The U.S. is not a leader," Badgett said. Same-sex marriage is legal in several European countries, including Sweden and Germany. Sweden and Germany also allow homosexual couples to adopt children.

Badgett argued that same-sex marriage is "efficient" in an economic sense. Homosexual couples that want to recreate the benefits of legal marriage through avenues that are

Turn to SAME SEX, page 3

Sensor study could help fight cancer

By Rachel Smith
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Professor Vincent Rotello of the University of Massachusetts Chemistry and Polymer Science and Engineering Departments is researching a chemical sensor that can be used in the medical and national defense fields. Although Rotello's sensor could be used to identify chemical weapons like smallpox and anthrax, doctors may use Rotello's "molecular nose" to identify cancerous or "sick" cells.

The National Institute of Health is funding Rotello's research with a $450,000 grant, which should help the professor's project survive pending budget cuts. The Department of Defense has also expressed interest in Rotello's work, but isn't currently funding the research.

Rotello is not experimenting on hazardous biological or chemical substances at UMass. He is currently using aspirin and sugars in his research, although Rotello contends that his chemical sensor will be able to identify a variety of substances.

"Everyone will benefit (from my findings)," Rotello said. "This research is focused on sensors for both environmental and medical applications."

Rotello compares chemical sensors to locks and keys. "Bacteria come in all different sizes and slightly different shapes, so a custom-designed 'key' that fits snugly against or around the molecule just isn't a viable option," Rotello explained in a recent news release.

Since the "lock and key" method scientists currently use to identify smaller molecules won't work for the larger molecules Rotello hopes to identify, he's researching "keys" that will fit smaller "locks" specific

Turn to ROTELLO, page 3

Sociologist focuses on family outings

By Catherine Turner
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After most of the students have finished for the day, it is the faculty's turn to sit through class, and yesterday it was the members of the Sociology Department who sat through a lecture.

Marjorie DeVault, an associate professor at Syracuse University, spoke to a small group of mostly Sociology professors from the University of Massachusetts and Amherst College yesterday at 4 p.m. in Machmer Hall. Her talk was entitled "Beyond the Home: Family Time in Public Spaces".

DeVault, whose interests focus on Gender and Feminist Studies and social interaction, discussed her latest research project about how family life is put together with local activities, such as going to the zoo.

"Family time has become a topic of considerable interest in sociology and social policy work," DeVault said.

After introducing her lecture, DeVault explained her methodology and broke it down into three basic pieces: work processes, social relations, and texts as mechanisms of coordination. She briefly discussed how texts, such as enrollment reports or medical charts, to name a couple examples, are insight to the changing character of social settings, rule and coordination.

"[Texts are] making something happen in many different places and are coordinated," she said.

DeVault then delved into the meat of her study by explaining its origins. She began her study with a couple of Syracuse graduate students after surmising that it would be interesting to watch families at the zoo.

"We thought if we went to the zoo we would see parents explicitly teaching kids about families," DeVault said. "What we found was something much simpler, almost primordial. The kind of talk we heard was locating and orienting talk."

"On the one hand it seems like nothing, but it's something really fundamental in the way that parents and kids are looking together and organizes their joint experience. How do they do that?"

The students eventually went on to do other things but DeVault decided to continue her work and expand it. Her strategy was to go to places like the zoo and observe the interactions of families and their relations to the public places they visited.

She concentrated on two different zoos in Boston and in Syracuse. She also went to local parks and attractions where she interviewed families about their outings. She also followed public library programs.

"I'm a commuting scholar," she said.

Though she freely admitted that her data is not complete and the study is "a work in progress," she did have a few findings to report to the group. First she talked about how "going out" as a family is indeed a type of work, and many or most of the families she interviewed claimed that they tried to do something every week as a family.

"It's been interesting and challenging to get people to talk about going out as work," DeVault said. "It's easy to get them to talk at length about cooking, but people don't really acknowledge this as work."

She then commented that the idea of "going out" as a family is a very middle class idea, and that most of the people she has interviewed have been white and middle class.

"Clearly there's a need to expand the base of people I'm talking to," she said. "It would be interesting to study family outings where children come along because they have to, such as to emergency rooms or welfare offices."

She also mentioned the desire to expand her observation into malls, restaurants and other community sites.

DeVault then designated textual organization as another one of her findings. She talked about the calendar as a coordinator and used the Boston Parents paper and the Syracuse equivalent as examples of textual coordination.

"The very existence of a calendar carries a message, there are things to do out there. It provides particular pieces of

Turn to GOING OUT page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Marjorie DeVault, an associate professor of Sociology at Syracuse University, gave a lecture yesterday about families and public spaces.

National Briefs

Florida

By Diana Moskovitz

(U-WIRE) TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Amid the 2000 presidential election fiasco, lawmakers said they would move to improve Florida's flawed voting system with voter education and new equipment.

However, their goals remain unmet as the Florida House's budget passed its final committee Friday.

The budget is set for a vote before the full chamber later this week.

Democrats — including minority leader Rep. Ed Dean — want $14 million more in voter education. The budget includes $5 million for voter education.

"The budget would have fulfilled the $5 million the Legislature pushed Gov. Jeb Bush to implement," said Rep. Dan Gelber, D-Miami Beach. "But of that, $2 million has been spent on [Secretary of State] Katherine Harris' campaign."

Rep. Carlos Lacasa, chairman of the House Budget Committee, said he wants to see the reports about how counties spent the funds around the presidential election. Bush is due to put the proposed budget back in the budget by 2003.

This is a historic session, the House Republican said. "We will increase from the $20 million from last year — mostly generated from the lottery and tuition raises.

Iowa

By Stefanie Peterson

Iowa State Daily (Iowa State U.)

(U-WIRE) AMES, Iowa — Members of 82 teams helped Iowa State University walk and run its way into the history books by participating in the nation's first Finish Line event for the American Cancer Society.

The all-day event at the Lied Recreation Center aimed to raise $110,000 for cancer research, education, advocacy and service programs.

Kristin Harney, chairwoman for the event, said "Cure Cancer" was the theme of the day. The group designated the acronym "CURE" to stand for College and Community United for Research and Education, Harney said. The university played a large role in making the event successful, she said.

"Over half of the participants in Finish Line are Iowa State students," she said. "There has been an enormous effort on the part of the university in making this event what it is."

Nearly 150 people provided entertainment through the day, including members of the Orchesis dance group, pep band, cheer squad and jazz choir, Harney said.

A core group of 20 committee members and more than 200 volunteers helped things run smoothly.

For the past nine years a similar event, Relay for Life, has been at Iowa State. This year, the name of the event changed to Finish Line to better suit Story County and the Ames, Iowa, community, said Jennifer Lane, committee coordinator.

"Relay for Life has become an overnight event," Lane said. "We thought changing to a finish Line event would allow for more flexibility and would be more appropriate."

Nearly 2,000 people attended the event, Harney said.

"We encourage people to bring their families and spouses to watch, and of course everyone is encouraged to participate," Harney said.

Raising money for the American Cancer Society is important, but the main goal of the day is to provide participants with hope, Harney said.

"Cancer is a struggle," she said. "It can be almost defeating. When people participate in an event like this, they will feel a sense of accomplishment."

Harney said the event makes a difference in people's lives.

Ron Skrdla and Joe Colletti, former co-chairs of the Relay for Life event, said cancer affects everyone.

"Everybody has been touched by cancer in some way," said Skrdla, ag specialist in the agronomy department. "We're all fighting this together."

Colletti, who has several sisters who have battled cancer, said Finish Line helps increase awareness about the disease.

"This represents an opportunity for the college and community to come together to generate donations to support the efforts of the American Cancer Society," he said.

Relay for Life began in Ames in February 1993.

"The American Cancer Society came to the Ames Running Club and asked us to help organize Relay for Life," said Colletti, associate professor of forestry. "We dedicated ourselves to the cause and began planning immediately."

Lauren Hughes, senior in zoology, volunteered through the Student Alumni Leadership Council.

"It is fun to see families, students and community members all participating in this event," she said.

Hughes said the rec is the perfect place to hold the event.

"The rec has plenty of room for the registration tables, team tents, performers and entertainers," Hughes said. "It is an excellent facility for this type of gathering."

Dave and Kathie Weber have led "Team Mike" for the past five years. The team was formed in honor of their son, Michael, who was diagnosed with leukemia in December 1997 at the age of five.

"We decided to participate in this event because we felt frustrated," Kathie Weber said. "Raising money for research was the only thing we felt we could do to help."

Kathie Weber said it has become her mission in life to find a cure, in case her son goes into remission.

Dave Weber said participants are not required to raise a minimum amount of money, but the goal most members aim for is $100.

"This topic touches everyone's lives," he said. "By calling friends for donations or doing fund raising on your own, it shouldn't be too difficult to raise money to participate."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts and derives its revenue entirely from advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as the Index and changed its name to The Daily Collegian in 1914 and then to The Collegian in 1938. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500. Circulation is 30,000 and climbing.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

STUDENT TRAVEL
It's YOUR trip, take it!
London.....$274
Amsterdam....$351
Paris.....$349
Los Angeles.....$198
New York.....$115
Washington D.C.....$78
Fares are round-trip from Hartford. Restrictions may apply. Tax not included
BUDGET HOTELS for as little as $18 A NIGHT!!!
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

New WORLD Theater presents
UNIVERSES in Slanguage
Directed and developed by Jo Bonney
Wednesday & Thursday February 27 & 28, 2002
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium
TONIGHT & TOMORROW NIGHT!
$15-general public; $8-seniors/low income; $5 students. Call FAC Box Office 545-2511
www.newworldtheater.org
Universes, an exciting ensemble of five multi-disciplined performers fuses poetry, hip-hop, jazz, Hip-Hop, politics down home blues and Spanish bolero to create moving work that will have you on your feet

WHEN SOMEONE ASKS YOU WHAT YOU DID IN COLLEGE, WHAT WILL YOU TELL THEM?
THE AMHERST FIRE STUDENT FORCE WILL BE RECRUITING NEW MEMBERS FEB 25-27 AT THE CAMPUS CENTER.
OR COME TO OUR OPEN HOUSE FRIDAY MARCH 1ST AT THE NORTH FIRE STATION (UP THE HILL FROM SYLVAN) @6PM.
OR CALL AT 549-5419.

Your Neighborhood Wireless Technology Store
Introducing America's Choice℠ calling plans
With America's Choice, all your plan minutes are national minutes!
300 Anytime monthly airtime minutes
UNLIMITED nationwide long distance
on America's Choice network.
PLUS
3000 National Night & Weekend Monthly Home Airtime Minutes for LIFE
All for only $35 monthly access when you sign up for one year and remain on the same plan. The America's Choice network covers over 248 million people in the U.S. Network not available in all areas.
WIN THE ULTIMATE WIRELESS PACKAGE!
Register for a chance to win at your nearest @Wireless location or at www.shopatwireless.com. Retail value $1500!
FREE $20 GAS CARD! with the purhase of a Nokia 5185 phone. Annual contract and mail-in form required
@Wireless www.shopatwireless.com
HOLYOKE MALL (413) 533-2500
HADLEY 322 Russell Street (413) 587-3248
35 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1-800-613-2355 for details, dial ext. 226 for franchise opportunities.
verizon wireless Authorized Retailer

Science Nutrition AST Sports Science EAS American Bodybuilding Flora
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
GET IN SHAPE!
Burn Fat, Build Muscle!
SPECIALS
XENADRINE Fat Burner 120 capsules $23.95
CREATINE 500g. $15.99
WHEY PROTEIN 6 lbs. $27.99
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
65 University Drive
Amherst, Massachusetts
PHONE: 549-7434
HOURS:
M thru F 10 - 7
Sat 10 - 5
Met-Rx Cytosyn Ellipsis Twinlab Spectrapharma Muscular Nutrition Balance Protein Haitian

continued from page 1

keynote speakers including high-ranking government officials and students had an opportunity to talk with numerous diplomats.

The participants then returned to the Georgetown campus to attend a party held especially for the conference participants.

Sunday's activity was a wrap-up discussion where the students discussed and debated the future of the conference. Organizers stressed the need to keep the conference going and the importance of such a forum for students.

Schools that wished to host it next year were then invited to make presentations so organizers could decide where to have it. Contending schools that were hoping to host it were UMass and New Jersey's Kean University. Pitching for UMass, HASA president Erline Achille addressed the students saying, "We have the resources and the determination. UMass's attendance level at these conferences has been very high and with a campus population of 20,000 plus students, hosting the conference will not be very hard for us."

UMass ultimately won the bid and will be hosting the conference next year.

Reflecting on the trip overall, Thelemaque added, "I really liked the fact that there was a large diversity of people that went from UMass. It was a lot of bonding and positive energy. I am very glad that we will be hosting it next year."

"It was a great opportunity meet and embrace our Haitian culture through the representation of distinguished and accomplished individuals," Marvin Alcide, a junior Communications and Psychology major, commented.

Rotello

continued from page 1

to the surface of the various larger molecules.

The professor's challenges don't end with the size of the molecules he's working with. Rotello and his colleagues are trying to connect their molecular keys to their molecular locks in the right way. Rotello and his team are constructing microscopic gold models in order to figure out how they can connect their molecular keys and locks.

While Rotello's project may be commercialized in five years, his research at UMass may continue indefinitely. "Research is never complete," Rotello said.

Rotello's research may seem specific to the chemical and biological sciences, but according to the professor, his project directly affects UMass students.

"Perhaps the greatest impact this (and a wide variety of other research done on campus) has on UMass students is that it allows them to participate, through undergraduate research, in cutting edge science," Rotello explained. "I currently have a number of undergraduates working on this project, doing a variety of different techniques. In the long term, I think our research will provide tools for a variety of applications. We are learning these as we go."

going out

continued from page 1

information," she said. "What I like about this is that you don't have to imagine some ideas going into [the parent's] heads and affecting their behavior, it's just in the text. The repetition of the calendar makes me think it's important."

Her final finding involved tools and supports for accessing public spaces. She argued that parents who have resources actively produce a public world for their children. Families with the privileges of transportation, money, time and neighborhood facilities position themselves in such a way that they are able to expose their children to things and familiarize them. She also said that such activities produce comfort to children, especially when they see other families interacting the same way.

DeVault concluded her presentation by commenting on several topics related to her study. First she noted the loosening of gendered roles and expectations during leisure family time, and how "going out" pulls fathers into family life.

She then touched on the role of parenting and "going out." She discussed the action of "going out" with the family as not only awakening the child to outside experiences but also teaching children how to act in public and understand their surroundings.

"Parenting is work," DeVault said. "Part of what this work does is to position the child as the subject - who feels excited to enter these places."

She then explained that the ultimate goal of her research is to illuminate the organization of public space as it affects the way families organize. She said that it is relative to policy makers not only via the layout and design of a community, but also to maintain the equal and even access of facilities to the community.

"I liked it because it's a theory and method that's open for debate and discussion," Alice Julier, a doctoral student in the Sociology Department and audience member, said. "The meaning isn't fixed yet."

SCOTT KRAMA/COLLEGIAN

Songs for a cause

The recent budget cuts have been visible all over campus, as shown by the songs and signs seen in the Student Union.

same sex

continued from page 1

currently available to them must spend time and money on a variety of legal documents while heterosexual couples need only one document, a marriage certificate.

Legal marriage is a contract between two people, currently two people of opposite sexes. A married couple agrees to share property, money and legal responsibility for things like debts and medical emergencies.

While a marriage license costs a flat fee and does not require legal counsel, a gay couple that wants similar legal protection has to pay many fees and requires legal counsel. Powers of attorney, wills, and documents naming a person's next-of-kin are some of the contracts gay couples need to guarantee their significant others have the same rights a married couple has.

According to Badgett, legal same-sex marriage will promote justice and equality not just for homosexual couples, but it will promote equality among people of all genders, races, and sexual preference. Heterosexual couples who want some of the legal and symbolic benefits of marriage but who would rather enter into a "domestic partnership" also take an interest in same-sex marriage legislation.

If homosexuals are granted to opportunity to enter into a legal partnership other than traditional legal marriage, heterosexuals will be afforded the same opportunity.

Badgett claims that same-sex marriage is not just an issue that is pertinent to gay men and lesbians, it is a "human rights" issue that is particularly important to residents of Massachusetts. Gubernatorial candidates are acknowledging same-sex marriage as a legal issue, and a group of people who oppose homosexual marriage is trying to get its proposition on the ballot for the upcoming election.

"Signatures are being gathered for a referendum in Massachusetts that would not recognize same-sex marriages or domestic partnerships in this state," Badgett said. "People will be hearing about this. It's really a live issue."

NEWS MEETING TONIGHT AT 5:30PM!
All current and interested writers should come down to The Collegian!

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Domino'S Pizza
Two Weeks Only ONLY .99 cents
Buy Any Pizza Get The Second Pizza For .99 Cents
GOOD Sun-Thurs ONLY EXPIRES 3/5/02
$12.99 LARGE 1 TOPPING PIZZA +2-LITER COKE 10 WINGS $4.99
$19.99 EXTRA LARGE 2 TOPPING PIZZA 2-LITER SODA BREADSTICKS 10 WINGS
$9.99 MEDIUM 2 TOPPING PIZZA +2 SODAS
$11.99 LARGE PIZZA WITH 1 TOPPING +CINNA STICKS
$6.99 MEDIUM 1 TOPPING PIZZA LUNCH SPECIAL GOOD 11am TO 4pm $7.99 LARGE 2 SODAS .99¢
AMHERST 256-8911
ENFIELD 741-3016
LONGMEADOW 567-2942
EASTHAMPTON 527-0821
$7.99 1 10-IN PIZZA +1 TWISTY BREAD +1COKE

CROSS INTO THE BLUE
SEE THE DIFFERENCE
UMASS AIR FORCE ROTC
afrotc@acad.umass.edu
545-2437

Life Sciences Career Fair
Wednesday, February 27
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
Campus Center Auditorium
Biotech, Environmental and Pharmaceutical Companies
Co-ops!
Internships!
Permanent positions!
For sophomores, juniors AND seniors!
Campus Career Network
Presented by the Campus Career Network, the College of Food and Natural Resources, the College of Natural Sciences and Math and the BioSci Club
For more information, call 545-6011 or see the Campus Career Network web site www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

The "war" goes on:

Israel beyond hope?

A Palestinian gunman opens fire in a residential area, wounding eight people before police officers drop him dead with gunshots of their own.

Israeli soldiers shoot and kill a Palestinian man to death and maim his pregnant wife as he frantically tries to drive her to the hospital.

Palestinians ambush a car near another "checkpoint", killing two men and seriously injuring another pregnant woman. Israeli soldiers shoot a sixteen-year-old girl to death as she charges a checkpoint wielding a knife.

So much for the peace effort.

In seventeen months of fighting, 934 Palestinians and 285 Israelis have been killed. That number doesn't matter. The number that does matter is that 1279 PEOPLE have been murdered, and that that number climbs by the day without rhyme or reason.

"It is clear that the other side planned to renew the violence," said Ranaan Gissen, a spokesman for Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon. Gissen stated that Israel plans to retaliate with "a measured response."

So what does that mean? Who dies next?

The fighting in Israel/Palestine has dropped to a new all-time low. Bombs in shopping centers? Opening fire on pregnant women? Murdering innocent people standing at a bus stop?

Every time an agreement is reached to give peace a chance, something ugly happens. Is that an accident? No.

Quite simply, there are people in the Holy Land that do not want peace. Why? Peace means giving in. Peace means compromising. Regardless of how many school children get shot or how many shoppers blow up, the leaders on both sides of the conflict are unwilling to admit that each side of the conflict has some legitimate beefs.

Neither side is completely wrong. Neither side is right either, though. Until that is admitted and some sort of compromise is reached, there really is no hope. More people will die. More pregnant women will be shot at. More shopping centers will explode. Nothing of value will surface.

Gissen said that agreements made last week between the Palestinians and the Israelis were off. In meetings last Thursday, the Israelis agreed to remove several roadblocks and withdrew from several places on the Gaza Strip. In return, the Palestinians pledged to work towards an end to their attacks.

Gissen and Israeli leaders need to put their anger aside for a minute. They need to continue to sit at tables with Palestinian leaders and hammer out peace agreements.

Violence in the Holy Land is far from over, and peace agreements will not end it completely, either. Complete peace is a far more complicated process than any one truce could ever hope to attain. But it's a step – and without those steps, there is no hope.

Unsigned editorials are the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial staff.
Information from Boston.com was used to write this editorial.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL AUTHORS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

Springin' out of winter

The weather is getting warm in Amherst and it can only mean one thing: spring is coming. The afternoon breezes and clearer) skies I welcome with open arms, but a whole change overcomes this section of the Pioneer Valley. Everywhere things will be different. I think it just might be part of what makes Amherst oh-so-special. Shall we review spring past?

The warm weather is going to be an insite to skip class. Not only have you been skipping class these past two months this semester because you don't want to walk in the cold, but now you're skipping cause it's too damn nice outside. Why wants to be inside when you could be lying in the grass? Besides, it's mid-semester... class isn't important until the last two weeks.

Before you know it, teachers will be pulling their classes outside. Some of my teachers have ever really done this, but I see other classes on Stockbridge students are the lucky ones who get to walk around and check out the greenery, and then get out before the rest of UMass- too. Even if you do get to go outside with a class, it's not really a privilege. Everyone else who is outside doesn't have class at that moment and you just sit wishing you were them. That or you begin to think of what you'd rather be doing. No concentration here at all. So having class is just about pointless if you're going to bring it outside, professors. Besides, who wants to sit on wet grass? You know the ground is going to be wet. Then you get muddied and grass-stained. Awful.

The grassy knoll just outside the Student Union will be filled again. Frisbees flying, people smoking and eating lunch—extremely distracting when you are trying to get to class. The knoll just invites you to sit and chat, and before you know it the day is gone. I was a drum circle there once. Interesting.

Swans. Not my favorite animal, nor anyone else's who has to walk past the pond at any point during the day. These ghastly white birds that are supposed to bring a resonance of beauty to the UMass campus only threaten a safe walk to class. Squawking and moving about everywhere, they act like the bird god has punished them and not allowed them to fly. Not my fault, swans. Don't blame us.

Protests are coming. I can feel it in the air. Have you ever seen the movie PCU with Jeremy Piven (the 35-year-old who doesn't want to be a day past 21)? Well, UMass is this movie. People will protest anything, especially with the nicer weather coming. Before you know it the Student Union steps will be crowded with a single person yelling chants into a megaphone that passing students are supposed to pick up and help with the movement. What movement? Who knows.. it's whatever people feel like fighting for that particular day. Sometimes the protests are funny. Just sit and pay attention for a second, and it'll give you a good laugh for the day.

The Good-Will Bible people will be back. You know, those people who stand at crosswalks outside Southwest and then in high traffic areas around campus? Just standing around, passing out Testaments for free. I take it that they're too good to spread the word in chilly weather. I suppose it's not as bad as the sandwich board guy who accosts people outside Fenway Park.

The walk to go out at night will be cake again. I don't know about you, but it sucks having to walk to a party or uptown when it's negative degrees out. Most likely you're not wearing a jacket because when you get there, what are you going to do with it? The walk home is always easy, but people will be more inspired to go out. Going out will eventually leak from just Thursday-Saturday to Sunday-Saturday. UMass is a great place to be when you don't have priorities yet.

Couches will soon decorate front lawns. Apparently people have lost the meaning to living room furniture. But hey, who am I to pass judgment? You probably won't see me sitting on any of those soon. Imagine how gross and germy fabric gets from sitting outside all the time. The couches will be soiled with beer spilled from the Beirut table that's representing as a coffee table. Wicker furniture is one thing, but a nice handed-down couch your mom let you bring to school is a breed of something else.

Barbecues are probably my favorite part of spring. Not so much eating the hamburgers or hot dogs or whatever, but just the smell of the barbecue and the game of Wiffle ball. Hitting a little white-holed ball with a hollow yellow hat just spells fun.

In the wise words of George Harrison, "Here comes the sun, and it's alright." Happy spring.

Katie Landers is a Collegian columnist.

KATIE LANDERS

Paintball: A fowl turn of events

MELODY ZAGAMI

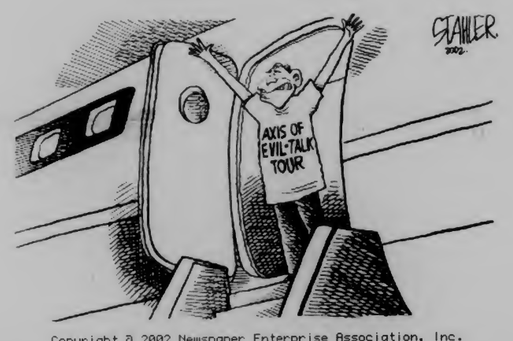
When I was twelve my father brought home a dozen baby geese. I believe the grouping term is "goslings". We already had a golden retriever, two cats, and four kittens. We thought that as they grew, the geese would just walk around the perimeter of the yard, squawking at perpetrators and carrying on with their adult geese lives. We kept them in a puppy crate with warm lights.

We'd feed them and put them in a little tub so they could swim. After swimming they'd hop around the yard, shaking the water out of their adorable fuzzy, feathered bodies. I tried to name them, but they all looked the same. I loved those baby geese. I love all animals, and that's why I'm pissed.

I relate my baby geese anecdote to you to express my absolute outrage at the animal abuse that is taking place at our campus pond. The Saturday before last a professor in the Geosciences Department witnessed individuals shooting paintballs at our trumpeter swans and our geese. The alleged assholes are thought to be area high school students with paintball guns and obviously very little to do on a Saturday afternoon except hurt poor defenseless creatures via the king of white trash "sports", paintballing.

Before I heard the story, related to me by one of my co-workers in Whitmore, I just happened to be shopping at the consumer mecca that is the Hampshire Mall. There's a new paintball place, Executive Paintball. (What the words "executive" and "paintball" are doing next to each other is beyond me.) I've never done it, but I believe paintballing involves hitting things with balls of paint. They also sell paintball supplies, which I gather are the guns and the balls of paint they necessitate for ammo.

The geese didn't appear to be injured, but obviously they are not into paintballing. They don't have the equipment, nor the means to get it or protect themselves from Amherst's finest in secondary education. Our poor geese are getting pelted with paintballs and they are probably frightened now. What do they do? They swim around, make noise, poop, and generally mind their own business. The swans are pretty to look at, and certainly they don't want to be stained with paint that might be poisonous to their pretty feathers and delicate swan digestive systems.



I wanted to call this inhumane disturbance to your attention so you can arm yourself with a can of paint and throw it at anyone you see who looks suspicious of abusing campus wildlife. The animals are the nicest feature of our school. The ninja squirrels on the hill in Central, the street-smart pigeons in Southwest, the cute chipmunks and squirrels in Northeast and the ducks, geese, and swans of the pond are all a part of our campus community. This is their home as much as it is ours and to think that foolish teenagers are threatening them is very upsetting.

I guess I sound like a geezer. "Those damned kids and their paintball guns, hurting my ducks." I know that junior high schoolers occasionally stick a firecracker in a frog's mouth or up a cat's butt. But I'd like to think that the children of Amherst, who are taught by their liberal parental units to buy locally grown produce and save the whales, have some respect for our animal friends.

And paintball! I'm sorry if you enjoy paintball, but honestly what kind of a hobby is it? Laser tag – I'm all for it – nothing's actually shot at, nothing gets stained, and you can tag to the stylings of Slayer and Motley Crue the whole time. Even the Dungeons & Dragons role-playing games that transpire in the Campus Center basement are excusable. But shooting balls of paint? Get a freakin' life.

So, friends, I ask you to keep an eye out. Stand vigilantly and help to eradicate paintball abusers and their allies. There is room on this campus for a lot of shameful behavior, but let it not be at the expense of the animals.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

Copyright © 2002 Newspaper Enterprise Association, Inc.

A call for a shutting of mouths

Student protestors of the University Of Massachusetts, please shut your whining, foul, and halitosis-afflicted mouths immediately.

There, it has been said, if even in such a locale as will all but guarantee that it falls on deaf ears. Oh gorgeous and virile reader, please do permit me to indulge in a bit of hyporcrisy, as I doth protest the asinine protestors whose dimwitted and feebleminded orgs of whining has gone to show just how pathetic college students truly are. Let us examine, in true medical fashion (which means it's time to slip on the latex gloves), that flaming orifice known as the pit of budget protestors.

Recent years have seen the windfall of Clinton administration budget policies take hold in the cold and gripping form of rising unemployment and vanishing surpluses. Multiple tax increases, accompanied by a Massachusetts governor intent upon proving himself the Republican whipping boy of Democrat dominatrices, sapped more economic life out of this country than Pauly Shore's career.

Even the most Socialistic of economics professors will readily and willingly confess that the present recession began not with the election of George Winner Bush, but instead back in March of 2000, well within the confines of the national orgy known in academic circles as the Clinton years. It should, therefore, shock no well-educated, half-educated, or even half-witted human being in this country at the present moment that public expenditures of cash, dough, and dinero are decreasing.

No man, woman, or illegally employed child who has ever worked would be capable of being surprised at the fact that, when recessions occur, outlays of what some clerics know as "green energy" will trickle to a stop. College students, as usual, prove themselves once again capable of ignoring every basic concept in the world of employment and finance, and whining their throbbing little mouths off about something that is as normal as a painful proctological examination.

You see, my flaxen-haired and ever-adorable reader, the state cannot support as many state functions when it has less state money derived from state taxes. Therefore, the state must cut services in order to avoid taxing the living faces out of its citizenry. As they say in Romania. Comprende?

We don't get what we cannot afford to pay. Or, in the case of most lazy students here who, though they fancy themselves emancipated and liberated, are nonetheless simply chattel at the beck and call of their parents who so generously foot the bills. We don't get what our parents cannot afford to pay. If you find this system to be annoying or distasteful, please take your lower extremities and move them ASAP to a private university, where you can pay thirty thousand dollars a year to avoid having to deal with state budget crunches.

What are the results of lower budgets? The University, headed by the esteemed and honorable Mr. Bulger, is forced to consider several options. Among these options are slicing and dicing (though not necessarily in that order) the number of students admitted in a given year. Providing for fewer students would allow the school to spend less but maintain the same services for each student because the total number of students (hence, the total number of services) would ultimately be less. The problems of this possibility are distinct and clear, including the obvious difficulty of mating a large number of upperclassmen with a diminishing number of freshmen, which is simply a recipe for reproductive disaster Friday night after Friday night.

"That's right, boys and girls, of all the available options, the ones being presently undertaken by the University are the best possible."

The University could, if the wise and venerable Chancellor were so inclined, offer incoming freshmen fewer services than upperclassmen already enrolled in the University. But this policy would be silly, because it would slight some students to maintain services for others. Such a pursuit of feckless gradation would turn freshmen into little more than the financial whipping boys of UMass.

While credit card companies already assure that this is the true state of things, involving the administration itself in such economic brutality would be heartless. And, as we know, universities are nothing, if not resonant with the throbbing pitches of administration hearts.

But the University has another option. And this one is to the left of center. The left, you say? No, your other left. If the University wanted to maintain an equality of services for all students, to continue to serve the same number of clients and to avoid having to turn some into the pocketbooks of others, it could simply remove some services for the duration of the economic downturn. That's right, boys and girls, of all the available options, the ones being presently undertaken by the University are the best possible. Now, this simple and blatantly obvious fact would never be expected to stand in the way of students whining their pathetic little heads off about the fact that they actually have to deal with the economy, but facts ought to be stated once in a while.

KEVIN POWERS

When the University cuts down on the number of lectures presently available for "Why Castro Has Buttocks Worthy Of Your Lips", it is because doing so is the least-detrimental way to deal with an economic decline.

When the Castration And Feminism Department is told that it cannot use as many teaching assistants for a seminar on Reform And The Loathing Of Men, it is because doing so is the best way to provide the best possible education for the greatest number of students. And when, lo and behold, tuition and fees increase, it is so that students can continue to enjoy as many of their present amenities as possible, rather than losing even more courses in Fellating Karl Marx 101.

So please permit me to speak a few words which Bill Clinton might once have uttered to a timid Monica Lewinsky in that epicenter of government known as the White House back in 1996: "Baby, when they tell you that I'm wrong, just remember what I told you today. And, baby? Chew on this."

Kevin I. Powers is a UMass student.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.26.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Celebrity diets aren't best for a healthy life

ASK ELENA

By Elena Panesis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Elena, Do you know any information about the Atkins Diet? I'm trying to shed a few quick pounds for spring break. I know it's a low carb diet and that a lot of Hollywood celebs do it. Do you think it's worth a try?
- Linda K.

First, I'd like to state that I am by no means a certified nutritionist nor have I even taken a nutrition class. Therefore, I suggest you make a trip to a nutritionist, dietician or doctor (yes, I hate going to them too) to follow up any information I provide.

I remember the initial buzz about the Atkins Diet a couple years back when the formerly curvaceous Jennifer Aniston emerged on "Friends" with a new rail-like figure. Personally, I find the body type of another Jennifer (Lopez) to be much healthier and far more attractive. Opinions aside, the diet created by Dr. Robert C. Atkins involves eating large amounts of proteins like meat, eggs and cheese while virtually eliminating carbohydrates from the diet including many vegetables, fruits and grains. In fact, the plan allows only 15-60 grams of carbohydrates a day. That seems like a reasonable amount until you check out a nutritional label. For example, just half a cup of oatmeal has 27 grams of carbs!

The diet alters the body's metabolism using fat and muscle as opposed to carbohydrates for fuel. In fact, it makes the body a fat burning machine because of a reaction to the lack of carbs called ketosis. The countless Atkins websites promise that in a few weeks you will shed those unwanted pounds and more importantly change your lifestyle.

Yes, you may be on your way to heart disease, kidney problems, nausea, fatigue and harmful fluid loss according to other doctors besides good ole' Robert and nutritional experts.

Basically, if any of the following descriptions fit your profile, then the Atkins Diet is probably not the answer to your weight loss woes.

1. You enjoy a late night run to Domino's on the weekends to compliment the 30-pack of beer that you just guzzled.
2. People describe you as a junk food junkie – cookies, candy, chips and soda satisfy your cravings.
3. While others gorge on chocolate cake, you opt for fruits like bananas, apples and oranges. It's just sweet enough.
4. It is I, Captain Vegetable with my carrots and my celery! (Does anyone else remember that from Sesame Street?) Your lunch consists of a grilled chicken salad and a whole- wheat roll.

With all of these restrictions, I would rather keep my rolls (the ones on my body and in my kitchen). Honestly, the ancient Greeks had the right idea when they said "everything in moderation." Eating too many carbs, especially empty ones found in processed white bread, sugary snacks and chips, definitely will not help your waistline. But a diet of steak and cheese could give you a heart attack at age 40.

Plus, whole-wheat grains, vegetables and fruit are definitely essential foods for the body's overall health. My advice is to cut down on unnecessary carbohydrates like white bread, cookies and cakes. Replace them with oatmeal, brown rice and fiber-packed cereal. Also, try to ease up on fatty red meat and choose healthier protein alternatives like poultry, fish and legumes.

I understand the desire for a quick fix to lose weight. I have definitely been there! Yet, permanent weight loss requires a healthy change in diet combined with an exercise program. If you are serious about weight loss, I suggest seeing a nutritionist and a trainer to find a program that compliments your lifestyle. Most people gain the weight back immediately after going on a fad diet since they involve deprivation rather than nutrition. Plus spring break is still a couple weeks off, which is enough time to see results and maybe even change your life. So put on the work out gear and start sweatin' to the oldies (yes, I admit to owning the tape). Even if you don't have a lean, toned body come March, I guarantee you will feel a million times better!

COURTESY WARNER BROS.

Jennifer Lopez packs heat (in this photo) as well as a healthier body image than fellow starlets like Jennifer Aniston.

Queen of the Damned

By Johnny Donaldson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

QUEEN OF THE DAMNED
Directed by Michael Rymer
Starring Aaliyah and Stuart Townsend
Playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

Vampires have long fascinated the populace, inspiring everything from a subgenus of the Goth lifestyle to kinky blood-sport sex games to relatively innocuous pop-culture entertainments. There's even a Complete Idiot's Guide to Vampires, which I happen to own. Some have attributed the ageless appeal of the undead to their sensuality (which has always perplexed me, because how erotic, exactly, is a demonic walking corpse?), while others have illustrated the psychological underpinnings of vampiric mythology: our fears of mortality, our love/hate relationship with religion (what with all the Catholic iconography), our concerns with our insatiable appetites, and our nihilistic, primal urge to be close to danger. Of course, they may just make really cool movies.

Ever since the heyday of the '70s supernatural soap opera "Dark Shadows", vampire entertainments have lost the nocturnal fear of classics like Nosferatu for something different: a poetic-gothic romanticism that have turned vampires from charming, bloodsucking ghouls into tragic icons of lost innocence. There's almost a deep reverence for them. Nowadays movies, books and TV shows set up underground societies where vampires can live with Bacchanalian decadence, apocalyptic carnage or soulful angst.

Surprisingly, Queen of the Damned is only the second adaptation of a novel by Anne Rice, the author who has done the most to perpetuate the idea of the vampire as the new human. The first was 1994's luridly overripe Interview with a Vampire – a long, toothless, puffy-shirt period "epic" that was like the world's bloodiest (and mustiest) homoerotic Harlequin romance novel ever. Tom Cruise sunk his teeth into the role of the vampire Lestat with scenery-chewing zeal, but co-stars Brad Pitt and Christian Slater looked as though they were earnestly eyeing the exits and the movie got bogged down by director Neil Jordan's assumption that he was making a serious drama. Queen is not as stuffy as Interview was, but it's just as mediocre, as both films lack any lusty, hungry passion.

Lestat is once again the focus. However he is not played by Cruise, but by Irish actor Stuart Townsend, who is awfully lifeless – even for someone playing dead. With his high cheekbones and lithely muscular body, Townsend looks like a male model, and he acts like one too. He sneers and preens and struts with apropos hauteur, but it's a one-note performance that torpedoes the movie. The fact that Queen of the Damned is a melodramatic bore that lacks the humor and horror to justify its atmosphere of luxuriant narcosis hardly helps matters.

Lestat has been sleeping in his New Orleans crypt for a century, but now he has woken because he likes the sound of our music. As soon as he's up, Lestat reinvents himself as the lead singer for the goth-rock band The Vampire Lestat, brazenly parading his vampirism in public (his adoring fans eat up the "gimmick"). This has made him

Turn to DAMNED, page 6

COURTESY WARNER BROS.

Aaliyah and Stewart Townsend star in Queen of the Damned.

Faculty? Fabulous

By Melissa Ladd
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Five College Dance Department faculty put on a marvelous show Saturday night, February 23, at Bowker Auditorium. It was the final performance of a quite diverse show. The styles ranged from ballet to Brazilian and modern to African. All of the choreography revealed an array of vital talent that Western Massachusetts is privileged to support.

Augusto Soledade's "Street Facade" was the night's lively opener. This piece was performed late last November as part of the University Dancers and Jazz Ensemble concert, "Collaborations in Sound and Motion", and it was delightful once again. Accompanied by a Samba Rhythm arranged by Mamadi Ogumlana, it is a fast piece that depicts the Brazilian people's joyful culture. The costumes were brightly colored, arms wave wildly, and the dancers leapt around the stage with enormous smiles on their faces.

"Saty (dress)" combined several interesting elements. Choreographed and danced by Anna Sedlackova and Marta Miller, "Saty" gave an aesthetically pleasing composition. Dresses dangling on hangers were lifted up against a blue backdrop at multiple heights. The two women dressed in slips went through a series of slow, defined shapes with their movement to instigate their dance. Another element in the composition of this piece was the use of voice. The piece began with a recorded voice, audible before the lights came up, that was laughing. In the middle of the piece, a voice spoke about relationships and people, saying a bit about a certain on-again-off-again rapport, which seemed to insinuate the relationship one has with their wardrobe when searching for something to wear. The audience chuckled at its cleverness.

Also used for sound in this piece were the voices of the Bulgarian Female Vocal Choir. The dancers donned several of the garments that were hanging against the backdrop throughout the course of this work. The clothing was also used as a contact point, where they held onto one another's dress to support a shape made together. To finish the dance with a statement, facing upstage, Sedlackova disrobed baring her nude back to the spectators. The lights went down and when she returned to take a bow, she was wearing a silk and lace dress.

Maryanne L. Kodzis, who has a BFA in dance from UMass, and an MFA in choreography/performance from Smith College, danced exquisitely to Roger Blum's "Moon Rise". Set to excerpts from "Violin Sonata op.5, no.12" by Arcangelo, blue backlighting and a glittering ladder set a little left of center stage, the audience was roped in. Kodzis dressed in lavender and white entered the stage, mid air, in a perfect grande jète. Her character seemed to be waiting impatiently for the moon to appear in the night sky, periodically climbing the ladder full of hope.

Blum's outstanding choreography accentuated the dancer's feet, and also made evident her lovely lines giving a hint of Balanchine's influence in ballet with her open arabesques. Blum also incorporated contrasting upper body and arm movements, which deviate from classical or even more recent ballet techniques, but gave his piece several moments of a modern disposition, adding to the intrigue of the character.

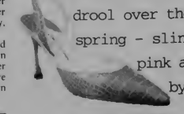
Turn to DANCE, page 6

O'Rourke and lovin' it

By Steven Zultanski
COLLEGIAN STAFF

JIM O'ROURKE
Insignificance and I'm Happy, and I'm Singing and a 1, 2, 3, 4
Import, Mego

The buzz was that Insignificance was to be Jim O'Rourke's big rock album, but we should have known better. O'Rourke has built a career out of the unexpected, and his albums are consistently surprising, even after one expects them to be so. He has continued to craft albums that come off as challenging rather than novel, and consequently each release is greeted with both huge expectations and a complete lack of expectation. I didn't know what to hope for when first playing this album, and so I didn't hope for anything. But it's everything I could have hoped for: a satisfying exploration of rock and pop songwriting, with the loveliest cover art since Jim's last album.



Insignificance, as it turns out, is not a big rock record, but is fully comprised of songs that approach the borders of conventional rock songwriting without ever crossing said borders. The songs have melodies and choruses, there are no long amospheric passages and O'Rourke's usual fascination with repetition is swept under the rug. It is somewhere along the lines of his Halfway to a Threeway EP, but more developed and less singer/songwritery. And meaner.

Eureka, his previous full-length, was an album of nasty lyrics and sweet music but this fact was mostly overlooked. Perhaps to make

Turn to O'ROURKE, page 6

Sorry... no style file!!!

Style File writer Shauna Billings took a little break. Please, no tears. So to tide you over until next week, drool over the hottest shoes for spring - slingbacks. Shown here, pink alligator slingbacks by Manolo Blahnik.

COURTESY CHRIS ASTLEY

O'Rourke

continued from page 5

[illegible] Tweaker's Insomniac [illegible] has sassy cover art.

himself perfectly clear. Insignificance is an album of subtly nasty lyrics and (mostly) sweet music. For example, in "Good Times" he sings, "Listening to you reminds me of a motor's endless drone and how the dead are so damn lucky," over an interestingly tense but almost bouncy arrangement — and then the harmonies and horns come in.

The difference between Insignificance and Eureka is that now the lyrics seem addressed directly to the listener — the critics or at least to some particular person, rebellious real or imagined. And perhaps this use of music as a vehicle for personal attacks is what's insignificant. Or perhaps the attacks are insignificant. It's difficult to misquote an album that opens with the lines "Don't believe a word I say/ Not that you would anyway/ I may be insincere/ But it's all downhill from here."

Of course anxiety between music and lyrical content is nothing new, but O'Rourke's very conscious of working hand in hand with history to create something equally effective and forward looking. Only two songs actually rock out, but the arrangements are inventive and engaging and it becomes clear that the only useful way of classifying the music is in context with the rest of O'Rourke's output.

The second half of the disc is considerably more mellow than the first, and does not rock, as if O'Rourke knew what we expected, teased us with it, and then went off in another direction. But this does not make for a frustrating or even eclectic listen. The album is the work of a clear, unified vision. It's uncertain whether O'Rourke will continue in this vein, or if he's said all that he's meant to say. At one point, he claimed that Eureka would be his last album. It obviously wasn't, and thankfully for us, he's found new paths to explore, both in rock and more experimental areas. In fact, the barrage of electronic sounds that closes Insignificance is a bridge to his next album, released only a month later.

There was a time when I believed that electronic music, by its very definition, could not be emotional. Like many others, I claimed that it was too cold, too distant; that the absence of traditional musical instruments resulted in degree of detachment rendering most pieces uninteresting. I believe I was wrong.

After careful listening, it became clear that the same degree of detachment I once found alienating is a necessary element to some very interesting and compelling works. What became even clearer is that electronic music, contrary to popular belief, is quite capable of expressing a range of emotions. And Jim O'Rourke's newest album, I'm Happy and I'm Singing and a 1, 2, 3, 4, is a great example of personal, emotional electronic expression.

The record is made up of three pieces, each varying in substance and mood. The first, "I'm Happy", is a gently noisy wash of sound, based on a minimalist-like arpeggiated rhythm. But the listener is never overcome, it never gets too dense, and O'Rourke has left room to breathe. The effect is of a peaceful melancholy. The second piece, "And I'm Singing", begins with a stuttering clock tick, and continues as an exploration of time and rhythm, featuring cut up sounds, melodies, and a soft, steady beat.

"And a 1, 2, 3, 4", the third and final piece on the album, is also the longest. Running at about a half-hour, it is ambient, strangely melodious, and sad. A creeping melody drifts in an out, the background hums – something happens, something doesn't happen. It's not completely weepy, or a work that wallows in self-pity, but it's wonderfully effective in shaping the mood of the listener and expressing that of the composer. You will want to be sad with this music.

Sometimes, it's hard to tell where Jim O'Rourke the person resides within his music, or if he has removed himself from it. With this record he has released perhaps his most emotive and personal work. Too often, his solo work gets lumped into two categories. But with his new albums, Jim has proven those categories to be irrelevant.

I'm not going to declare one album better than the other, because such distinctions seem both silly and time wasting. Whether writing more conventional rock songs, far-out experimental pieces, or anything else he has up his sleeve, the subject is always the same: sound. O'Rourke composes not within genres but within a world of sound and ideas. These albums are not merely stylistic exercises. The possibilities are endless both in pop and the avant-garde; if someone is willing to explore them. This is the sound of an artist surprising himself and loving it.

"She's perfect, so flawless. I'm not impressed... I miss you gray sweatpants."

-John Mayer

damned

continued from page 5

the enemy of the other vampires who want their identities to remain secret.

Lestat's music as also awakened the ancient Egyptian vampire queen Akasha (the late R&B princess Aaliyah, who died in a plane crash last summer), who delights in the cruel bloodletting of immortals and mortals alike. Akasha wants to rule the world with Lestat as her king, because she has a thing for him. Other characters, most of who also have a thing for Lestat, include Marius (a lively Vincent Perez), the ancient who sired Lestat, and the dull human Jesse (Marguerite Moreau), a London based paranormal researcher who longs to be a vampire. Lena Olin has a barely-in-the-movie role of Maharat, a good vampire whose reason for existence remains murky at best. (It's hard to believe that three people – including a queen – could be attracted to such a charmless pretty boy as Lestat.)

I never thought I would hear a soundtrack more earsplitting then the one for this year's Rollerball, until I heard the original music for Queen of the Damned, sung by the band The Vampire Lestat. Composed by Richard Gibbs and Korn lead singer Jonathan Davis, the songs are pounding heavy metal tunes that seem designed to make the ears bleed (still, I thought the song "Forsaken" wouldn't be out of place on the radio).

But it's not just the music that's been amped to headache levels. The entire sound quality – the shrieks, the screams, even the dialogue – has been increased to piercing decibel levels that shred the Dolby Digital system. It's yet another movie that mistakes loudness for energy. Lethargic and somber, Queen of the Damned doesn't have any cheesy horror movie fun until the end which features a Matrix-style fight and special effect blasts of flaming bodies and decapitated heads. By then it's too little, too late for a movie that has been a tired lump. The movie even denies us a giddy parody of the gauche world of rock stars, though a music video styled on German expressionist classics like Nosferatu and The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari has the right edge of schlock-dread eeriness that characterize Marilyn Manson and Nine Inch Nails videos.

Fans of Aaliyah will be disappointed because she doesn't show up until an hour in, and even that's only for a scene where Akasha decimates a vampire pub (replete with a heart being ripped out of a chest). She then disappears until the big climax, when Akasha finally becomes a major character. Aaliyah was a promising actress who's one of the few people on screen who seems to be having fun. She plays Akasha with the right mix of kittenish playfulness and seductive menace; she juices the movie whenever she's on screen (which is not nearly enough). However, the fact that her character is so small and that Aaliyah is given top billing in the previews is proof that Warner Bros. is willing to exploit her lost star to sell the movie. There's nothing wrong with releasing a movie with a deceased star, but there is something wrong with piggybacking on that name for box office success.

dance

continued from page 6

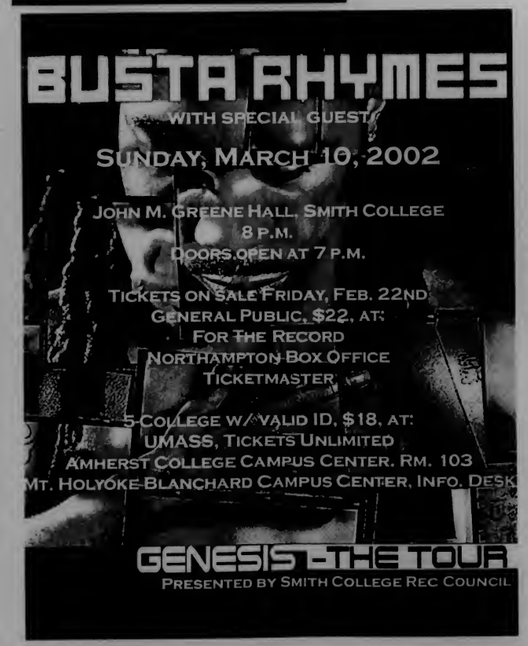
Lila York's "Lux Aeterna" was beautiful, but who would expect any less from one who has some prominent dance companies such as San Francisco Ballet, Boston Ballet and the Royal Danish Ballet on her choreography resume. One noticeable detail about this piece was the movement of the very striking costumes. Made by Ilene Goldstein, they were all satin with long flowing skirts and fitted tops in dark brooding colors that swished with a scrumptious silken sound as the dancers moved. The dance was set to "Requiem" by Duruflé, a beautiful, angelic piece of music.

There were three sections to "Lux Aeterna." In the second two, York used a huge modern influence and as opposed to the first section that seemed somewhat more like classical ballet. The movement appeared to have a sense of confusion, pain or repentance. This was integrated with the action of help ing another. Several dancers in the third section had their hands together in the prayer position, and one also helped another to walk. This was a dramatic moment where the suffering and need for help was obvious, and so was the other's desire to hold her up. York did a fine job in creating a feeling with her choreography, and in portraying it through her exquisite dancers.

After intermission, the audience had a wonderful time watching Billbob Brown and Rebecca Nordstrom run around the stage in lab coats, scratching their heads and peering at their watches, shouting out catch phrases having to do with time. Cleverly titled, "Once Upon A ," gave Brown and Nordstrom a chance to ham it up and the audience a chance to laugh. The music was a collage of song fragments, mostly from popular music genres, that had something to say or do with time. It was witty and entertaining, and easy on the concentration. Billbob does not take himself so seriously, and brings merriment back to the art of dancing.

"Pictures in Your Mind", by Charles and Rose Flachs, was truly a picture of grace, and a vision of the love shared between two people. Set to music from the gorgeous voices of Luciano Pavarotti, Sting and Giuseppe di Stefano, the two Flachs soared around the stage.

Formerly professional dancers with several companies in the United States, they danced many principal roles in the classic ballets, and their precision, and attention detailed performance work was evident at Bowker. Charles and Rose effortlessly executed several lovely lifts, displaying a trust for each other that is vital to the accomplishment of the lift, and also to the effect of the entire piece.



The two dance very comfortably together, and that familiarity with one another is seen in the opening and closing movements of the dance where both are sitting on the floor, Rose in front of Charles, leaning up against him.

The piece the audience had been waiting for was the final piece of the evening, "Walking With Pearl", with choreography by the award winning Jawole Willa Jo Zollar. The dance was a tribute to the late Pearl Primus, who had also graced this community with her presence from 1984 to 1991. It was a compilation, of spoken word, photography, dance and rhythm. Forms of African dance seemed adapted so well by the fifteen dancers all from several ethnic backgrounds.

William Brown Jr. took center stage quite often with poise, grace and a fierce determination. The dancing was amazingly fast and fluid, and the movement never stopped. Jill St. Coeur's costumes were unique and matched the theme of the choreography. Zollar took to the side of the stage a few times to speak the words of Primus, as they pertained to the photographs which were projected onto the back screen, and the performing going on beneath them. The entire concept was innovative, informative and a compelling work of art. There is an ongoing photography exhibit on Pearl Primus at the Hampshire College Art Gallery until March 15.

It was a brilliant and satisfying concert. The works were beautiful and the eager audience appreciative. The Five College Dance Department Faculty are select and talented people who have the abilities to create, entertain and display their passion through their art of dance.

Write for Collegian Arts

www.dailycollegian.com

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
- ✔ Student Discounts
- ✔ Professional Bartending Training
- ✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
- ✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
- ✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
- ✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job

LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
-MARCH 8TH - 10TH
-LEWIS-SEBRING ROOM
-VALENTINE HALL
-AMHERST COLLEGE
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
FRIDAY 2/22-THURSDAY 2/28/2002
NO PASSES ACCEPTED FOR NEW RELEASES
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
In the Bedroom(R) 12:20 4:15 7:15 10:20
Hart's War(R) 12:50 4:45 7:45 10:40*
John Q(PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
Collateral Damage(R) 12:30 4:30 7:40 10:20*
Big Fat Liar(PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:10 9:30*
Crossroads(PG13) 12:00 2:15 4:35 7:05 9:45*
Super Troopers(R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15*
Return to Neverland(G) 12:35 2:30 4:40 7:15 9:20*
The Count Of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00
Black Hawk Down(R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
A Beautiful Mind(PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
Lord Of the Rings(PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
Sneak preview 40 Days & 40 Nights 2/23/02 7:30
Senior Movie 2/28/02 John Q doors open at 11:45
* no passes/super savers
Tickets & information available at cinemark.com

hockey

continued from page 10

seven different Maine players found the back of the net on Saturday.

UMass hung with the Bears for most of the first period Friday, but Peter Metcalf's slap shot from the blue line with six minutes to go in the frame gave Maine the lead, which it would not relinquish. Shields added a tip-in goal off a Francis Nault shot late in the period to make the score 3-1 after one.

Defensive miscues led to Maine's offensive output the rest of the way, as it capitalized on failed clearing attempts and missed assignments by UMass. A microcosm of the game took place in the third, as Shields was left cherry-picking at the UMass blueline uncovered, and Tom Reimann fired a pass from his own zone all the way to the Scotland native for the easy breakaway goal.

Things didn't get any better on Saturday as the Minutemen could not maintain any semblance of offensive pressure, and Maine used its lightning-quick speed and crisp passing to skate circles around the visitors. On Senior Night at Alfond Arena, three outgoing players shined in their last regular season home game. Metcalf had a goal and two assists, and the goaltending duo of Mike Morrison and Matt Yeats combined on the shutout.

The two losses leave the Minutemen four points behind Merrimack for the eighth and final berth in the Hockey East playoffs. Despite coming up on the short end of two big losses, Cahoon didn't think the results were due to lack of effort.

"I thought our guys came to play," he said after Friday's loss. "I know what goes on in the locker room, and I don't think there's any issue about those kids coming to play.

"We made some mistakes, we had some fundamental breakdowns, but it had absolutely zero to do with preparation."

Now the Minutemen face the daunting task of having to win their final two games to earn the final conference berth, starting tonight against New Hampshire, the top team in Hockey East and No. 3 squad in the nation. The Wildcats have been red-hot all season, coming into the game with a 22-6-3 record on the season. UNH is led by Hobey Baker candidate Darren Haydar and Colin Hemingway, two of the top four scorers in the nation. The two linemates combined for four goals and four assists alone in the Wildcats' two wins over the Minutemen on Jan. 18 and 19.

All the Minutemen can do now is move on from the weekend's disappointing performance, and concentrate on tonight's game.

"This is all ancient history right now," Cahoon said. "It hurts, but we've just got to move forward."

Faceoff is set tonight for 7:00 p.m.

JEREMY LINCK/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Matt Walsh is one of many UMass freshmen who must grow up fast for the Minutemen to have any chance against New Hampshire.

D-II has challenges of its own

By German Lopez
THE CRESCENT (U. EVANSVILLE)

(U-WIRE) EVANSVILLE, Ind. – Some people perceive NCAA Division II athletics as some sort of limbo between the loftiness of Division I and the depths of Division III. Others see it as the place to go for those who cannot cut it in D-I. At best, it is viewed as the inferior little brother of D-I.

The limited exposure given to D-II programs means little is known about them, and there is little desire to learn. But taking a closer look at D-II presents a whole new world of athletic opportunities and entertainment for a large number of participants and sports fans nationwide.

According to the NCAA, there are 260 active D-II member institutions throughout the country. Of these schools, 44 percent are private institutions and 56 percent are public. The average enrollment at a D-II school is 3,160, but it can range from a few hundred to more than 20,000 students. The average number of students participating in athletics at D-II schools is estimated at about 360.

The NCAA requires D-II schools to sponsor at least four sports for men and four for women, with no fewer than two team sports for each gender. D-II football and men's and women's basketball programs also are required to play at least 50 percent of their games against D-IIA, D-IAA or other D-II programs.

The athletic programs at D-II schools are funded by NCAA revenue distribution. There is a maximum amount of awards for each sport that cannot be exceeded by the schools.

The majority of student-athletes in D-II programs receive partial athletic scholarships, with the rest of their expenses paid by other forms of financial aid or out of their own pockets. Very few of these athletes are awarded full athletic scholarships.

D-II presents itself as a group of widely diverse institutions that share the common goal of providing academic opportunities to student-athletes and offering them a chance to use their skills to compete at a high level. This division philosophy extends to conferences and teams within the division.

Commissioner Ralph McFillen of the Mid-America Intercollegiate Athletics Association said D-II athletics is not about money.

"Our programs are not out trying to generate dollars," he said. "They're about giving students an opportunity to participate in sports. Our student-athletes are more integrated to our campus community. They're not just figures you see on TV."

Being seen as celebrities by other students and the pressures of being money producers result in what many perceive as a separation of D-I athletic programs from their respective schools. Commissioner Jim Naumovich of the Great Lakes Valley Conference said D-II athletic programs do not have separate identities from their schools, as opposed to those in D-I.

"Athletic departments in D-II schools are an integral part of the entire educational process," he said. "A large number of coaches and other staff are also teachers who regularly interact with the rest of the institution."

Athletic Director Pete Russo of Mercyhurst University in Erie, Pa., a member of the GLVC, said D-I programs rely on revenue-producing sports to fund not only their athletic programs but also other departments at their universities and parts of D-II and D-III programs.

"A good D-I football program can pay for a majority of its departments' expenses with one good Saturday," he said. "It's definitely not like that for our schools, but I encourage my students to watch them because some of that money is coming our way."

The profit-driven aspect of D-I schools, with large programs to support and TV contracts to live up to, is not seen at the D-II level.

"This means athletic programs at D-II universities generally stay within the mission of the schools," Naumovich said. "They are not separate, self-sustaining entities."

A large portion of athletic funding for D-II athletics goes straight from the schools to the athletic departments. Naumovich said direct funding of the athletic departments by the schools has led to an increased commitment to the programs by administrators at the universities.

"The commitment from our schools' presidents, combined with the leadership of our coaches and staff, gives us the ability to recruit our student-athletes so that they will be able to compete and, more importantly, graduate," he said.

The wide variety of D-II schools and their locations makes it difficult to pinpoint general trends in admission. McFillen said the difference between state schools and private schools in his conference is mainly admission.

"Most of our state schools are more receptive to student applicants," he said. "Our private schools are sometimes not at maximum capacity."

McFillen said admission standards at D-II schools therefore vary but apply across the board to all students, whether they are athletes or not.

D-II schools must comply with NCAA minimum admission requirements for athletes, but in general they have higher standards of their own.

Athletic Director Bob Boerigter of Northwest Missouri State, a MIAA member, said recruiting the type of student-athletes who will be able to meet admission criteria is crucial.

"We do not reserve special admission spots for athletes," he said. "We like to think our coaches are doing a good job recruiting the right type of kids."

At Northwest Missouri State, the recent football recruiting class had average ACT scores of 23. The school's minimum is 21.

Schools with great success on the field or court, such as GLVC members Kentucky Wesleyan and Southern Indiana in basketball and MIAA member Northwest Missouri State in football, generally draw more fan support from both students and their communities.

Athletic Director Larry Moore of Kentucky Wesleyan said KWC consistently sells out its 5,000-seat arena despite a student enrollment of only about 700.

"Most of our support comes from the community," he said. "I don't think that we would receive as much attention if we weren't successful."

Likewise at USI. The basketball program's success is credited with bringing in more fans. Athletic Director John Mark Hall said there is always room for improvement when it comes to supporting the university.

"The support we get is good, but we'd like to make it great," he said. "We'd like to get more students to events other than basketball. It enhances an event when you have student support."

Challenges D-II schools face deal with funding, name recognition and misconceptions about their programs and athletes. Fund raising has become a big part of D-II athletics, even at high-level successful programs.

"People believe that if you don't play at D-I level, the caliber of play can't be that good," Naumovich said. "It's the old 'out of sight, out of mind' adage."

Media coverage of D-II athletics is lacking, particularly in large communities.

Athletic Director David O'Toole of Bellarmine in Louisville, Ky., also a GLVC school, said media coverage in large communities often ignores his team in favor of D-I or professional teams.

"Here in Louisville, we don't get the press we deserve," he said. "With the University of Kentucky and [University of] Louisville in such close proximity, it's hard."

Costs to run athletic programs at the D-II level average from $1.43 million without football to $1.95 million with football. Boerigter said this makes dealing with monies issue a definite challenge.

"Our costs for things like transportation and equipment are comparable with D-I teams," he said. "The exception, of course, is that our returns are very different."

In general, officials from conferences and those at all D-II schools contacted expressed satisfaction with their division and their roles in it.

"We're happy at D-II, from our standpoint," Hall said. "We feel comfortable. Our goal is to be the best D-II program out there. It's a great fit for us."

The success of a program or its choice of division does not seem to affect enrollment at D-II schools.

"Students and parents are going to choose schools based on academic programs," McFillen said. "The bottom line is, you're going to graduate and have a degree as a non-athlete."

Write for Sports

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
Why not be a bartender?
- Only professional school in Western MA
- Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
- National certification in alcohol awareness
- Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
- Special UMass student discount
- Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
- Cars • Mini Vans
- Trucks • SUV's
- Cargo Vans
- 15 Passenger Vans
- Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
- We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
- Direct Billing To Insurance Co
- MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

We're not like every other high-tech company. We're hiring.

No one told you the hardest part of being an engineer would be finding your first job. Of course, it's still possible to get the high-tech work you want by joining the U.S. Air Force. You can leverage your degree immediately and get hands-on experience with some of the most sophisticated technology on earth. To find out how to get your career off the ground, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit our Web site at airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE

Live Music
McMurphy's welcomes
JEDIAH ACUSICS
NEW! every tuesday
NO COVER
positive ID required

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone/Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Pet Sitting, spring break and some weekends this semester. N Amherst area 3 times per day for pets. 545-4013.

Wanted seamstress- simple alterations 545-4031

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 866-291-1884 ext. 485.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

Sell Khach Card Packets in Campus Center, Dorms, Etc. More you sell, more money you make. Call Mike 781-929-2818.

Wanted student to assist new web based business located on Cape Cod. Must have Marketing web skills, Contact Howie @ info@dashppa.com

Wanted: Honest, responsible, hard working student for evening product promotions. Must be 21+ and have reliable transportation. Please contact 203-984-5880 for more info.

EMPLOYMENT

Custodian Wanted first Congregational Church of Hadley. P/T 15 hrs/ week. Respond by e-mail kwood@tixs.com

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941) 329-6434 www.cruisesareers.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE; DJ Fooze and SYB productions are now booking for spring semester, call 537-8527.

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

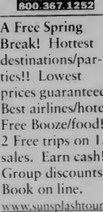
INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich(P Mulrey, E Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_Goodrich@hotmail.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

ROOMMATE WANTED



Cheap rent, 1 bedroom, female preferred, Colonial village bus rte 253-0920.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Days $279! Includes Meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $ 459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other worldwide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

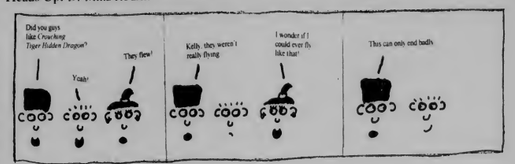
HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	CBS/3
3	NESN
4	Fox Sport NE
5	PBS/57
6	HSCN Movie Channel
7	WB/20
8	HSCN Movie Channel
9	TV Guide Channel
10	FOX/61
11	ABC/40
12	NBC/22
13	International Channel
14	UMATV
15	HSCN Int-l Channel
16	ESPN
17	ESPN 2
18	LIVE-19
19	ESPN Classic
20	Travel-to-Travel
21	CNN
22	CNN HL
23	Weather Channel
24	Learning Channel
25	History Channel
26	A & E
27	Discovery Health
28	Food Network
29	NASA
30	Home & Garden TV
31	Travel Channel
32	Lifetime
33	CNBC
34	Tech TV
35	BET
36	UPN/38
37	USA
38	TNN
39	MTV
40	CMT
41	VH-1
42	TNT
43	TBS
44	E! Entertainment
45	Sci-Fi Channel
46	Court TV
47	Nick at Nite
48	Comedy Central
49	Cartoon Network
50	Game Show Network
51	TV Land
52	FOX Family
53	Univision
54	Galavision
55	Telemundo
56	College TV Network
57	C-SPAN
58	C-SPAN2
60	Bloomberg Television

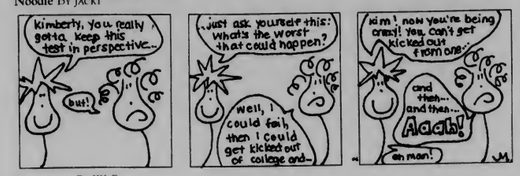
Sorry, no TV listings today.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

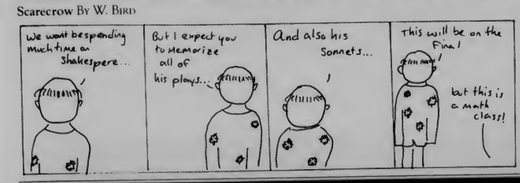


Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Monty By Jim Meddick

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak



Noodle By Jacki

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Monty By Jim Meddick

Quote of the Day

"My flask sprung a leak. I think the 151 ate through the metal."

-Overheard

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 57 LOW: 36	HIGH: 42 LOW: 16	HIGH: 36 LOW: 14

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – It may prove more difficult than expected to organize things to your liking. Of course, it could be that you are simply expecting too much!
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Someone in charge is likely to do you a good turn today – even though it's neither the time nor the day for it. Be sure to express your gratitude!
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – This is a very good day to reassess your own hopes and dreams. It may be that you've been on a slightly wrong track for a while.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may need special permission to do what you have planned today. Take care that you don't jump the gun. Don't risk alienating authorities.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You're likely to come in contact with a few people who simply do not understand or appreciate what you're up to. Be patient and explain clearly.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Your efforts may be cut off at some point today by the development of a situation that demands your immediate attention. Many depend on you.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Go for broke today. There's nothing holding you back, so you'll enjoy a good deal of freedom to spread your wings and explore without limits.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – If you're not happy with the way a contest turns out today, demand a rematch. But remember, the competition will turn up the heat, too!
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Someone may catch you in a lie today. Don't overreact to your own indiscretion. Rather, use the situation to get yourself "back on track."
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – The more you care about how others are doing today, the more likely you are to be satisfied with the person you think you are.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You'll feel good about yourself after doing a spur-of-the-moment favor for someone who is obviously in need of a helping hand.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Are you making excuses for under-par performances? Today, wise up and ask yourself a few honest questions. You'll realize that it's up to you.

Your comic could be here...inquire within!

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Cuban Black Bean Soup

Macaroni & Cheese (vegetarian)

Cajun Lightning Chicken

Sesame Noodles with Pea Pods (vegan)

Vegetable Egg Rolls (vegetarian) (W Basics)

DINNER

Cuban Black Bean Soup

Seasoned Roast Pork

Tomato Basil Cod

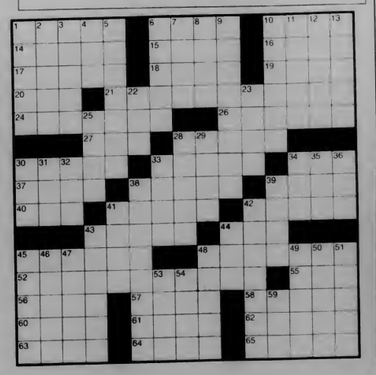
Black Bean Tofu Steak (W Basics) (vegan)

Jamaican 3-Beans (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Eric Soderstrom
Photo Editor	Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor	Andy Vogt
Production Assistant	Jess May
Pre-Layout Staff	Frank DiMeglio, Erika Earl

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
Crossword not challenging enough?
TUESDAY NIGHT!!
Team Pub Trivia
win money and prizes
9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition



ACROSS
1 Of Eire
6 Music notation
10 South America's Cape —
14 Las Vegas show
15 Take the bus
16 Nautical position
17 Spirit in "The Tempest"
18 Abu Dhabi leader
19 Popular side dish
20 Montreal's prov.
21 Crispy snack
24 Hearten
26 Flimsy
27 MIT grad
28 Assumed name
30 Fork part
33 Grammy winner Bonnie
34 Polynesian plants
37 Fishing gear
38 Garrulous
39 Stop short
40 Bastille Day season
41 Metric pounds
42 Jaunty
43 Cool fabric
44 "Norma —"
45 Grant
48 Beach habitues
52 Successful movie
55 Clip off branches
56 Delany of "China Beach"
57 Captain's shout
58 Fraternity letter
60 River in Asia
61 Hoodwink
62 Darkroom solution
63 "Superman" reporter Lois
64 Lady's pump
65 Pews: benches

DOWN
1 Of Baghdad
2 Silicon afterlife
3 Wall climbers
4 "A Boy Named —"
5 Portion
6 Greek island
7 Type of bean
8 Blue-pencil
9 Savageness
10 — it out discusses
11 Kukla's pal
12 Brings in the hay
13 Gossipy
22 Web address suffix
23 Exchange pleasantries
25 Ink partners
28 Composer Copland
29 Slangy hats
30 Kin of "ante-"
31 Decay
32 Work by Keats
33 Part to be played
34 Asphalt
35 Kind
36 Star home
38 Pretentious talkers
39 Red meat
41 Actor Douglas
42 Chatty pets
43 Place
44 Weep over
45 Cagey Kareem Jabbar
46 Red Cross founder Barton
47 Comic-strip warrior
48 Pizazz
49 Actress Verdugo
50 Thesaurus compiler
51 Shops booms
53 Nope
54 Pilot's test
59 Downhiller Tommy

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	T	A	R		A	S	P	I	C		S	L	E	W
H	O	B	O		B	O	O	T	H		A	U	R	A
I	D	E	S		S	A	U	C	E		F	A	I	L
N	O	T	E	W	O	R	T	H	Y		A	U	E	L
			B	A	R	S			E	R	R
S	U	B	U	R	B		Z	I	N	N	I	A	S
A	S	I	D	E		W	O	R	N	S		N	E	E
R	A	G	S		G	E	N	I	E		H	I	C	K
A	G	O		F	R	I	E	S		B	E	T	T	E
E	N	J	O	I	N	S		H	A	R	A	S	S
			A	R	F		D	A	T	A
R	O	O	M		F	I	N	I	S	H	L	I	N	E
E	C	R	U		I	R	O	N	S		D	O	O	R
S	T	E	P		N	A	V	E	L		E	T	O	N
T	O	S	S		S	N	A	R	E		D	A	N	E

11-26-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.26.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Winning waters

Minutemen take A-10 title; women find 4th

By Andrew Merritt
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It can be said that swimming is an individual sport. Save for team relays, success resides on the shoulders of each swimmer alone.

However, the Massachusetts swim program defied that concept all year, and its defiance led to strong performances from the women, and absolute victory for the men, who captured the Atlantic 10 title this weekend in Buffalo, N.Y. with a win over St. Bonaventure.

The men's coach, Russ Yarworth, embodied the excellence of his team, earning the A-10 Coach of the Year honor. However, being true to form, Yarworth gave all the credit to everyone else.

"I have to give a lot of credit to my assistant, Sean Clarke," he said. "He's just a good man and coach, and the kids really respond to him."

Yarworth would go on to credit rookie diving coach Mandy Hiser as well.

"Mandy's done a great job preparing, getting them ready for meets, and that's what we needed," Yarworth said.

The dividends paid out at the meet as all three divers, freshman Brandon Duane and sophomores Damian Stoy and Logan Montar, all earned points toward the Minutemen's 878-748 win over the Bonnies.

Yarworth's swimmers put in an impressive effort all around, including a school record set by junior Justin Houck in the 200-yard backstroke with a time of 1:49.10.

"Houck is a big-time swimmer for us," Yarworth said. "He's been there every time for us."

Houck, who also started for the men's water polo team in the fall, bounced back from a less than stellar performance in his individual medley event, and helped the 200 yard medley relay team to second place with a time of 1:33.31, good for 34 points.

Houck joined four of his teammates in being named All-Conference swimmers at the meet.

Juniors Tommy Keane, Rob Bellamy, and Ryan Zaucha, as well as freshman standout Dylan Smith were also honored.

"When you're coaching swimmers, it's really gratifying to see them succeed," said Yarworth of the five stars. "And the rest of the kids all really showed up too. We tend to be able to stick it out, even when we get behind."

The crucial victory, according to Yarworth, belonged to the five Massachusetts swimmers entered in the 400 individual medleys.

"In the 400 IM, all five swimmers had their best times, and Tom [Keane] won it. We really rocked [St. Bonaventure] with that, and we never looked back," Yarworth said.

While the motive escaped this reporter, there was one casualty of the Minutemen's success: Yarworth's hair.

He and Clarke both surrendered their locks to their team, which completely shaved both coaches' heads when the squad returned to Amherst.

The women, while unable to pull into first place, kept chopping away at an early sixth place ranking, and ended up with a solid finish that included senior Becky Hunnewell earning the A-10 Swimmer of the Meet Award.

Hunnewell won both the 100-meter (58.33), and 200-meter backstroke (2:01.96), and earned second place in the 100-meter freestyle (51.94).

While their 433.5 points weren't good enough to knock off conference champions Richmond (752), second place St. Bonaventure (584.5) and third place George Washington (459), the women saw good efforts from junior Kate Allery, who earned the second place spot in the one-meter dive competition, and third in the three-meter contest, as well as sophomore Diane Alberti, who's personal best time of 2:09.40 was good for fifth in the 200-meter butterfly.

Coach Bob Newcombe had nothing but positive words for his crew after the meet.

"Overall, we had a pretty good meet," Newcombe said. "The team did very well, kept after George Washington and made a run at their lead. All in all, I'm excited with how the meet finished up."

As a result of the successes the program had over the weekend, they will skip the Rutgers Invitational, being held next week, and, as Yarworth said, "end the season on a high note."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

This picture was taken last year after the UMass men's swim team's A-10 Championship victory. This year, the Minutemen stood in the same position.

Puck campaign nears conclusion

By Andy Vogt
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the season winding down, the Massachusetts hockey team faced two crucial games this weekend against Maine. The Minutemen looked to not only pick up at least one win against the Black Bears to keep their dwindling playoff hopes alive but to also exorcise the Alfond Arena demons that have haunted the team since its reinstatement.

Maine	7	7
UMass	1	0

Unfortunately, the Minutemen failed in both attempts.

The recurring themes that have plagued UMass (8-22-2, 3-13-2 Hockey East) this season again were a factor in the two games, as the team dropped its 17th game at Orono in as many tries. The Black Bears jumped out of the gates early on both nights, cruising to a 7-1 victory on Friday night, and maintaining the same intensity on Saturday to cruise 7-0 win.

"We break down in too many areas too often, and we obviously need to build up some confidence and sure up those areas," Head Coach Don Cahoon said. "I know we can play better, we're a team that hasn't played up to its abilities."

The Maroon and White's season long offensive deficiency was coupled this weekend by a suffocating Maine defensive effort, as the home team out-shot the Minutemen by a count of 76-36, including a differential of 59-12 on Saturday.

Maine opened the scoring on Friday night at the 6:14 mark of the first period as John Ronan beat a fallen Tim Warner in front of the net. Before the pubic address announcer finished announcing the goal, however, the Minutemen tied up the score. Sixteen seconds later, Greg Mauldin centered the puck in front to Peter Tivnato who shot it through a series of Black Bear defenders into the goal to knot the teams up.

Unfortunately, the Minutemen did not light the lamp again on the weekend, while the Maine offense peppered the tandem of Tim Warner and Mike Johnson. Ronan and Colin Shields each had two tallies for the Black Bears to lead the offensive charge in the first contest, while

[untie HOCKEY] pg. 2

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

The UMass hockey team must win its next two game to have any shot at a Hockey East playoff berth.

Holtz no-hits Southern Miss

But UMass falls to UIC in final game

By Andrew Merritt
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Junior pitcher Karla Holtz showed a little sintertime fire this weekend, as she spun a no-hitter against the Lady Eagles of Southern Mississippi in the semifinal game of the NFCA Leadoff Softball Classic.

Massachusetts notched the only two runs of the game in the fifth inning off of hits by sophomores Jamie Cahahlan and Nicole Wilson, junior Jessica Bartlett, and senior Teri Rooney. UMass also caught a break, as the first run was scored on what looked to be a fielder's choice, but ended up an error when Southern Mississippi's catcher dropped a plateward toss, allowing sophomore pinch runner K.C. Budrewicz to score. The second and final run scored when Wilson was knocked home by Rooney.

Holtz was the story, however, and was near perfect through five, before giving up a walk to Southern Mississippi's Auriel Jenkins in the sixth. Holtz finished out the game in the same style she began it, to put the Minutewomen in the final game of the Bronze championship.

The day didn't end as sweetly for UMass, however, as the Minutewomen dropped the final to the University of Illinois at Chicago, 2-1. Senior hurler Jennifer Hadley let up only three hits to the Flames, but the Maroon and White couldn't put together the offense necessary to overcome the defecit.

The contest was deadlocked at zero until the fourth, when UIC used back-to-back singles and a UMass gaffe to plate one runner. The Minutewomen made it interesting, however, when they scored one in the top of the seventh off of a hit by junior Emily Robustelli to bring senior Ashley Bakken home.

The Flames answered, however, in the bottom of the seventh, and clinched the game with the second fielder's choice of the inning, and brought home the winning run.

Hadley took the loss, but didn't pitch like a loser, adding only three walks to her three hits.

Sunday's events overshadowed an even bigger landmark for the Minutewomen, as they defeated the Stanford Cardinal, ranked second in the nation, 3-1 on Saturday.

Holtz was solid for the Maroon and White on Saturday, scattering four hits on the game, with six strikeouts and one free pass.

She received help from the offense, which notched three runs, all in the final frame, on eight hits and six walks. The deciding run was scored in the seventh when senior third baseman Scooter Wheeler was hit by a pitch, bringing in Robustelli. UMass then scored one more run to make the total three.

Holtz held the Cardinal to one in the bottom half of the seventh to preserve the victory.

Defense was the x-factor for UMass, who plated only eight runs in six games at the tournament. And while a 6-0 loss to Cal State-Fullerton could have crushed team morale, the Minutewomen came back to make a success out of the next four games, including a win against rival Connecticut.

In keeping with the rest of the weekend, the match-up with UConn was tight and low-scoring, with the Maroon and White edging the Lady Huskies 1-0, featuring a two-hit shutout performance from Jennifer Hadley, her 16th career clean slate.

The run came in the second inning on a Bakken single to left-center, which scored Holtz, and gave Hadles and the defense all they would need to close out the win.

The Holtz no-no came on the heels of a rough day on the mound, as she was the losing pitcher in the loss to Cal State Fullerton. However, the battle with the Lady Titans did produce a surprise effort from freshman pitcher Kelli Arnold, who allowed one hit and two walks in three and a third innings of relief.

The Minutewomen will have two weeks to rest and prepare for Southeast Louisiana, Southern Illinois, and Providence, the latter of whom will meet them for doubleheader action on March 9.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Ashley Bakken helped hold down the infield this past weekend for the UMass softball team.

...TIES AND FLI... IN ARTS ... CHURCH TAKES HEAT ED/OP PAGE 4. ... HOCKEY EAST SPO...

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
WEDNESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE EIGHTY NINE ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.27.02

Chancellor meets with resident assistants on union vote

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts Amherst interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams and other representatives of the administration met with resident assistants and community development assistants last night to discuss the upcoming vote on unionization.

Williams opened the meeting by thanking the students for attending. She also acknowledged that her intentions might have been misinterpreted when she wrote in a Feb. 14 letter to RAs that she didn't consider the position a "job."

"I have since heard from several of you who were offended by that statement. In re-reading my letter, I understand why you reacted that way," Williams said. "I did not communicate intentions well. What you do is clearly of great importance.

"You make an enormous contribution to the University," Williams added. "But you do so not just by 'working,' but also by serving as a leader among your peers, as an advisor to your peers, and as a role model for other students."

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Javier Cevallos also spoke about the difficulty and importance of the RA position.

"I have seen first hand what you do. I was there at the Super Bowl night and at Butterfield," Cevallos said. "I know what its like to be on the front line. I think it's very important for me to tell you how appreciative we are of what you do."

The administration feels that with collective bargaining the relationship between the RAs and CDAs would go from collegiate to adversarial. With collective bargaining, the single room RAs receive, as well as other benefits and stipends would be completely open to negotiation with no protections.

Cristal Cruz, a sophomore Journalism student and RA asked what protections exist under the current relationship between the RAs and Housing.

"It is mutually beneficial for us to offer that to our staff," Michael Gilbert, Director of Housing answered. "The Housing system and Residence Life is a strong program, but it is not a perfect one."

Chris Fierro, a Social Thought and Political Economy senior invited the Chancellor and the other administrators to a "public debate" this Sunday in the Campus Center.

The administrators declined to promise their attendance, which angered some in attendance.

"We tried talking to you before, why should we believe you will listen to it now?" Dave Synnott, a junior Arts and Sciences student and RA asked.

Students also raised concerns that the administration was telling RAs reasons not to vote for the union at mandatory staff meetings.

"This is a campaign. The union has every right to do what ever they can to get their message out," Cevallos said. "We have every right to do whatever is necessary to get our message out."

One Residence Director rose and said she didn't feel right telling her RAs how to vote.

"I know I have a lot of influence over my RAs," she said. "I tell them to make your best decision for yourselves."

Synnott claimed the University had spent "hundreds of thousands of dollars" in legal fees fighting the union movement.

Cevallos laughed at this, saying he wished he had the money to spend.

"We have not spent a penny from the Housing budget on lawyers," Cevallos said. "The University has lawyers of its own."

United Auto Workers Local 2322 is helping organize the unionization effort. Chapter President James Shaw said that despite what was being said by the administration, the union sentiment is strong.

"I think that what I heard tonight came most loudly and most clearly from the RAs themselves. There are promises being made and threats being made and nobody's falling for them," Shaw said. "People are saying 'hey we want a union, it's our choice to have a union,' it was the University that tried to block the RAs from having that choice with the legal case they presented. The RAs are going to make that choice and it's very clear to me tonight that they are resolute, they're strong, they're gonna make that decision and make the good decision in favor of the union."

The unionization vote will take place on March 5, in Campus Center room 1001. If ratified it will be the first undergraduate union in the nation.

VICE CHANCELLOR FOR STUDENT AFFAIRS JAVIER CEVALLOS LOOKS ON, AS SENIOR CHRIS FIERRO HANDS INTERIM CHANCELLOR MARCELETTE WILLIAMS AN INVITATION TO A DEBATE.

Alcohol arrests, vandalism keep police busy

By Melissa Hammel
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Police Department dealt with a myriad of issues this week ranging from a number of incidents of vandalism to vehicles to burglaries and arrests.

Police arrested 20-year-old David McCann of Sandwich when they arrived to his Patterson Dormitory room at approximately 10:45 p.m. on Wednesday night to find him playing a loud stereo with ten other people in the room. He was arrested on charges of disturbing the peace, possession of liquor by someone that is under the age of 21 and possession of a class D substance.

The police also received a call on the same day from Cooley Dickinson hospital at 3:45 p.m. informing them that an individual had been stabbed on campus in Coolidge Dormitory. The area check was clear and police took down written statements.

A liquor law violation in Kennedy Dormitory came to the attention of the police when there was a report of a round robin on the 9th floor involving 100 to 150 people. The resident assistant in charge told police that she tried to approach the group to disperse them but that she had no positive results. Subjects fled the building when they heard that the police were notified and Emergency Housing fixed the broken doors on both sides of the building.

A series of vandalisms occurred on Saturday in parking lot 44 north of the Sylvan Dormitories when police found that four vehicles parked in the lot had extensive damage done to them.

The first car was found with a smashed passenger's side rear vent window and a missing stereo, the second with a smashed rear window, the third with a smashed passenger's front window and a tampered with stereo and in the final car the stereo was stolen and the back door was damaged.

The officer on the scene checked the rest of the parking lot and found there to be no other damaged vehicles and lot 27 nearby was also checked and there were no damaged vehicles found.

A similar incident occurred in lot 22 west of University Drive on Sunday at 12:52 p.m. when officers reported that a vehicle was discovered with a smashed front window and a missing stereo. The owner of the vehicle was notified of the damage.

One minute later, police received an unrelated call regarding a car with a smashed window in lot 52 in Southwest Circle. Police verified the damage, which was suspected to have occurred the night before, and placed a no-tow sign upon the vehicle.

Police received a call on Wednesday night reporting a burglary in lot 11 north of Alumni Stadium at approximately 1:30 p.m. The officer on the scene reported that the side door of the vehicle had been tampered with and the radio was missing. Another car also in that lot was discovered with a hole in the windshield that caused it to splinter. Within the same hour police also discovered a vehicle with a broken passenger side window in lot 22.

It is unknown as to whether or not these cases of vandalism and breaking and entering are connected.

DORAN GOTT/COLLEGIAN

Bloody buddy

SIGMA PHI EPSILON COMMUNITY SERVICE CHAIRMAN ERIC GOLDSTEIN DONATES BLOOD.

Senate debate over elections continues

By Kristin Shrewsbury
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Round two will begin tonight as the Student Government Association's Senate battle over who will be this year's Chancellor of Elections.

Last Wednesday Senators fought, debated and were thrown out over the possible appointment of either former Senators Michael Ames or Linson Saval to the position of the Chancellor of Elections. Senators brought up issues surrounding each candidate's electoral experience, as well as association with the Senate.

Fingers were pointed as Senators debated over the motives behind each of the appointed candidates. Senators further questioned the issue that the agenda was rearranged to put Naval onto the agenda as being appointed the Chancellor of Elections, instead of the previously stated appointment as an elections commissioner.

"I just find it funny, that no one has stepped up to appoint a Chancellor of Elections yet," Mike Tautpher, chair of Ways and Means said. "Considering it was supposed to have been done three months ago. Why did the members of the Senate and the Executive cabinet try and sneak in another candidate?"

A different residential area appoints the position of the Chancellor of Elections each year and this year's appointment lies on the recommendation of Southwest Governor Josh Seidman. Seidman appointed Ames initially, but the Senate voted against his recommendation, thus causing much debate and the possibility that Ames may be on the agenda again tonight.

Members of the Senate explained that due to last week's events they hoped that tonight's Senate meeting would go more smoothly.

"I think that tonight should go fine, and we couldn't really have stopped what happened last week," Speaker Aaron Saunders said. "We have too many things to do in the Senate than to worry about one person ruining it."

Senators however expressed that they felt tonight's meeting would be just the beginning for another night of lengthy discussion over the appointment of the Chancellor of Elections.

"I'm not really sure what is going to happen, I've heard rumors about if Linson still wants to be the Chancellor of Elections, or if he can," Tautpher said. "The decision of who will be the Chancellor of Elections as stated clearly in the By-Laws is up to Josh Seidman. We as a Senate still have a lot of things to work out, and hopefully by the end of the night well have a chancellor, but I think there is a lot of discussions that still needs to happen."

Other motions on the agenda are the kick-off for a SGA petition that will be spearheaded by the Senate. The petition is in direct correlation with the Fair Share Act, which was passed by the Senate two weeks ago. The motion requested the administration to take a five percent reduction in their pay for the following fiscal year. The administration has 20 days to respond to the Senate on their decision, and they have yet to respond at this time.

"Everyone needs to take their piece, and everyone has been hit in a different way," Saunders said. "We're not trying to point fingers, but in order to ensure a sense of community and to have everyone on the same level a cut is in order. But it's hard to make this happen when I see the administration immune from the cuts."

Saunders further explained that the petition is asking for student and faculty signatures in support of the Fair Share Act motion passed by the Senate. The petition will begin today and go through spring break.

Issues surrounding the recent budget cuts will be readdressed again, and more specifically focused on the recent removal of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst Escort Service.

"We met with members of the administration and members of University Transportation and because the Escort Service has been eliminated the University has decided to extend the PVTA's nightly running time until 2:30 a.m.," Saunders said. "Our main concern however is to let students know what is happening and what will be available to them for the rest of the semester."

Senators will also be continuing to appoint members to the elections commission as well as discussing further motions to be presented by the Senate. Tonight's meeting is at 7:15 p.m. in room 168C of the Campus Center basement.

DIVERSITY CALENDAR

FILMS

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A screening of the film Lumumba will take place in room 101 of Mount Holyoke's Dwight Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 27 at 4:00 p.m. See "LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS" for information about an appearance by the film's director, Raoul Peck, later that day.

UMASS – The film The Cremation Lies will be broadcast in the New Africa House's Augusta Savage Gallery on Wednesday, Feb. 27 at 7:00 p.m. The film explores the roots and legacy of the Cold War on the Chinese American community during the 1950s and 1960s.

UMASS – The film Here's Your Army will be broadcast in room 227 of Herter Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 27 at 7:30 p.m. The movie, co-funded by South Park creators Trey Stone and Matt Parker, is a musical of the two-eyed, two-dish-of-disabilities on a road trip across America. UMass alumnus P.H. O'Brien, the film's cinematography will be on hand for audio-cussion.

EASTHAMPTON – Free School Films will present Spike Lee's film Malcolm X on Thursday, Feb. 28 at 7:00 p.m. in the Eastworks Arts Collective in Easthampton. Call 527-4800 for directions. This event is a benefit for the Prison Book Project, a collective who send books to prisoners nationwide.

AMHERST – The film Harlan will be played at an Amherst College's Stirn Auditorium on Monday, March 4 at 7:00 p.m. The screening of this film, about a single mother who works as an exotic dancer, is a multicultural open forum and expresses herself only through dance, as part of the Mondays Your Film Film Series. This program is being done in conjunction with the exhibition "Casa Manana: The Mexico Collection of Mexican Popular Arts" on view at the Mead Art Museum until April 21. The event is free.

UMASS – Stanley Magic, a film about stereotypic Chinese photographer assistant to Inspector P.T. Barnum, changes his efforts to debut silent movies in Imperial Peking, will be screened in room 227 of Herter Hall on Wednesday, March 5, at 7:30 p.m. This event is free.

PERFORMANCES

UMASS – The New England premiere of Slanguage, a fusion of poetry, theater, jazz, Hip-Hop, politics, down home blues, and Spanish boleros, will take place on Wednesday, Feb. 27, and Thursday, Feb. 28, at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

UMASS – The Children of Uganda Chorus will perform in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 27, at 7:30 p.m. The group is composed of 18 orphans, ages six to seventeen, who serve as ambassadors for the 1.4 million other AIDS and war related orphans living in Uganda. Tickets are $5, $7, and $10 for Five College students, $30, $25, and $15 for general admission, and $10 for under 17.

SMITH – Paula Vogel's play Hot 'N Throbbing will be performed in the Mendenhall Theater Center's Hallie Flanagan Theater on Thursday, Feb. 28, Friday, March 1, and Saturday, March 2, at 8:00 p.m. The play will also be performed at 8:00 each night from Wednesday, March 6, through Saturday, March 9. The play deals with the themes of sexuality and violence and the boundaries imposed by society as well as those we impose on ourselves. Tickets are $7 for general admission, $4 for students. Call 585-3213 for tickets.

UMASS – A Night of Spoken World, featuring Regie Gibson and the Jeff Robinson Trio, will be held on Friday, March 1, in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union from 7:30 p.m. to midnight. This event is free, and will feature an open mic for student poets, and an open "poetry slam."

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Openly lesbian comedian Lea DeLaria will perform in Mount Holyoke's Rooke Theater on Friday, March 1, at 8:30 p.m. Seating is limited and tickets are available on a first-come, first-serve basis. There is a limit of two tickets per person. For reservations, call 538-3406 and leave your name and number.

SMITH – A Women's Choral Festival will be held at Smith College's Sweeney Hall on Saturday, March 2, at 7:00 p.m. Six choral groups comprised of high school and college students from around the state will present selections from their repertoires, then combine to present the premiere of Clifton L. Noble Jr.'s Gabriel's Trumpet. This event is free.

UMASS – Jeffrey Solomon will perform his one-man show, "Santa Claus is Coming Out" on Saturday, March 2, at 8:00 in Bowker Auditorium. The show is a comic documentary spoof about the world's hysterical reaction when it is revealed that Santa Claus is gay. Price of admission ranges from $7 to $5. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

AMHERST – Urban Bush Women will perform Hairstories on Tuesday, March 5, and Wednesday, March 6, at 8:00 p.m. in Kirby Theater. Tickets are $20 for general admission, $5 for students. Call 545-2511 or 1-800-9887 UMAS for reservations.

RELIGIOUS

UMASS – Jay Sands will perform African Shabbat Services on Friday, March 1, at 6:00 p.m. in Hillel House. The event will include African songs and stories, as well as dinner, to be served at 7:15. The dinner is free to students not on a meal plan. See "LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS" for information about a lecture being delivered later in the day by Sands, about the experiences of African Jews.

GATHERINGS/PARTIES

UMASS – Hillel House will be sponsoring a Jewish Seniors [Class of 2002] Progressive Dinner on Thursday, Feb. 28. All senior students interested should meet at 6:30 p.m. at Hillel House.

UMASS – The Jewish Graduate Group will be hosting a dinner at Joe's Restaurant on Thursday, Feb. 28, starting at 7:00 p.m. Interested students should meet at 53 Market Street, Northampton, and bring cash.

UMASS – The South Asian Student Association will present Mehndi Night on Friday, March 1, in room 168C of the Campus Center, beginning at 6:00 p.m. The event will feature live music and performances, and is free.

DANCES

UMASS – Latin Fire, an evening of Latin dancing, will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium on Thursday, Feb. 28. A salsa lesson will be given from 7:00 to 8:30 p.m., and general dancing will take place from 8:30 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. Tickets are $5 for students, $8 for the general public. Refreshments will be served.

UMASS – Hadadah, Latin, and Israeli dancing will be held in the Campus Center [room to be announced] on Saturday, March 2, at 7:30 p.m. This event is free.

VIGILS

UMASS – A Malcolm X/Martin Luther King, Jr. vigil will be held in Malcolm X Cultural Center on Thursday, Feb. 28, at 7:00 p.m. Food will be served.

COMMUNITY SERVICE OPPORTUNITIES

UMASS – Jezdek Hillel will be sponsoring Fun With Children at Shmier's Hospital in Springfield on Sunday, March 3. If interested, meet at Hillel House at 1:30 p.m.

LECTURES/DISCUSSION

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Raoul Peck, director of the film Lumumba, will speak about the making of the film on Wednesday, Feb. 27 at 7:30 p.m. in Mount Holyoke's Gamble Auditorium. See "FILMS" more information about a screening of the film earlier that day.

AMHERST – Eddie S. Glaude Jr. will deliver a lecture, "What is the State of Black America?" in Amherst College's Converse Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 27, at 8:00 p.m. This event is sponsored by Amherst College's Black Student Union.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – University of Cincinati Professor Roger Daniels will deliver a lecture, "The Incarceration of the Japanese Americans: The View from 2002," in Clapp Hall's Hooker Auditorium on Thursday, Feb. 28, at 4:30 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Alison Hayford, Five College Women's Studies Research Associate from University of Regina in Canada, will deliver a lecture, "Teaching in the Interidal Zone: Ecology of Distance and Difference in Women's Studies," on Thursday, Feb. 28 at 7:30 p.m. in the Five College Women's Studies Research Center. The Center is located at 83 College Street, South Hadley.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Catherine Collins, Director of Health Education at Wellesley College, will present a lecture, "Images of Women," on Thursday, Feb. 28, at 7:30 p.m. in room 101 of Dwight Hall. The lecture features a slide show depicting standards of beauty throughout history, and will include a discussion on how these standards affect the lives of women today.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Colgate University Professor Michael Johnston will deliver a lecture, "Moscow is Not Chicago, and Georgia is Not Georgia: Distinctive Aspects of Corruption in the Former Soviet Union," on Thursday, Feb. 28 in the Executive Board Room of the Willits Hallowell Center at 7:30 p.m.

UMASS – Jay Sands will deliver a lecture on the experiences of Jews in African nations on Friday, March 1, in Hillel House. See "RELIGIOUS" for information about African Shabbat Services being held earlier in the day.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A teach-in promoting the visibility of Asian-American Studies will be held at Mount Holyoke's Skinner Hall on Saturday, March 2, starting at 9:00 a.m. The teach-in, titled, "Past, Present, and Future: Continuing the Evolution and Struggle for Asian-American Studies," will cost $5 for Mount Holyoke students, $10 for other students, and $15 for general admission. Register by sending an email to ulim@mtholyoke.edu, with the subject title: AsAm Teach In.

AMHERST – "Coeducation at 25: Celebrating Accomplishments and Envisioning the Future" will be held in Amherst College's Johnson Chapel on Saturday, March 2, at 8:00 p.m. At the event, Harvard University Law Professor Lani Guinier will deliver a lecture, "Rethinking Gender and Power: Building Diverse Learning Communities."

SMITH – Bettina Musiolek, Five College Women's Studies Research Center Associate, will deliver a lecture, "Globalization, Women's Work and Corporate Responsibility" on Monday, March 4, at 12:00 p.m. in the Kahn Colloquium Room of Nielson Library. Musiolek will speak on globalization, using the garment industry in central and southeast Europe as a case study.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – UMass Professor Alice Nash will deliver a lecture, "Wabanaki Women and Interribal Warfare: Captivity Stories from Long Ago" at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Monday, March 4, at 4:30 p.m. The Center is located at 83 College Street, South Hadley.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Rabbi Donna Berman will deliver a lecture, "Planting a Sapling, Waiting for the Messiah: Judaism in the Environment," at Mount Holyoke's Eliot House Lounge on Tuesday, March 5, at 12:00 p.m. RSVP required, call 538-2054 by Friday, March 1.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. This paper was founded in 1890 as the Index, became the Collegian Year in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and then the Daily Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has a circulation of approximately [illegible]. For display ad rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 or fax us at 545-1592.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Ellen Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT IN THE CENTER OF TOWN•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2002

Changing Jobs or Retiring?
Call A.G. Edwards for alternatives on how you can receive and manage your distribution from your company's retirement plan.
91 Main St
Greenfield, MA
800-445-3685
Michelle Spaziani
A.G. Edwards
INVESTMENTS SINCE 1887

YOU COULD WIN A WEEK IN CANCUN
Grand Prize: Club Med Trip for Two
First Prize: Coca-Cola CD Players (1 per campus)
Visit a participating campus retail outlet for Entry Forms and Official Rules.

Live Music
McMurphy's welcomes
THE GUITAR DUDES
every wednesday
NO COVER
positive ID required

New WORLD Theater
Save The Date!
April 12-13, 2002
INTERSECTION
FUTURE AESTHETICS
A two-day gathering exploring the intersection of theater, poetry, spoken word, and Hip Hop culture
• Performances • Art • Conference Workshops • Dialogue & Insight
For conference information and registration call 413-545-1972 or visit our website at www.newworldtheater.org
Emily Chang Was B... With a Tong...er
Seko S. aouta
Made possible by funding from the Rockefeller Foundation, the Ford Foundation and the National Performance Network

THE AIR FORCE WANTS BOTH YOU AND YOUR NURSING CAREER TO GO PLACES.
Nursing in the Air Force: exciting, rewarding, the best. Best facilities, best benefits. Travel, training, advancement and 30 days of vacation with pay, plus you may qualify for a $5,000 bonus. If you're a registered nurse, Air Force Nursing offers the best of everything.
To request additional information, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit airforce.com
U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Hospitals built by coalition forces serve thousands in Afghanistan

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Operation Enduring Freedom is about more than just routing out terrorist cells and blowing up training camps, but also improving living conditions in Afghanistan, General Tommy Franks, commander in chief of Central Command said.

Franks delivered a briefing at Central Command's headquarters in Tampa Bay, Fla. on Feb. 25.

"We've talked many times about 26 million Afghans who in fact are in need of a great many things in this country. I remember several months ago, on an occasion where I was having a meeting with some anti-Taliban leaders inside Afghanistan that I asked them what could I do for them," Franks said. "And of course I had a suspicion that they were going to ask me for weapons and munitions and a variety of things. But three of them said that the greatest need was for medical assistance and the provision of medical services to their people inside Afghanistan. And each of them mentioned the fact that females for a number of years had not been able to get medical treatment inside Afghanistan."

Spanish Army Brigadier General Fernando Sanchez Lafuente spoke to reporters about what types of diseases were being treated and the way that the hospitals were set up.

"The main common diseases from the civilian people in Bagram are mainly, they need dental care," Lafuente said. "After that, a lot of diseases in relation with the cold weather: sore throat, bronchitis, staph, flu and so on, so forth – and a few cases of malaria. As you know, the malaria disappears from Europe, disappear from North America, most of South America. But yet in Afghanistan ... there are some minor cases of malaria, mainly in the children.

"The hospital provides the medical assistance in two different buildings: one for male and another one for female and children until they under 12 years old. So we are – as you know, Afghanistan, after 20 centuries in the same kind of life, it's very difficult to change a custom straightaway. We must try to change step by step in this case," Lafuente continued. "So this is a – in general terms, the Spanish hospital – there's 30, 31, 32 doctors, a nurse – with different specialties and 19 for professional support. If you need to know something that, please ask me, and I try to answer as soon as possible."

Lieutenant Colonel Yousef Al-Hnaity from the Royal Jordanian Air Force explained his country's contribution to Operation Enduring Freedom. Jordan has set up a hospital with 50 beds, four ambulances, a water purification system, and radiology, pharmaceutical, blood unit and casting departments.

"The field hospital deployed to Mazar-e Sharif, in terms with the staff members, has around 200, which consists 27 doctors, 45 nurses and 45 medics, have expertise in a variety of fields. The hospital staff is capable of performing major and minor surgeries," Al-Hnaity said. "The hospital treated over 18,000 patients – and as you can see, more than 12,000 of them were women and children; and as you can see in the picture, this is a child, Afghani child being treated in the hospital with his father – and performed over 230 surgical operations since it was opened in February – sorry, in 8th January, 2002."

On the Net: U.S. Central Command: http://www.centcom.mil

A look at different types of greek life

By Davina Harris
THE WESLEYAN ARGUS (WESLEYAN U.)

(U-WIRE) MIDDLETOWN, Conn. – Wesleyan University fraternities are an increasingly visible, political and controversial aspect of the University community.

There are varying personal and individual conceptions of these institutions, including the extent to which they monopolize social activities, the rate at which they may or may not impose heterosexist ideologies and whether or not they provide an inclusive social outlet for all members of the community.

However, when comparing campus institutions to fraternities at Franklin & Marshall College, Arizona State University and Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, where 70 percent, 50 percent and 33 percent, respectively, of the student body is involved in the greek system, it is evident their fraternities play a more dominant role in shaping campus social activities, alienating members of the community and maintaining social hierarchies than do fraternities at Wesleyan.

"Frats around the world, especially in the United States, are much different than at Wesleyan," said Dave Whiting '04, a DKE member. "At Wes, they're a lot less intense, especially initiation-wise. If you want to join a frat here, you can. At other schools it's a popularity contest – you have to be a certain type of person just to join. I don't think I would join a frat at another university."

In cases where the majority of the student body is involved in the greek system, there are limited social outlets for those who reject or are excluded from the frat atmosphere.

At Franklin & Marshall, where 70 percent of the student body belongs to a fraternity or sorority, trying to enter a party without chapter recognition can be nearly impossible.

At ASU, where 50 percent of the student body is a member of a greek organization, many fraternities practice 100 percent bidding (if any brother opposes a particular pledge, he is automatically excluded from joining the fraternity). The result is an exclusive paradox that only allows men to gain access to the mainstream social scene by joining a fraternity while also forcing them to succumb to impossible standards for inclusion.

When asked whether or not his fraternity, Phi Kappa Phi, ever has had a gay member, ASU student Michael Robertson '03 responded, "Hell no. It wouldn't be tolerated."

Similarly, while Wesleyan transfer student Andy Zelmanowitz '04 explained fraternities do not discriminate directly against homosexuals, the frat atmosphere is not at all supportive of homosexuality.

"Second semester, frosh pledge. You go through four months of hazing, and the entire time they're calling you gay. It's pretty humiliating to go through that process, and there's no room for homosexuality. They're weeded out," Zelmanowitz said.

Of the three schools, RPI appears to have the most inclusive social atmosphere. There are a number of bars around campus, which offer an alternative to the fraternity scene.

Chad Singer '02, a member of Phi Gamma Delta at RPI, said most of the fraternities on his campus are heterogeneous and rarely selective about who can attend a party.

In contrast to many schools, Wesleyan offers diverse and unique opportunities for students who are interested in participating in greek life. Psi U, Beta and DKE are representative of more traditional fraternities, while Eclectic and Alpha Delta Phi provide a co-ed option. Chi Psi, which lost its house this year but will regain it in the fall, is an all-male fraternity that offers a co-ed living space.

The resulting greek life is available for those who want it but also eliminates the need to join a frat to enjoy social activities.

"Eclectic prides themselves on being the house that has free space for any group. They're very concerned with incorporating the entire campus into their house. They like to think of being a place where anyone who feels excluded would feel included," said Kevin Cornish '03, a current member of Eclectic.

Hanna Ingber '03 also had a particularly positive experience living in Chi Psi last year. She described how the 15 guys and 12 girls in the house formed a cohesive bond over the year, out of which grew a family-style living space.

"I think that arrogant, ignorant, bigoted, racist, homophobic people are bad. I don't think that the Chi Psi brothers fit into any of those categories," Ingber said.

"The frat situation here is better because you don't have to join," Zelmanowitz said. "There are a number of other social outlets, including house parties, the bars, secret societies, etc. for individuals who reject the greek system."

Members of Eclectic and Chi Psi said both organizations are receptive to gay members of the community, fighting against the vilification of homosexuals by the greek system at many other universities.

"Chi Psi brothers are remarkably open about their sexuality. They definitely love each other," Ingber said.

Although Beta has clashed with Queer Alliance over chalkings in front of the house, they continually resist being categorized as homophobic.

"I don't know if any of my brothers in Beta are gay. I don't think so. But if one of them came out of the closet it wouldn't be a big deal," Kagan said.

University frats also differ from the national norm due to their less domineering social presence.

"It's just a place for people to go and have friends," Cornish said.

Similarly, when asked whether living in Beta was a positive experience, Dan Moger '05 responded, "It's great. I have friends to go to dinner with."

Many students feel the University's progressive and somewhat radical representation of the greek system is the most conducive to a healthy social atmosphere.

"I don't really find the frats here that threatening," said Ross Middleton '04. "Fraternities as an institution definitely need reform. You think about fraternities, you think about hostility towards women. When I go to DKE I don't feel uncomfortable, even though I'm gay, but I'd never go to a fraternity at another school."

Even though many students agree greek life on campus is a large improvement from that at other universities, some argued for further alterations. Some students are not necessarily opposed to fraternities' presence on campus but feel frats become controversial when they impose negative ideologies on other members of the community or openly discriminate against a particular group of people.

Artistic reflection
COMMUNITY ARTISTS EXPRESS THEIR FEELINGS ON TERROR, RACISM, WAR AND POWER IN THE TOP OF CAMPUS CENTER.

Pretty prose
SHORT CUTS IS ON SALE IN THE BARTLETT FOYER.

BUSTA RHYMES
WITH SPECIAL GUEST
SUNDAY, MARCH 10, 2002
JOHN M. GREENE HALL, SMITH COLLEGE
8 P.M.
DOORS OPEN AT 7 P.M.
TICKETS ON SALE FRIDAY, FEB. 22ND
GENERAL PUBLIC, $22, AT:
FOR THE RECORD
NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE
TICKETMASTER
5-COLLEGE W/ VALID ID, $18, AT:
UMASS, TICKETS UNLIMITED
AMHERST COLLEGE CAMPUS CENTER, RM. 103
MT. HOLYOKE BLANCHARD CAMPUS CENTER, INFO. DESK
GENESIS – THE TOUR
PRESENTED BY SMITH COLLEGE REC COUNCIL

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM "WRITING WITH CONVICTION, BUT NOT WITH CONVICTIONS" ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Church needs to handle accusations individually

Reports of sexual molestation within the Roman Catholic Church, particularly in Boston of recent, have been rampant. Beyond the obvious public horror that these situations even occurred is the equal outrage that this type of abuse has been going on in parishes for over 30 years.

Stories of abuse shared through generations of fathers and sons have popped up in the media as these cases often go unreported or, even worse, are largely ignored by Archdioceses of Boston.

According to information from the Boston Globe, allegations of abuse were often settled quietly out of the public eye, usually through a financial settlement, with the accused priests remaining in their positions and usually simply being placed on sick leave. Some other priests, such as Reverend Paul J Mahan of Dorchester, were sent to psychologists for treatment, many of whom only came back to the parish to continue sexually abusing parishioners.

However, this pattern seems to have changed recently. Since the Catholic Church has received heat for covering up sexual scandals of recent, they have now begun to excommunicate priests simply upon allegations of sexual abuse.

Priests are not infallible; they are human beings in positions that have a great deal of trust associated with them making the discovery of crimes such as this all the more horrible.

However, when one priest breaks this trust all of them begin to be under suspicion, right or wrong, for the same type of crimes and without a system that deals with issues like these, innocent men could be removed from their livelihood for crimes they did not commit while guilty men have, in the past, remained a dangerous fixture in many parishes and communities due to the lack of a fair system of dealing with these issues.

Now because the Catholic Church does not have a set standard for dealing with allegations of sexual abuse beyond interviewing the priest accused of the crime, there has been a vast difference between the way that these types of allegations have been dealt with.

The only way for members of a religious community to feel safe and comfortable with their religious leaders is for there to be regular supervision from the Archdiocese for all priests. Similar to other occupations, there needs to be regular supervision, including a regular dialogue with parishioners about the job that their priest is doing within their church.

When issues of sexual abuse do come up, the Church needs to be ready to address them rather than either sweep them under the rug or simply excommunicate priests embroiled in these sorts of issues. Without a democratic process these issues will never be fully addressed and this type of behavior will never really be dealt with.

Information from the Boston Globe was used in this story.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian

Five quick misses on the Catholic Church

SAM WILKINSON

Next year at this time, Bernard Law should be sitting in a Massachusetts prison. There, while avoiding the retribution from fellow prisoners that he so rightly deserves for his protection of pederasts, Law should think about how he went from the Archdiocese of Boston to a small room without windows.

But that will never happen.

Perhaps the most damning aspect of John Geoghan's conviction last week is not the hundred or more molestations attributed to him, but instead the reckoning that his superiors will escape. Formerly a priest, Geoghan was convicted last week on charges of molestation and will spend the next ten years in prison.

He will sit in the same room that Law will escape. As a Catholic Cardinal in the archdiocese of Boston, Law knew of Geoghan's criminality long before the defrocked priest ever stood accused of his crimes in a court of law. Rather than turning Geoghan over to Massachusetts' authorities, Law protected his own as if a child molester could be anybody's "own." Law had been hearing about Geoghan's disgusting behavior for years and instead of confronting him, he shunted him from parish to parish, hoping that a change in venue would prevent the molestations.

It did not.

More than one hundred such incidents later, somebody snapped. No more reports to Law about Geoghan's misbehavior – the Cardinal and Archdiocese clearly didn't care – instead taking complaints to Massachusetts state authorities.

Geoghan was arrested, charged, and, last week, convicted. Law still walks the street and likely will continue to.

Massachusetts has checked out.

Recently – Reverend D. George Spagnolia declared his innocence before his parishioners. He had been accused 31 years before of molesting a boy in Roxbury. The Archdiocese did nothing with the accusation until last week, suspending Spagnolia. Thirty-one years passed before Law found this accusation to be important enough to deal with.

Thirty-one years.

Spagnolia said that he would take the case all the way to Rome to prove his innocence. Unfortunately, and this is something that the ignorant Catholic Church seems unable and unwilling to understand, the courts of these United States take precedence over the Church's own courts.

There are two serious problems here.

One is the Catholic's Church insistence that it be free to settle such matters internally. As if the Catholic Church has ever known justice – "From the Crusades to the Holocaust. We've Made a Habit of Really Blowing It" – now it wants to keep its pedophilic priests internal, so that they might be dealt with in a quiet fashion that won't embarrass Rome. This wouldn't be fine even if Catholic Church's idea of justice didn't amount to sending the abuser onto the next parish. The Church cannot police itself because it will not police itself. Given the opportunity, the Catholic Church will brush the flagrant indiscretions of its clergy under the rug and hope that nobody ever cleans.

The second is the state of Massachusetts apparent willingness to let such internality continue. Rather than punish Cardinal Law, the state seems willing to let him take care of the problem himself. He has known about allegations for years and, literally, decades, and did nothing to protect the children of his archdiocese. It is clear that the Church is totally unable to police itself so it is time for the state of Massachusetts to do it for them.

When Jesse Ventura mouthed Marx's belief that religion was a crutch of the people, he was wrong. There was outcry because he dared to suggest that people's attachment to religion was based on personal weakness. But in this case, the church could be described as a willing blinder of the people. It has misled its parishioners because the Catholic Church does not want you or me or anybody else to know about the mistakes that it has made. It does not want to face the truth of its clergy's abuses.

The state of Massachusetts concurs.

Politicians in this state are totally unwilling to criticize that which underpins most of this state's local communities. Like the Kennedy's, like the racially disparate neighborhoods, the Catholic Church is an untouchable, beyond reproach and critique. But letting it do as it pleases hurts communities, hurts families and most horrifically, it hurts children.

Children should be free of the political and religious wrangling of a state, but those children have been swept under the rug because they are the forgotten victims. Politicians are more willing to protect the interests of an abusive institution than the interests of that institution's victims.

This cannot continue. Where abuse is found, the state must deal with it. Where abuse is found, the state must rout it out.

It should start with Bernard Law, but it likely won't.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

ED/OP: WHEN YOU'VE GOT SOMETHING TO WRITE ABOUT, SEND IT TO US, EH?

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM

Firing the maids

BILL LARKIN

Modern Americans live in a throwaway culture whose every product in the amenities it drains. Take my room, for example.

On it, dresser has two bottles of cologne, a bottle of hair gel, a bottle of earring cleanser, a stick of deodorant, a squeeze tube of mouthwash and a spray can of shoe treatment. In the bathroom, the wall adjacent to my shower holds bottles of shampoo, conditioner, shaving cream, two types of body wash, a mechanical and electric razor (extra blades, mouthwash, toothpaste and an electric toothbrush. My desk houses a coffeepot, printer, two clocks, a typewriter, laptop, telephone, fax machine, lamp, speakers, subwoofer and receiver.

None of these items will last longer in my apartment than I. I refresh the tabletop of my dresser every month, and refill my bathroom every two weeks. Some of the more permanent fixtures on my desk, such as my printer, or telephone, will also be replaced, as they lose their allure in the face of more appealing innovations.

I don't pity my bottle of Christian Dior's Fahrenheit. It has no feelings, no soul; when it dies, I don't mourn – I always smell nice. Yet, that is part of the problem. Plastics lack our propensity for degradation. They don't synergize with the dirt and fade to energy. They sit, and curse us for abandoning them, a toxic, scorned lover venting her vengeance.

Oh so we think. Maybe. I'm not even sure the majority of us care about that which we dispose of. We don't care about casualties of war, and we don't care how the clothes on our backs are made, so why would we pause – for even three seconds – to think about the things we leave behind. Those who do are condemned by popular culture, relegated to the respect reserved for crackpots, dropouts and the disturbed.

I might be happy if everyone thought as I described above. We would be misled, but at least it might be a beginning. A progression, of sorts, towards the realization that we outsource for the materials used to create our imports, then dump the by-products and bastard children left by their death in the same lands we pillaged for their production.

An example? According to the New York Times, a committee of five environmental groups will release a study next week, saying, "The global export of electronics waste, including consumer devices, computer monitors and circuit boards, is creating environmental and health problems in the third world." The report says that 50 to 80 percent of America's electronic waste is recycled not in the United States, but in China, India, Pakistan, or other developing countries.

After enduring a tough ride overseas, the waste gets recycled or reused under "largely unregulated conditions." The report says, plastics get salvaged and circuit boards are smelted to extract valuable materials by workers ignorant of the threats posed by such processes. As tons of lead pounds are allowed to seep into the earth, operators face the "open burning of plastics and wires, riverbank acid works to extract gold, the melting and burning of soldered circuit boards, and the cracking and dumping of cathode ray tubes."

There are no regulations to protect these workers. In China, printer dismantlers open cartridges without protective clothing, and scoop toner – toxic if inhaled – into buckets with their bare hands. But the workforce is not the only victim harmed by the waste. A water sample taken near a site where circuit boards are processed reflected toxicity levels 190 times greater than those recommended by the World Health Organization.

As with the Kyoto accords, the United States doesn't care much about the threat of e-waste. America is the only developed nation to sign the Basel agreement, forged in a 1989 United Nations convention intended to limit the export of hazardous waste. If it's costly or harmful, we like to get rid of it. Send it overseas; other nations don't matter. Hey, the other nations profit too, right? After all, American recycling companies have to pay the merchants in Karachi to take our computers and label makers. But remember, there are many hens in the henhouse.

This is not pseudoscience. These are not Chomsky's controversial language theories or educated guesses at the ills of global warming. Instead of using the East as a project backyard, America should mandate corporate responsibility on electronics manufacturers, as well as other industries whose products must be processed. But the businesses should not have to bear this financial burden alone. A two percent environmental management tax on such goods, split equally by consumers and producers, would fund a governmental agency dedicated to keeping refuse where it is created, engineering new disposal techniques, and ensuring safety standards for disposal operators. But that represents a move toward bigger government, and the corporations don't like that. They like to be able to dump wherever they want, and let someone else wipe it up.

Information from the New York Times was used in this column.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian columnist, who lost terribly to Sarah and Ryan.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.27.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

flicks &'40 oz's

By Mike G.
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

A forty-ounce of malt liquor is an imposing challenge. It is a serious time investment. You have to possess a healthy measure of reckless abandon to dump all that cheap swill down your gullet before it gets warm. A film is also a serious time investment, and when the movie is incredibly hard to watch, it can be quite an imposing challenge.

Both are large and in charge, as opposed to the dinky beer can of TV. The forty-ounce and the rental film thus make a wonderful combination. You can gauge the length of the film by how much is left in the bottle, or you can gauge your drinking by how much is left in the movie. Here, for your enjoyment and enrichment, are reviews of three forty ounces and three rented films, and how they complimented each other.

The Ladies Man DVD
King Cobra Malt Liquor 40 oz.
Time: 7 p.m.

I hunkered down with my ice cold 40 of "The Budweiser of Malt Liquors," King Cobra, and prepared to laugh at Tim Meadows in The Ladies Man. I was a little taken aback at first by the new appearance of the King Cobra. The bottle has been reshaped, and the label now appears to be "snakeskin." Exotic! As soon as I took that first sip, though, I knew that the good people at Anheuser-Busch hadn't messed with their time-proven recipe for top-flight bottom shelf malt liquor. King Cobra is an old standby, one that can be counted on for taste and quality.

The Ladies Man is a very funny movie, probably the best film to come out of the SNL camp in quite a while. It is a perfect film to watch while drinking booze, whether it's a forty your clutching, or classy cognac like Leon Phelp's own fave: Courvoisier. The film is basically an endless series of cheesy pickup lines delivered in Leon's signature player drawl. One of my favorites in the film is: "Man, I'd like to take a bite out of your butt." I used this one once, and let me assure you, it works. This was a perfect drinking and watching experience, the forty was cold and tasty; the movie was funny and enjoyable. A perfect combo!

I had some sunflower seeds for dinner, with Wheatables on the side, and started to feel the funk.

Ratings:
The Ladies Man: 3 and half stars
King Cobra: 4 stars
Mike: Slightly Buzzed.

I now had some booze in me, so it was time. The big one:

The Cannonball Run VHS
St. Ides Malt Liquor 40 oz.
Time: 9 p.m.

Wow. I'm still reeling from this one, almost 24 hours later. The Cannonball Run is one of the most insane pieces of film ever produced. There is no way to aptly describe the feeling of uneasy fervor that ran through me while exposing myself to such insanity, with a godforsaken forty of St. Ides in my hand no less. There is a palm tree blowing in the breeze on the front of the St. Ides label. I guess the marketing wizards at the brewery think that this will conjure up images of paradise in the dirt-cheap drunkards who drink this crap. If St. Ides was all they served in bars in heaven, I would knock out St. Francis and go to hell.

Check out the cast of The Cannonball Run: Burt Reynolds (who is possibly the strangest man who ever walked this green earth), Dean Martin (who is characteristically drunk for the entire film), Roger Moore, Sammy Davis Jr., Terry Bradshaw, Dom DeLuise, Farrah Fawcett and Jackie Chan. Yeah, for real! And that's all I can remember, and I was pretty drunk by the end of the film. This was cataclysmic, combining the bottom of the barrel of malt liquor with the bottom of the barrel of late twentieth century culture.

Ratings:
The Cannonball Run: 2 Stars
St. Ides: 1 Star
Mike: Red Faced

After the Cannonball Run atrocity, my friends and I left to go to the Temple Of Hip Hop for a party. We returned at about 4 a.m., and I decided to keep the research going.

The Wizard VHS
Golden Anniversary Beer Forty Oz.
Time: 4 a.m.

I had a safety forty with the Golden Anniversary. Crappy beer, but good for 4 a.m. movie watching because it has less alcoholic content than that of the malt liquor. Now, The Wizard, this is a

Turn to 40 oz., page 8

COURTESY INTERNET MOVIE DATABASE

COURTESY INTERNET MOVIE DATABASE

COURTESY INTERNET MOVIE DATABASE

Dragonfly doesn't fly with critic

By Brett Buckalew
DAILY TROJAN (U. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – Right when the closing credits began to roll after an advanced screening of the supernatural drama Dragonfly, studio publicists rushed toward the auditorium's exit doors, the better to force upon every departing viewer a leaflet urging the following: "The filmmakers and Universal Pictures request your participation in not revealing any of the plot revelations that we feel are essential for the audience's full enjoyment."

Such a demand is not uncommon for films that have a climactic plot twist of who-is-Keyser Soze magnitude, but for one like Dragonfly, which blatantly foreshadows its conclusion in the first 10 minutes, the mum's-the-word plea for strategic audience silence is head-scratching, to say the least.

(UNIVERSAL PICTURES)

KEVIN COSTNER PONDERS YET ANOTHER ROLE THAT SHOULD DAMAGE HIS FLOUNDERING CAREER.

Perhaps more baffling is the notion of anyone experiencing "full enjoyment" while watching Dragonfly without having to resort to "Mystery Science Theater 3000"-style snide deconstruction.

Sniggering derisively is ultimately the only sane response to the soggy clichés ladled on by director Tom Shadyac and writers David Seltzer, Brandon Camp and Mike Thompson. This is the kind of movie where the friend of a bereaved widower wistfully remembers the man's relationship with his wife by observing, "she was the heart, you were the mind – together you were unbeatable," and says so with a straight face. Don't say you haven't been properly warned.

The widower in question is Joe Darrow (Kevin Costner), whose wife, Emily, has been killed in a bus crash while having to flee from the Third World site where she had served as a Red Cross pediatrician. (Apparently, the only way to gain audience sympathy for a deceased character is to make her a ridiculously altruistic saint.)

When Joe receives visitations by portent-carrying dragonflies (Emily had a birthmark in the shape of a dragonfly), and the shameless ploys of trotting out diseased kids for automatic pathos. The latter is a condescending cheat that Shadyac previously utilized for his Patch Adams, and to say that this film represents a new career low after that syrupy Robin Williams vehicle is quite something.

The emphatic nature of such a proclamation, though, is in keeping with a movie of sledgehammer overstatement, one that insists on spelling everything out for the audience in blindingly large print.

Thus, when Joe explains to a colleague that the dragonflies were Emily's "personal totem," he elaborates by saying that the American Indians once constructed these things called totem poles, where carved figures represented animal spirits, hawks and such. For anyone who missed that day in kindergarten, this is clearly essential background information.

In another scene, a friend tells a supposedly rehabilitated

Turn to DRAGONFLY, page 8

Maryland student rhymes

By Barry Schwartz
THE DIAMONDBACK (U. MARYLAND)

(U-WIRE) COLLEGE PARK, Md. – This is what you've been waiting for: death to the myth, an answer to your blazing query and the solution to the puzzle. Who is he? You all know who I'm talking about.

One of College Park, Md.'s, omnipresent characters, he is the city's closest possible equivalent to a rock star, seen nearly everywhere; from the entrance to The Diner to outside the Student Union to the kitchen of the local Chick-U.

Wearing a green bandana backwards around his shaven forehead, with a thick army fatigue coat covering his white T-shirt, Melvin Lee Jacobs, aka Lee Majors, 23, of East Baltimore, lurks in the shadows, stalking the sidewalks of our humble college town and the campus, blessing microphones at local hip-hop events like last September's Cipher Sessions, recording his debut album in the studios of WMUC, or simply launching into spontaneous philosophical conversations.

He's a suburban pseudo-prophet, if you will, just trying to make a profit.

He goes by many names, none of which he decided for himself: U-Pac, Chuck-U-Pac, 2Pac, 3Pac, all somehow appropriate monikers given his uncanny resemblance to the truest of thugs.

But whatever silly-billy freshmen and other students prefer to call Lee Majors behind his back, you can be sure he could care less. The same man who is seemingly just loitering around the campus, occasionally attending classes he has not enrolled in and frying your overpriced wings at Chuck-U, is the CEO of his own label, InnerVision Entertainment, and the author of a new self-produced hip-hop album, "Verse 4 Verse Volume 1.0."

An underground hip-hop album just shy of 80 minutes, "Verse 4 Verse" boasts introspective rhymes over elaborate, if not incredibly lo-fi, production. His Web site claims the album is "aimed to take the underground by storm," and that "Verse 4 Verse" "contains the 'no-holds-barred' underground feel missing from this bling-bling era of hip-hop." He adds, "If you want to feel the soul of a man poured out on wax, cop this upcoming release."

Every story has a beginning, so what brought Majors to College Park?

"I've been rapping ever since I was 14 years old, and I moved here when I was 16, around late '94 or early '95," he began.

"Growing up in the city always admiring music," said Majors, "and just watching the older cats on the corner rapping, it inspired me to find ways that I can express myself, to do different things with the actual creativity of music. I pursued writing as a way of doing something constructive, to allow me to express what I was feeling at the time."

Majors is a man focused on his goals, and he has a true grasp on how to attain them. His road through life has been filled with struggles. He grew up in the Douglass Home projects in Baltimore, but said he had to leave.

"I wasn't able to do the 'Verse 4 Verse' project living in Baltimore City," Majors said. "I wasn't able to focus on what it was that I really wanted to do staying in those neighborhoods. I needed to get somewhere where people were moving at a certain pace, a pace of working on their own success." A university seemed to be the most logical choice, a place where Majors could feed off the positive energy and apply it to his own life.

"When I came up here," explained Majors, "I was looking at the tools that the University had to offer. Since I had no money to actually attend school here, I started to educate myself. I go into classes and just take in the information they give me, taking notes, because teachers are paid to teach. I kind of educated myself the last seven or eight years, so technically, I would be a super-senior if I paid actual money to go here."

His label, InnerVision Entertainment, was launched in 1998 "as a record label with the goal of producing the type of provocative music that is sorely missing in today's mainstream." Under the guidance of Majors and his fellow workers, Innervision Entertainment has developed into a multimedia company acting as a one-stop marketing company.

In addition to music production and distribution, the label also specializes in graphic design for Web sites and fliers. It also promotes local urban-flavored events.

"We sponsored the Baby Boy account around here and the Mariah Carey account," Majors

Turn to RHYME page 8

Mindface's Debut

MINDFACE AT THE UNDERPASS IN ELMWOOD PARK, NJ

By Benjamin Pease
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

After three years on the tri-state area scene, Mindface's long-awaited debut studio album is here and it's here to stay. After wowing audiences with outlandish covers of classics like Baby Got Back and GnR's Welcome to the Jungle, their album has demonstrated the same ability to stretch the borders of their genre. In 11 songs, Mindface has shown that they are very deserving of being noticed by a much larger fan base.

Their self-titled debut is filled with eight upbeat improvisations that made us head bob without me even knowing it. The guitar work is outstanding and the piano feeds off of it. The beautiful thing about this album is that it seems to get better as you work your way down the play list. It takes you for a walk and when it's over, you want to get back on. Nice chill music.

Mindface has a formula for quality songs, but their youth is revealed by their inability to incorporate new sounds into their repertoire. The jungle beat intro to Day Moon fails miserably and the synthesizer solo in Lucifer's Hat sounds awful, although that may be attributed to my own personal bias of synthesizers in any song after 1984.

One of the biggest distinctions of Mindface is their lead singer, Steve Graham. My best comparison of him would be with someone like Ben Folds or a toned-down Ian MacKaye from Fugazi. He is the type of singer you either love or hate and depending on the song, I did both. The vocals in Beam and Beulah sounded detached and made the songs sound like cheesy bluegrass. Songs like We Are All We See and Second Time Around are truly inspired and show the potential that this band possesses. Fortunately for all of us, most of their album sounds like the latter of these.

Lyrics are not the focus of this album, but listening to them will show that these people are not just picking words out of a hat. With lines like "She's a menace to society, /But a chain gang lover's cup of tea" in Pen Pal, I could not help but share a quiet chuckle with my friends. Their use of metaphors like "I toss me through the sky /And I will dig beneath a cloud /And then scream aloud" in Beam paint as much of a picture as the music itself.

Mindface, despite the few criticisms, put out a great first album that also gives them something to improve on in the future. Check them out when they play the Amherst Brewing Co. March 16 and April 27.

California student expresses self with boards

By Justin Ruttkay
MUSTANG DAILY (CALIFORNIA POLY STATE U.)

(U-WIRE) SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. – Specks of dust billow out the sides of dusty hands as they put the final touches on what was once a square piece of foam. For a surfer, a surfboard is a vehicle of expression, but for the shaper, the board itself is his artwork.

While most architecture students are busy building models of houses, parks and towers, architecture senior Brandon Cover spends his spare time creating surfboards. The student surfer has been making surfboards for California Polytechnic State University students ever since he came to San Luis Obispo four years ago. B.C. Surfboards, the name of his board label, was born when Cover was a high school sophomore in Santa Barbara. He saw a piece of surfboard foam for sale in the newspaper, bought it and created his first hand-shaped surfboard.

"I didn't think I would have anything to lose buying the thing since it was only 20 bucks, and I had always wanted to mess around with shaping surfboards," Cover said.

Selling his first board set off the drive to want to shape more. Cover started by making long and short boards. Later he experimented with making "fun" shapes, which incorporate his own style into more non-traditional models.

Being a self-taught surfboard shaper was difficult at first, he said. He didn't have anyone to tell him what he was doing wrong. It wasn't until he got a job working at Central Coast Fiberglass that his skills improved at fast pace. Sanding and finishing all of the boards that people sent there allowed him to see how better shapers work. This gave him new ideas on how to improve his designs.

"I just started figuring out how to make really clean shapes that the rider of the board could respond well to on the wave," he said.

His local shaping career began with making all of the boards for his two roommates, who are also surfers at Cal Poly. Currently, he shapes three to five a month for anyone who is looking for a custom-made surfboard.

"His boards are sick," mechanical engineering senior Mike Starkey said. "They're the only boards I ride."

The amount of work that goes into shaping a surfboard is enormous, Cover said. He described it as an eight-step process in which the shaper tries to make the perfect form for a particular surfer.

"Each surfer has a different style and finding what type of board suits them best is a real challenge," he said.

Cover's specialty is shaping "mini-guns." These range from 6 feet 8 inches to 8 feet in length and are traditionally ridden in bigger and heavier waves, he said.

"In the winter it's much more fun to have a board that's bigger," Cover said. "It allows you more speed and energy on the wave."

Although the extra income from shaping boards is a bonus, the pleasure comes from wanting to create something of his own, Cover said.

He shapes for the fun of it and sees it more as a hobby than a job. Making surfboards isn't a goal he is pursuing for a future career, he said. Next year is his last year at Poly, and finishing up with school is what he wants to get out of the way first.

"There definitely isn't much money in making surfboards," he said. "It's just a great thing to do."

He sells his boards out of his home on Mill Street. The average waiting period for a surfboard is three weeks, he said. Cover can be reached via e-mail at bcover@calpoly.edu

MINDFACE AT THE CROSSROADS IN CLARKSTOWN, NJ—MINDFACE ROCKED THE [illegible] SPECIAL GUESTS SOFT AND PINK FROM RETARD CAT

EDWIN MCCAIN PLAYS THE IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL NEXT MONDAY AT 7 P.M. TICKETS ARE $12.50

Your Neighborhood Wireless Technology Store

Introducing
America's Choice℠ calling plans
With America's Choice, all your plan minutes are national minutes!
300 Anytime monthly airtime minutes
UNLIMITED nationwide long distance
on America's Choice network.
PLUS
3000 National Night & Weekend Monthly Home Airtime Minutes for LIFE
All for only $35 monthly access when you sign up for one year and remain on the same plan. The America's Choice network covers over 248 million people in the U.S. Network not available in all areas.
WIN THE ULTIMATE WIRELESS PACKAGE!
Register for a chance to win at your nearest @Wireless location or at www.shopatwireless.com. Retail value $1500!
FREE $20 GAS CARD! with the purchase of a Nokia 5185 phone. Annual contract and mail-in form required.
HOLYOKE MALL (413) 533-2500
HADLEY 322 Russell Street (413) 587-3248
@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com
35 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1-800-613-2355 for details, dial ext. 226 for franchise opportunities.
verizon wireless Authorized Retailer
Offer valid with new activation on select plans for a limited time only. Subject to terms of Cellular Service Agreement and Calling Plans. $20 activation fee. $175 early termination fee. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other offers. Charge rounded to next full minute. Unused allowances lost. All calls subject to taxes and other charges. Network, long distance and certain CDMA equipment. Phones model may vary. While supplies last. Night & Weekend hours: Mon-Fri 9:00pm-5:59am; Sat 9:00pm-11:59pm; Sun 6:00pm-11:59pm. Home rebate form required to receive gift card by mail apply. See store for details. Make-it-redeemable form required to receive gift card by mail. No purchase necessary to enter drawing. See official sweepstakes rules posted in store.

IN SHAPE NUTRITION
GET IN SHAPE!
Burn Fat, Build Muscle!
SPECIALS
XENADRINE Fat Burner 120 capsules $23.95
CREATINE 500g. $15.99
WHEY PROTEIN 6 lbs. $27.99
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
65 University Drive
Amherst, Massachusetts
PHONE: 549-7434
HOURS:
M thru F 10 - 7
Sat 10 - 5
Science Nutrition AST Sports Science EAS American Bodybuilding Flora Met-Rx Cytosport Ergoplasm Twinlab Next Proteins Sportpharma Muscular Nutrition Balance Biotest Worldwide Sports Atkins Muscular Nutrition Balance Rodeo Gal

Your Pills are where????

Try the Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Depo-Provera* is 99.7% effective.

Not only is Depo-Provera 99.7% effective, but you need just one shot on time every 3 months to stay pregnancy-protected. So, unlike the Pill, Depo-Provera isn't your every day birth control.

Depo-Provera doesn't protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

Some women using Depo-Provera experience side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months and some may experience a slight weight gain. You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant, if you have had any unexplained periods, or if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a possible decrease in bone density. Ask your health care professional about prescription Depo-Provera.

Birth control you think about just 4 times a year.

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

See what Depo-Provera is all about. Call toll free 1-866-519-DEPO or visit www.depo-provera.com.

Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Please see important product information on adjacent page.

■ Dragonfly

continued from page 5

EVEN ANGELIC HANDS CAN'T SAVE Dragonfly.

Joe that "it's good to see you joining the world again." It's also good to see that some writers consider themselves free of the pesky obligation to actually write how real people talk.

Costner walks around in an impressive stupor, his performance enlivened only by the occasional obvious gesture, such as sucking in his lower lip to communicate unspeakable grief. These efforts, unsuccessful as they may be, at least prop his work here above his nearly unwatchable turn in For Love of the Game, but he still seems as wooden and stiff as, appropriately, a totem pole.

By the time Joe goes back to the site of his wife's death to piece together the meaning of her earthly intrusions, the movie finally achieves something like forward momentum, but when what it builds to is a collection of tribal stereotypes and an artificially cutesy "payoff," One is left to ponder any sort of point.

Cobbled together solely to play on the sympathies of easily hooked moviegoers (the abbreviated length and absence of a number of scenes that were featured in the trailer suggest that there was some last-minute reworking), Dragonfly aims to be a dollar-sucking insect. It is to be hoped that audiences, not so dumb as Shadyac assumes, will simply swat it away.

■ 40 oz.

continued from page 5

movie. It stars Fred Savage, Christian Slater and Beau Bridges who my housemate K. Dog was excited to see featured in the film because, "Beau Bridges is an important element in this movie a middle aged example of youthful exuberance." The easiest way to explain this movie is that it is a two-hour long commercial for Nintendo. It is a fantasy world where kids roam the country, engaged in spirited gaming battles in overgrown and abandoned ballparks. Why are all the ballparks abandoned and overgrown? Because all the kids are playing Nintendo.

The only moral in the story is to buy Nintendo products and support your children's gaming habits or they will run away like Fred Savage in this film. In my scrawled, drunken notes from this viewing, I wrote, "This is the Easy Rider of the Nintendo Generation." Truer words have never been written and this is a pathetic watermark of our generation's culture.

I didn't make it all the way through this one. The Golden Annie was according to my notes "a blessing." But it knocked me on my ass. All in all a great night.

Ratings:
The Wizard 3 stars
Golden Anniversary 40 oz.- 2 stars
Mike Taced

■ rhyme

continued from page 5

said.

Has he seen "Glitter?"

"No I have not seen the movie."

He's a lucky man.

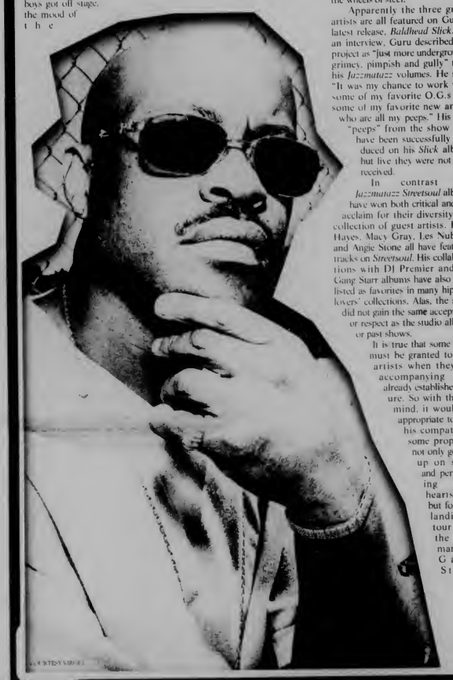
Majors proclaims that everything he spits is a freestyle, a term which, depending on whom you talk to, has a number of different definitions.

"My definition of a freestyle is like when people in the church catch the Holy Ghost," Majors said. "It's like the actual moment when you catch the spirit and make the whole thing that comes of your mouth make sense."

"Verse 4 Verse Volume 1.0" may not be sonically pleasing to the ear and admittedly Majors could stand to improve as an MC. However, at the end of the day, passion and emanation of music are ultimately what makes music good. "Verse 4 Verse" is 100-percent pure emotion.

Majors admits though he is not the best rapper in College Park, he is most certainly one of the best. He wants to make it perfectly clear, however, that he is not a rapper but a street poet, much like his not-too-surprising greatest influence.

guru's Jazzmatazz



The Baldhead Slick & Da Click Tour

By Catherine Turner
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The opening track on the Guru disc Jazzmatazz vol. one is a song called "Le Bien, Le Mal" and features French rap sensation MC Solaar. Well in last week's Guru concert that song, (although not performed), seemed to be a metaphor for the veteran rapper. The show had both the good, and the bad.

It began with a warm up by local freestyle champ Deece and his troupe of back-up b-boys. The rhymes were pretty solid and the lyricist battles kept the audience involved. However, once the local boys got off stage, the mood of the crowd changed and most people left the ballroom to get drinks or go to the bathroom. An unknown rapper from Washington DC came on and started to rap over played-out beats from pop radio. In retrospect, perhaps that was a sign of things to come.

When Guru finally took the stage, the crowd became more energetic, especially since he walked on with the beat from "Mass Appeal" humping behind him. However, it quickly became obvious that the man with the smooth voice and industry stamina was not in Northampton to perform his own stuff live; he was there to promote his proteges.

Speaking of unknown, behind Guru, alias Bald Head Slick, strutted three members of his most recent posse, Kreem.com, Mendoughza, and a little Canadian kid called Bless stood equidistant from the aging star, each with a mic in hand, intending to blow the crowd away.

For the next 45 minutes or so, the crowd struggled to follow along with the new artists. No one knew any of their songs and began getting restless. Part of the problem may have come from the fact that the guest DJ wasn't cuttin' like Premier. According to Guru, "Premier is off in Europe DJing parties." What a shame, the show could have used a professional on the wheels of steel.

Apparently the three green artists are all featured on Guru's latest release, Baldhead Slick. In an interview, Guru described the project as "just more underground, grimey, pimpish and gully" than his Jazzmatazz volumes. He said, "It was my chance to work with some of my favorite O.G.'s and some of my favorite new artists who are all my peeps." His new "peeps" from the show may have been successfully produced on his Slick album, but live they were not well received.

In contrast his Jazzmatazz Streetsoul albums have won both critical and fan acclaim for their diversity and collection of guest artists. Isaac Hayes, Macy Gray, Les Nubians and Angie Stone all have featured on Streetsoul. His collaborations with DJ Premier and the Gang Starr albums have also been listed as favorites in many hip hop lovers' collections. Alas, the show did not gain the same acceptance or respect as the studio albums or past shows.

It is true that some slack must be granted to new artists when they are accompanying an already established figure. So with that in mind, it would be appropriate to give his compatriots some props for not only getting up on stage and performing their hearts out, but for also landing a tour with the front man of Gang Starr.

However, it is appropriate to mention that some warning should have been given about the content of the show. It was marketed as a Guru: Jazzmatazz show, not as, "New Peeps Showcase."

A few more comments about the show include the poor acoustics. Normally the sound crew at Pearl Street is on point. It wasn't clear if the staff was just sick that day, or if it was the performers that didn't know how to use their equipment. A combination of the guys both screaming into the mics and also all talking at the same time made it very difficult to understand what they were saying and catch the names of their songs and themselves.

It is also important to mention that Guru did perform a couple of his old tracks. "Just to get a rap," "twick," and "Full Clip" did manage to get the audience more rowdy, especially since there were many in attendance that could sing along with the old stuff. It was also nice to hear Guru solo; his voice is distinct among rappers and has a uniqueness about it that allows his rhymes to seemingly roll off of his tongue without any effort.

All in all the show was a disappointment for old school Gang Starr and Jazzmatazz fans, but some respect has to be given to Guru for struggling through a tour where the fans are regularly surprised by the absence of his familiar beats. He did also show great skill at keeping the crowd's attention, and not too much time was wasted babbling on the mics or fussing with records. Much like his colleagues in the industry of his generation, Guru has been around long enough to know how to put on a smooth show. He did not keep the audience waiting in between songs and he told them specifically where he wanted to go in the show.

But despite his best efforts, it was still more confusing than entertaining. Perhaps if he had chosen more talented rappers to support, the atmosphere would have been different. But Kreem.com, Mendoughza and Bless were far from sparkling or mind blowing. Well, Bless was a little better than the others, but none of them seemed to have the potential to cultivate a genuine fan base.

Guru has always had a reputation for consistency and flavor. His albums have stretched the bounds of hip-hop, calling on a cornucopia of artists to celebrate and experiment with the genre. However, last Wednesday's concert was pushing the envelope too far and asking too much from fans. Good luck to Mendoughza, Bless and Kreem.com. The next time Guru comes to town, let's hope the only brotha he brings with him is DJ Premier.

Rik Aleid and Eric Soderstrom contributed to this article.

Depo-Provera
Contraceptive Injection
Birth control you think about just 4 x a year
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

DEPO-PROVERA

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases.

What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

ONLY 1 injection every 3 months

ONLY 4 shots each year

What if I want to become pregnant after using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What are the risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Who should not use DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What other things should I consider before using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What symptoms may signal problems while using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What are the possible side effects of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Should any precautions be followed during use of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Pharmacia & Upjohn

WRITE FOR ARTS

CINEMARK
the next best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4232
FRIDAY 2/22-THURSDAY 2/28/2002
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

Arkansas coach stands by comments in which he threatened to quit

By Bart O'Connell
INDEPENDENT FLORIDA ALLIGATOR (U. FLORIDA)

(U-WIRE) GAINESVILLE, Fla. – Nolan Richardson has called Billy Donovan a bank robber and claimed Arkansas to be the first real challenge to Kentucky's long-time dominance of the Southeastern Conference.

Saturday, though, the Arkansas men's basketball coach may have hinted his 17-year run is coming to an end.

Despite just signing a seven-year extension to continue coaching the Razorbacks well into his 60s, Richardson said he would be willing to step down if the school bought out his contract.

"If they go ahead and pay me my money, they can take the job tomorrow," Richardson said after losing to the Wildcats 71-58.

It has been a tough season for the Razorbacks, which stand at 13-13 and 5-9 in the SEC. Their only hope for a NCAA Tournament bid is with a SEC Tournament victory, which they were able to pull off two years ago in a similar situation.

This year, though, has a different feel to it.

When asked repeatedly what he meant by the comments, Richardson never backed off the statement and even went so far as to say many people want him to step down, including "the press and whoever else rips [me] every chance they get."

Arkansas chancellor John White said no plans are in place for Richardson to leave and expects the 60-year old coach to finish his contract.

STILL SUSPENDED: Until further notice, Kentucky's Gerald Fitch and Erik Daniels remain suspended by coach Tubby Smith for using fake ID cards.

Smith did not need the pair to defeat Arkansas but said he hopes the punishment sets a precedent for how the Wildcats (19-7, 9-5 SEC) will deal with future infractions.

"I said I wouldn't tolerate any more distractions," Smith said. "That's why I said [they're suspended] indefinitely. It's time I make some decisions about their long-term future with the program."

Smith is considering therapy for Fitch and Daniels, whose infractions have caused Smith to take a closer look at how much respect his players have for him and his authority.

"That's what I'm questioning," Smith said. "I've said all along that we'll be evaluating everyone who is involved with the program and why these incidents continue to occur. We have curfew and all those things implemented and when you do things like this beyond the curfew then it's a problem."

Since using fake ID cards in a college town like Lexington, Ky., would not seem to work very well in the first place, Smith even said the university should "check their GPAs better."

"It shows you how smart they are," Smith said. "That's our problem."

TOP COACHES: Alabama's Mark Gottfried, Georgia's Jim Harrick, Kentucky's Smith and UF's Donovan are finalists for the Naismith Coach of the Year Award.

Gottfried is considered a favorite out of the SEC, where Donovan earned high praise a year ago for his efforts.

Other front runners for the award include Texas Tech's Bobby Knight, Marquette's Tom Crean, Kansas's Roy Williams and Arizona's Lute Olson.

■ lax

continued from page 14

"Bridget is an excellent anchor back there defensively," Barnes said of his captain. "This year I think what makes our back line stronger is Kristin St. Hilaire returning from her surgery. The two of them have worked beautifully in practice."

After failing to repeat as A-10 Champions last season the Minutewomen will once again look to return to the promised land and capture the NCAA Tournament berth that goes along with it.

Despite having two years with the entire squad to build and grow, the Minutewomen are looking for success sooner rather than later, with sooner beginning this afternoon.

"We're looking to come out aggressive on the defensive end and the offensive end and set a tone for the game and the season," Barnes said.

■ hoop

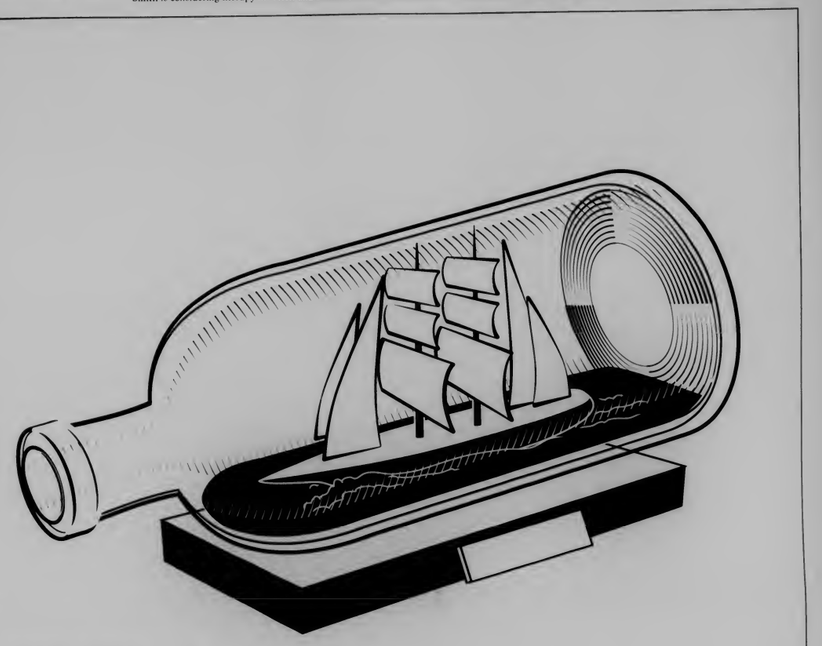
continued from page 14

UMass was trying to make one final run. The Minutemen have struggled on the boards for most of the conference schedule but have begun to right the ship following the victory over Fordham. In that contest UMass outrebounded the Rams 45-36, much to the delight of head coach Steve Lappas.



"I was happy with the way we rebounded the ball and boxed out [against Fordham]," Lappas said on Monday during the weekly A-10 coaches conference call. "It was a big factor in the game and it was a good win for us."

Another good win this evening on Senior Night will see the Minutemen win back-to-back games for the first time in over a month and give the club a bit of positive momentum before heading to Cincinnati for the final regular season game of the season on Saturday afternoon against Xavier.

The emotions are sure to be running high as the four senior Minutemen take their final bows at the Mullins Center. And they and the rest of the Minutemen will look to send the fans home happy by picking up a big win against the Rams.

www.dailycollegian.com

www.dailycollegian.com

Enjoy a good challenge?

You want a personal life, but you also want a career that challenges you.
At Ernst & Young, you can have both. True, we have high expectations.
And some tasks will no doubt rack your brain. But rest assured.
We help our people face assignments with some remarkably handy tools, such as the most advanced technology, information, and resources, bar none. And with a talented pool of colleagues and mentors by your side, success is closer than you think. And so are the rewards.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2002

ERNST & YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH™

©2002 Ernst & Young LLP

SOPHOMORE PETE YORN SERVES DURING HIS MATCH AGAINST BOSTON COLLEGE BY A 7-0 SCORE

BC Eagles soar high above heads of struggling men's tennis team

By Elena Panesis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last season the Massachusetts men's tennis team finished second in the Atlantic 10 conference and scheduled the 2002 season with high expectations.

Yet, coach Judy Dixon and crew also expected to have Brent Davis and Aron Gortman, two star sophomores from California that have since transferred to other programs. Also, Rory Theis, a sophomore from Bloomington, Minn., has not stepped on the court this season due to a back injury. As a result the Minutemen lost to Boston College 7-0 at home on Sunday, a team it defeated on the road last year. The Maroon and White now stands 0-7 on the season with more challenging teams ahead of it, including a face-off with Ivy League Dartmouth on Thursday in Hanover, New Hampshire.

"The guys are working hard but we are in a tough spot with this schedule," said assistant coach Scott Wilkins. "We expected to have Brent Davis, Aron Gortman and even Will Shaw. If we could have foreseen our current lineup, we would have never made the schedule this tough. We're overmatched."

However, the Minutemen did take some positives from Sunday's match despite the shutout by the Eagles. No.1 Steve Prisco returned to the lineup after suffering back spasms and vertigo, going head-to-head against Eagles star Justin Slattery in a hard fought match that could have easily fallen Massachusetts' way, 6-1, 4-6, 7-6.

In doubles play the pairing of Reid Stubbs and Jed Greenberg rocketed to a 6-3 lead but then lost momentum, falling to the tandem of Vartabedian/Murray 8-6. In the Omni Hotels East Regional last November, seniors Prisco and Todd Champeau performed exceptionally well together as a doubles pair but both looked rusty Sunday due to Prisco's injury and their lack of play together since the fall.

"We haven't played doubles together since November," said Champeau. "We did really well together in the regionals and once we get a few more matches in together, and Steve gets going, we'll definitely beat some good teams."

Thursday the Minutemen travel to Hanover, New Hampshire to challenge the solid Dartmouth program that already defeated Boston College earlier in the season.

"They're one of the better teams that we will play this season," said Wilkins. "They already played B.C. and probably killed them. It's going to be similar but I'm hoping we can play better than we did Sunday."

However, matches against schools like Boston College and Dartmouth do not really affect the Maroon and White's seed for the A-10 tournament in April. Therefore, the squad has its sights on schools like George Washington, Xavier and Dayton, which will make the long trip to Amherst to challenge the Minutemen on the Upper Boyden Courts later in the spring.

"We're getting geared up for the George Washington match on March 9 since they are a team to beat in the conference," said Wilkins. "Also, Xavier and Dayton are better than last year with all their players returning. They're improved and out to get us but they are coming to our home court so it should be interesting."

Tufts speed skater at Salt Lake

By Daniel Fowler
TUFTS DAILY (TUFTS U.)

(U-WIRE) MEDFORD, Mass. – The list of successful Jumbo athletes through the years is not unimpressive, but athletics is not the first thing that comes to mind when thinking of Tufts University. Therefore, freshman Christy Ren – who represented Hong Kong in the Salt Lake City Olympics – is somewhat of a Brown and Blue marvel.

And possibly even bigger than being an Olympian from a Division III college is the fact Ren and her teammate Cordia Tsoi Po-see, who competed in the short-track speed skating events, became the first athletes in the history of Hong Kong to compete in the Winter Olympics.

"It was really amazing when I walked in and saw the people around, the lights," Ren told the Daily from Salt Lake. "It was really pretty. I felt really proud to be there and to be able to represent Hong Kong in its first Winter Olympics."

During the games, Ren competed in the 1,500 meter but failed to move on to later rounds after finishing her initial heat in 2:49.67. The early exit didn't come as a surprise – short-track speed skating does not have a storied history in Hong Kong. In fact, it was introduced to the country only four years ago.

"I was a little nervous at such a big competition," Ren said. "I really wanted to do well. I was going to try my best. We are not really at the standard yet to compete for a medal. We just want to beat our own times."

Even though Hong Kong still has a ways to go before it competes for Olympic gold in speed-skating, Ren still cherished the experience. Simply competing at the Olympics, she said, is an achievement.

"You know that all your hard work has gotten you somewhere and paid off," she said.

Ren's journey to Salt Lake was perhaps more difficult than most. Training often proves difficult for Ren and her teammates, as Hong Kong gives little financial support to its skaters. The team does not have an official doctor or physiotherapist. And if the athletes train in Hong Kong, they are forced to practice on rinks that do not meet Olympic standards. In fact, most Hong Kong rinks are only one-third the size of the Olympic rinks.

"We don't have a standard-size ice rink," Ren said. "We only get ice time for ourselves once a week for an hour or so; sometimes we go in the mornings."

Training isn't much easier at Tufts, where Ren has a little something called academics to worry about. And since Tufts does not have an ice rink on site, she had to trek to a rink outside of Boston three times a week.

Without a history of speed-skating in Hong Kong, Ren, a former figure skater, has relied on the experience of her coach, former Chinese national speed-skating team member Lu Shuo, as a guide.

"I think I have to thank him a lot," Ren said. "He was my only coach. He taught me a lot of stuff from the very beginning."

Ren said she hopes Salt Lake City is not the end of her Olympic road. She said she likely will try for the 2006 games in Turin, Italy.

"I think I'll try and continue," she said. "I wouldn't mind going again."

For now, though, she will re-focus on her studies in an abroad program in China. But that doesn't mean she won't be skating.

"I'm going to be studying abroad next semester in Beijing, beginning at the end of the month," Ren said. "I hear there's a national competition there so I'll probably join."

the FRESH CUTS
Your alternative music source.

5.99 SOMETHING CORPORATE
Audiobaxter
Includes the single "If You C Jordan."

10.99 PETE YORN
Musicforthemorningafter

11.99 SOUTH
From Here On In

11.99 COURSE OF NATURE
Superkala

13.99 ANYONE
Anyone

13.99 THE STROKES
Is This It

15.99 JOEY RAMONE
Don't Worry About Me

15.99 GLOBAL HITS 2002
Various Artists

MEDIA PLAY
Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
Selection, pricing and special offers may vary by store and online.
Sale ends March 9, 2002. www.mediaplay.com

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS MEDICAL SCHOOL

The University of Massachusetts Medical School, in Worcester MA, is one of the fastest growing medical campuses in the country, and has built a reputation as a world-class research institution, consistently producing noteworthy advances in clinical and basic research. Along with medical education, other endeavors supported by UMMS include:

- Commonwealth Medicine, which supports various state agencies and public sector initiatives throughout Massachusetts;
- Mass Biologic Laboratories in Jamaica Plain, manufacturers of vaccines, monoclonal antibodies and plasma products;
- Eunice Kennedy Shriver Center in Waltham, which conducts research related to mental retardation and other developmental disabilities.

UMMS is an equal opportunity employer. We offer highly competitive salaries based on experience; an excellent benefit package including generous time-off policies, 13 paid holidays, paid continuing education benefits for employees and family members, health and dental coverage.

Please plan to visit us at the Life Sciences Career Fair on February 27th at the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center. UMMS is interested in candidates with the following majors (Undergraduate and/or Graduate):

- Animal Science
- Biochemistry
- Biology
- Counseling/Psychology
- Microbiology
- Molecular & Cellular Biology
- Neuroscience & Behavior
- Psychology
- Public Health

If you are unable to attend, please check our website and/or apply online at www.umassmed.edu. Please reference job code: JF/UMA.

Jordan grounded by aching knees

Full court Press with Glen Straub

In the first half of the season, Michael Jordan has defied all the doubts of his second comeback to the NBA.

He may have lost a step but the production is still apparent. Using the limited tools that a 39-year-old body possesses, Jordan is averaging 24.3 points per game for the Washington Wizards. He has also galvanized a winning attitude into a club that has not had this much excitement since they were called the Bullets.

Today, there are doubts he will ever play again.

Yesterday, Jordan was put on a list not as familiar to him as the scoring leaders list – it's called the injured list.

After weeks of uncomforting pain and swelling in his right knee, Jordan has finally listened to doctors' orders and will have arthroscopic surgery on the ailed knee sometime in the next few days.

It will be only the second time in his storied career that he will be placed on the injured reserve. The last time was in 1985 when he missed 64 games with a broken left foot in his second season with the Chicago Bulls.

His status for the rest of the season is uncertain, but being placed on the injured list means that he will have to miss at least five games. Missing only five games is a very unlikely scenario for the six-time champion.

The Wizards are hoping Jordan will only have to miss one to four weeks, but his timetable will be determined after the surgery. According to Wizards Head Coach Doug Collins, doctors must find out what is irritating Jordan's knee, then they can make a judgment on when he will return to the court.

Jordan has been struggling with tendonitis in the knee since the summer he was preparing for his first season in a Wizard's uniform. He re-aggravated it about two weeks ago when he collided with teammate Etan Thomas in practice.

For weeks now, Jordan's body has been sending him messages to slow down. Similar to how he dealt with the critical remarks from the media on his comeback, he wasn't listening.

Maybe he should have listened to those critics as well as his body.

According to an ESPN.com article, Jordan seemed skeptical of his physical ability to continue his career after his last game on Sunday against Miami, when he stated, "My mind is still consistent, but my body isn't."

Jordan's mind, not physical ability, has been the catalyst behind his stellar play and the team's success.

He can't jump through the roof anymore. He can't leave his defender on the wing in the dust anymore. He can't even stay at the same level of play for 48 minutes anymore. But he has showed everyone in the league that he can still win – even if Chris Whitney and Jahidi White are the starting point guard and center, respectively. That is all that matters.

Jordan's basketball mind could beat anybody in the history of the sport. He drive for success and his knowledge of the game has never been more apparent than in his resurrection of the Wizards organization.

Unfortunately, his body is showing signs that he will not be able to finish what he started.

Kryptonite is Superman's nemesis. The kryptonite for No. 23 is old age.

There are many questions to be asked now. Will Jordan be able to return before the playoffs, if he even returns at all? Will the Wizards be able to maintain the winning mentality without their veteran leader? These questions will be answered over the next few weeks.

But I have a question for NBA fans. Will you still watch the games?

Thanks in part to Jordan's return; NBA basketball has become once again a popular sport to watch for the American public. The arena has been sold out in every game that Jordan has played. He has brought back some excitement into a game that has been lackluster for the past three years.

Another loss of the ultimate basketball icon may lead to another drop off in popularity for the NBA. For the sake of himself, the Wizards and the NBA, hopefully Jordan will rebound from the setback and wear his cape again.

Glen Straub is a Collegian Columnist.

DARREN MORACE TOOK HOME HIS SEVENTH ALL-AROUND TITLE IN HIS LAST EIGHT COMPETITIONS, THUS HELPING THE MINUTEMEN DEFEAT TEMPLE LAST WEEKEND.

A class act until the end

By Jesse Greenspan
COLLEGIAN STAFF

AMHERST – She remained poised and focused throughout the entire game, and not even a smile escaped from her lips.

But when Caroline Nehls headed to the bench with 19 seconds left in her team's 62-53 handling of first place George Washington, the Massachusetts women's basketball team's lone senior was grinning from ear-to-ear.

After all, she had just scored 12 points and hauled down five boards in her final collegiate contest at the William D. Mullins Center, and had been one of the main reasons the Maroon and White dismantled the best squad in the Atlantic 10 (George Washington).

"There is a special rivalry between these two teams... and the last game on your home court is always special," Nehls said. "Having a game like we did today, especially against a team like GW, is a perfect ending."

For her career, the 6-foot-2 center did not post incredible numbers, as her best season came in 1999-2000 when she started all 29 contests and averaged 6.4 points and 4.7 boards a contest.

However, it was the little things that made her a complete player, and although she was forced to accept a reduced role her senior year, Nehls still averaged 5.0 points and 3.1 boards in only 17.9 minutes of action per game.

"When you talk about [Nehls], you talk about leadership and putting your best effort on the court every day," Minutewoman Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said. "In basketball sometimes, you don't know how good someone is until you don't have them anymore, and that's going to be the case with Caroline.

"It's doing the little things," she added. "Someone is going to have to step into that role next year."

For these reasons, O'Brien gave her lone senior a giant hug and a high-five when she trotted to the sidelines with the game in hand against the Colonials.

It was a nice moment for two individuals that had not always seen eye-to-eye in the past, as they had previously fought over the issue of playing time.

As a freshman out of Randolph High School in New Jersey, Nehls started 10 contests and scored 4.5 ppg, despite missing eight games in the middle of the year with a stress fracture in her right foot. In her sophomore campaign, she became a staple of the UMass frontcourt and was able to net a career-high 20 points against Boston College, but her playing time dwindled slightly her junior year to 22.5 minutes a game.

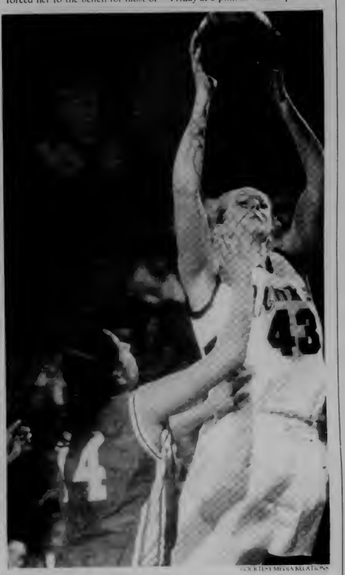
However, she was still able to lead UMass in field goal percentage (44.1 percent), while simultaneously scoring 5.9 points and hauling down 4.4 boards a contest.

At the beginning of her senior season, Nehls' playing time dropped again as she struggled to find a permanent place in the rotation. But as the year wore on, she once again regained the trust of O'Brien and began consistently patrolling the paint for the Maroon and White.

On Sunday against the Colonials, everything seemed to come together for Nehls, as she played possibly her most consistent game of the year.

In the first half, she got off to a nice start by feeding teammate Jennifer Butler underneath the hoop for a reverse layup. Two possessions later, she took a crosscourt pass from Amber Sneed and laid it in for her first points of the afternoon.

Over the next few minutes she would tally four more quick points, but her second foul with 13:54 left forced her to the bench for most of the remainder of the half.



However, she came back with a vengeance and quietly posted another six points in the second frame behind two 6-foot jumpers from the left baseline.

"The last time we knocked [GW] off, Alison McFarland was a senior, and I still remember that game," Nehls said. "Wins like this, knocking off the top team in conference, you'll always remember."

Now, only the A-10 tournament remains for a player that exited her final home contest to a rousing applause from the 681 fans in attendance.

"It hasn't hit me yet," the senior center said of whether or not it felt like her final game at the Mullins Center. "Once the season is completely over then it will hit, but we still have games left to play."

Nehls and her teammates next compete in the A-10 tourney on Friday at 6 p.m. in Philadelphia.

SENIOR CENTER CAROLINE NEHLS NOTCHED 12 POINTS AND FIVE REBOUNDS IN HER FINAL COLLEGIATE HOME GAME LAST SUNDAY AGAINST GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Gym shoots down Owls by 0.6 of a point

By Katie Landers
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's gymnastics team shows no sign of stopping this season. This weekend, UMass conquered its top conference rival Temple by just six-tenths of a point for the second time this season.

A score of 210.050-209.450 earned the Minutemen the top spot in the tri-meet against Temple and Springfield. UMass leads the Atlantic 10 pack in this late half of the season, and is currently ranked ninth in the nation.

The Maroon and White had an uphill battle after a rough start on the rings rotation. A faulty start put Temple in the lead but the Minutemen battled back for the rest of the competition.

"It didn't look good," Head Coach Roy Johnson said.

Senior Clayton Kent helped push the team along, taking second in the floor exercise. Justin Hammer, a junior who helped bring UMass to the postseason last year, returned to help against the Owls. Hammer, who has been out sick for the majority of this season, scored a 9.45 on the pommel horse.

"[Hammer] had just about a perfect routine," Johnson said.

Darren Morace came through again for UMass, scoring a personal and season best on the pommel horse (9.3) and taking home the all-around. The Temple/Springfield meet was the seventh title in eight competitions for the junior.

"It was a close meet. A fall bys Darren and Temple would have won," Johnson said. "[Morace] sealed the deal."

Springfield wasn't as much of a challenge last Saturday. UMass topped the Pride by more than 14 points. This weekend, the Minutemen will meet Springfield College for the third time this season, looking to put another check in the win column. Being the top seed in the A-10 conference, the UMass squad hopes that a high score this weekend will help them get an edge for the rest of 2002 campaign.

"The rest of the season looks good," Johnson said. "This time of the year it puts us in a good spot."

The Minutemen are working just a little bit harder each day, Johnson said that the team has pushed past teams like Temple and Springfield because the Maroon and White puts out a harder routine, and sticks it. Currently hitting 85 percent of its marks, the Maroon and White is looking to stay consistent in the last three meets of the season. Patrick McFarlin, a junior who has been a big part of the UMass domination, has been working through a twisted ankle. Other than that, the Minutemen have been lucky to keep most of their gymnasts healthy.

"We've just got to keep them healthy and sharp," Johnson said.

UMass will return to action this Saturday down at Springfield at 2 p.m.

New WORLD Theater presents

UNIVERSES in Slanguage

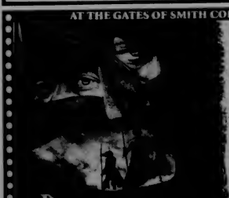
Directed and developed by Jo Bonney
Wednesday & Thursday
February 27 & 28, 2002
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium
TONIGHT & TOMORROW NIGHT!
$15-general public; $8-seniors/low income; $5 students. Call FAC Box Office 545-2511
www.newworldtheater.org



Universes, an exciting ensemble of five multi-disciplined performers, fuses poetry, theater, jazz, Hip-Hop, politics, down home blues, and Spanish boleros to create moving work that will have you on your feet.

Love's Labor's Lost by William Shakespeare
February 28, March 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, 2002 at 8PM
March 2 at 2PM
The Rand Theater & Call 413-545-2511
Tickets $7, $4 students/seniors
UMASS theater

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
- Student Discounts
- Professional Bartending Training
- Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
- Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
- National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
- Great Part-time or Summer Job

LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
-MARCH 8TH - 10TH
-LEWIS-SEBRING ROOM
-VALENTINE HALL
-AMHERST COLLEGE
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE

BROTHERHOOD OF THE WOLF (LE PACTE DES LOUPS)

★★★★ EXCITING, SMART & SEXY!"
"A WILD RIDE!"
"A SPECTACULAR FANTASY-ACTION EPIC...
Note: The ONLY Area Showing!

Starts Fri. (7 Days ONLY!!) Daily 6:15 & 9:00
Downtown Northampton's Academy of Music
Movie-Line 413-584-8435

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups

Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Looking for permanent position or summer job? Come to the Hospitality job fare. March 6th 2002 from 9:00 am to 3 pm in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 50 companies attending. For more info: Please call the Career Day office 545-3438.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Care attendant for male Quad. Week day mornings $10.12 hr 546-0666.

Pet Sitting, spring break and some weekends this semester. N Amherst area. 3 times per day for pets. 545-4013

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 866-291-7884 ext. 485.

Sell Khach Card Packets in Campus Center, Dorms, Etc. More you sell, more money you make. Call Mike 781-929-2818.

Wanted student to assist new web based business located on Cape Cod. Must have Marketing web skills, Contact Howie @ info@dashpas.com

Custodian Wanted first Congregational Church of Hadley. P/T 15 hrs/ week. Respond by e-mail kwood@crnss.com

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941) 329-6434 www.cruisesareers.com

Wanted: Honest, responsible, hard working student for evening product promotions. Must be 21+ and have reliable transportation. Please contact 203-984-5880 for more info.

Wanted seamstress- simple alterations 545-4031

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE; DJ Fooze and SYB productions are now booking for spring semester, call 537-8527.

FOR SALE

Couch good shape $200/BO 259-1020 .

FURNITURE

New computer desk $99.00 413-210-3145.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich (P Mulrey, E Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_Goodrich@hotmail.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

Room all-inclusive no smoke/ no pets $400 available now 253-0627.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Cheap rent, 1 bedroom, female preferred, Colonial village bus rte 253-0920.

SERVICES

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon; the warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is ELSI giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other worldwide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sunsteasvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

WANTED

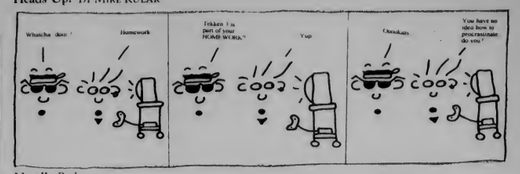
Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

Get $$PAiD$$ to lose up to 5-40 lbs. 1-888-709-8197 www.healthmgmt.com

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network

3	CBS/3
4	NBC4
5	Fox Sport NE
6	PBS/57
8	HSCN Movie Channel
9	WB/22
10	HBO Movie Channel
11	TV Guide Channel
12	FOX/61
13	ABC/40
14	NBC/22
15	International Channel
16	UMATV
17	HSCN Info Channel
18	ESPN
19	ESPN 2
20	LIVE-TV
21	ESPN Classic
22	Closed-to-Cloved
23	CNN
24	CNN HL
25	Weather Channel
26	Learning Channel
27	History Channel
28	A & E
29	Discovery Health
30	Food Network
31	NASA
32	Home & Garden TV
33	Travel Channel
34	Lifetime
35	CNBC
36	TechTV
37	BET
38	UPN-38
39	USA
40	TNN
41	MTV
42	CMT
43	VH-1
44	TNT
45	TBS
46	E! Entertainment
47	Sci-Fi Channel
48	Court TV
49	Nick at Nite
50	Comedy Central
51	Cartoon Network
52	Game Show Network
53	TV Land
54	FOX Family
55	Univision
56	Galavision
57	Telemundo
58	College TV Network
59	C-SPAN
60	C-SPAN2
61	Bloomberg Television



SORRY KIDS NO TUBE LISTINGS

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Noodle By Jacki

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Quote of the Day

"Due to budget cuts, all electricity will be shut off at the University of Massachusetts."

-Jennifer Eastwood
upon being enveloped in total darkness in the Campus Center Basement at 3 a.m.

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 46 LOW: 20	HIGH: 39 LOW: 33	HIGH: 42 LOW: 20

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may be able to take advantage of a surprise bargains before the day is out. Talk openly and honestly with friends during an evening gathering.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You'll receive the information you require today, but it may come only at the 11th hour. Still, you can come through like ganghusters!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're going to have to do more than meet someone halfway if you wish to solve a crisis that develops quickly. Be willing to bend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – A question of compatibility may arise today, and you may have to change your plans as a result, if only to maintain order at home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Do someone a favor today, and he or she is bound to do you a good turn as well. Perhaps working together can maximize both your rewards.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Do what you can to remain on an even keel today, even while others are finding every reason under the sun to lose control to some degree.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – It may seem to others as though you get very little done, but they don't understand how you work. The fact is, you're making real progress.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Why do you complain so much? If you look around you, you'll see that things are not nearly so bad as they seem. Be positive!

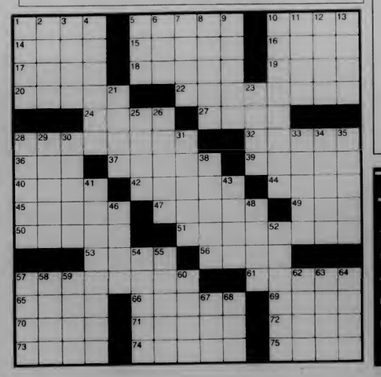
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You can give someone the answers they're looking for, or you can tell him how to discover the answers for himself. Which is more valuable?

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You'll have a chance to forge ahead and break new ground today – and keep the competition wondering what you're really up to as well!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan.19) – Do you have what it takes to go all the way today? Someone may be waiting for you to say "yes" to an attractive, long-standing suggestion.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You have every reason to be practical about issues such as travel, organization and fulfilling promises to others. Take it one thing at a time.

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
TONIGHT
COME PARTY at THE HARP
in North Amherst
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900



ACROSS
1 Not dry
5 Not even one
10 Bombay attire
14 State firmly
15 Dote on
16 Scurries
17 Company emblem
18 Walked to and fro
19 Dutch cheese
20 Silly
22 Bargainers
24 Dusting powder
27 — over: capsize
28 Tree-dwelling
32 Brindled cat
36 Flying formation
37 Goes on a voyage
39 Weighing device
40 Altar end
42 Sketches
44 Bang
45 Castle or Dunne
47 Nebraska hub
49 Previously
50 State-run game
51 South Pole conqueror
53 Art school subj.
56 Wild about
57 Tasteful
61 Receded
65 Growing medium
66 Drama awards
69 Empty
70 Positive
71 Rations out
72 Heron cousin
73 Must have
74 End of a boat
75 Throat area

DOWN
1 Surrealist painter
2 Home-products brand
3 Part of MHz
4 On the double
5 Use a microwave
6 Actress Lupino
7 — Ness monster
8 Scary noise
9 Beat around the bush
10 Vamishes
11 Helper
12 Posterior
13 Doctrines
21 Corn servings
23 Obtains
25 Heavy metal
26 Egypt's capital
28 Be of use
29 Dupe
30 Harass
31 Pack animal
33 Bundles of cotton
34 Harsh noise
35 Mideast nation
38 Hindu teacher
41 Involved
43 Avoid
46 Many, many years
48 — up: pay
52 Patient old horse
54 They have nucles
55 Dalai Lama's country
57 Part of NBA
58 Adventured
59 Car part
60 Make a footnote
62 Golf great Zaharias
63 Viking name
64 Office furniture
67 Ever, to poets
68 Worker's ID

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

I	R	I	S	H		C	L	E	F		H	O	R	N
R	E	V	U	E		R	I	D	E		A	L	E	E
A	R	I	E	L		E	M	I	R		S	L	A	W
Q	U	E		P	O	T	A	T	O	C	H	I	P	S
I	N	S	P	I	R	E		C	H	E	E	S	E	Y
		E	N	G		A	L	I	A	S
P	R	O	N	G		R	A	I	T	T		T	I	S
R	O	D	S		W	O	R	D	Y		B	A	L	K
E	T	E		K	I	L	O	S		P	E	R	K	Y
		L	I	N	E	N		R	A	E
A	C	C	O	R	D			S	U	R	F	E	R	S
B	L	O	C	K	B	U	S	T	E	R		L	O	P
D	A	N	A		A	H	O	Y		O	M	E	G	A
U	R	A	L		G	U	L	L		T	O	N	E	R
L	A	N	E		S	H	O	E		S	E	A	T	S

11-29-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

NEED A JOB?
HAVE A CAMERA?
FREE ON TUESDAYS?
WORK FOR THE SEXIEST DEPT. @ THE COLLLEGIAN.
EMAIL US:
COLLEGIANPICS@YAHOO.COM
DO IT B4 TIBI & SCOTT CRY

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Farmer Market Soup

Sausage Cacciatore

Ravioli Alfredo (vegetarian)

Beans & Rice (vegan)

DINNER

Farmer Market Soup

Mandarin Chicken

Roast Beef

Mandarin Tofu (vegan)

Garden Burger (vegan) (W Basics)

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Melissa Hammel
Photo Editor: Tibora Gurczye-Blum
Copy Editor: Jim Pignatiello
Production Supervisor: riki Akiel
Production Staff: Cara Horowitz, Lizzy Nielsen

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.27.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

UMass no-show with tourney on line

UNH snatches postseason hopes from men's hockey

By Matthew J. Sacco
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team was officially eliminated from the Hockey East playoffs Tuesday night by a New Hampshire team that was fighting for a much better position than its cellar dwelling opponents.

"We had something at stake tonight as well," Dick Umile said after his Wildcats dealt the Minutemen a 6-0 fatal blow to their play[illegible]

UNH 6
UMass 0

[illegible] "We're trying to keep pace and stay ahead of BC."

Colin Hemingway's power play goal at 15:14 of the opening period ended up being enough for Michael Ayers, who made 26 saves for a shutout in his first game back from injury.

The Wildcats got a gift from referee Tim Benedetto when he whistled Eric Tuttelo for a high-sticking penalty after Lewis Gatre threw off one of his gloves, tackled Turner and buried his head in the ice.

Both players got a double minor for roughing, but the extra pair on the UMass forward gave the first ranked power play unit in Hockey East the chance to take a 1-0 lead in a period in which it was clearly outplayed.

UNH, as good teams do, took full advantage of the refereeing gaffe, going 1-for-2 on the extra man opportunity. Hemingway got his 27th goal of the year off a shorthide rebound from Darren Haydar's wrist shot.

Both teams fired 12 shots in the period but the Minutemen were the team to garner the most chances in the final half of the opening period.

That handed rather quickly in the second period when the Wildcats buried four goals in the first ten minutes of the middle frame, forcing the hook on senior goaltender Mike Johnson in favor of rookie John Arnge.

Tallying for Patrick Foley, Steve Saviano, Justin Aikins and Hemingway busted the game open for the No. 3 Wildcats.

"There were just a couple minutes in the second period where we broke the game open," Umile said. "We had some good scoring chances and we put them away. It all happened pretty quick."

Aikins and Saviano scored 1:14 apart to give UNH a 3-0 lead, but it was Patrick Foley's blueline slapshot that took Johnson out of the game.

With the Wildcats clinging to a one-goal advantage, UMass freshman defenseman Dusty Demaniuk coughed up the puck in his own zone. Ed Caron collected the favor and threaded a goalmouth feed to Aikins who banged it home for a 2-0 lead.

"[Demaniuk] has played great for us for the last month and a half," Don Cahoon said of his rookie defenseman. "It's just a case of freshman growing pains."

Saviano followed with a skillful touch off of a Darren Haydar slapshot from the right wing that all but put the game away.

Warner performed admirably in Johnson's stead, making eight saves and allowing only one goal, a third period breakaway by Jim Abbott.

The loss clinches UMass' second straight season out of the Hockey East playoffs and a feeling among fans that there must be brighter days ahead.

"These guys haven't quit all year," Cahoon said. "Our guys compete from start to finish. Obviously you hope to overachieve and this year, as far as wins and losses go, we underachieved. But we've got one full recruiting class in. Wait until we have two or three, then make a judgment."

The Minutemen will finish out their season on Sunday against eighth place Merrimack while UNH faces a tough weekend series against Boston College as it attempts to solidify the top seed in the upcoming Hockey East tournament.

THE UMASS GOALTENDER [illegible] TO THE HOCKEY EAST TOURNAMENT AFTER FALLING TO UNH'S HEMINGWAY LAST NIGHT AT THE MULLINS CENTER.

Women's lax prepares for season

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

For the second consecutive year, youth will be the primary theme when talking about the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team. After losing five highly influential players last season – second-year Head Coach Phil Wyatt attended the Minutewomen by adding 11 new [illegible] squad that finished a disappointing 6-10 [illegible] and lost to Duquesne in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

UMass will open up the 2002 campaign this afternoon when it takes on Holy Cross at Garber Field with a roster that is very much devoid of seniors, but not [illegible] Minutewomen return from last year's squad including three [illegible] captains Jada Emery and Bridget Byrne. These two, along with the rest of the UMass squad will be looking to pick up the first open-air victory in more than three years.

"Our biggest challenge will be the rash of injuries that have plagued the Minutewomen since the beginning of the preseason. UMass has come [illegible] with a full strength squad as it has prepared for its second opener but things look to be a bit tougher on the field as the squad is finally healthier than it has been for quite some time according to Barnes.

"The nice thing about this team is that every player is able to contribute, whether they have been healthy or coming off an injury," Barnes said. "This past week we've been the healthiest we have been all year and it's exciting."

One player who is just now returning to full strength for the Minutewomen is junior midfielder Lydia Robinson. Robinson appeared in just six games last season before being felled by injury but now looks to be back to the form that saw her tally seven goals and an assist over those six games.

"Having Lydia back adds a spark to the team," Barnes said. "She helps the team become more effective offensively."

Helping Robinson in the UMass attack will be an extensive cast of characters led by Emery as well as a host of others. With the graduation of Rachel Ingrallea, Jax Saber and Kara DePaula, the Minutewomen lost a large chunk of their offensive production a chunk that cannot be filled by just one or two players. Instead Barnes sees an extensive committee of players that will need to pick up the slack.

"All of our players have stepped up [in the absence of the graduated players.]" Barnes said. "As a coaching staff we believe that this is one of the deepest that we've had in a couple years. Everyone works well together as a team, as a unit and I think that's a real complement to the group."

At the other end of the field all eyes will be on junior Cyndi Doyle in the UMass cage. Doyle impressed last season when senior Jen Nardi missed a number of games in the early part of the season following off-season surgery. And now the pressure will be on the Bridgewater, Vt. native to show that she can handle the pressure of being in the spotlight day in and day out.

"Last year I was fortunate enough to get in especially with someone with as much experience as Jen," Doyle said. "I learned a lot from her last year and I had a lot of game experience, especially in big games against Syracuse and Dartmouth. I think that I'm ready for this year."

In front of her will be a defense anchored by Byrne. As a sophomore last season Byrne shown by shutting down some of the nations best attackers. She will be helped by the return of midfielder/defender Kristin St. Hilaire from a knee injury that forced her to miss the entire season in 2001.

LYDIA ROBINSON WILL RETURN TO THE LINEUP FOR THE WOMEN'S LACROSSE TEAM AFTER MISSING A LARGE PORTION OF LAST SEASON WITH AN INJURY.

Turn to LAX page 9

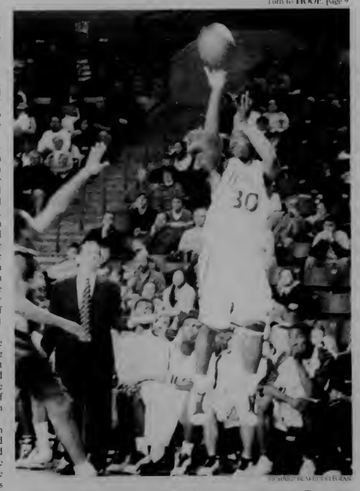
Rams migrate toward senior day

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

All good things must come to an end.

On Wednesday evening in front of the Mullins Center faithful, the home careers of the four seniors on the Massachusetts men's basketball team will come to an end as the Minutemen take on the University of Rhode Island.

Tri-captains Kitwana Rhymer, Eric Williams and Shannon Crooks, as well as reserve forward Ronell Blizzard are closing in on the end of their UMass careers and will look to go out on a high by exacting some revenge on the Rams.



Back on Feb. 2, the Rams handed UMass (11-14, 5-9 Atlantic 10) a 70-59 defeat at the Keaney Gym in Kingston, R.I. That was just the second conference victory for URI (7-18, 3-11 A-10) and it has added just one more since then. However, the Minutemen have not been much better, slumping to just a 2-5 record since falling to the Rams. But one of those wins did come in the Maroon and White's last outing, a 67-54 triumph over Fordham in which Anthony Anderson led the way with 16 points while Rhymer added his fourth double-double of the season with 14 points and 11 rebounds.

That victory also put the Minutemen on the brink of securing the No. 4 seed in the A-10 East Division, meaning that they would take on either Duquesne or George Washington in the first round of next week's A-10 Tournament in Philadelphia.

If the Minutemen are to notch their sixth conference victory and assure themselves of that No. 4 seed they will need a better performance from Crooks than the last time these two New England rivals tipped off. In that game Crooks shot a season worst 1-of-15 from the floor, including 1-of-7 from three-point range for just five points. On Wednesday night he will be looking to show everybody that that performance was an aberration and not the real Shannon Crooks.

In order to win the Minutemen must also control the defensive glass and limit second chance baskets for the Rams. In the first meeting URI pulled down 14 offensive rebounds, many of which came in the game's final three minutes when

Turn to HOOP page 9

SHANNON CROOKS ENCORES A THREE IN FRONT OF HIS OWN BENCH. THE SENIOR GUARD WILL PLAY HIS FINAL COLLEGIATE GAME AT HOME TONIGHT AGAINST RHODE ISLAND.

THE CULTURE OF VIOLEN[illegible] 5.
GIVE PEACE A CHANCE ED/OP PAGE 4.
THE SEASON AHEAD... SPORTS[illegible] PAGE 9.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
THURSDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE NINETY ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.28.02

Election questions? SGA's got answers

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

After much debate over who would be this semester's Chancellor of Elections, a decision was made at last night's Student Government Association's Senate meeting.

Members of the Senate appointed former Senator Linson Naval as the new Chancellor of Elections last night. Senators however, put up a fight once again questioning the motives behind the appointment. The question of whether it was the duty of the Senate or that of Southwest Area Governor Josh Seidman to appoint the Chancellor of the Elections was addressed.

"As far as I can tell from our By-Laws, it states in the SGA Constitution that the area government responsible for the appointment has 14 days to appoint someone, and it's been ten," Senator Keith Taylor said. "I think we owe it to the Southwest Area Government to appoint who they want."

However, other members disagreed stating that the Seidman had plenty of time to appoint a Chancellor of Elections, and that it would still be the Senate's decision whether to accept his recommendation or not.

"I want to be clear in stating that not a single appointed position goes unchecked by the Senate, and no one can be approved without the Senate's approval," Speaker Aaron Saunders said.

Steve Hoeschele, chair of Finance agreed with SGA President John Sheehan, explaining that whether appointed by the Senate or a governor, the overall decision ultimately lies under what the Senate as a body decides.

"We've had two people presented to the Senate, and both have been somewhat qualified, and we have voted them down," Hoeschele said. "I feel that it's the duty of the Senate to their for appoint someone, and Linson will lead the commission

Turn to SGA, page 3

Tequila sunset
The sun sinks over the parking garage, coloring the sky as it descends.

Talk warns against US diet culture

By Bridget Henry
Collegian Correspondent

Guest speaker Laura Fraser lectured at the University of Massachusetts Monday on the problems posed by America's thin-obsessed society. Fraser, a free-lance journalist and graduate of Wesleyan University is the author of Losing It: False Hopes and Fat Profits in the Diet Industry. An ex-bulimic and veteran of dieting, Fraser talked about diet culture in America with a sense of both seriousness and humor.

Fraser began by tracing the fixation on thinness from 1900, where clothing sizes were first standardized, to the present, where people pay billions of dollars to lose weight. She noted that if 1922's Miss America (weighing in at 144 lbs) were to stand on the stage of the 2001 Pageant, she would be twice the size of today's contestants. She noted that the first cases of bulimia were noticed among women who were flappers in 1926.

"From the 1920's on, the trend was thinner, thinner, thinner," Fraser said. She continued to talk about the diet fads of the 1920's and 30's and then moved on to the present, where dieting is at an all-time high. Now focusing on modern day society, Fraser gave three examples of thinness in American culture that disturbed her.

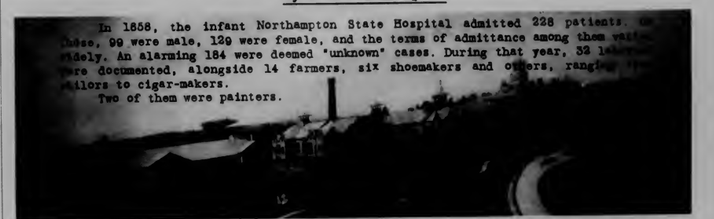
First, she brought up Renee Zellweger's preparation for her role in the movie Bridget Jones Diary, for which she gained approximately 35 lbs. Fraser commented on how ridiculous it was that everyone in the media was focusing on her weight, as though she had ballooned to a size 37.

She then used the example of another recent movie, Shallow Hal, in which the message of finding "inner beauty" is conveyed through Gwyneth Paltrow's size six body.

Her last example was a laugh-inducing shopping experience she had with her transsexual friend. Fraser and her formally male friend were shopping in the women's department for jeans. While Fraser had difficulty finding the right fit for her curvy body, her friend looked great in everything she tried on, receiving praise from other women for how great she looked.

"And I'm thinking, of course she fits into the pants, she's a he! When the clothes are made to fit men, what does that say about our culture?" remarked Fraser, using the funny scenario to address a more serious issue.

Fraser moved on to the problems with dieting. She described how people go on impossible diets or buy faulty products to lose weight and inevitably fail.



"They blame themselves for a lack of willpower instead of the flawed drug or diet," she explained. The other problem, she pointed out is the way Americans, looking for a quick-fix diet drug, are often uneducated about how to use them.

"They think that if one makes you thin, 10 will make you really thin, and a lot of people die this way." She continued to talk about the dangers of diet drugs, protein, liquid,

Turn to DIET, page 3

Anchoring the artist

By Matthew Despres

The puzzle suspended on the wall, an eye-level question curious for attention, exists on the first beat as an equation, the second as literature, and in the next measure as a work of art. It is lyrical and hushed in its black and gray shadows, shifting within them to find a path, an open door, out of its frame. It is the mind of Daniel Vazquez, and it hangs in the revolving gallery at Thorne's Marketplace in Northampton, Massachusetts.

When you are first introduced to "Manson," you'll be standing less than a yard away, close enough to hear things like sunshine and man behind the gun, but still too far to pick up its whispers of family and dreamers. That will take a second step. Another beyond that will give you Helter-Skelter; refocus your attention, and take nothing.

It will tell you to burn all your bridges.

Cease to exist.

Genevieve Burnett, "State Hospital Ward," oil on canvas.

The collage is cut with paint and pen, pencil, words and, most sharply, Vazquez's vision. It blossoms with youth. It is the work of a mental health patient and an artist, the latter a distinction lazily acknowledged in our past, present and, perhaps, future states of American society. The legitimacy of artists like Vazquez is routinely dismissed in most seets, the art dubbed an extraneous activity for those in recovery, a footnote to be buried in the endless pages of therapy. A face has emerged in support of the other side, however, and in the Pioneer Valley, those distinct features belong to Michael Tillyer.

Tillyer saw an artist in the mirror as a child and began a life of carving with the hope of one day setting it free.

"I've had an interest in wood-carving since I was a kid," he says, looking past the window of his blue pickup and into the drops of the light Northampton traffic. "I was always interested in creating abstract shapes, of finding my way through the wood."

We're on the road to Easthampton, a short, achy detour through the joints of the Valley body, before circling back to the Anchor House of the Artists. The Anchor House is Tillyer's conception, a space where mental health patients can attend to the serious pursuit of their work and have it treated as such. The house was born in 1997, nourished by two small grants from the Department of Mental Health, as well as the Massachusetts Cultural Council and private donations. Five volunteer board members help with the upkeep. Tillyer receives no salary for his efforts here other than the satisfaction gained in watching these artists find their way.

Following the grain and, at times working against it, Tillyer has found his own way through dual degrees in art and psychiatry, piecing together along the way a career as a nationally exhibited sculptor. Born in Sturbridge, Mass., he has occupied time and space on both coasts, as well as some of the in-between. Along the way, he says, "I had a daughter and it changed my work. It had an impact. It became less technical and more narrative. I produced something more human."

On this sly, warm afternoon, we pass a dozen men out on the street who could be Mike Tillyer. Neat in his appearance and deliberate in speech, he'd be the suit stepping halfway out the café door, an espresso warm at his side in a five-finger waltz. He'll be the sweater and slacks set on pause at the corner, youthful features caught by a salted beard, speaking to one of a handful of people he'll pass by and recognize. He won't be the busker who has earned $11.43 in change outside of "Cha Cha Cha" that morning, but he could be responsible for the last dollar dropped there. On the street, at ground level, he's attending to his own dreams, chasing furiously like everyone else.

At forty miles an hour, more than enough for the broken yellow lines ahead of us to rupture and catch each other in one long, single directional, he applies his own brakes, molding each thought into a true representation of itself. Still, in his own sculpted language, he discusses with me the combinations of his life.

"As is the case with most artists, I've worked another job, and that other job has been working with people. The work that resonates with me most is that which concerns improving the quality of life and the livelihood of people. Over the years, working both as an artist and social service worker, I've had times when I've been able to get small grants and combine the two – offering people opportunities to express themselves as artists. I did a number of those and was meeting people who had no chance to show, to develop, living on the rehabilitation wasn't there."

Kevin Bourcius, "Fox Humans at the State Hospital," oil on canvas.

Turn to ANCHOR, page 2

"An artist with schizophrenia shows us a world we'll never know."
-Michael Tillyer

Design by Jennifer Eastwood and Mike Eckel; Photos by Vince Musi

Anchor

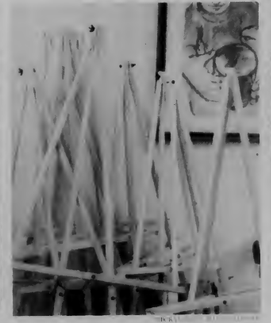
continued from page 1

The abandoned Northampton State Hospital (NSH) on upper West Street, past the reclining Smith College athletic fields, is the poster child of the rehabilitation that wasn't there. From 1858 until 1993, the honest intentions of the building evaporated. Too many patients were admitted under questionable circumstances, too many patients were left uncared for and, by the middle of the last century, there were simply too many patients. It was reflective of a growing trend: institutionalization was in a rapid decline, and the fallout was the reintroduction of countless, untreated patients into either community based rehab programs or idle lives poorly supported by government funds. The curve fell into sync with Tillyer's own explorations, and he soon connected with the latter, pouring his effort into a project that would engage the patients rather than place them haphazardly on a shelf to be forgotten.

"When patients went into a rehab program, they would hear, 'Well, that's nice you're an artist, maybe that can heal you, but it's not going to serve you to meet your rehabilitation ends, so we'll ignore that part of you and see if we can make you a good janitor, a good florist – let's see if we can pay attention to that'."

His voice gently expands in an accumulated mass of frustration when discussing his years of rubbing against such ignorance. He says, "For some people, that approach may work, but for those that were artistic, it seemed they were unable to stick to that type of program. So, I was trying to conceive of a way that would make what people were already doing for work, work for them. What do artists need? They need studio space, gallery shows, exposure – you can't just be an artist on your own. You need to join a community that's especially setup to promote your own work, which is how the Anchor House came about."

In 1994, Tillyer received a small grant to open a studio at Thorne's, and with the artists that gathered there, began looking at the concepts of hope and time as being thematic in their work. Images of anchors began appearing in the pieces, and they adopted the symbolic reference as a calling card. "The Anchor Society" began to show their work, and the first seeds were planted.



Northampton has tapped the most substantial parts of the old city and injected them all into a vein called Main Street. The house itself rests under unassuming cover on one of the main drag's branches, the outreach of a peak downtown scene and the neighbor of restaurants, shops and art-house theaters.

Tillyer pulls us around the gravel carpet in the rear of the building. "If someone says you're art is interesting, because you're schizophrenic, then it takes away your validity," he says. "An artist with schizophrenia shows us a world we'll never know."

Look for tomorrow's continuation, as we take you inside the Anchor House.

Chrome curves fit most sports car's face

Easels line the wall waiting to be put to use by residents

Paintings cut number the amount of wall space at the Anchor House

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts and is supported by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as the College Signal in 1907, the Boyle Collegian in 1914 and then the Collegian in 1940. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been published since January 1984. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 and ask for [illegible].

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibisa Girczyc Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siminski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphitti's Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

CURRY
$1,000. Low Price Guarantee on every New car at CURRY!
HONDA ISUZU SUBARU
www.curryhondamass.com

HONDA
2002 Accord SE $169./mo lease for 36 months
LOADED! sunroof, automatic, power windows, power locks, tilt, cruise, cd
2.9% 36 month financing with approved credit
$169 lease with 12K per year $349 due at signing includes 1st payment plus tax tags reg fees Model#CG668
Curry Honda • 767 Memorial Drive • Chicopee

UNDER $10,000. Used Car Superstore
98 Mits. Mirage cpe 39k #1355 $7390.00
95 Honda Civic cpe. 45k, #2511 $8250.00
97 Chevy Malibu 4dr, loaded, #21305 $8350.00
00 Kia Sephia 4dr, at, ac, #1317 $8690.00
96 Mercury Cougar 107.36k, #140871 $8850.00
98 Dodge Caravan 7 pass, #1286 $9750.00
99 Saturn S12 36k, #h26943a $9995.00

SUBARU
2002 Forester L $18699. 2.9% APR Financing
2002 Legacy L Sedan $17799
2.9% apr financing available
CURRY- Voted #1 in the Country in customer service!
Curry Subaru • 767 Memorial Drive • Chicopee

877-GO-CURRY
Next to The Huke Lau, exit 5 Mass Pike • 593-1155

Domino'S Pizza
Two Weeks Only
ONLY .99 cents
Buy Any Pizza Get The Second Pizza For .99 Cents
GOOD Sunday Monday Tuesday Wednesday Thursday ONLY
$6.99 MEDIUM LARGE $7.99 1 TOPPING PIZZA LUNCH SPECIAL GOOD 11am TO 4pm 2 SODAS 99¢
$11.99 LARGE PIZZA WITH 1 TOPPING +CINNA STICKS
$19.99 EXTRA LARGE 2 TOPPING PIZZA 2 LITER SODA BREADSTICKS 10 WINGS
$7.99 1 10-IN PIZZA +1 TWISTY BREAD +1COKE
$12.99 LARGE 1 TOPPING PIZZA 2-LITER COKE
$9.99 MEDIUM 2 TOPPING PIZZA +2 SODAS
256-8911

LIQUORS 44
EVERYDAY PRICING!
DOMESTIC ½ KEGS
BUD, BUD LIGHT ..... '49
COORS LIGHT ..... '48
MICHELOB, MICH. LIGHT '49
NATURAL LIGHT & ICE ... '47
ROLLING ROCK ..... '47
MICRO BREW ½ KEGS
BERKSHIRE BREWING CO. '88 (STEEL, TRADITIONAL PORTER, WHITE ALE, IPA, BLACK & TAN)
SIERRA NEVADA PALE '112
SAM ADAMS ..... '112 (LAGER, SEASONAL)
SAMPSON ..... '99 (LAGER, SEASONAL)
KILLIANS IRISH RED ..... '73
DUNDEE HONEY BROWN '60
SMUTTYNOSE IPA ..... '109
COORS LIGHT & COORS 30 12OZ CANS $17.49 30 PACK
KEYSTONE LIGHT 30 12OZ CANS $11.49 30 PACK
KILLIAN'S IRISH RED 12PK BOTTLES $9.49 12 PACK
HEINEKEN & AMSTEL 12PK BOTTLES $10.99 12 PACK
GUINNESS STOUT & DRAUGHT 6PK BOTTLES $5.99 6 PACK
BUSCH & BUSCH LIGHT 24 12OZ BAR BOTTLES $9.99 CASE
SKYY BLUE 6PK BOTTLES $5.99 6 PACK
PRICES AS ORDERED IN ADVANCE ALL KEGS PLUS DEPOSIT
MARCH MAGNESS!!
WOODBRIDGE CHARDONNAY MERLOT CABERNET SAUVIGNON 1.5L $10.99
STONE CELLARS BY BERINGER CHARDONNAY MERLOT CABERNET SAUVIGNON 1.5L $11.99
TALUS WINES CHARDONNAY MERLOT CABERNET SAUVIGNON 1.5L $10.99
BANROCK WINES CHARDONNAY 1.5L $8.99
CONCHA Y TORO CHARDONNAY 1.5L $5.99
CAVIT PINOT GRIGIO 1.5L $9.99
FOXHORN WHITE ZINFANDEL 1.5L $4.69
GORDON'S VODKA 1.75L $13.99
BACARDI LIMON & "O" RUM 750ML $9.99
TANQUERAY GIN 1.75L $25.99
JOHN JAMESON IRISH WHISKEY 750ML $16.99
WILD TURKEY 101 750ML $13.99
MALIBU RUM 1.75L $20.99
CLAN MACGREGOR SCOTCH 1.75L $12.99
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
DON'T DRINK & DRIVE

SGA

continued from page 1

through the elections."

Aside from the appointment of Naval as Chancellor of Elections, the Senate also approved four students to the elections commission.

The Finance Committee presented a motion requesting a $1500 allocation to the Student Film Society of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. The motion's allocation would be used for a hip-hop television show that will be airing for one full semester this coming Fall 2002.

"This application is the most innovative request for project funding that we've seen," Boeschke said. "The show will be taped in New York at the Brooklyn Television Center, where they will be taping their entire season in one day."

Anthony Robinson also presented on behalf of the Student Film Society explaining that it would involve 15 other students from the five college campuses.

"It's more cost effective to be done in New York, and easier for our guests to appear on the show," Robinson said. "Our goal is to highlight things unavailable to us here. We want to show behind the scenes view of music and express a different viewpoint."

The request however, sparked debate amongst Senators as they questioned the morality of the show, as well as its educational value. Senator Zachary Spilman questioned whether or not the show would promote violence amongst its viewers.

"I don't thing that we should throw money to a show that is addressing issues such as this," Spilman said. "I don't think it's funny, what some of these artist portray and I think we need to think about where we are spending our money."

Robinson addressed Spilman's concerns explaining that the show will be aired on UVC, the University station, and they hold a broadcast standard in which the Student Film Society will follow.

After further debate the motion requesting the allocation of $1500 to the Student Film Society was passed by the Senate.

Issues surrounding this coming Tuesday's Residential Advisor's vote to be Union or non-Union brought forth debate amongst Senators. Sheehan and Senator Justin Provincher placed a motion on the Senate agenda requesting for the SGA's support of RA's right to vote in the up and coming elections.

"We're not saying that the SGA is taking sides with this motion, but that we recognize and support them," Sheehan said.

Members again questioned the motion, explaining that, by approving a motion backing RA's right to vote, the Senate would therefore be taking sides in the impending decision.

"We shouldn't vote on this until after they vote to become union or non-union," Spilman said. "Lets not try and stick our fingers in everyone else's piece of the pie."

Senator Jessica Temen disagreed with Spilman, he explaining that due the lack of support the University Administration, RA's should have all the support, more specifically, from the undergraduate Senate body.

"There are 360 RA's on this campus, and they are all undergraduate students, and it's unfair to neglect their opinions," Temen said. "RA's are not asking for fee increases, but for the Administration to respect us and our jobs on this campus."

The Senate passed the motion in support of RA's right to vote.

Bread for Birds

John and Sophia Kerns help keep the campus geese alive by feeding them scraps of bread.

Beam me up!

Sci-fi club is holding a meeting tonight at 6:30, in the Campus Center basement for anyone interested.

diet

continued from page 1

semi-starvation diets and dieter's teas (which contain laxatives, deprive the body of potassium and upset electrolyte balances). She listed various cases of diet drugs that induced heart failure, some as recent as this year.

Fraser was adamant that "all dieting really causes is depression," and noted that with yo-yo dieting, psychological problems are always prevalent. The topic then moved to obesity, and doctors trying to get Hispanic and African-American women to care about thinness.

"Obesity and bulimia are two sides of the same coin," she said. She stated that a major problem with medical interpretations of obesity is that they don't factor in exercise. She pointed out that no one has ever proven a correlation between being overweight and developing heart disease, and referred to a study that concluded overweight men who exercised were no more likely to die than thin men who did.

Fraser noted that a major misconception is the idea that one cannot be healthy and overweight. She stressed that exercise is necessary to be healthy; just because a person is deemed overweight by medical standards does not mean they are any closer to death than the average-sized person. Doctors are now implementing diets to people who are as little as 10 and 20 lbs. overweight.

According to Fraser, medical dieting is another disturbing trend. She described a comical past situation in which a physician told her, "the Bible tells you that you shouldn't eat too much," and recommended she limit her calories to 500 a day and perhaps begin taking medication.

She mentioned the popularly prescribed drug Dexfenfluramine (PhenFen) that was finally recalled after it was proven to be the cause of, among other dangerous side effects, serious heart valve problems. Fraser pointed out that the Harvard research that allowed the drug to be FDA approved was actually funded by the pharmaceutical company that discovered PhenFen. What seems most unfortunate to Fraser is the way medical dieting is said to be the future of medicine.

Frowning, she said, "a lot more diet drugs are on the way."

Fraser then talked about semi-starvation diets, like Weight Watchers, the Zone diet, and Jenny Craig. These programs, she explained, are all funded by the premise that people who lose weight will regain it. In her evaluation, all three programs are problematic, because though they allow a person to lose weight for a short amount of time, they are not programs one can stay on indefinitely.

Placed in a semi-covert membership at Jenny Craig and her experience at Weight Watchers when she was 13, Fraser did conclude that Weight Watchers was the least of the three evils, because "they allow you to eat real food" (while assigning a point system to everything you eat). In contrast, she noted that signing up for Jenny Craig was like "deliberately buying airplane food."

Fraser concluded her lecture with what she called the "Anti-Diet," a 10-step process in which people are advised to stop dieting according to anyone else's rules. The Anti-Diet operates under the principles of moderation, exercise, and eating "what you like to eat." This is not to say that someone can live off of junk food – that is where the moderation comes in.

Key parts of this Anti-Diet include "not depriving yourself, eating what you like, and stopping when you are full." Eating like a grown up (buying and cooking healthy foods) was another suggestion, followed by eating like a European (three sit-down meals a day, no snacks) and exercising. She also advised not to talk about dieting, and not to compliment friends for losing weight; this reinforces the obsession with being thin.

She recalled the first few weeks of her struggle to end her bulimia, a process that took years to complete. When she stopped vomiting, people told her that she had let herself go and made negative comments, when she was "just trying to digest food like a normal person."

Perhaps the most helpful advice Fraser offered was her last message. She told people to accept the size they were right now and not to envision themselves as being 10 pounds lighter. She ended the lecture by saying, "don't buy products or pay attention to media that pushes thin image, emphasizing thinness as the most important thing. Be rebellious, be sexy, and show the world how great it is to be in your body."

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BUSTA RHYMES
WITH SPECIAL GUEST
SUNDAY, MARCH 10, 2002
JOHN M. GREENE HALL, SMITH COLLEGE
8 P.M.
DOORS OPEN AT 7 P.M.
TICKETS ON SALE FRIDAY, FEB. 22ND
GENERAL PUBLIC, $22, AT:
FOR THE RECORD
NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE
TICKETMASTER
5-COLLEGE W/ VALID ID, $18, AT:
UMASS, TICKETS UNLIMITED
AMHERST COLLEGE CAMPUS CENTER, RM. 103
MT. HOLYOKE-BLANCHARD CAMPUS CENTER, INFO. DESK
GENESIS - THE TOUR
PRESENTED BY SMITH COLLEGE REC COUNCIL

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
BROTHERHOOD OF THE WOLF
(LE PACTE DES LOUPS)
★★★★ EXCITING, SMART & SEXY!" Ty Burr, BOSTON GLOBE
"A WILD RIDE!" Joe Leydon, VARIETY
"A SPECTACULAR FANTASY-ACTION EPIC..." Fabulous action sequences! It's unforgettable! Dave Chonak, NEW HAVEN ADVOCATE
Note: The ONLY Area Showing!
Starts Fri. (7 Days ONLY!!) Daily 6:15 & 9:00
Downtown Northampton
Academy of Music
Movie Line: 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com
Nightly Bidding at www.uBidOn.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
FRIDAY 2/22 THURSDAY 2/28/2002
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
In the Bedroom(R) 12:30 4:15 7:15 10:20
Hart's War(R) 12:50 4:45 7:45 10:40*
John Q(PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
Collateral Damage(R) 12:30 4:30 7:40 10:20*
Big Fat Liar(PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:10 9:50*
Crossroads(PG13) 12:00 2:15 4:35 7:05 9:45*
Super Troopers(R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15*
Return to Neverland(G) 12:35 2:30 4:40 7:15 9:30*
The Count Of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:05 7:00 10:00
Black Hawk Down(R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:30
A Beautiful Mind(PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:30
Lord Of the Rings(PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
Sneak preview 40 Days & 40 Nights 2/23/02 7:30
Senior Movie 2/28/02 John Q doors open at 11:45
* no passes, supersavers
1 DAY ADVANCE TICKET SALES AND PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT & MORE!
$500.00 BONUS
JOIN OUR TEAM OF SELECT ENTERTAINERS AND RECEIVE A $500 CASH BONUS!!*
*TERMS AND CONDITIONS APPLY
BEAUTIFUL PEOPLE ONLY NEED APPLY!
(413) 532-3621

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM

"WRITING IS A DOG'S LIFE, BUT THE ONLY LIFE WORTH LIVING" (E.B. WHITE)

ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Airport safety vital

System needs a change

A story by the Associated Press yesterday reported that twenty individuals who had worked security for Logan Airport in Boston are facing federal charges after investigators revealed they had lied to secure their employment at the airport.

Logan hasn't been the only location to fall under the microscope. In December, over 270 employees at Salt Lake City International Airport were dismissed under similar circumstances.

Airport and travel security in general has always been a concern, but particularly relevant in this, the post – 9/11 world, where nearly every situation is deemed suspect and approached with extreme caution.

Just how much caution and discretion is being employed remains unclear and, in the wake of those attacks and subsequent threats, highly unsettling. Some programs the federal government has enacted have worked with varying degrees of success; those variations have been too great, however, and ultimately compromise the safety of each passenger, on any plane, on any given day.

"This federal involvement strengthens the ability of airports around the country to weed out individuals that have misled the federal government," said Jose Juves, the spokesman for the Massachusetts Port Authority (MPA), in the AP story. "We did the maximum check permissible under the law with information made available to Massport."

Clearly these laws are due for change.

If significant amounts of people are getting through and are lying to gain employment in positions that involve the safety of thousands, then sweeping reform is in order. Any test, interview or other method of screening that allows the false presentation of background to filter through so easily that it allows even one individual to slide through, simply has to be reevaluated.

Nerves and responses were high immediately following 9/11 – now is no time to rest on our laurels. If anything, the efforts to prevent similar events should increase, and that not only includes the passengers of these planes, but the people that work for them as well.

According to the MPA, hundreds of applicants have been denied jobs, a sign that, at the very least, some aspects of these initiatives are succeeding. It takes only one failure to unravel that trust, though, the sense of safety vital to our everyday lives.

Regardless of the national and world climates, we deserve more. The right to safety is just that: a right. No system will be perfect, but we can make strides in getting there, in knowing that, at the very least, everything possible has been done.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Information from Boston.com and the Associated Press was used in the writing of this column.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

Giving peace a chance?

DAN LAMOTHE

Someone finally gave an inch. Amazing. Is there really hope for the Holy Land?

Saudi Arabia's peace proposal for the conflict between Israel and Palestine is a beginning. Saudi Crown Prince Abdullah has offered Israel recognition as a nation, security, and the right to trade. In return, Israel would have to withdraw from the West Bank, the Gaza Strip, and part of Jerusalem, giving up land that they captured in the 1967 Mideast War.

So it sounds easy now, right? There's a peace offer on the table, right? It ain't that simple. Peace is going to take a lot more than someone throwing an offer out on the table and someone else accepting it with open arms.

Israel's leaders would love peace. They really would. They're as sick of the crap as anyone. But withdraw from all of those territories? Give up the Strip and the West Bank? For the state of Israel to give up places like that, they're going to need a lot more than a promise. The Gaza Strip and the West Bank are as much a part of Jewish culture as Jerusalem is itself – its not meaningless land to them.

Concessions, obviously, have to be made on both sides. Prince Abdullah's proposal is a big first step – it's essentially the first time that any Arab nation has said that it will recognize Israel under any circumstances. That's a positive. However, Abdullah's proposal asks Israel to give up a lot – more than most Israelis will probably be comfortable with.

Israel Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and his aides want more details. Can you blame them? How many times before have proposals, treaties, and peace talks blown up in their faces?

Sharon has said that he "would be willing to meet with anybody from Saudi Arabia, formally, informally, publicly, discreetly, whatever, to get information about the significance of this idea."

That's huge, too, because there is zero chance at peace unless the lines of communication are open.

There are several big problems, though. Regardless of how much things improve at the negotiation table, it doesn't change the way things are on the streets overnight. People have minds of their own. If a Palestinian meathead wants to open fire on a crowded sidewalk and mow down Jews waiting for a bus, he will. If an Israeli soldier gets nervous in a crowd of Palestinians and finds himself with an itchy trigger finger – well, that will happen too.

Yasser Arafat and Sharon and their respective peoples need to remember that. Peace is not going to come easily. One needs only to go as far back as last week to remember that, as pregnant women, 16-year-old girls, and citizens at the bus stop all found themselves under fire. Why? Because they were Jewish, or because they were Palestinian – there's no other reason. As long as that mentality exists with the wingnuts on the streets, bringing about change isn't going to be easy.

The United States recognizes that. While they're all for peace negotiations, cease fires, and progress, there's also a great deal of skepticism. White House officials acknowledge that, with one of State Department official saying that while the Saudi proposal was a "significant, positive development," it was not a "concrete" proposal. Priority one: a comprehensive peace plan still needs to be hashed out. Attaining peace is going to be a long and tedious process, and without some sort of solid plan, it stands no chance.

Ignorant, angry people act in ignorant, angry ways. Arafat and Sharon need to stay rational, even if violence breaks out again. It's the only way they are going to lead the Holy Land into peace. Two Palestinians and three Israelis were killed in violent attacks on Monday by various groups of zealous nuts. The initial reaction that Israel's leaders took is exactly the kind that they need to avoid. Although they've backed off since, their first reaction was to call off agreements made between the two sides that had been made last Thursday. Angry, hasty decisions like this will lead to bad things and more violence. That helps no one.

Sharon and his aides have expressed interest in the Saudi proposal. At the same that they praise the proposal, they're "disagreeing with its contents." That's fine – but they'd better be listening, and they'd better be willing to communicate.

They'd be fools if they didn't. Pride only gets you so far. Unless it gets put aside, the peace process will never get anywhere.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

On the web: www.dailycollegian.com

Campus Center blackout leaves workers in dark

JENNIFER EASTWOOD

Only fellow insomniacs will truly comprehend why I was working until about 5 a.m. on Monday night to the Collegian graphics room in the Campus Center Basement on a feature's layout not due for another two days in the first place. Classical jazz music served as comfortable background noise while I worked alone that night. A few tablets of rose-colored and printed copies of the feature in mid-creation lay about the room, giving it that personal, "this is my space for tonight feeling."

Then it happened. Everything went dark and silent. Everything. From the smooth jazz that belonged to Michael, a pleasant fellow from Michigan working a late shift as a WMUA radio DJ. Quickly as possible, I left my way along the hallway wall that led to the WMUA studio, which, to my surprise, turned out to be dimly lit.

You see this studio, unlike any area of the Collegian or the rest of the Campus Center Basement, had emergency lights. Hmm. What a concept. An emergency lighting system put in place in case something like a blackout were to occur, which, I might add, would have the same effect on the basement regardless if it were three in the morning or afternoon. What will they think of next?

Michael soon phoned the police, informing them of our little dilemma and asking for someone with a flashlight to be sent down so that we could get out of the basement without walking into a wall, tripping over something, or injuring ourselves in any of the other assorted possible forms one could imagine when one cannot see and has no direction.

We were then left with nothing to do but wait. And wait. And wait some more. Time passe- slowly when you have nothing to do but sit there and bond with a newfound out-of-stater... leading us to muse over how frustrating it is when Massachusetts's 4th dentes look at you as if you're some sort of an alien when you don't know exactly where "Massachusetts random town X" is located.

Every now and then, voices could be heard coming from the floor above. Michael would even call out now and again in attempts to grab someone's attention. However, it was to no avail. The eeriness of the darkness combined with the faint voices that would not acknowledge his calls seemed all too surreal, as if it were no more than a scene drafted for the movie script.

After another call to the police to ensure they hadn't forgotten about us and bit more waiting, a tiny blond female security officer with a well-armed, high-powered flashlight finally came to our aid. At this point, I had decided to leave my car at rest in the affectionately dubbed "bat cave" part of the Campus Center Garage, where I would retrieve it early the next morning without, most thankfully, acquiring a ticket from the ever-diligent people at Parking Services.

Thus, we three climbed the now illuminated stairs together and parted ways at the top, whereupon we reached the Campus Center Concourse family lit from outside lamps shining their light through the glass doors.

Yes, this marks the end of my story on the Campus Center blackout, a phenomena that the security officer pointed out is actually a rarity. Southwest has its annual blackouts, all hell breaks loose, and it makes the front page of the paper the next morning. The Campus Center at night experiences the same thing: save the rioting and having more than a handful of people witness it first hand, and thus it gets this matter-of-fact Ed/Op a few days later. Such are the ways of reporting. What more can be said? It was definitely an... enlightening experience.

Jennifer Eastwood is a Collegian staff member

Tyson dangerous for everyone

SEAN JACQUET

You might think Mike Tyson's actions of late would earn either a suspension or a lifetime ban from the sport of boxing. Instead, Tyson is slated to face current heavyweight champ Lennox Lewis June 8 at the MCI Center in Washington D.C. Boxing commissioner Mike Brown approved the fight after the Nevada Boxing Commission denied Tyson a license to box in Las Vegas.

The initial denial by the NBC was a step in the right direction toward ending Tyson's career. Tyson, who faces rape charges for the second time, is a clown and a danger to himself and all those around him. He recently threw glass Christmas ornaments at reporters in the lobby of a hotel in Havana, Cuba. At the press conference to announce the Tyson-Lewis fight, he charged Lewis, threw a punch at a member of Lewis's entourage and gestured toward reporters while grabbing his crotch and calling everybody "motherfuckers." Classy behavior, no doubt, but these certainly aren't isolated tirades. Tyson has already spent time in prison for rape and has a history of domestic abuse.

His transgressions also extend into the ring. Remember when he bit off Evander Holyfield's ear in a premeditated attack? After another fight with Holyfield, Tyson promised to "eat his children" (illegitimate and otherwise).

Tyson, quite simply, is a madman and a shadow of his former self. He is no longer Iron Mike of the late 80's, and his behavior is becoming more and more erratic. The last time Tyson beat a quality opponent was in 1991, when he beat Razor Ruddock. Since then, he has beaten up on a collection of stiffs (hello, Peter McNeely), and lost twice to Evander Holyfield.

Lewis, at 6'5" and 250 pounds, is much more physically imposing than Tyson (5'10", 220). Tyson, at the brawl/press conference and the tirade in the Cuban hotel, appeared as though he hadn't been in the gym in months. Sources say the visibly overweight Tyson hasn't been training at all for the fight. Lewis, however, is not a fighter to be taken lightly as evidenced by his masterful fourth round knockout of Hasem Rahman in November. Lewis is a smarter fighter, and brilliant tactician. He is able to dissect opponents with his long reach, yet he can land the knockout punch when he senses a lapse in the opponent's defense.

Tyson, on the other hand, is washed up. A victim of his own hoorish behavior and swanky lifestyle, Tyson can no longer hack it in the ring with the heavyweight champ. His skills have eroded, along with his desire to dominate. The devastating upper cut, Tyson's trademark in the late 80's, isn't as ferocious as it used to be. Perhaps it is this knowledge that has kept this fight on hold for so long.

At any point during the last two years Tyson could have requested, and received, a bout with Lewis. Lewis wanted to solidify his reputation as the best fighter in recent memory. The only way to do that was to defeat Mike Tyson. Don King could smell the enormous profit this fight would generate. If so many people wanted to see this fight, how come it took so long?

Tyson, quite simply, didn't want this fight then, and many insiders doubt he wants it now. Some have suggested Tyson deliberately started the press conference brawl, hoping the fight would be canceled as a result. After seeing an overweight, out-of-shape Tyson, it's hard to argue with that. This fight presents a match up between the heavyweight champ who is in his prime, and a former champ, who barely resembles the fighter that once ruled the sport.

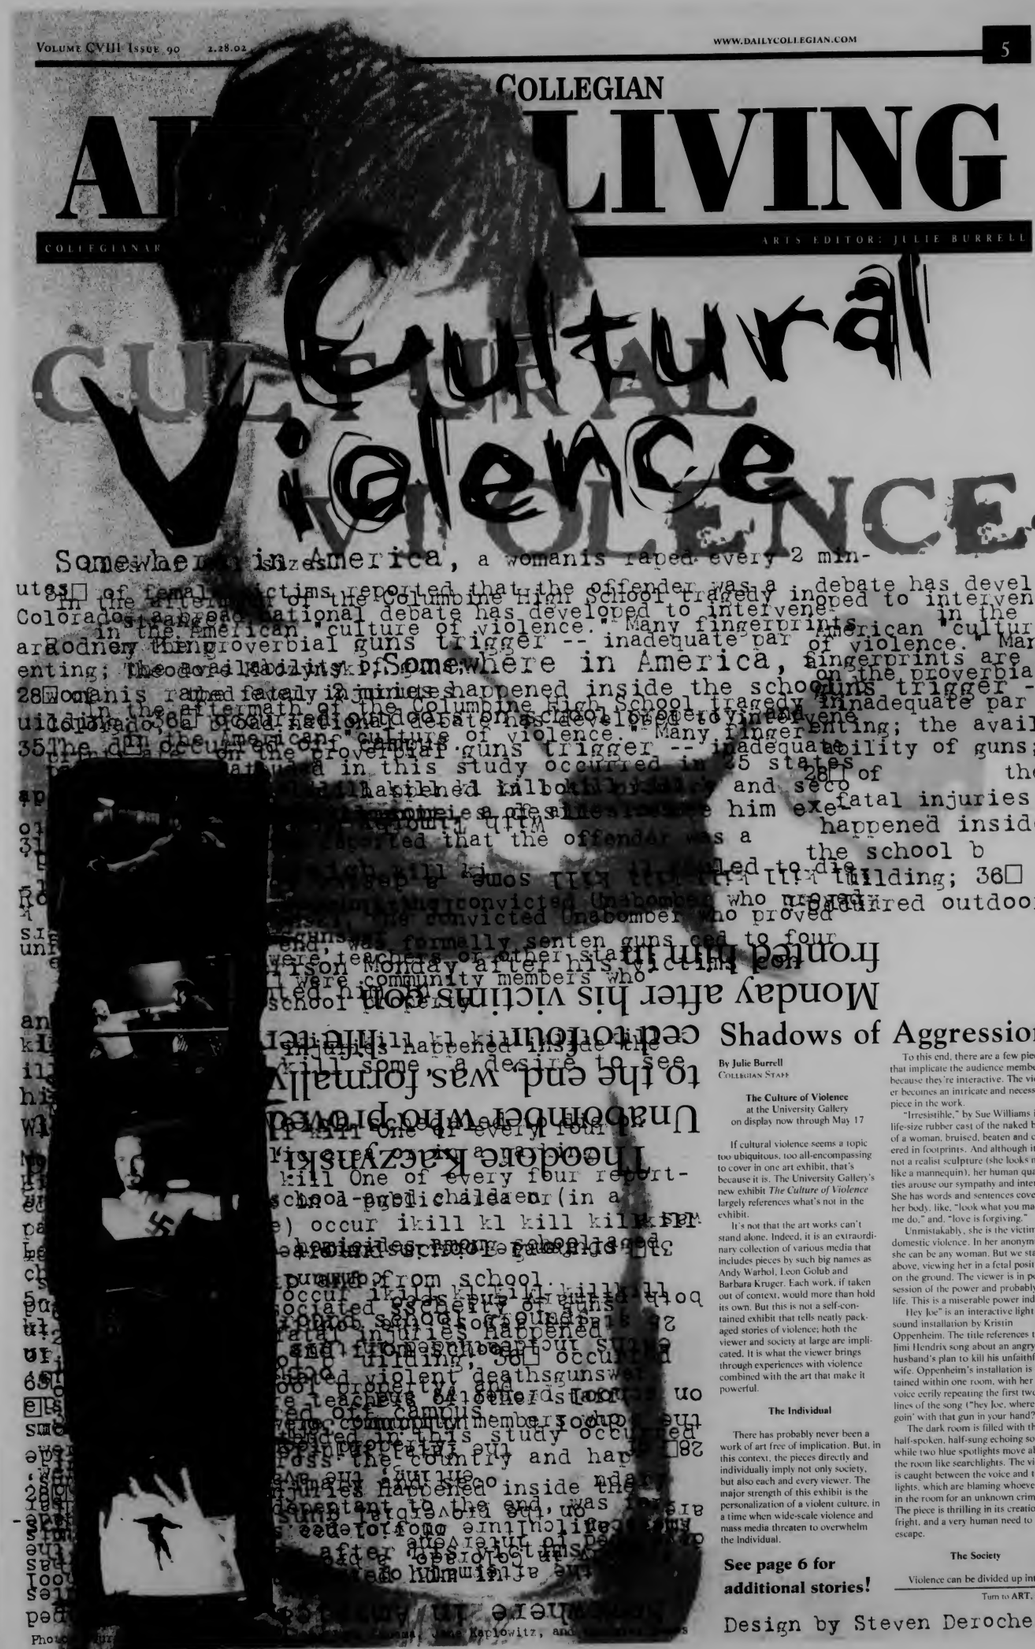
Still, the allure is there. While Tyson is quite evidently a maniac, and no longer the fighter he was, people believe he can somehow return to form. Despite Lewis's superiority, the Tyson fight is a fantasy match up for some fans, pitting boxing's past against its present. People pay top dollar for pay-per-view events to catch a glimpse of the Tyson of old.

Or is it to see what he'll do next? Fans have come to expect a certain amount of controversy when Tyson is involved, and this fight is no different. The aforementioned brawl was, according to some boxing insiders, staged in order to generate excitement. It comes as no surprise that Tyson, being the clown that he is, would participate, but Lewis is a classy, dignified, and charismatic man, one of the few gentlemen left in boxing. To see him participate in a scripted melee is disappointing.

People realize that if Tyson doesn't give Lewis a good fight, at least he will do something crazy. Will he bite Lewis's ear? Nose? Elsewhere? What can he possibly come up with? No doubt he'll think of something to send the viewers home satisfied.

Tyson has become boxing's Dennis Rodman. Neither will be remembered for their talent, or even the titles they have won. Both will leave a legacy of outrageous behavior and lengthy police records. The notable difference, of course, is that Rodman has never been charged with rape.

If boxing allows this fight to come off, it will once again allow Tyson to go unpunished. Boxing has failed to take action in the past, and this presented a chance to at least partially repair the sport's damaged image. Instead, a criminal has been allowed to fight, a decision that can only further hurt boxing's credibility. Tyson has become serious detriment to the sport of boxing, himself, and others. If Don King needed somebody to act the fool, Tyson was a wise choice. As a result, boxing's legitimacy as a sport remains in serious jeopardy. Of course, serious disciplinary action should have been taken against Tyson. He hasn't learned from his mistakes, and apparently the sport of boxing hasn't either.



Sean Jacquet is a UMass student.

Columns, letters, thoughts, ideas, gripes, complaints, whinings, etc: We welcome them all at collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

COLLEGIANAR ARTS EDITOR: JULIE BURRELL

Shadows of Aggression

By Julie Burrell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Culture of Violence
at the University Gallery
on display now through May 17

If cultural violence seems a topic too ubiquitous, too all-encompassing to cover in one art exhibit, that's because it is. The University Gallery's new exhibit The Culture of Violence largely references what's not in the exhibit.

It's not that the art works can't stand alone. Indeed, it is an extraordinary collection of various media that includes pieces by such big names as Andy Warhol, Leon Golub and Barbara Kruger. Each work, if taken out of context, would more than hold its own. But this is not a self-contained exhibit that tells neatly packaged stories of violence; both the viewer and society at large are implicated. It is what the viewer brings through experiences with violence combined with the art that make it powerful.

The Individual

There has probably never been a work of art free of implication. But, in this context, the pieces directly and individually imply not only society, but also each and every viewer. The major strength of this exhibit is the personalization of a violent culture, in a time when wide-scale violence and mass media threaten to overwhelm the individual.

See page 6 for additional stories!

To this end, there are a few pieces that implicate the audience member because they're interactive. The viewer becomes an intricate and necessary piece in the work.

"Irresistible," by Sue Williams is a life-size rubber cast of the naked body of a woman, bruised, beaten and covered in foxprints. And although it's not a realist sculpture (she looks more like a mannequin), her human qualities arouse our sympathy and interest. She has words and sentences covering her body, like, "look what you made me do," and, "love is forgiving."

Unmistakably, she is the victim of domestic violence. In her anonymity, she can be any woman. But we stand above, viewing her in a fetal position on the ground. The viewer is in possession of the power and probably her life. This is a miserable power indeed.

Hey Joe" is an interactive light and sound installation by Kristin Oppenheim. The title references the Jimi Hendrix song about an angry husband's plan to kill his unfaithful wife. Oppenheim's installation is contained within one room, with her voice eerily repeating the first two lines of the song ("hey Joe, where you goin' with that gun in your hand?").

The dark room is filled with this half-spoken, half-sung echoing sound while two blue spotlights move about the room like searchlights. The viewer is caught between the voice and the lights, which are blaming whoever is in the room for an unknown crime. The piece is thrilling in its creation of fright, and a very human need to escape.

The Society

Violence can be divided up into

Turn to ART, page 8

Design by Steven Derocher

Sternfeld's photos as new beginnings

By Michael Delano
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Photographs, with their ability to freeze moments of life, can easily ignite the emotions. But it's not often a photograph challenges the mind as well.

One section of The Culture of Violence exhibit showcases nine photos from Joel Sternfeld, taken from the series "On This Site," a series taken between 1995 and 1996. The photographs look at well-known and obscure scenes of violence after the media frenzy has quieted. What may seem unexceptional becomes charged with meaning by both its context and Sternfeld's thought provoking execution.

Among the photo locations are 11777 Foothill Boulevard, Los Angeles, the scene of the Rodney King beating; Central Park, New York, the site of the strangling death of Jennifer Levin; and Mount Caramel Compound, 12 miles outside Waco, TX, near the former site of the Branch Davidian Complex. While a somber tone of remembrance pervades the nine photographs, there are two that, in their design offer a hopeful outlook for the future.

The first is of Taylor Hall parking lot Kent State University, Ohio. Taken in 1994, the photograph shows the scene of the fatal clash between Kent State anti-war demonstrators and Ohio National Guardsmen that took place on May 4, 1970. Four demonstrators were killed when 28 National Guardsmen opened fire.

The centerpiece of the photo is the memorial grave surrounded by flowers. Behind it a tree shoots upward and extends its branches into the sky. The sky is a pale and flushed white, almost lifeless. The sun is starting to descend and is hardly visible behind the tree, the glow of a sunset seemingly suppressed by the stark lifelessness of the sky. In the end, the photo gives a sense of hope, however, as the tree's branches are highlighted by the sun and seem to be reaching out beyond the shadow buildings and cracked concrete that surrounds it.

The second, of 100th St. and Cottage Grove in Chicago, depicts the area where the body of a gang member was found. The man was killed by his own gang in fear that he would reveal information about a shooting he had committed three days earlier that killed an innocent bystander.

A bleakly lit tunnel with fluorescent shine bleeding down from mounted lights, the photo aims to show an escape from the fatalistic gang lifestyle. The viewer's eyes are drawn to the exit in the distance, a dark and uncertain exit, but one with a magnetizing grip away from the decrepit tunnel interior. There is a way out from the violence, and both of these photos offer glimpses of new beginnings.

"I DON'T CARE IF IT IS AN ORGY OF DEATH, THERE'S STILL SUCH A THING AS A NAPKIN,"-- WILLOW, IN TODAY'S COLLEGIAN OBLIGATORY BUFFY QUOTE.

INVESTMENT STRATEGIES THAT ARE CLEAR AND CONCISE. EVEN IF OUR NAME ISN'T.

Aside from our name, we've always been in favor of making things simple. So contact us for smart, easy investment techniques to help you reach your financial goals

TIAA-CREF.org or call 1(800)842-2776

TIAA CREF

Managing money for people with other things to think about.℠

RETIREMENT | INSURANCE | MUTUAL FUNDS | COLLEGE SAVINGS | TRUSTS | INVESTMENT MANAGEMENT

The many faces of violence: Media as creator or mirror?

By Nick Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

Violence is everywhere.

Whether it's an action movie where the hero blows up a drug cartel or a comedy film where slapstick is used to get a cheap laugh. You might see it when a detective tries to get a confession out of a criminal, or when the protagonist meets the foil for a final showdown. Perhaps you see it in a television drama when a police officer risks his life to save a kidnapped child. You buy CD's that refer to violence against others, male or female. Maybe you are a soul-sucking vampire out for revenge in your new video game. One thing remains a constant however, violence seems to have been widely accepted and assimilated in our society, lives and culture.

Sadly, if there is one thing that sells in our society besides sex, it's violence.

No matter where you look, it's clearly visible. In recent years it's grown in leaps in bounds. Violence in the media has pushed the envelope and broke through the lines, setting new boundaries that have been broken faster than previous ones. Where it was once rare to see bloodied bodies litter the floor of a crime scene, now television police dramas show such acts almost nightly. But television and cinema isn't the only medium that showcases such violence. Music has become gritty and full of songs about drive by shootings, killing women and men and even rape. Some argue that these songs are the way that artists deal with emotions and experiences, but could there be better ways to handle it? Most recently, video games have become more "realistic" incorporating the glorification of mafia-related activities and using the romanticism of being an undercover agent.

Yes, violence is here, but is cultural violence a product of our entertainment or vice versa? Do we hear songs about abuse and murder because they are happening more often or because music incites them? Do television and films show true life in society, or is society just a mirror image of what is shown on the screen?

Video Games

There was a time when a dot bouncing between two lines was considered "fun." Early video games for systems like Atari profited from non-controversial themes. Players battled ghosts, a giant centipede and aliens attacking earth. These games were, by definition, "violent" as they pitted one against another in physical force, but by no means were they considered dangerous.

But times have changed. Where once all Mario and Sonic had to do were bounce on enemies' heads, now they have the opportunity to blow them up and drown them in a pool of lava. Perhaps I'm exaggerating, but the danger lies within the exaggeration of game play. The laughter that comes from Mario yelling out, "Mama mia," can easily put cartoonish violence in the same category of comedy. An association that could lead to younger people hitting someone with a hammer and thinking they'll be okay.

However, these are the least of our worries.

Mortal Kombat began a revolution of overly violent games in the name of entertainment. Every player became enthralled with the idea of the "fatalities" and did whatever they had to do to learn them. It was a status symbol to rack up the most amount of deaths. Possibly the most coveted move was the ability to have ninja Sub-Zero rip out the spine of his opponent. Kombat didn't stop there. The next four games would see blood added, more types of fatalities, players being impaled, burned and even tortured to the amusement of the player. Perhaps the patriarch of video game violence, Kombat's influence was instrumental in the evolution of gaming.

Violence has grown more realistic in video games since the mid-1990s. In less than 10 years, games have been marketed toward kids, for no other reason except to feed some desire to kill.

Games like Tom Clancy's Rainbow Six and 007: Goldeneye have allowed us to enter the world as secret agents. Utilizing all the equipment that they use, which includes but not limited to sniper rifles, night vision, grenade launchers and sub-machine guns. With the arrival of games like Metal Gear Solid and Metal Gear Solid 2 this infatuation has become almost sickening. Because while armed with no weapons, players quickly learn how to break someone's neck using military maneuvers. What exactly is the necessity of this? I just don't know.

Possibly the most controversial and most popular game available right now is Grand Theft Auto III. The central character is a convict who does jobs for the mob, for no other reason except that he is a criminal. As this main character you are sent out on hits, ordered to set car bombs, take out heads of other organizations, and most surprisingly and outrageously expected to beat, murder, run over and steal from pedestrians and especially police officers. In each mission you must steal a car, and in many instance practically destroy it by ramming other cars. One mission even demands that you steal a cop car and use it as a weapon. In this game no one is safe, as you can walk up to anyone (businessmen, women, families, gang members) and beat him or her to death to steal his or her money. The game invokes instances of domestic abuse and racism. GTA 3 may seem fun, if you take it at face value, but the actions within the game should not be taken lightly. It's gestures like these that cause people to act out against men, women and people of other races. It's this type of fun that has gotten the game banned in stores and houses across the nation.

Music

Musicians claim that their songs portray their real life problems. Those songs about shooting up rivals and songs that insinuate domestic abuse are apart about their everyday life. This is how they deal with it, this is their take on it, and it's all an exaggeration that symbolizes their rage or feelings toward the person. I fail to see how talking about abusing a woman is a good thing in any way shape or form.

Not to say that all songs dealing with street violence and domestic abuse are bad. Tupac Shakur's post-mortem song "Changes" spoke directly against gang and street violence. There are many female and male artists and music groups that speak out against domestic violence and sexual abuse.

But what of those songs that talk about killing and abusing people. Do these songs re-live life or is life imitating art?

Television and Movies

There is no doubt on the influence of violence in society and the violence portrayed in the media. Whether in fictional pieces or news broadcasts, the amount of graphic acts seen is staggering. In this case, there is no doubt that one influences the other.

Many times events in real life dictate what happens in the entertainment industry. When Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols attacked a federal building in Oklahoma City six years ago, the tragedy forced the TV and film industry to drastically change shows and promotions.

The inflatable mock-up of Arnold Schwarzenegger in Time Square for his film The Last Action Hero was taken down for a short period of time so that a bundle of TNT could be removed (it was replaced with a gun). Also, "The New Muppet Show" canceled an episode starring Sandra Bullock, which satirized her hit movie Speed.

With the school shooting of Columbine high school in 1999, the film Killing Mrs. Tingle was changed to Teaching Mrs. Tingle and an episode of "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" which featured the heroine fighting demons on graduation day was post-poned to a later date.

In the wake of Sept. 11, shows like FOX's "24" were delayed from airing and movies like Collateral Damage and Big Trouble received delayed release dates.

There have been instances in real life in which violent individuals have pointed at movies and television as inciting the acts that they committed. By the same token, television dramas take stories that are "ripped from today's news" that glorify and romanticize these acts.

It's this constant circle of media and society and the violent acts that exist in our culture that makes this a timely and serious issue. Like the question of which came first, "the chicken or the egg," the cycle of violence and its depiction in different entertainment mediums struggles for clarity with each day that passes.

March '02

ARTS ON CAMPUS...

A monthly calendar brought to you by the UMass Arts Council.

Events

Friday, March 1
XCULTURAL NIGHT: Mendhi Night An evening of live music and traditional henna art in Campus Center 168. 545-3559 or 545-3600
THEATER: Casual Sketch, improvisational comedy performance, 8 pm in Room 227. 545-3600.
THEATER: Love's Labor Lost A classic early Shakespearean romantic comedy. 8pm in Rand Theater. $ 545-2511. Also in Rand 3/7-9. Matinee 3/2 at 2 p.m., free post-performance talk-back with director and cast on 3/8. umass.edu/theater/season.html
Saturday, March 2
CONFERENCE: The Art of the Handpress A conference on printing and book making during the Renaissance, 9 a.m.-4 p.m. at the UMass Renaissance Center. Pre-registration required. 577-3600. umass.edu/renaissance/#3
XMUSIC: El Coiesten Latin music ensemble presented by Concepto Latino. 9p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. $ 545-3600
XVISUAL ARTS: Dan Elias Antiques Road Show host speaks about art collecting to celebrate the new Contemporary Collectors Club at the University Gallery. 4pm at FAC Concert Hall Lobby. $ 545-2511.
Sunday, March 3
MUSIC: New England Premieres featuring "Song for Band" by William Bolcom and Symphony No. 1 "Awakening" by John Frantzen. 3pm in the FAC Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.
Wednesday, March 6
XCONFERENCE: Forum for Funding in the Arts Learn about funding options for artists and art programs. Panel discussion by reps. of regional funding organizations followed by workshops. Also, a Resource Room featuring exhibitors from funding agencies and funding libraries. Pre-registration required. 8:30am-4:30pm, in the Mullins Center. 545-0282 or email lipshires@org.umass.edu www.umass.edu/tsc/artscouncil/partnerwkend.html
CRAFT: UVC/Craft Center Open House Open house to celebrate accomplishments of UVC and the Craft Center. Free food, craft demonstrations, video and poetry reading, noon to 9pm at the Student Union Craft Center and UVC. 545-2096
XFILM: Multicultural Film Festival: Shadow Magic A young Chinese photographer assists an English P.T. Barnum Character with his efforts to debut silent movies in Imperial Peking. 7:30pm in Herter 227. 545-3670
Thursday, March 7
POETRY: From the inside Out, the Outside in Readings in English, Spanish and Portuguese. 7 pm. Augusta Savage Gallery. 545-5177
PANEL DISCUSSION: Women and the Arts The Everywomen's Center presents this panel discussion to celebrate International Women's Day. 3-4 p.m. in the Top of the Campus (11th floor of the Campus Center. 545-3827
PLAYREADING: The Fat Maid of the West by Thomas Dekker with Arti Higgins, 4 pm at the UMass Renaissance Center. 577-3600.
XLITERATURE: Paul Mariani Award-winning author of over 200 essays and reviews and 14 books. Mariani will read from his memoirs. 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall. 545-0643 umass.edu/english/eng/newgoodframe.html
LITERATURE: Anita Diamant, Boston Based author and journalist, whose first work of fiction was The Red Tent, will be speaking on "Writing Women's Lives. 8pm in Campus Center 163. 549-1710.
Friday, March 8
MIXED MEDIA: International Women's Day Event, featuring music, dance, food, arts & crafts and more! 545-5821 www.umass.edu/ewc/Up.html
MUSIC: University Orchestra Series #3 featuring Lantranco Marcelletti, Jr. as conductor and Nigel Cose as piano soloist. $ 8pm in the FAC Concert Hall. 545-2511
Saturday, March 9
MUSIC: Earline Robinson Dancer, Musician, and teacher presents African drumming, dancing for all ages. 9am-11:30pm in the Cape Cod Lounge. 545-0865.
eMUSIC: The Kalichstein-Laredo-Robinson Trio Known as "one of the best-blended, most sensitive and intelligent piano trios in the world today." 8pm in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
Tuesday, March 12
XLECTURE: The Painter's Edge: 4 Visions 1pm in Marshall 14. 545-1902
MUSIC: 21st Annual Jazz Showcase: A tribute to Richard Rodgers. $, 8pm in Bowker Auditorium. 545-2511
Wednesday, March 13
MUSIC: TGC Coffeehouse Jazz Night Patrik Haverkog Jazz Trio with Abby Riccards. 8pm in the Top of the Campus, Campus Center. 545-3600
Wednesday, March 27
XFILM: Multicultural Film Festival: Heaven's Crossroad The filmmaker will be present for discussion. 7:30pm in Herter 227. 545-3670
MUSIC: Chamber Winds Informal concert featuring members of the Wind Ensemble and the Symphony Band. 4pm in FAC room 36. 545-2511
Thursday, March 28
XLITERATURE: George Saunders Award-winning novelist. 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall. 545-0643 umass.edu/english/eng/newgoodframe.html
Saturday, March 30
XDANCE: Ballroom Dance Competition Collegiate Ballroom Competition featuring International and American styles. 8:30am-9pm in the Campus Center Auditorium. $. 546-0275. www.umass.edu/rso/ballroom/

Exhibits

XAUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY
101 New Africa House · 545-5177
M-TU: 1-7 pm; W-F: 1-5 pm.
CANDID: Self Taught Artists from the Pioneer Valley
Through March 14
Young Artists
Visual Art from four communities in South Africa
March 27 - April 24
Reception: March 27 at 5 p.m.

XCENTRAL GALLERY
Central Residential Area
Infirmary Way-Wheeler House
545-0680 M-TH 3-6 pm; SU 2-5 pm
Mother Tongue
March 4 - April 25
Reception: TBA

XHAMPDEN GALLERY
Southwest Residential Area ·
545-0680 M-TH 12-6: SU 2-5 pm
Reprise
by Terri Priest
Through March 4
Aberrations--Spoil Portraits
by Timothy Cummings
March 11 - April 18
Reception: TBA
Nora Valdez: The Journey
Through Spring

XHERTER ART GALLERY
125A Herter Hall · 545-0976
M-F 11-4 pm; SA-SU 1-4 pm
Recent Paintings and Drawings
by Danielle Tegeder
Through March 30
Vernon Fisher: Selected Paintings, 1990-2001
Through March 30

XSTUDENT UNION GALLERY
Student Union Building · 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 pm; F 10-3 pm
February 25-March 8
Midway Show
Through March 8
BFA Exhibitions
March 11-15
Including Young Mi Choe and Scott Porter
Reception: March 12, 4-6 p.m.

XUNIVERSITY GALLERY
Fine Arts Center · 545-3670
TU-FI 11-4:30 pm; SA-SU 2-5 pm
The Culture of Violence
Through March 15
Under Pressure: Prints from Two Palms Press
Through March 15

eFive College students are offered a discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events
XSponsored, in part, by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

3/02

UMass Arts Council·101 Hasbrouck Lab·545-0202

AS SENIOR VP OF FINANCIAL PLANNING AT A MAJOR MOVIE STUDIO YOU COULD:

O.K. A $93 MILLION BUDGET

HIRE 7,500 EXTRAS

RENT 273 PALM TREES
(AND 1 BIG FAN TO MAKE THEM SWAY)

HOW DO YOU GET A JOB LIKE THIS?
WWW.STARTHEREGOPLACES.COM/BIZ15
Go here and take the first step toward the career you want.

START HERE. GO PLACES.
If you know business and accounting, you can get a job anywhere. Because the skills you learn in business – strategic and analytical thinking, communication, and leadership – are always in demand. In some of the coolest industries in the world. Even in the movies.

American Institute of Certified Public Accountants

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Compiled by Nick Pizzolato Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

FILM SCREENINGS

UMASS — The Augusta Savage Gallery will be hosting a video screening of Ann Chen's The Chinatown Files. It tells the story of Chinese-Americans who were "hunted down, jailed, and targeted for deportation" during the McCarthy era witch-hunts. The event is on February 27 at 7 p.m. and is free.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – There will be a showing of Terri Priest and her works of contrasting colors and optical illusions at the Hampden Gallery. Monday through Thursday 12 p.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. The exhibition is free to the public and will run until March 4

UMASS – The Augusta Savage Gallery will be displaying works of Pioneer Valley self-taught artists through Thursday, March 14. It includes paintings, sculpture, photography, drawing and collage. It is available for viewing Monday and Tuesday between 1 p.m. and 7 p.m. and Wednesday through Friday 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

UMASS – The University Gallery will be showing the exhibition "The Culture of Violence." It showcases works by twenty artists who explore violence in the U.S. and cover timely and controversial issues of war, hate crimes, youth violence, and terrorism. It is available for viewing between the hours of 11 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. during Tuesday through Friday and 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sundays. The showing is free to all.

AMHERST COLLEGE – The Mead Art Museum at Amherst College will present "Casa Mañana: The Morrow Collection of Mexican Popular Art." The works exhibit the importance of Mexican Folk Art in American culture. Amherst College alumni Dwight W. Morrow and his wife Elizabeth Cutter have donated the works of art. It runs Friday, February 8 until Saturday April 27. On February 8 at 4:30 p.m. the exhibition will kick off with a lecture by curator Oles.

SMITH – More than 50 Smith College Studio students will exhibit their artwork called "Stall Visions." The annual showcase of talent from the Smith Community will include photographs, paintings in oil, water color and pastel, pencil drawings, porcelain dolls and collage among many others. The exhibit will be open from March 4 – 29. There will be a gallery talk by participating artists will take place from noon to 1 p.m. on Wednesday, March 13. Gallery hours are Mondays through Friday 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday beginning at 10 a.m. The exhibit will be at Books Arts Gallery in the Neilson Library.

NORTHAMPTON – Paintings by Daniel R. Vazquez in an exhibit entitled "MONSTERS" will be on display at Anchor House of Artists at 518 Pleasant St. The self-taught artist from Northampton's works deal with the spirits that accompanied him in his youth. The show will be from March 10 - 30 with a reception by the artist on Sunday, March 10 from 3-5 p.m.

THEATER

UMASS – New WORLD Theater is sponsoring the critically acclaimed group Universes and their production of Slanguage, a show that fuses poetry, theater, jazz, hip-hop, politics and down home blues as it focuses on the different parts of the global community. It will be performed at the Bowker Auditorium on Wednesday, February 27 and Thursday, February 28. Tickets are $15 for the general public and $8 for seniors and $5 for (413) 345-2511 and 1-800-9494-UMASS.

AMHERST COLLEGE – Residential Arts, a program of the Fine Arts Center will bring Urban Bush Women to the five-college community. The show, which explores culture as an expression of social change, will be at the Kirby Theater at Amherst College on March 5 and March 6 at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $20 for general admission and $5 for Five College Students. For more information call (413)-545-2511 or 1-800-9494-UMAS.

CONCERTS AND DANCE RECITALS

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – Emerging student choreographers Sarah Eley, Christine Luby and Thaisa Giles present their original choreography in their Division III Dance concert on Thursday, March 7 through Saturday, March 9 at 8 p.m. The recital will be in the Main Dance Studio, Music and Dance building at Hampshire College. Ticket prices are $5 for the general admission and $3 for students and seniors. For more information call (413) 559-5889.

MT. HOLYOKE COLLEGE – Six talented seniors will present an eclectic mix of choreography on March 8 & 9 at 8 p.m. in Kendall Hall Studio Theater. Tickets are $5 for general admission and $3 for students and seniors. Call (413) 538-2848 for more information.

SOUTH HADLEY – On Tuesday, March 5 at 7 p.m. at South Hadley High, the Hadley Cultural Council will present Markamusic, a high-energy Latin music ensemble.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

UMASS – The UMass Juggling Club is bringing to the campus The Big Fat Juggling Show. In a night of "Flying objects and Flaming Balls" the Juggling Club will be performing, along with UMass' own Casual Sketch comedy troupe. The show will also feature world-renowned juggler Dr. Stardust. The event will be on Thursday, March 7 at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The event is free and open to all.

UMASS – The UMass Outing Club presents expert rock climber David Anderson as he talks about his climb of the Tahir Tower, a previously unclimbed 5,500 foot tower in Pakistan. In his presentation he will also discuss the current culture and political situation of Pakistan. The talk will be on Thursday, March 7 at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

SMITH COLLEGE – Bettina Musiolek, a five college Women's Research Center associate, will use the garment industry in central and southeast Europe as a case study in her lecture entitled, "Globalization, Women's Work and Corporate Responsibility." The event will take place at noon in the Kahn Colloquium Room located in the Neilson Library.

SMITH COLLEGE – Playwright, novelist and performance artist Pearl Cleage will be the scholar-in-residence in the Smith College Department of Afro-American Studies from February 28 to March 5. She will hold two free public events: "In Honor of the Writer's Mind" a panel presentation and discussion of her work at 4:30 p.m. on Monday, March 4 and "From the Writer's Mind" a reading by Cleage at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, March 5. Both will be in the Neilson Library Browsing Room.

AMHERST – Poet Ellen Dore Watson will be reading from her new book of poetry called Ladder Music. The event will take place on Wednesday March 13 at 7 p.m.

YOGA

UMASS – Tonight, February 28, the UMass Yoga and Meditation Club presents a free Yoga nite in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union Building. Leading the group will be Krishan, who for the past fifteen years has taught yoga, mediation and breathing techniques in North America, Europe, Africa, and Asia. He will lead participants in Sri Sri Yoga. The event is free and open to all.

COURTESY OF MASSACHUSETTS CULTURAL COUNCIL

Monsters In Your Parasol

Monsters, paintings by Daniel R. Vazquez will be on display March 10 through 30 at the Anchor House of Artists in Northampton.

■ art

continued from page 7

distinct types including hate crimes, domestic violence, gun violence, violence against women, rape and terrorism. Although some of the pieces can fit into multiple categories, and some defy all categorization, there are works that speak eloquently for one.

David Wojnarowicz's untitled photostat depicts a smiling all-American boy in the center of stark text. The picture is of the artist as a young child. This text makes up a series of startling yet undeniably true predictions based on the artist's own experiences as a gay man. They include such prophecies as "one day politicians will enact legislation against this kid," and, "doctors will pronounce this kid curable as if his brain were a virus."

Wojnarowicz indicts society for allowing institutionalized discrimination against homosexuality. This, in turn, paves the way for hate crimes. (In an accompanying work, he depicts himself bloodied and beaten, the victim of a hate crime.)

Sue Coe has three works on display depicting scenes of rape and one depicting the bombing of an abortion clinic. Her confrontational rape scenes have at their center the victimized woman while the men raping her are holding her down. She based these works of the real story of a 21-year-old woman who was gang raped in a bar while 20 men stood and watched. The works are startling not only in their subject matter, but in the expressionist-based styled. She also references Picasso's "Guernica," with the jagged lines and oppressive overhead light that illuminates the scene.

Racial Violence

There is some violence that has a profound resonance in American culture. Racial violence is one of these.

Leon Golub's racial allegory "The Arrest," is an intimidating, large linen work. He has long been interested in figural depictions power and race, themes that fit perfectly into this exhibit.

Two men dominate this work, one black and the other white. The smaller, white man has pushed the black man up against the wall. The white man holds a gun in his hand, while pressing himself up against the other. His power comes not from the gun or from the connotation of sodomy as power, but from his race.

Mel Chin's "Fan Club" commemorates the racially motivated death of Vincent Chin (no relation to the artist), who was beaten to death.

This beautiful and moving piece is made from a baseball bat that is cut into slats. White Chinese silk is spread over it to create a large fan. In the center is a large circle of dark, dried blood, in pointed contrast to the virgin white of the silk. These elements call to mind the weapon, the blood, and the death of Chin – powerful images on their own. But, combined with the cultural significance of the piece (the Chinese silk, the fan as part of Asian culture, the red circle as a reference to the Japanese flag), "Fan Club" comes to signify the sometime violent clash of cultures.

September 11

The Culture of Violence is a traveling exhibit that was put together before Sept. 11. But unmistakable connections are there.

In perhaps the most powerful of these connections to terrorism, Gregory Green actually uses all of the materials needed to make a bomb, leaving out only gunpowder. "Bible Bomb #1" is a pipe bomb nestled in one side of the hollowed out pages of a bible. On the opposite page is Masaccio's "The Expulsion from the Garden of Eden."

This calls to mind wars and acts violence throughout history that were done in the name of religion. Using the expulsion of Adam and Eve, Green also makes the viewer contemplate original sin. This innate sin of mankind seems to be a cycle that we can never be free from.

On the whole, The Culture of Violence does a commendable job in synthesizing the range of material and themes. The exhibit's power lies in its implication that each and every person in violence of some sort, whether it is as victim, perpetrator or mass media consumer. The pieces are shocking, insightful and poignant individually, and incredibly affecting in the context of the exhibit.

The University Gallery is located at the Fine Arts Center, and is open to the public Tues. through Fri. from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Sat. and Sun., from 2 to 5 p.m. For more information, call 545-3670.

"If you understand someone, don't pity them. Change them! Only pity what you don't understand." –The Bitter Tears of Petra von Kant (high falutin' movie)

Collegian Arts Why? Because we are sexy.

Your Neighborhood Wireless Technology Store

Introducing
America's Choice℠ calling plans
With America's Choice, all your plan minutes are national minutes!
300 Anytime monthly airtime minutes
UNLIMITED nationwide long distance
on America's Choice network.
PLUS
3000 National Night & Weekend Monthly Home Airtime Minutes for LIFE
All for only $35 monthly access when you sign up for one year and remain on the same plan. The America's Choice network covers over 248 million people in the U.S. Network not available in all areas.

WIN THE ULTIMATE WIRELESS PACKAGE!
Register for a chance to win at your nearest @Wireless location or at www.shopatwireless.com. Retail value $1500!

FREE $20 GAS CARD! with the purchase of a Nokia 5185 phone. Annual contract and mail-in form required

HOLYOKE MALL (413) 533-2500
HADLEY 322 Russell Street (413) 587-3248
@Wireless www.shopatwireless.com
35 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1-800-613-2355 for details, dial ext. 226 for franchise opportunities.

verizon wireless Authorized Retailer

Offer valid with new activation on select plans for a limited time only. Subject to Terms of Cellular Service Agreement and Calling Plans. $30 activation fee. $175 early termination fee. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other offers. Usage exceeding included minutes billed separately. All calls subject to taxes and fees. Usage charges apply for service and certain CDMA features. Offers, fees, plans, taxes, surcharges, coverage & service areas subject to change. Some restrictions apply. Weekend hours: Mon-Fri 6pm-Sat 12am, Sun 11am-6pm. Some restrictions apply. See store for details. Mail-in rebate/gift card requires receipt dated by mail date. See store for details. Mail-in rebate/gift form required to receive gift card by mail. No purchase necessary to enter drawing. See official rules/offers rules posted in store.

DIESEL FOOTWEAR

Just Arrived.
Exclusively at Zanna.
ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.28.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

2001 A-10 Regular Season Champs

UMass baseball preview 2002

Shouldering the burden

Santos leads Minuteman rotation into new season

By Jim Pignatiello
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jesse Santos is sitting at a desk in Boyden Hall rubbing his right throwing shoulder. Is it just a habit or did the 10 minutes of posing for The Collegian photographer, holding a ball out in front of his body wear out his arm?

"[It's] a habit," says Santos, with a laugh. "I always rub my shoulder. I try to loosen up as much as possible because I'm getting old and it's getting tight."

Good thing, otherwise The Collegian could be held responsible for ruining the shoulder of the most crucial pitcher on the Massachusetts baseball team.

Growing up, Santos never wanted to pitch; now he is the ace of the UMass pitching staff.

He didn't pitch in Little League, junior high school, or his first two years of high school. It wasn't until his junior year at Chelmsford High that the 5-foot-9-inch righthander began to take the mound regularly against what he refers to as "the lower teams in the league."

A strong arm got him through the year, but it was his uncle, a former player at UMass-Lowell, who changed his life after the season by teaching him one pitch – the slider.

"It's like a curveball," Santos says, "but you snap it hard at the end instead of letting it roll off [your fingers]."

"I started throwing it…and it was a natural pitch for me."

The slider is thrown at the same velocity as the fastball, but it moves right to left instead of on a straight line. The pitch took Santos about six months to perfect.

"By senior year [of high school] I had it." A good thing, since all of the pitching talent at Chelmsford High from the year before had graduated, leaving Santos as the No. 1 starter.

"I had no choice but to pitch the big games," Santos says. "I didn't really know much about pitching. I just threw [the ball] as hard as I could every pitch.

"Hitters would know [the slider] was coming. No one else knew how to throw it. I was probably the only kid in the league who knew how to throw a slider. Kids had never seen it, so they would swing and miss [every time]. Which made me look like a big-time pitcher."

They may have known what pitch Santos would be throwing, but the opposing batters certainly couldn't hit it. The hurler compiled a 17-1 record over his high school career, his earned run average of tidy 1.22.

Santos was named the Lowell Sun Player of the Year and placed on numerous all-star teams (including the all-state team) following his senior year.

Despite his success, Santos still wasn't having fun on the mound and certainly wasn't looking to pitch at the next level.

"I didn't even really like pitching," he says. "I had so much fun diving for balls in the outfield and turning double plays in the infield. I never even really thought about [pitching in college]."

That is, until Santos was approached during his senior year by UMass pitching coach Scott Meanev in a tournament that No. 10 didn't even pitch in. Meanev asked the rights to play at UMass as a pitcher.

The 18-year-old was less than thrilled, but ultimately made the decision to attend UMass despite his feelings about pitching.

"I just didn't think of pitching as playing ball," Santos says. "[But] when I weighed all my options, UMass definitely stuck out as the place to go to play in college [in the Northeast].

"I didn't want to take off too far [from home]. I wanted my dad to be able to come to the games and watch. So I didn't want to go down south. I don't regret it one day. I love this place."

After a stellar high school career, Santos expected an easy transition into college ball, but ran into a team that had been so successful in the previous years that the upperclassmen felt no need to support the incoming freshman.

"My [freshman] class wasn't accepted very well," he says. "That didn't help me at all. I had no idea [what was going on]. I thought I was good, but right away, [I was] shot down by these older kids. It was tough. I didn't get adapted to college baseball very quickly because I had to do [all the adjusting] on my own."

It was right in the middle of his sophomore year in the Maroon and White that Santos finally started to "get it."

"It was Coach [Mike] Stone telling me, 'don't just throw, pitch. Think about what you're throwing and why you are throwing it.' I started thinking pitching and concentrated on that one thing. I learned to throw a change-up and that gave me another pitch to add to my repertoire."

The additional options added to Santos' ability to baffle opposing hitters.

"The most fun thing about pitching is setting up a hitter," Santos says. "Having them thinking, and you're thinking. And they're thinking fastball or changeup and you come with a slider. I like that."

Santos' final stats for his sophomore season show the improvement in his game: 4.18 ERA with 40 strikeouts and 17 walks in 51 innings pitched. Compared to a freshman campaign that saw a 6.84 ERA with 21 K's and 20 BB's in just 26 innings, the progress from the 1999 season to the 2000 season is obvious.

Santos secured the No. 2 spot in the starting rotation in

Turn to SANTOS, page 10

TIBORA GIRLYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Jesse Santos, here, shows us his circle-change pitch. Once he learned this pitch, he became a dominant force in the UMass pitching rotation.

UMass baseball preview 2002

Southern spring training begins

Minutemen begin slate with South Florida Saturday

By Jesse Greenspan
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Anyone that went outside yesterday in the freezing rain wouldn't think that spring was in the air.

Nonetheless, the Massachusetts baseball team will begin the season on March 1, although it will be nowhere near the frigid northern temperatures of Amherst.

Instead, the Minutemen will fly down to the University of South Florida in order to take on the hardy Bulls in a three game series.

"They are 10 games into the season but we can't let that faze us," ace pitcher Jesse Santos said. "We have to go down there thinking we are equal to them. It is a baseball game and anything can happen – after all, the Diamondbacks beat the Yankees – and hopefully we can come away with at least one and maybe two [wins]."

Last year, UMass performed well in the regular season (27-19, 16-6 Atlantic 10) and picked up the A-10 regular season title. However it chose the worst possible moment to play its worst baseball of the year and ended up dropping two consecutive games in the conference tourney to Temple and George Washington.

"We always expect to win the A-10 and that is understood by everybody," Santos said. "The thing we worry about is the tournament. For some reason UMass struggles in the tournament every year.

"I want to get a ring on my finger more than anything," he added.

This year, it will be more or less the same lineup that looks to better last season's win total, as seven starters and 25 of 29 overall players return to the team.

"We have a good group of young players that have experience," Maroon and White Head Coach Mike Stone said. "I think we have a nice balance of veterans and youngsters."

In the infield, all four positions will be manned by the same players as a year ago.

Junior Jeff Altieri is perhaps the best returning player on the team as he is coming off a 2001 campaign in which he hit .359 and led the team in both doubles (15) and RBI's (45). All of this earned him a position on the All-Atlantic 10 second team as well as All-New England honors.

The other corner position will be patrolled by senior captain Aaron Senez, who has started 103 games in the infield for the Minutemen. This year, he hopes to improve on his .275 batting average of a season ago.

In the middle of the diamond, sophomores Adam Stojanowski and Caftan Maumus will once again be the double play combination, as they are both coming off red-hot freshman years. Maumus finished the season with a team-leading .379 batting average after taking over the starting position with 17 games remaining, while Stojanowski was not far behind with a .343 average of his own.

The UMass outfield, on the other hand, will be missing centerfielder Nick Gorneault and rightfielder Gavin Clark, who graduated after stellar 2001 seasons. Gorneault was an especially dangerous hitter in the three hole, as he hit .369 with 12 home runs and 41 RBI's, while Clark totaled a .329 average with 12 homers and 36 runs batted in.

However, despite Gorneault's and Clark's departed accolades, senior Mike Kulak will be looking to replace them by returning to his left field position. Last year, Kulak earned second team All-Atlantic 10 honors for his .347 batting average, which actually lowered his career total of .330.

This year, Kulak will patrol left field while his partner in crime, Tim Klett (.344) will see the majority of his action from the designated hitter position.

"In the past, we've had good kids that work hard and compete every inning of every game," Stone said. "You can't predict whether this team will do the same, but I think with the number of experienced players we have returning, we have a good chance of continuing to build upon the success we've had recently."

Filling out the outfield roster are junior Connell Clark, and freshmen Derrick Durepo, Jason Twomley and Neil Schiller.

The pitching staff is another area that the Maroon and White will be lacking experience. Other than Santos, no starters are returning from the 2001 campaign, as Craig Spada and Nick Skirkanich were both lost to graduation.

However, Santos looks to come into his own as the ace of the staff, as he has steadily improved in his four years in Amherst.

Last season, the senior from Chelmsford posted the second lowest ERA on the team (4.90), and also picked up a team-high seven wins in his 14 appearances.

Backing him up as the No. 2 starter will be freshman lefty Keith Doherty, but after that, the third spot is completely up for grabs. As of now, junior P.J. Washenko and sophomore Brandon White look to have the upper hand on their competitors, but it remains to be seen who will end up in the No. 3 role.

"We lost Szado and Skirkanich and those are big losses," Santos said. "But we brought in Doherty and if he can understand the A-10 pressure and gain some confidence, he's going to be good for us at the second spot. The third spot is open, and I don't really know what's going to happen."

Closer Eric Chown, who posted a 5-1 record and a 4.08 ERA in his freshman campaign, will lead the bullpen. Another interesting face in the pen will be Matt Boulanger, who started 22 games at shortstop in 2001, and who will be looked upon to add some much-needed depth to the staff.

"This year's staff, as a whole, could be improved from last year's," Stone said. "We should have a solid group of guys that can throw strikes and, overall, we should be more competitive as a staff."

To round out the roster, Stone will have a very tough decision as to who his starting catcher will be. Coming back from an injury to his non-throwing shoulder is junior Chris Morgan, who hit 6 home runs and knocked home 33 runs in 2000.

However, in his absence last season, junior Tom Ellerbrook shined defensively, played almost every inning and drove in a solid 29 runs from the nine hole.

Stone is looking at this as a blessing, though, and whoever doesn't get the starting role will most likely see time at DH.

"In essence, we have two returning catchers who have both proven they can play at this level," the 14th year coach said. "It's a tremendous asset to have several catchers you can count on.

"We're extremely excited about the upcoming season," he added. "Baseball is an unpredictable sport, but we have a chance to be a very good team this year."

2002 Baseball Schedule

03/01	South Florida
03/02	South Florida
03/03	South Florida
03/09	Quinnipiac
03/10	Quinnipiac
03/14	Sacred Heart
03/16	Northern Illinois
03/17	Wright State
03/18	Vermont
03/19	Florida
03/20	Illinois
03/21	Dartmouth
03/23	Richmond
03/25	Richmond
03/24	Richmond
03/26	Connecticut
03/27	Hartford
03/29	George Washington
03/30	George Washington
03/30	George Washington
04/03	Fairfield
04/06	Dayton
04/06	Dayton
04/07	Dayton
04/11	Northeastern
04/13	Rhode Island
04/13	Rhode Island
04/14	Rhode Island
04/16	Holy Cross
04/17	Connecticut
04/20	Temple
04/20	Temple

Beanpot Baseball Classic

04/23	Boston College
04/24	Harvard or Northeastern
04/27	St. Bonaventure
04/27	St. Bonaventure
04/28	St. Bonaventure
05/01	Vermont
05/02	Harvard
05/04	St. Joseph's
05/04	St. Joseph's
05/05	St. Joseph's
05/07	Siena
05/08	Central Connecticut
05/11	Fordham
05/11	Fordham
05/12	Fordham
05/16	A-10 Championship begins play

Catch him (pictured) if you can.

■ Santos

The key to helping the freshmen is two-fold for the senior. First, treat them the same way as everyone else.

"I like to joke around with a lot of guys and I don't differentiate between freshman and seniors."

Second, let the freshmen know what it is like to be a collegiate baseball player.

"I like to talk to the freshmen in terms of what they should expect. I have sat down with a few of them and [told them that] when they [play on the road], it is going to be intense. [Opposing] kids will be yelling at them saying things that are both funny and pretty personal and you just have to block it out."

Passing on the knowledge can only help the young players get better more quickly, which will go a long way in helping the Minutemen go after an Atlantic 10 title this year.

"[I try] to just give them confidence. Confidence is what freshmen need. [The more] confidence and knowledge they get of what to expect – the better they will be."

Santos is proving to be an influential leader in the locker room and is thrilled to be playing ball in Amherst. He is the clear No. 1 starter at UMass this season and will be the one to take the mound in this year's must-win games.

Not bad for a kid who never wanted to pitch.

www.dailycollegian.com

FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
SPRING 2002
Where the Arts and Audiences Come Together
Tickets only $5. $7. $15 for five college students

Saturday, March 9
The Kalichstein-Laredo-Robinson Trio

Tuesday & Wednesday, March 12 & 13
The Who's Tommy, The Musical

Thursday, April 4
Anne Get Your Gun

Saturday, April 6
Jazz Festival featuring Eddie Daniels, clarinet and Roger Kellaway, piano

For tickets call: 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
or go on-line to www.fineartscenter.com

Free trip to Israel!

Sun
History
Trekking
Jerusalem
Archaeology
Beaches
Masada
You!

Register now at:
www.Israel4Free.com

info@israel4free.com
www.Israel4Free.com

New WORLD Theater
Save The Date!
April 12-13, 2002
INTERSECTION
FUTURE AESTHETICS

A two-day gathering exploring the intersection of theater, poetry, spoken word, and Hip Hop culture

• Performances • Artist Roundtable Workshops

Danny Hoch

For conference information and registration call 413.545.1972 or visit our website at www.newworldtheater.org

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Home of the 50 lb bag of ICE
Largest selection of Cigars in Hadley and Amherst.
Special Orders Welcome
BEER WINE LIQUOR ICE
KEGS CIGARS GLOVES
CIGARETTES TOBACCO
Amex, Disc, MC, Visa, Debit Accepted
333 Russell Street (Route 9)
Hadley, MA
Hours Mon-Sat, 9am-11pm
(413) 584-8774

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

UMass is impressive in opener

Zelinger scores four goals in Crusade

By Glen Straub
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, the disappointment of a lackluster 6-10 season last spring is still fresh in their minds. But the past is the past and a new season has begun with a newfound hope for success.

UMass	15
Holy Cross	2

On Wednesday, hope was alive in the friendly confines of Richard F. Garber Field.

It came in the form of UMass sophomore attacker, Hope Zelinger.

Zelinger scored a career-high four goals en route to a Minutewomen demolishment of the Holy Cross Crusaders, 15-2, in the season opener for both teams.

"Hope wanted the ball and she took charge," Head Coach Phil Barnes said. "She was able to create things not only for herself, but for her teammates as well."

The Maryland native set the tone of the game for herself and the rest of her teammates right at the start of the match.

Two-and-a-half minutes into the game, on a free position chance, Zelinger fired a shot past Holy Cross goaltender Kellaigh Malangone, giving UMass the first lead of the contest, 1-0.

The Crusaders countered the initial UMass attack three minutes later when Holly Cross midfielder Taylor Connelly scored off a pass from Erin Rowse on junior goalie Cyndi Doyle to knot up the score at one.

"I went into this game feeling pretty nervous. It was definitely apparent when the first shot on me went in the goal," Doyle said. "As soon it went through my nerves calmed."

Just as Doyle took the first Holy Cross goal as a wakeup call, so did the rest of her teammates. The Minutewomen tallied up four straight goals from that point on to take a 5-1 lead. Juniors, Kelli Kurtz, Leslie Pollock, co-captain Iada Emery and the sophomore Zelinger scored the four goals for UMass during the run.

"We have a tendency to start off kind of slow," Doyle said. "I think one of our goals this season is too prevent that."

Holy Cross stifled the onslaught of goals with 7:35 remaining in the first half when they cut the lead to 5-2 off of a Kerry Daly goal.

"With the second goal, the girl's stick was in the crease and that made me pretty mad," Doyle said. "From that point on I was really concentrated on the shots."

Doyle put the clamp down on the cage and shutdown the Crusader offense for the rest of the game. She did not let another goal go through the net, as she had five saves on 12 HC shots in the contest.

"I really think the defense made a huge difference in the second half today," she said. "Most of the shots were straight on which means I can tell where the shots were going, so a lot of the credit goes to our defense."

"The defense played tremendous," Barnes added. "Defensively, inside we played great, but now the focus will be to work on our transition game."

Coming off a season-long injury last year, UMass junior midfielder Lydia Robinson showed that she hadn't lost a step when, off a feed from Pollack, she netted a goal right before the end of the first half – giving the Minutewomen a 6-2 at halftime.

The second half brought on a barrage of goals from the Maroon and White squad – nine in total – including two more from Zelinger.

"She has given us another threat to work with on the team," Barnes said.

In the end, UMass' 36 shots on goal were too much to handle for the Holy Cross squad resulting in a 15-2 defeat.

"This is really good for us," Doyle commented. "I think all of us wanted to get off to a good start and have a winning attitude."

"The team played as a team," Barnes added. "That is something we have been stressing since the pre-season and they did that today."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kelly Kurtz scored one of four goals in an early 5-1 UMass run.

Invites are in

Minutemen left out of post-season party

With a 6-0 victory over the Massachusetts hockey team two night ago, New Hampshire officially set the eight teams that will compete in this year's Hockey East tournament, while solidifying it's hold on the top seed in conference.

MATTHEW F. SACCO

The Wildcats (33 points) are currently in a dogfight with Boston University (32 points) for first place in the conference, which may hold a more important late than normal.

Whichever team takes the top seed will almost definitely end up facing perennial doormat Merrimack, while the second place squad will be forced into a three game series against either a healthy Boston College squad (21 points) or a dangerous Providence team.

Dormant Merrimack secured the final playoff spot on Tuesday night as UNH beat and eliminated the Minutemen for the second straight year. UMass and the Warriors will now face-off in a Sunday matinee that, at the beginning of the season, looked like it could decide the last tourney slot, but instead becomes a game with pride as the only spoil of victory.

UMass once again is forced to look to the future for some clearer skies and sunnier results. This year marked Head Coach Don "Tour" Cahoon's first full recruiting class and despite the inroads that the freshmen made in only their first campaign, it wasn't enough to lift the team out of the cellar.

Next year will be a better gauge of the overall facelift of the program as at least seven newcomers will join a large core of returning players, but it is more likely that Cahoon's effect on the program won't show true until two seasons from now.

Nonetheless, the Minutemen will have to start making some progress by next year, to get anyone interested in the team and to have a better bargaining tool for high profile recruits.

The Mullins Center as a bargaining tool can only be taken so far, especially when the team is in last place and struggling to break the 3,000 mark attendance wise for each game. Sooner or later fans are going to have to start showing up and that only comes with winning.

To the die-hard fan or the beat writer, it is clear that UMass is taking steps toward becoming a respectable program. And to a great hockey mind it is evident that Cahoon's style of play albeit exciting, takes more than just one recruiting class to successfully implement.

But the average fan doesn't see that.

All the average fan sees is a last place standing, a conference record for least goals scored, another tear out of the playoffs and a team that struggles to finish games they lead and compete with upper echelon squads. For the masses to start rushing to the Mullins Center for UMass hockey games, Cahoon, his staff and his players are going to have to put something on the table besides just hard work.

The American sports culture is known for appreciating hard working, win hungry squads, but not if they lose. The Minutemen have everything going for them up until the simple matter of wins and losses.

Cahoon is a top-notch coach, his staff is second to none, the facility is nationally recognized and his kids are a blue-collared bunch that doesn't make a fuss of the ice. All that's left is the success.

Success that will come with more goal scoring, a higher talent level, and the confidence that comes from success and breeds more of it. Then maybe those empty seats at the cavernous Mullins Center will have some rear ends in them – or maybe not, because those people will probably be standing.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Peter Trovato, a freshamn forward.

Seniors impress on their night

Crooks leads UMass with 23

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

AMHERST – On a night designed to honor the four graduating seniors on the Massachusetts men's basketball team, those seniors honored the 3,897 in attendance at the Mullins Center with an all-action showing in the Minutemen's 79-69 victory over Rhode Island. The win locked up the No. 4 seed out of the East Division in the upcoming Atlantic 10 Tournament, meaning a match-up with either George Washington or Duquesne looms for the Minutemen on Wednesday afternoon.

UMass	79
URI	69

Shannon Crooks tallied a game-high 23 points along with seven boards and six assists while Kitwana Rhymer just missed his second consecutive double-double with 13 points and nine rebounds. Anthony Anderson and Micah Brand added 13 and 12 points, respectively, for UMass (12-14, 6-9 A-10) while Dustin Hellenga led four Rams (7-19, 3-12 A-10) in double figures with 16 points.

The Minutemen led throughout the contest and stretched their lead to as many as 17 points before holding off a mini-run by the Rams midway through the second half to notch their second consecutive home victory.

"I thought it was a good solid win for our guys," UMass head coach Steve Lappas said. "We did a lot of good things out there defensively and offensively, we moved the ball well and it was just a great way for our seniors to go out."

Behind red-hot shooting from both the inside and the outside in the first half the Minutemen jumped out to a 36-28 lead at the break. Rhymer scored the first six points of the game for UMass on a series of inside moves as the Maroon and White opened up a 10-2 lead in the game's first five minutes.

Shortly after this the crowd exploded following one of the best defensive plays of the season by Crooks. After turning the ball over near midcourt Crooks raced back down court, arriving just in time to swat away an attempted lay in by Hellenga.

"I got upset at myself for turning the ball over so I just ran back to contest [the shot] as hard as possible," said Crooks of his block. "I thought he was going to try and dunk it so I was going to give him a good foul so he wouldn't make it, not really flagrant, but he tried to lay it in and it was right there so I just blocked it."

"It was a tremendous play, it really was," added Lappas.

All evening long Crooks was the star of the game for the Minutemen, making a number of key plays at both ends of the court. Making this performance all that more noteworthy was Crooks' performance in the first meeting between these two clubs. On that day he was held to just five points on 1-of-15 shooting, a number that URI head coach Jim Baron did not expect to see repeated.

"He had a tough game at our place and he really stepped up big [tonight]," said Baron of the Boston native. "Not only with 23 points, he had six assists and he really kept them under control."

Another senior who came up big last night was Ronell Blizzard. After struggling to make much of an impression coming off the bench for most of the season, Blizzard chipped in with seven points and four boards on perfect shooting in 11 minutes of action.

"He did a great job tonight, it was probably his best game of the year," said Lappas of Blizzard, who made just his second start of the season. "It was great to see for the kid, I was happy for him. He got a chance to play some significant minutes tonight and he came through for us."

Prior to the game UMass honored its four graduating seniors with a ceremony that included Lappas and their families at midcourt. Crooks, Rhymer, Blizzard and Eric Williams were each given a standing ovation upon receiving their honors and each started in their final appearance in Amherst.

The Minutemen return to action on Saturday afternoon when they take on A-10 leaders Xavier in Cincinnati in the regular season finale.

UMass students will never create a consistent tradition

AMHERST – It's about 15 minutes before tip-off and this place isn't even close to full. But that's not surprising. I'm led to believe the average attendance for Massachusetts men's basketball games this season is a little over 100.

Tonight is going to be different though. Tonight, they'll come. They have to. On this fine February evening, four Minuteman seniors are to be honored for their stints as UMass hoopsters. And I'm sure there's about 2,000 kids in Southwest who'd never miss their team's home finale.

Plus, student tickets remain free of charge.

It's now eleven minutes before game time. A few seconds ago, I saw a group of five students saunter down the steps in Section N, the area set off for UMass' dedicated undergrads. Excluding the Hoop Band – which is forced to attend each home game – the student section is now 10 bodies solid.

ERIC SODERSTROM

Ten minutes to go. Kitwana Rhymer, Shannon Crooks, Eric Williams and Ronnell Blizzard are about to be recognized. It's Senior Night, the date set for their last college basketball game in Amherst. So it's going to be special when everyone in attendance stands up in ovation.

I think the applause lasted for like five seconds. I wonder how many people here even know what's going on?

Seven minutes remain; this place is dead. Someone just sneezed in Section Y, the area directly opposite from me.

Five minutes until play begins. Maroon is a nice color, but it has begun to irritate me. The seats in the William D. Mullins Center – dyed with that dark-er shade of red – are an unfortunately familiar sight. Again, no one is here.

But the students will pile in soon. They always show up late.

My optimism is so unwarranted. It's now 10 minutes into the first half and there are like only 35 students here – of course. I just bent over and asked my colleague Justin Pearson how many students are enrolled at this school.

"Like 18,000 undergrads," he says. "They should be able to get at least half this place filled. Was there a budget cut toward fan participation?"

It sure seems like it. During last Saturday's game with Fordham, four elderly women, front row, made up one-half of the student section's population. I think I even saw one of them try to produce a fist pump. It was just an attempt, however.

It's now halftime. UMass is winning, I think. But that's not why everyone is excited. A middle-schooler named Derek has just successfully connected on a layup, a free throw, and a three-pointer before the contest's 30-second allotment ran out. If he hits this next shot from half court, he'll win a new car.

Oh my. He hit the left side of the backboard. I honestly didn't think the 4 foot-6-inch tyke had a chance. And I just realized I raised my arms up in childish thrill when that last shot was in the air.

Back to the point. There's 12 minutes left in the second half and I just heard one of the referees called one of the fans an (expletive). Are you serious? A heckling UMass student?

His name is Eric Lamoureau (or so he tells me). Front row for pretty much every game this season – he is what so many of this school's students aren't.

Not a fair-weather fan.

He's the guy who understands that Division I basketball games are comprised of something more than just two teams and a basketball. Believe it or not, fans do actually have an effect on games.

Why do you think UMass lost to Rhode Island in the Rams' Keaney Gymnasium Feb. 2? That place got so loud, it made thinking hard.

Imagine with me, folks, a Mullins Center that opponents fear. A place so rowdy, it makes the Minutemen feel they're up 10 even before tip-off. A place…actually, nevermind.

Besides the coaches, players, and select number of students, this school has no pride. No sense of tradition. No desire to create a reputation. No reason to support the people who represent you all over the country.

It's come to the point where a sell-out shocks this team, and makes them quiver.

Not that we need a full house. Just a consistent one.

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian columnist.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans
• Trucks • SUV's
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
• MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

Old Amherst Ale House
Live Music
NO COVER
FRIDAY: FIDDLEHEAD
SATURDAY: MILKHORSE
10PM – 12:30AM

AST Sports Science EAS American Bodybuilding Flora
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
GET IN SHAPE!
Burn Fat, Build Muscle!
SPECIALS
XENADRINE Fat Burner 120 capsules $23.95
CREATINE 500g. $15.99
WHEY PROTEIN 6 lbs. $27.99
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
65 University Drive
Amherst, Massachusetts
PHONE: 549-7434
HOURS:
M thru F 10 - 7
Sat 10 - 5
Met-Rx Ergopharm Twinlab Sportspharma Nutrabolics Biotest Body-Tech Gaspari Nutrition Optimum Nutrition Atkins Cell-Tech

RANDIER THAN THE KAMA SUTRA

SATURDAY LAMPOON'S
VAN WILDER
IN THEATRES SPRING 2002
WWW.NATIONALLAMPOON.COM
THIS FILM IS NOT YET RATED
© 2001 Sky Rockets, World Media Productions GmbH & Co. Medien und Mehr! K.G. All Rights Reserved. NATIONAL LAMPOON'S AND R.E. Communications. All Rights Reserved.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups

Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Looking for permanent position or summer job? Come to the Hospitality job fare, March 6th 2002 from 9:00 am to 3 pm in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 50 companies attending. For more info, Please call the Career Day office 545-3438.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone /Internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstmanagement.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstmanagement.com 253-7879

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

$12,342.00 Congratulations Dave Sullivan (Sophomore Umass) for a great first week!!! Last two weeks of Recruiting. CWP Program 617-216-4741 or jbrown@college-works.com

SUMMER FUN ON CAPE COD! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews on our property for all our summer employment opportunities March 7,8,9 & 21, 22, 23. Interviews for Wait Staff, Bus Staff, Culinary Staff, Lifeguards and more! On Site housing available. Check out our website at www.capecodclubs.com/wychmere & Call Amy at (508) 432-1000 x 129 for details.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER IN MAINE Jewish, Co-ed overnight camp in the southern Maine seeks staff: Boys Unit Head (23+), Camping/Tripping Director (23+), Judaics Director (23+); swim, water ski, and boating/sailing instructors (lifeguard certification req'd.); archery (training avail.), ceramics, general athletics, gymnastics, photography, radio, low ropes, theater; general counselors, office personnel. For information, contact: Aci Goldman, Director, JCC Camp Kingswood, 333 Nahanton street, Newton, MA 02459, 617-244-5124, or e mail: director@kingswood.org

Wanted: spring/ Summer Interns. Must be rebels, Innovators, deserters, seeking leadership outside the box. Average pay $7200.00. 617-216-4741 jbrown@college-works.com .

Personal Care attendant for male Quad. Week day mornings $10.12 hr 546-0666.

Pet Sitting, spring break and some weekends this semester. N Amherst 4 times per day for pets. 545-4015

EMPLOYMENT

Wanted seamstress simple alterations 545-4031

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 866-291-7884 ext. 485.

Wanted student to assist new web based business located on Cape Cod. Must have Marketing web skills. Contact Howie @ mail@dailyfix.com

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941) 329-6434 www.cruisesareers.com

Wanted: Honest, responsible, hard working student for evening product promotions. Must be 21+ and have reliable transportation. Please contact 203-984-5880 for more info.

ENTERAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE; DJ Fooze and SYB productions are now booking for spring semester, call 537-8527.

FOR SALE

Couch good shape $200/BO 259-1020.

FURNATURE

New computer desk $99.00 413-210-3145.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich (P Mulvey, E Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_Goodrich@hotmail.com

University Bartending Classes start soon, student discounts 1-800-tread-mix. www.answerspringbreak.com spaces limited call for information.

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

Room all-inclusive no smoke/ no pets $400 available now 253-0627.

ROOM FOR RENT

In house on Main St. CHEAP ! Call 253-2575 or 297-1444.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Marathan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sunsplashtours.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.ctdjessum@acrtours.com

TRAVEL

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food!! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Days $279! Includes Meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $ 459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

Get $$PAID$$ to lose up to 5-40 lbs. 1-888-709-8197 www.healthmgmt.com

Looking for a trustworthy person to drive my car to Costa Rica. Call Frances 323-5799.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

3	CBS 3
4	NESN
5	Fox Sport NE
6	PBS 57
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	WB 56
9	HSCN Movie Channel
10	TV Guide Channel
11	FOX 61
12	ABC 40
13	NBC 22
14	International Channel
15	UMATV
16	HSCN Info Channel
17	ESPN
18	ESPN 2
19	USA 29
20	ESPN Classic
21	Univision
22	CNN
23	CNN HL
24	Weather Channel
25	Learning Channel
26	History Channel
27	A & E
28	Discovery Health
30	Food Network
31	NASA
32	Home & Garden TV
33	Travel Channel
34	Lifetime
35	CNBC
36	Tech TV
37	BET
38	UPN 35
39	USA
40	TNN
41	MTV
42	CMT
43	VH-1
44	TNT
45	TBS
46	E! Entertainment
47	Sci-Fi Channel
48	Court TV
49	Nick at Nite
50	Comedy Central
51	Cartoon Network
52	Game Show Network
53	TV Land
54	FOX Family
55	Univision
56	Univision
57	Telemundo
58	College TV Network
59	C-SPAN
60	C-SPAN2
61	Bloomberg Television

NO TV LISTINGS TODAY

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

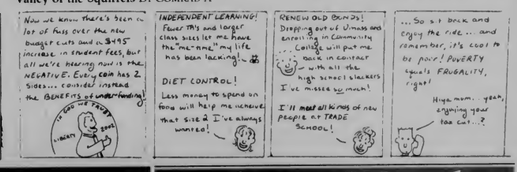
Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Noodle By Jacki

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"No, you complain about everything in general, I just complain about you."

-Jason Bissonnette

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 38 LOW: 16	HIGH: 42 LOW: 22	HIGH: 46 LOW: 32

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may not prefer the kind of activity that is in store for you today, but once you commit to it, you'll surely acquit yourself quite well.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You may receive some important news today that you're not quite sure what to do with until one last piece of the puzzle falls into place.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're in no mood to have things go wrong today. If you have failed to prepare, you'd better be ready to do some quick-fix work!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – A dream come true may not be so much fun as dreaming it in the first place. Today, you're going to have to decide whether to continue your "pursuit."

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – A little people-watching can serve you well today. You'll get a few valuable ideas and increase your own confidence through comparison.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Give yourself – and others – the benefit of the doubt today. Nothing is likely to be "perfect," and there are many appropriate ways to behave.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You may be blessed with an unexpected inspiration toward mid-day. Enlightenment will enable you to fulfill someone else's high expectations.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You're not going to want to disappoint a family member who has been counting on you for some time. Today, do what you must to fulfill a promise.

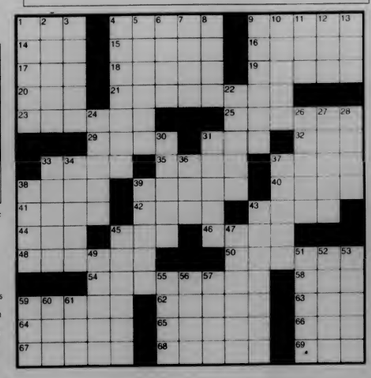
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You don't want to take time doing those "little things" that have become second nature. Jump right to the important stuff and make a loved one happy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Your mind is off and running, but your heart may be lagging behind. Take care that you're not actually trying to deceive yourself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You know what you are about, so why do you have so much difficulty explaining yourself to others? Why do you lack confidence?

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may be far more demonstrative with your feelings than usual. Others may not fully understand what you are trying to communicate.

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
*
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Schedule for this Weekend!
Thursday 2/28/02
Karaoke w/ cloud Nine
$2 cover
Saturday 3/2/02
BUTTAH
Sunday 3/3/02
7th street Jazz
36 N. Pleasant Street • Amherst
413 - 253 - 4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM



ACROSS
1 That man
4 Harrow blades
9 "Star Wars" heavy
14 The Pixies' Band
15 Feedback
16 Still in the running
17 Business abbr
18 Excited and eager
19 Jogged along
20 Before: to a poet
21 Independent one
23 Fuse
25 Flower parts
29 Winter Bombeck
31 Merry
32 Computer in "2001"
33 Vignola and Lincoln
35 Astronomer Sagan
37 Tijuana dollar
38 Garbage bin output
39 Immature butterflies
40 Loathe
41 Stack
42 Country addrs
43 Okra, morsels
44 Ocean dweller
45 Even score
46 11th-grade exam
48 Habit
50 Investigated
54 Permission
58 Southeast Asian
59 Prom queen
62 Romance, in Florence
63 Cash dispenser
64 Rivulet
65 Friendly, in Britain
66 Date regularly
67 Steam room
68 Newspaper people
69 Coast Guard off

DOWN
1 Doughnut mid dles
2 Preface, for short
3 Clothes horse
4 Phone users
5 Let know
6 Quick drive
7 Heist
8 Meat dish
9 Geographical feature
10 Sky high
11 Ice-cream serving
12 Night before
13 Crayola choice
22 Gemstones
24 Name in tractors
26 In the lead
27 Survives
28 Blockbom
30 Sharp
31 Understand
33 Good bye, in Montreal
34 Cotton seed vessels
36 Mimic
37 Passport requirement
38 Oil org
39 Doll up
43 Conferences
45 Kansas capital
47 Has mercy
49 Eagle's claw
51 Nonchalant
52 — away eroded
53 Capitol toppers
55 Boat runway
56 Poet Khayyam
57 Fried
59 Air rifle pellets
60 Geologic time period
61 Singer Rawls

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

D	A	M	P		Z	I	L	C	H		S	A	R	I
A	V	E	R		A	D	O	R	E		H	I	E	S
L	O	G	O		P	A	C	E	D		E	D	A	M
I	N	A	N	E		H	A	G	G	L	E	R	S
			T	A	L	C		K	E	E	L
A	R	B	O	R	E	A	L		T	A	B	B	Y
V	E	R		S	A	I	L	S		S	C	A	L	E
A	P	S	E		D	R	A	W	S		S	L	A	M
I	R	E	N	E		O	M	A	H	A		E	R	E
L	O	T	T	O		A	M	U	N	D	S	E	N
			A	N	A	T		I	N	T	O
A	R	T	I	S	T	I	C		E	B	B	E	D
S	O	I	L		O	R	I	E	S		B	A	R	E
S	U	R	E		M	E	T	E	S		I	B	I	S
N	E	E	D		S	T	E	R	N		N	E	C	K

11-30-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

Things to do

1) Get sqaure comic strip for this stupid space.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Tomato Rice Soup OneyGa

Chicken Pesto Pasta

Sloppy Joe

Vegan Sloppy Joe (vegan)

Native American Stew (W Basics) (vegan)

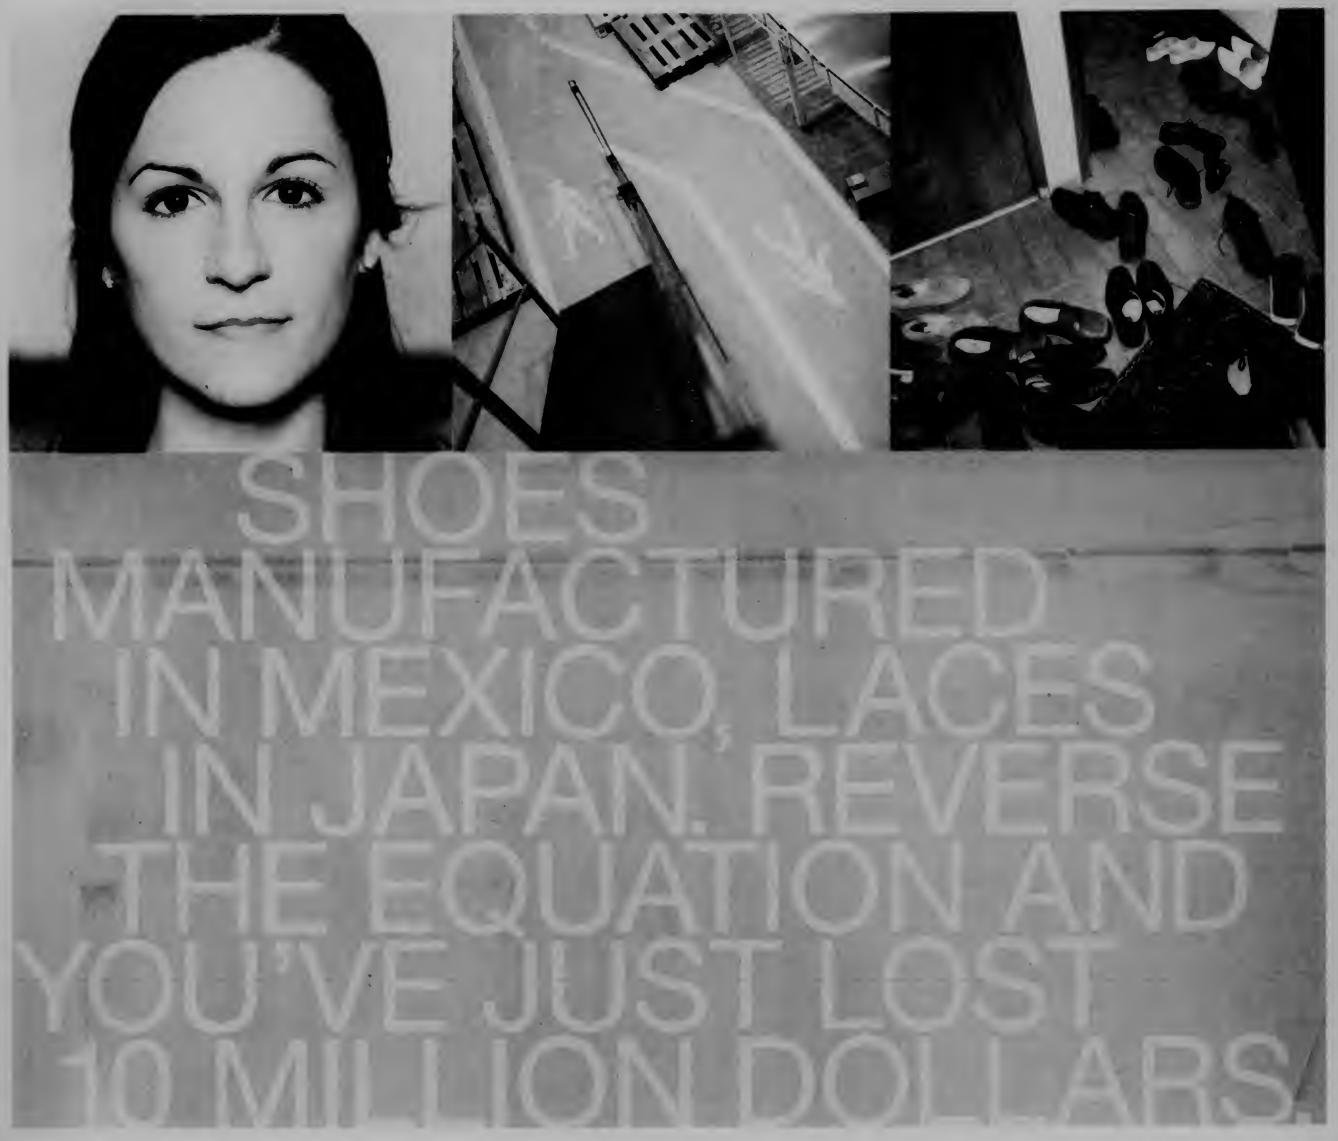
DINNER

COFFEE & BISCOTTI SPECIAL

Tomato Rice Soup

BBQ Chicken Quarters

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)



Falafel Burger (W Basics) (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Sam Wilkinson
Photo Editor: Tibora Gircyc-Blum
Copy Editor: Jess Mav
Sports Supervisor: Mike Kulak
Production Staff: Melissa Hammel, Jess Mav

© 2002 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. PricewaterhouseCoopers refers to the U.S. firm of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP and other members of the worldwide PricewaterhouseCoopers organization. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

MARCH

RUSTED ROOT HAS TAKEN A TURN FOR THE WORSE. TURN TO ARTS FOR THE REVIEW

STATE OF AFFAIRS IN CHINA
ED/OP PAGE 4.

READ ABOUT ATHLETICS
SPORTS PAGE 12.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

FRIDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE NINETY ONE ☆☆☆☆☆ 3.1.02

TIBORA CIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Gail paints at the Anchor House studio.

Faculty Senate votes to condemn hiring of football defense coach

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Faculty at the University of Massachusetts voted to condemn the hiring of a football defensive coordinator after a budget presentation by interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams to the Faculty Senate yesterday.

It was announced Wednesday that Tom Masella, former Boston University head coach would be taking the defense coordinator position. The post has been empty for three months.

"This position has been vacant for three months," Williams said. "With spring training starting, we need to provide that for student athletes now."

Senator Brian O'Connor, a professor of Biology, sponsored the motion chastising the hiring. O'Connor said that at a time when people were being laid off and forced into retirement, UMass should not be hiring in athletics.

"I have to respectfully disagree with the Chancellor," O'Connor said. "What didn't sit well with me was that the post was only vacant three months."

The motion was then read to the Senate.

"Be it resolved that the Faculty Senate condemn the decision of the administration to approve the hiring of an assistant football coach," O'Connor said. "It's sending the wrong message at the wrong time. I love football; I have tickets to football. But the mission of the University is academic, not athletics.

"I'm afraid we shot ourselves in both feet," O'Connor said. "I think the credibility of these actions [budget cuts] are going down the tubes when new turn around and hire an assistant football coach."

Senator Jack Tager, a History professor, seconded the motion.

"I don't care if we have a football coach. I don't care if we have a football team," Tager said. Tager was upset that the position was filled after only thee months vacancy. "We've had positions in Germanic history and medieval history vacant for three, four years. We've sent people to conferences, got the best people in the world to apply for the position, and we can't hire two junior faculty, but we can hire a football coach? This is ridiculous. Who's in charge here? Why can't they just say no?"

The motion carried with few dissenting votes. The motion comes two weeks after the Faculty Senate asked the administration to cut two million dollars over the next four years from the athletic budget.

Williams delivered a budget update entitled "How Shall We Know Ourselves?" to the Faculty Senate.

Turn to SENATE, page 3

Reflections of a Pakistani reporter

By Jake Lilien
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Nafisa Hoodbhoy was not surprised when she heard that Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl had been kidnapped while investigating terrorist groups in Pakistan. Hoodbhoy herself had twice been subjected to attacks while working as a reporter in the same country.

Hoodbhoy, a visiting professor of Women's Studies at the University of Massachusetts, worked as a reporter for the English-language Pakistani newspaper Dawn from 1984-2000. Her assignments included investigations into the corruption of the ruling regimes, tasks that often proved dangerous. One night in Sept. of 1991, she returned to her house and saw men with knives waiting for her.

"It was a bad year for journalists," Hoodbhoy explained. "The government was volatile, and reporting on what they were up to made you prone to attacks. A colleague reporter of mine had been stabbed the day before."

Hoodbhoy managed to escape her attackers, who she assumes were connected to Pakistani intelligence agencies. Recent reports have suggested that there is a connection between Pearl's kidnappers and the same groups.

While Hoodbhoy was shocked that Pearl was murdered by his kidnappers, ["This is the first time a reporter has been murdered in Pakistan," she said], she feels that Pearl was a prime target for terrorists' aggressions.

"They looked at him as a Jew, a Westerner and a journalist," she said. "He was murdered for what he represented – and being a Jew meant more than being a journalist." The anti-Jewish feelings of the Pakistani extremist groups, she said, were clearly prevalent in their selection of Pearl. A videotape of Pearl's death obtained by the U.S. government shows footage of Pearl being interrogated about his Jewish heritage shortly before his death.

Hoodbhoy also said that the murder is related to "a sense of defeat" among extremist groups.

"It's quite clear that this was 'getting back'," she explained. "There have been reports that the number of Afghans killed [as a result of the U.S. bombings] is equal to the number of people killed in the World Trade Center. The terrorists are now grabbing hold of innocent civilians – we're seeing revenge politics."

Hoodbhoy left Pakistan in 2000 to take a temporary position as a lecturer at Amherst College, and now teaches at UMass. Yet she still follows the politics of the region closely and is particularly concerned with the Pakistani government's actions in dealing with the kidnappers.

"If the culprits are not taken to task," Hoodbhoy said,

Turn to PAKISTAN, page 3

Inside the Anchor House

By Matthew Despres
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Hundreds of different worlds exist in the Anchor House, and you can hang each one of them by a quarter-inch nail and length of wire. They orbit around each other in a bright, warm atmosphere, the motion continuous as the universes inhabited by each expand from room to room. Some of them emit light and pieces of life. They show family and landscapes and scenes of embrace. Some of them emit nothing and reflect, like miniature full moons, the darkness quietly eluding the others. In these you will see hauntingly flat profiles being rained down upon by lustrous animal eyes.

Or, you will see two hands pushing down a red light that still manages to spill through between the fingers.

Or, a room with eight patients going nowhere.

The hallways here lead to other hallways, bigger rooms, and even greater opportunity. Tillyer shows me to the gathering area, a living room, though in a way they all accomplish that. It too is dressed with artwork and sculpture, but also accessorized with citations for public service. The plaques represent the deconstruction of longstanding stigmas that establishments like the NSH supported with its sore walls for years. They are, in a sense, a symbol for the fully realized process of cause and effect: if you provide it they will come. The blueprints for an idea like the Anchor House are elementary, decipherable to the untrained eye and resonate with those in the immediate community. Tillyer says response has been strong, a fact the clippings in his scrapbook attest to. These pages are the snapshots of a childhood, and they quietly promise a fulfilling adult life. Even so, eight years after the NSH shut its doors, and long since institutionalization was the preferred method of treating patients, a question lingers for the ignorant remainder: what course of action is best to help treat these individuals?

> "The blueprints for an idea like the Anchor House... resonate with those in the immediate community."
>
> - Michael Tillyer

Sitting now in the common room, Tillyer sets his answer on the table. "[Patients] talk about [hospitals and treatment] the same way you talk about being a student. It's their life. From the outsider perspective, meaning someone that hasn't been involved with the mental world as a patient, something happens when some other individual diagnoses you with a problem. All of a sudden your whole world becomes suspect; where are the limits of your mind? What are the limits of your illness? What do you think is sensible, what isn't? It impairs your judgment, not because of the illness, but because of the social effect. When you recover, at what point can you trust your own sensibilities? It's a very different thing – it's a parallel universe.

Everyone speaks for his or her own situations as individuals. What we do is offer people options for self-definition. To see yourself as a mental health patient doing artwork, or as an artist who has some mental health problems. There's a very big difference."

Brian Carrier is a walking canvas colored by a human medium. He is a serious artist, and appears to not enter a room but already exist in it, bits of him mixed into the oils and threaded through the sculpture. Carrier will tell you within five minutes of meeting him that during the year he turned 13, he won an art contest on a Vermont dairy farm and was shot in the right eye by a B.B. gun. The former gave him a goal in life; the latter indefinitely delayed it. The day before the B.B. burrowed its way into his eye and shifted the power of his vision heavily to one side, Carrier had asked the Lord to help him learn to be a good mechanic. Although this was his main request, he says he would drop wishes like "But I'd really like to be a painter" into these dialogues.

For Brian, "art is not a purple cloud with a red stripe on it." It is something more. He has worked many jobs, taken some classes at Greenfield Community College, and, somewhere along the way, discovered a tape on becoming a born-again Christian while sharing an apartment. He'll tell you that he took the steps prescribed within and they became a driving force in his life, that he experienced many highs, the connective tissue between them what he can only describe as "an awesome sense."

Tillyer says Carrier has been with the house for three months, and is typical of the artists who show up self-referred and use the space on a liberal schedule. There is a core group of approximately twelve artists, though some leave for six-months and then return. By offering freedom of choice, says Tillyer, "What's happened to people and their work is that it's deepened. It's gotten stronger. Seeing their work treated, as professional art ought to be treated, they begin to take themselves more seriously. It takes on a new

Turn to ANCHOR HOUSE, page 3

Have a drink looking over the horizon

By Rachel Smith
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Anyone looking for a view a little more breathtaking than the windows in the Graduate Lounge will be happy to hear that the University of Massachusetts Catering Services opened the Top of the Campus (TOC) bar to the public this semester.

Sam Nasratian, a bartender at the TOC bar, said business has been steady but not exactly "hopping." He doesn't mind the relatively mellow ambiance at the bar.

"It's a quiet atmosphere; no crowds," Nasratian said. "There aren't that many guys. Mainly girls hang out there, which is nice for me."

Nasratian said that women appreciate the TOC bar because they feel safer than they do off-campus.

"Its extremely safe for women," he said. "We have two people on security, and we have walkie-talkies for back-up security. We always keep a close eye on what's happening in the bar."

According to Nasratian, students who can't find a designated driver Saturday nights don't have to stay at home.

"It's a lot of fun. You can just walk there and walk back. Since the school cut the escort service, some people are afraid they'll go out to a party and not be able to get back on campus. This way, people don't have to drive," he added. "It prevents a lot of drunk driving."

Designated drivers get free soft drinks at the TOC bar, and everybody can take advantage of free crackers, nuts and other snacks.

"We've got a big screen TV, which is relatively new and real nice speakers. The view is beautiful," Nasratian said. "You don't have to drink to hang out."

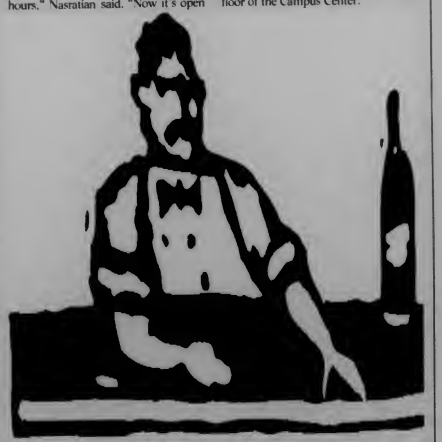
People who do choose to drink shouldn't expect to lose control at the TOC bar.

"All of our bartenders are either Bar Code certified or will be soon. We know when to cut somebody off," he said, but added, "People usually know their limit."

Bar Code certification is not required of bartenders, but it is generally encouraged by the state. The Bar Code regulates the serving of alcohol, like what constitutes a shot, etc.

However, don't expect to hang out at the bar if you're underage.

"We can't let anyone who's under 21 drink," Nasratian said. "It's against the law."



UMass students who are of legal drinking age can expect the TOC bar to remain open indefinitely.

"It used to be open all the time, but they needed to use it for private functions, so the bar didn't have regular hours," Nasratian said. "Now it's open regular hours, and it will remain like that for the long term."

Although UMass students can chose from many bars located off-campus, Nasratian maintains that the TOC bar is far better than the local watering holes.

"The bars in town are crowded, and we definitely have the better view," he said. "But the best part is that you don't need to drive to get here."

The bar is open to the public, not just UMass students and faculty. Anybody of legal drinking age can visit the bar. It is open from 7 p.m. to 12 a.m. on Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays and is located on the 11th floor of the Campus Center.

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Bottoms up

COME TO THE TOP OF THE CAMPUS CENTER FOR SOME DRINKS, BUT ONLY IF YOU ARE AT LEAST 21.

Campus Perspectives

by Jeff Swartz

"Who is your favorite Simpson's character?"

"Homer, because his idiocy is hilarious"
Roberto Alejandro '04 Political Science and History

"Ground's Keeper Willie, because if it's not Scottish it's crap."
Tim Creedon '05 History
Andrew Williston '05 Environmental Science

"Bart, because of his ability to laugh at life."
Sarah Schweinler '04 BDIC

"Bart. Without him there would be no show."
Kara Green '04 Pre-Med/Psychology

"Marge Simpson, because is different from other moms. She just goes with the good and excepts the bad."
Keisha Hamilton '04 Psychology

"Do they smoke weed on the Simpson's?"
Jeff Koolz '05 Theater

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic calendar. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as 1890 as Index Ads. became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauti Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Fibora Gireyve-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

ATTENTION ALL RAs & CDAs

THE RA UNION IS INVITING HOUSING SERVICES/ RESIDENCE LIFE MGMT TO A PUBLIC DEBATE

In the name of democracy and the free flow of information, the RA Union & UAW openly challenge RLM to engage in a public discourse about the RA Union

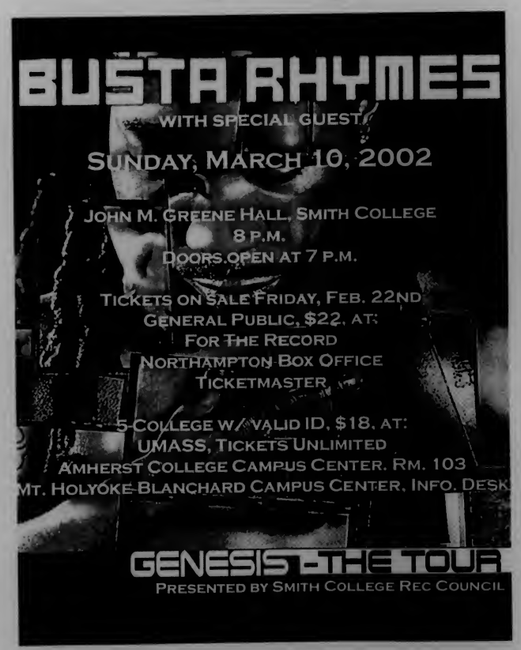
WHEN: Sunday, March 3rd
TIME: 7:00pm
LOCATION: Campus Center Rm. 174



All RAs and CDAs are encouraged to attend and ask questions as you prepare for the the election on March 5

The union is willing to work with RLM and the Chancellor's office to have a fair and open debate moderated by a neutral party.

The Union is also willing to be flexible in accommodating Management's schedule.

For more information call the RA Union at 577-2629

www.dailycollegian.com

Radical Student Union meets to discuss ways to improve meetings

By Catherine Turner
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Meetings were the topic of the meeting of the Radical Student Union on Wednesday. Several members of the registered student organization gathered in a Campus Center room to watch a video about how to run an effective meeting.

"One thing the RSU has been working on for a while now is having good meetings," Neil Nugent, a senior undeclared major and member of the RSU, said. "We're trying to become more productive."

The video, entitled Organizing for Social Change: Having Good Meetings, was the third in a series of documentaries sponsored and shown by the RSU. This particular film was presented as an example of how to become more structured in activism, and therefore get more accomplished.

"I think radicals are sometimes afraid of structure," Martina Robinson, a graduate student said. "Like it is some bad, evil, republicanistic thing."

Before the video started, there was a short discussion about why and how meetings can be bad or fruitless. Time constraints, adversarial stances and personal soapboxes were all reasons that were offered.

The video presented a list of elements required for good meetings. These include: starting and ending on time, participation, and setting an agenda. It went on to list pre-planning, action items, open discussion and keeping focus as other important aspects of meetings.

"Bob's rules" were also examined in the video. These are: making a motion, seconding the motion, discussion and voting on the motion. Amending the motion is also included.

Once the video came to an end, another discussion ensued about reactions to the film.

"I think Bob's rules seemed too extreme for the RSU," Ryan Coughlin, a senior Psychology major said. "[But] I like the pre-planning."

The RSU members in attendance talked about what tips from the film could be incorporated into meetings at their own organization. They agreed that more participation and preparation is needed to enhance RSU conferences.

"When I first became an activist, I used to sit back and let the facilitator run the meeting," Nugent said. "But everyone should really be involved in the facilitating of the meeting."

The meetings for the RSU are on Wednesdays at 6 p.m., at locations to be announced, but are always in the Campus Center. Right now, the RSU is involved in several campaigns, including the Save UMass movement, fighting against budget cuts.

"We do a lot of tabling [for Save UMass]," Coughlin said. "We lose our RSUness when we get out on the concourse. [Out there] we're just helping to fight for a cause."

The RSU teamed up with the Student Government Association to go door-to-door to register voters. They also have staged guerrilla, or street, theater to do skits about budget cuts.

More videos will be shown twice a week every week throughout the semester. Flyers are and will be posted around campus advertising the upcoming films and their show times. The RSU is located in the Student Union.

■ senate

continued from page 1

Williams remains optimistic for the future, but acknowledges that times will not be easy in the coming months and possibly years.

"The critical number for us for next year will be whatever the 2003 budget actually is," Williams said. "That is the number within which we will need to operate the campus. We don't know what that number is now.

"Our mission has not changed, but our approach to how fulfill that mission will be necessary have to change," Williams continued. "We will be different, but whatever we are, we must be very good."

It is important to work together and focus on what is going right, rather what is going wrong, Williams said.

"If we only ask ourselves about what is going wrong, paying attention only to our problems and deficits, then the University falls deeper into a sense deficiency. If we only ask ourselves what greater calamity lurks on the horizon, then the university falls deeper into a state of paralysis, of dread," Williams said. "When we inquire about what we continue to do right, what we continue to do exceptionally well, then we grow toward our excellence. Highlighting positive achievements is not meant to deny the severity of the challenges we face.

"While it is essential to focus on our strengths internally, it is also imperative that we prepare to respond to the questions about the way we operate – especially in academic affairs – which will inevitably come from outside the campus," Williams said.

Williams said that the University will continue despite the challenges.

"We have it in us to survive this," Williams said. "The Amherst campus has repeatedly maintained its courage in the face of financial challenges."

■ pakistan

continued from page 1

"Pakistan will be a very dangerous place for all journalists."

Ahmed Omar Saeed Sheikh, believed to be the terrorist's ringleader, is currently in police custody, and Hoodbhoy worries about his fate. She suggested that the government might be tempted to kill him as a way of preventing proof of the involvement of intelligence groups from becoming public. She hopes that he will be extradited to the United States, so that he can be "grilled" about his group's connections.

Hoodbhoy is currently teaching a course on the media's representation of Islamic cultures, and feels that the initial American media coverage of the kidnapping was poor.

"I think that the media did not have a clue as to what was happening," she said. "Pearl died a month ago, around Jan. 31. I was reading international reports that he had been killed, but the American media outlets [did not know this]. I think part of the reason was that they were fooled by the Pakistani establishment."

After Pearl's death, however, Hoodbhoy has seen what she calls "intelligent coverage" in sources like The New York Times, which has thoroughly investigated the connections between the terrorists and Pakistani intelligence agencies. She is also glad that the anti-Semitism of the kidnappers has been exposed in sources like National Public Radio.

Ultimately, she feels that the incident was an embarrassment to Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf, who was unable to prevent Pearl's murder.

"I think it demonstrates the weakness of his regime," Hoodbhoy said. "He's not as much in command of the military, because of all of the parallel activities taking place."

She noted that truly reining in Islamic militants would require him to step back from his attempts to claim the Kashmir territory.

"This will be a test for him," she said.

BY MATTHEW F. SACCO/COLLEGIAN

Civil Vigil

STUDENTS FORM THE BLACK STUDENT UNION HELD A VIGIL YESTERDAY TO COMMEMORATE THE CIVIL RIGHTS MOVEMENT. STORY TO FOLLOW ON MONDAY.

■ anchor house

continued from page 1

level of seriousness."

A conversation between Tillyer and Carrier:

BC: "This is a place that allows me to invest my mind, to work at something, rather than accept what you get from the government."

MT: "We were talking about what this place means to people and, well, I know what it means to me, and now I know a little more of what it means to you, and I can see the physical results of what it means to you; you're exploring your painting."

BC: [Laughing] "I bought a sail, you know, from a sailboat."

MT: "Oh yeah?"

BC: "I got two big sails last night and I don't know how to use them yet, but..."

MT: "How large?"

BC: "I don't know..."

In the rear of the building exists studio space, a brilliantly lit area overgrown with the moss of an artistic species. Brushes. Easels. Bits of wood, plastic and rubber stripping wait at attention until further notice. Carrier is the only artist in today, and he's working in the back under the "Exit" sign. It turns out sails are far from the only recent purchase he's made: an electric saw with a faulty band, stacks of frames, small novelty sculptures and a saw horse waiting to be picked up are among his most recent conquests. He introduces us to some of his work.

One painting sticks out like an ace as he fans the canvasses. A large, white silhouette fastens the piece, the faintest of lines tracing the contour of what Carrier says is his own figure. Over the head a pink stroke follows a curious, twisted path. It's a question. What am I? Where do I belong? Not just in this painting, but in your world; what is your interpretation of me? It is the outline of an angel, and it has a sparse power to it that, as Carrier notes, fills in as you connect your own points. The piece is moving, and as Brian runs out to his car to retrieve a sketch he's done, Tillyer and I look on.

The angel is there.

Tillyer envisions the house growing from here. He hopes to have, within five years, contracts with the Department of Mental Health and the Massachusetts Commission for Rehabilitation so that the artists will have to rely less on federal subsidy. He realizes, however, the realistic challenges in store for both the house and the artists.

"When you have a mental health disability, a persistent disability, you're most of the time eligible for social security payments, and that's primarily how they make their ends meet. Some people have part-time jobs. As for us, we're not set up so, although it could be seen differently, we don't want to get in a position where we're dependent on the artists who produce to exist. You know, we're not going to say, 'Paint more of these, do these kind of paintings. It's exactly what happens in the art world. Who we are as artists fascinates me, and we want to work with that."

Toni Riddell, Dean of first-year students at Smith and the instructor of a NSH seminar, acknowledges the importance of such ventures.

"It seems to me that what the Anchor House is an outcome of the fact that we're in a new era, and there is an effective structure of community based treatment. There are better supports in the community than there have ever been; some progress has been made on the stigmas attached to mental illness. The House is an example of that new era, as an outlet for serious expression."

Each day the lights in the Anchor House are switched on, a thousand worlds prepare for dawn and begin to revolve. Brian Carrier will come in and imagine the ways he can fill his sails and move on. Artists will come and go, combing with oils and carving through solids an identity, for themselves and as professionals. The work of Genevieve Burnett, of Dan Vazquez, will hang in memorial to the lives they have lived, and in tribute to the opportunities they have been provided. Each day, Mike Tillyer will come to work and place his hands around the mold, working at it bit by bit until all the pieces fit.

Each day the Anchor House will breathe in, will exhale, and will step forward into the next measure.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/1 - Thursday 3/7
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
40 DAYS & 40 NIGHTS (R) 12:50 4:30 7:10 9:50
WE WERE SOLDIERS (R) 12:30 4:30 7:40 10:30
IN THE BEDROOM (R) 12:20 4:15 7:15 10:20 (12:30 PM on Thurs 3/7 Only)
HART'S WAR (R) 3:50 10:40
JOHN Q (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05
COLLATERAL DAMAGE (R) 9:55
BIG FAT LIAR (PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:20 9:50
SUPER TROOPERS (R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15
CROSSROADS (PG13) 12:40 4:35 7:05 9:45
RETURN TO NEVERLAND (G) 12:35 2:30 4:40 7:15
THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO (PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00
BLACK HAWK DOWN (R) 12:05 7:10
A BEAUTIFUL MIND (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
LORD OF THE RINGS (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
Senior Movie - 3/7 IN THE BEDROOM doors open at 11:45
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Concessions supplied by cinemark.com

AST Sports Science EAS American Bodybuilding Sugar Flora
Met-Rx Ephedrin Twinlab Nitric Sportspharma Xtreme Nutrition Balance Bistro
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
GET IN SHAPE!
Burn Fat, Build Muscle!
SPECIALS
XENADRINE Fat Burner 120 capsules $23.95
CREATINE 500g. $15.99
WHEY PROTEIN 6 lbs. $27.99
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
65 University Drive
Amherst, Massachusetts
PHONE: 549-7434
HOURS:
M thru F 10 - 7
Sat 10 - 5
Met-Rx Ephedrin Twinlab Nitric Sportspharma Xtreme Nutrition Balance Bistro
AST Sports Science EAS American Bodybuilding Sugar Flora

it's not for everyone, but that's
[the point].

In Army ROTC you'll push yourself. Test your limits. And in the process, learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. You could even get a scholarship. Register today for an Army ROTC class. Because you're not just like "everyone."

LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM WRITING IN YOUR OWN VOICE, BEYOND THE DAILY FREE WORD LIMIT. ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Media misrepresents views

Anti-Semitism exists all over

One of the top news stories on CNN.com yesterday read, "Poll: Muslims Call U.S. Ruthless, Arrogant." The story detailed how a Gallup poll of residents in numerous Muslim countries showed that a majority of them found the United States to be vengeful, shortsighted and materialistic. The percentage of the respondents that found America's attacks on the Taliban to be unjustifiable was greater than the percentage that found the Sept. 11 attacks to be unjustifiable.

These statistics are certainly enough to give pause. But the most shocking factoid lay buried in the middle of the article. Sixty-one percent of Muslims, according to the survey, refused to believe that Arabs were responsible for the World Trade Center attacks. The group most commonly cited as being truth at fault? Israelis.

Many Americans heard of the vicious rumors circulated after the attacks that Jews were somehow responsible for them. A commonly circulated e-mail claimed that the four thousand Jewish employees that worked in the World Trade Center failed to show up to work on Sept. 11, presumably because the "real" perpetrators had warned them. Most Westerners rightly shrugged off these rumors as implausible. (One is tempted to ask how these employees caught wind of the rumors without anyone else hearing them, or why the Jews would be interested in bombing American buildings.) However, the theory seems to have caught on in a number of Islamic nations.

It should come as no surprise that the survey's respondents would be opposed to the bombing of Afghanistan if they don't see Osama bin Laden (or any other Arabs, for that matter) as being responsible for the attacks of Sept. 11. It should also come as no surprise that some of the regimes of these Islamic nations are eager to cast blame on Jews and on the nation of Israel, rather than on the actual culprits.

Anti-Semitism figures prominently into another of the major news stories of the day, as well. The videotape of Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl's death shows that shortly before Pearl's murder, he was forced to make statements such as, "My father is Jewish. My mother is Jewish. I am a Jew." and to describe family trips to Israel.

The fact that Pearl was Jewish was rarely mentioned in early reports of his kidnapping, but it has proven to be one of the kidnappers' crucial motivations. Originally, they claimed that Pearl was an agent of an Israeli intelligence group.

If we have learned anything, it is that the anti-Semitism of extremist Islamic groups cannot be underestimated. While we concentrate on the terrorists' hatred of Americans, it appears that their hatred of Jews may trump any other prejudices they have.

In the United States, it is easy to forget about the anti-Semitism that exists in many other parts of the world. But as the case of Daniel Pearl proves, we cannot afford to forget it. Important news about anti-Semitism, wherever in the world it may exist, should not be buried in the middle of an article.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

"IF IT'S JUST INADVERTENT SIMULATION, A PATTERN IN ALL MANKIND, WHAT'S GOT THE WHOLE WORLD FAKING IT?" WRITE TO ED/OP AND LET US KNOW.

collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

On the phone again:

A take on the great cell phone debate

REGAN MCKENDRY

A big, red checkmark. We're all young enough to remember elementary school, right? Thus everyone knows a red checkmark is a symbol of something good, that excellence, or, at the bare minimum, satisfaction has been achieved. I still see a big red checkmarks quite frequently, practically everyday. There's always one there when I turn on my cell phone.

Obviously the red checkmark inference indicates that I'm a Verizon Wireless customer, but that's not the point. I'm not here to pick on AT&T, Voicestream, or any of the other wireless companies, just as I'm not about to give push of enthusiasm towards the company which has given James Earl Jones' his biggest gig by far (though trust me, I could very easily). No I'm not here to talk about the companies offering the service, but rather one of the greatest inventions of the past twenty years.

It's become taboo to praise cell phones lately. The service is at times indescribably awful, a quality people would never put up with on their regular phone line. Hell, there're still areas where we can't send or receive phone calls. Rate plans, while marketed as a simple numbers game (5,500 night and weekend minutes for only $29.99), when in actuality an accountant from the Wharton School of Business would probably have his head spinning. Oh, and then there's my favorite: cell phones are making our country's roads highways of death.

People can show statistics in front of my face about accident rates, mental distraction and whatever else they care to study. I don't care! I am not giving my cell phone up. It is my personal phone that I use almost wherever I want (I'm not yet ready to battle with my professor about making a phone call in class, but I have gone out into the hall to answer one).

Driving is all about concentration and multitasking; some people just do it better than others. The skilled driving style that defines a commuter in metro Boston may be mistaken as reckless in other part's of this nation, but in actuality, it is nothing more than drivers who are at the top of their game. As one of that flock, I have no fear in my mind driving 80 mph down a crowded highway listening to potentially distracting music or even talking on my possibly deadly cell phone.

When radios were first put in cars, there were groups of people saying that driving would no longer be safe, for the distractions that listening to music would cause could have catastrophic ramifications. Last I checked radios, and now even televisions, are in cars all over the place. Now the same group of scared worrywarts are crying foul about my right to make a phone call while behind the wheel. Well to them I say...well I can't very well print what I want to say (the Collegian must maintain some sense of decency right?).

"Odds are that if you're so concerned about me being on my Motorola, then you aren't dedicating as much of you energy to driving your own automobile."

As I said before, the ability to multitask, or even just to drive an automobile well even without a cell phone, is not possessed by everyone. Some people have it; some people don't. It is a well-known fact that I can't play basketball to save my life. For this reason, you don't see me suiting up next to Kyle Wilson and Anthony Anderson on Coach Lappas' bench at the Mullins Center. In a similar vein, if you know that you have a hard time driving and talking on the phone at the same time (or just driving period), then don't try to bite off more than you can chew. Get yourself a cell phone, and just don't use it when in the driver's seat. Simple?

If people would use their own common sense, those of us who are capable of holding a cell phone in one hand and the steering wheel in the other, would be able to make our plans for the evening while speeding thru the Chicopee curve on I-91. New York has already made it illegal to talk on your cell phone while driving without using a headset. Numerous other states, including Massachusetts are considering passing similar legislation, further hindering our rights as motorists. Once you give in to headset legislation, how long will it be before cell phones on the road are banned all together?

Let's face it folks. When you get behind the wheel of your car, you are putting yourself at risk. It doesn't matter whether you're running down to the local Lil' Peach or traveling five hours down to Philadelphia (which I seem to be doing a lot lately). It's a risk that we as drivers accept as part of the deal for being allowed to drive what some frequently classify as a means of deadly destruction. Talking on a cell phone is also a risk, but it is a risk so minor, when done properly, that I shouldn't even have to be writing this. However, alarmists would have you think that the next time you drive by a person yakking away, you are going to be killed in a collision. That's just stupid.

If you do drive by me and catch me on my phone, don't try to get me to hang the phone up or pull over to finish the call. Odds are that if you're so concerned about me being on my Motorola, then you aren't dedicating as much of you energy to driving your own automobile. Therefore, all that you will see before your eyes is the dust from my car speeding away from an annoying slowpoke.

Regan McKendry is a Collegian columnist.

University overlooking key aspects

RACHEL SMITH

The University of Massachusetts administration thumbed their noses at families when they closed the campus day care center. Then they defiantly abandoned diversity when they announced the closing of the Foreign Language Resource Center. The friendly folks in Whitmore demonstrated their unwavering dedication to women's safety by eliminating the escort service. Now they are essentially wiping their derrieres with our nation's flag by eliminating the Veterans' Assistance Office at the end of this semester with no warning and no workable plan to competently serve students next semester.

The campus Veterans' Assistance Office (VA) was hardly inefficient. A staff of a whopping thang on to your seats (ONE person served the veterans population of the entire school, including part time and continuing education students. The woman working in the Veterans' office had over a decade's worth of experience handling veterans' claims and issues. The school will divide up her responsibilities among inexperienced administrators next semester.

Many veterans are entitled to a monthly payment called the Montgomery G.I. Bill (MGIB). That payment can range from $400 to over $1200, depending on length of service and bonus "kicker" money. Some veterans are eligible for additional money and benefits depending on whether they are disabled, have served during armed conflict and their specific enlistment contracts. Veterans can complete most of the filing process themselves, but they rely on the school to complete the filing and verification process for them.

Veterans have to verify their enrollment status with the VA each semester. After the school verifies a veteran's enrollment status, the campus VA representative faxes the student's information to the regional Veterans' Affairs (VA) Office. Currently, new VA MGIB claims are backlogged by six to eight weeks. If the school has a bunch of incompetent administrators handling the claims, the MGIB claims could easily get backlogged at the campus level. That means people who are counting on money from the VA may not have that money next semester, and veterans who have problems with their existing claims will not get the timely help they need to ensure they get paid.

This is a gross oversimplification of veterans' affairs. Unfortunately, the attitude I was laced with from the student affairs office demonstrated how arrogant and incompetent the school administration is. The prevailing attitude is, what's the big deal?

Veterans are a unique group of people with special issues and concerns. We are entitled to different benefits depending on where we've served, when we've served, what happened during our service, how long we've served and many additional factors. Veterans' issues are not trivial, a mistake can cost us thousands of dollars, they are not self-evident, and they are not easy to manage competently.

Competent VA representatives need to be knowledgeable of the Veterans' Administration and the Department of Defense. The VA is a labyrinthine bureaucracy, almost another world complete with its own language and culture. People who live in that world have a difficult time navigating their way through the web of paperwork and regulations that rule the VA. I can't imagine that a group of untrained, inexperienced administrators could possibly assist veterans next semester.

There are seven U.S. Army values: loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage. It saddens me that I, and the other several hundred veterans on campus honor our country and the Commonwealth with our service's code of ethics, but the University stubbornly refuses to honor us with comparable levels of respect. But hey, I'm sure the Whitmore crew proudly display their newly trendy American flags and "9-11" bumper stickers on their expensive, well-maintained vehicles while the true patriots at this school get the middle finger.

"Respect is a two-way contract. You get it when you give it. The UMass administration obviously has no respect for the veterans who attend this University."

I was on active duty with the United States Army for four years. I loved serving my country. As a member of the National Guard, Reserve, or Individual Ready Reserve components. Our country is at war, and we can be called to active duty at any time. We need our nation's support and our school's support in order to be productive, educated citizen soldiers.

At the risk of sounding cliché, the issue is not whether we can afford to support veterans on this campus; the issue at hand is whether we can afford not to.

Rachel Smith is a UMass student.

Examining the US – China state of relations

ARTEM AGOULNIK

On Jan. 20, during his first State of the Union address, President George W. Bush delivered one of the most exaggerated and daring statements of his term in office. States like North Korea, Iraq and Iran, and their terrorist allies constitute an axis of evil aiming to threaten the peace of the world, Bush said.

Thank you, Mr. President. Thank you for finally standing up in front of the American people and letting them know that they have an ally and a nation that will not negotiate with terrorists.

Thank you for starting in the post-cold war era and not withdrawing after satisfying initial calls. Thank you for finally looking after the well-being of our armed services who are at this very moment protecting our right to be here. Thank you.

Unfortunately, but not without reason, since the members of the axis of evil remained unnamed for exciting. And believe me, it was not because the Bush administration considers it an ally. It's because its government was opposed and "contained" by President Clinton for eight years. But let us get one thing straight: the People's Republic of China (PRC) is not only the fourth member of the axis of evil, but it is the owner, general manager and the head coach of the team.

Bush paid a visit to the PRC on the anniversary of President Nixon's groundbreaking trip there 30 years ago. The meeting did not turn out to be a memorable one as Mr. President was not at liberty to discuss with Jiang Zemin the main points of controversy that exist between the two countries. Therefore I hope to do the Bush administration justice and discuss these issues in this article instead.

In the past year alone, two of the biggest crimes against humanity have been committed by the international community against freedom-loving Chinese citizens. And I am not even talking about the ongoing world passiveness with respect to Chinese aggressive extermination of religious communities such as the Falun Gong. I am talking about the fact the world stood by silently as the PRC was awarded the 2008 Summer Olympics and then was admitted into the World Trade Organization.

Did anyone else read our history books, or was that just me? Let's recap. 1931: the International Olympic Committee (IOC) awards Germany the 1936 Summer Olympics to be held in Berlin. 1933: Adolf Hitler consolidates power in Germany and the expansion of the Third Reich begins. 1473: the IOC awards the Soviet Union the 1980 Summer Olympics to be held in Moscow. By this time, the Soviet Union is already an established dictatorship, and a year before the Olympics begin, Soviet troops move into Afghanistan.

History has taught me one thing, then it is that appeasing dictatorial countries in hopes of changing their system does not work. Neither Nazi Germany nor the Soviet Union experienced social change brought about by the Olympics. The only accomplishment was world legitimization of oppressive government systems and a slap in the face of all the freedom fighters rotting in jail for their beliefs. Thus, I hope to join President Bush in boycotting the Olympics in 2008.

And if granting Beijing the Olympics did not legitimize the Chinese government enough, then its acceptance into the World Trade Organization in October 2001 accomplished that task. As a communist regime of power-hungry individuals that practice a brand of mafia-style control over the population, the Chinese government will simply be unable to adhere to the principles of "openness, free markets, transparency and competition" which underlie the World Trade Organization.

Already, U.S. Trade Representative Robert Zoellick has declared that China will not be able to honor all of its commitments. As of this month, the PRC has hindered American industries by imposing biotechnological regulations on farm shipments and failing to allocate import quotas for agricultural products. Thus, Chinese farmers will now have to endure longer terms in the fields to make up for the complacency of its government.

Although the Chinese government has been able to avoid the scrutiny of the world community in these matters, it simply must not escape that of the United States. Beijing is a direct threat to freedom, democracy and individual rights around the world. It is a champion of repression within its borders, and it is anxious to expand into an evil empire. For decades, Taiwan and Russia have been preparing for an invasion by the People's Liberation Army (PLA). And they have every right to be alarmed. Mass bung in Chinese tourist sites have long been illustrating China to exist beyond its legal borders to the north and west. But more significantly, in May and August of 2001 the PLA had test-fired a new cruise missile that rivaled the U.S. Tomahawk as part of a land-based cruise missile system with guiding abilities. If such arrogant proliferation in a time of arms control doesn't alarm the free world, then we must be prepared for a second 9-11.

In a way, recent United States-Chinese relations have been a series of American policy blunders. China has been able to acquire American support for its admission in the World Trade Organization by running an enormous trade surplus with the United States over the past decade. China has also been able to acquire United States support for its bid to host the 2008 Olympics that will result in tremendous revenue for the country. None of this economic stimulus, however, has found its way into the hands of the civilians. Instead, the PLA has been consistently increasing its budget and proliferating without reprimands for years.

In November of 2000, according to Defense and Foreign Affairs Digest, General Zhang Wannian, one of China's most senior military officials, reported at a PLA conference, "It is inevitable that a war will break out over the Taiwan Strait during the coming Five-Year-Plan [2001-2005]."

The question is: will the United States be able to face off with the evil it is creating in such a war?

By now we have all learned, I hope, that the world is not a happy place. There are countries out there that are seeking to destroy everything that we, as Americans, stand for. In China, freedom is not a given, but it is a cherished dream. Chinese citizens willing to fight for this dream are executed or imprisoned by the thousands. They need the leaders of the world to look at their government and punish it. Instead, they find the international community embracing PRC and awarding it the honor of hosting the Olympic games. I am certain that millions of imprisoned living souls listened to their crackling receivers as President Bush's visit was announced today. And I am certain that this news kept alive the spark of hope ignited in 1987 by President Reagan's confrontation with communism. However, I'm not so certain that these sparks can continue to light up the souls of Chinese democrats for much longer without worldwide support.

The PRC is undoubtedly the leading member of the axis of evil. And make no mistake – the United States is ready for war against the PRC. The tensions between the two nations will likely rise in the future as Hu Jintao, Jiang Zemin's less-traveled and more conservative successor, is said to be ready to take over the Presidency during the Chinese Communist Party Congress later this fall.

I hope that you are now aware that every time you purchase a product that reads "MADE IN CHINA," you are supporting the Chinese Communist Party. Make sure you know that you are paying for the bullets that kill hundreds a month for voicing their opinions. And most importantly, make sure you know that you are subsidizing technology that will enable the Chinese government to wage further war on the American way of life. It is only a matter of time before the United States will have to bring down the second evil empire.

Artem Agoulnik is a UMass student.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 3.1.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Friends can't fail but Browkaw can as CBS recruits

Since we found out that our "Friends" will still be around for one more season, speculation has begun as to what will happen in the season finale this May and the series finale in May 2003. Well, look no further than "Tube Notes" for the real answer.

One thing is for certain; this season's finale will climax with the birth of Rachel's child. And wouldn't it be "surprising" if Joey was really the father of the child and not Ross? Despite Internet speculation, there are no concrete plans for next season. Show producer David Crane told zap2it.com that there is talk of making the birth, "the longest labor in the history of hospital."

Despite Internet and gossip column speculation, there are no concrete plans for anything regarding the series finale, much less next season at all.

As Crane stated, "Every year we say this is the one where we're going plan the whole thing out," he adds. "But then we never do." This allows for the writers to take a more "play it by ear" approach and be able to react to what is hitting a positive cord with the audience. It must work since "Friends" is television's most successful comedy.

Looking For a Job?

Forget all those career fairs and spending all that time perfecting (embellishing?) your resume, the perfect career (short term) might be waiting for you.

If you're interested being locked in a house for three months while a few million people watch you a few times a week, rush your application to CBS today. The network is now taking applications for "Big Brother 3," the reality series which offers you a chance to win as much as $500,000

that's even more than SOM majors make in their first job!)

Applications are now available at cbs.com. The 69-question application, which asks the usual questions like "have you ever been arrested" must be completed by April 5th. The "arrest" questions carries some importance, since "Big Brother 2" contestant Justin Sebik was kicked out of the house after holding a knife to another contestants throat last season. Also, applicants must send CBS a two-minute video explaining what makes them a good contestant, along with two color photos.

West Wing Producer Apologizes to Brokaw

In the most ridiculous item of the week, "West Wing" creator and executive producer, Aaron Sorkin was asked to apologize by NBC higher ups for comments he made about George Bush and Tom Brokaw during a recent interview with The New Yorker.

In the interview, Sorkin stated that he felt the news media had given Bush a "free ride" since Sept. 11. Furthermore, Sorkin was upset with a report by Tom Brokaw on a "Dateline NBC" special, "The Bush White House." Sorkin stated that the "Dateline" piece "pumped up the President's schedule to show him being much busier and more engaged than he is, and Tom Brokaw let it happen. The show was a valentine to Bush."

Wednesday, Sorkin offered a formal apology to Brokaw. NBC Entertainment President Jeff Zucker stated, "we respect Aaron's right to say whatever he thinks. The only place we disagreed with him was in his comments about Tom Brokaw. He was just wrong when he said Tom let Bush pad the schedule with events. Aaron and Tom spoke Monday night. Aaron apologized to Tom. Aaron was not chastised by anybody at NBC at all."

Wartime or not, Sorkin has a right (called freedom of speech. I believe) to say whatever he wants to say about Bush, Brokaw, NBC or anything without fear of being reprimanded by his employer (don't believe he wasn't "chastised" by anybody at NBC). Then again, television will always be an outlet of censored, not free speech, as long as it is a slave to advertisers.

Information from tvguide.com and zap2it.com was used in this article.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member and judging by that last sentence, a huge fan of Sut Jhally.

He's here. He's queer. He's...Santa Claus?

Jeffrey Solomon plays Santa and Mrs. Claus (as seen here) in Santa Claus is Coming Out, playing in Bowker Auditorium this S.o.

By Jake Lilien
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Rosie O'Donnell isn't the only major celebrity planning to publicly come out of the closet.

Santa Claus, beloved icon of children everywhere, will stand up and be counted as a gay role model on Saturday, when writer/performer Jeffres Solomon brings his one-man show, Santa Claus is Coming Out, to the Bowker Auditorium. Solomon's show, about the world's reaction to Santa's homosexuality, will be performed one night only.

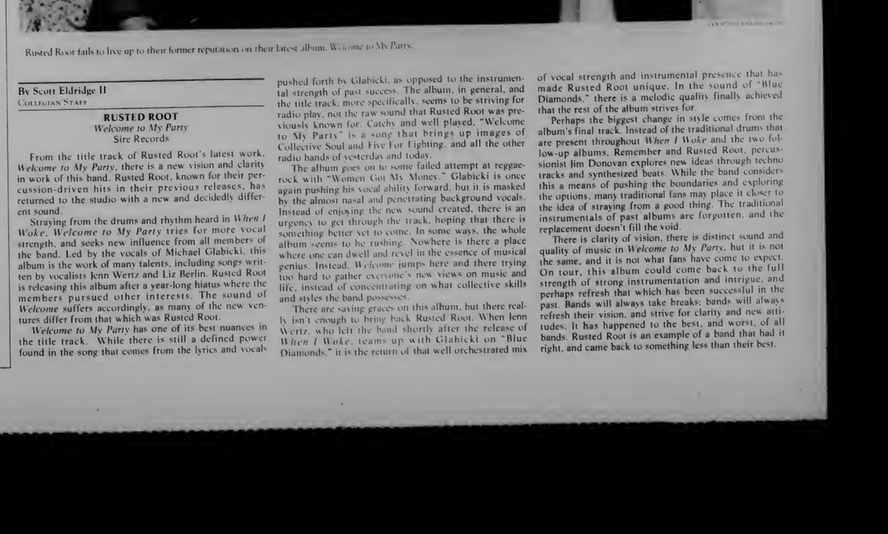
The show is described as an "eighty-minute confession-al," in which Jolly Old St. Nick is forced to decide between remaining a respected holiday figure and revealing the truth about his relationship with his longtime companion, the Italian toy maker Geovanni Geppedo. His decision affects not only his own life, but also that of his various North Pole employees, and his "beard," otherwise known as Mrs. Claus.

After word gets out about Santa's proclivities, outraged conservative groups begin an anti-Santa campaign, which they call, "Light a Fire for Family Values." Just as some parents object to the presence of gays as teachers or Boy Scout leaders, many begin to accuse Santa of promoting the "homosexual lifestyle."

"Is that rainbow sticker on his sleigh evidence of newfound pride in the gay community, or a plot to indoctrinate the world's children?" ask the show's fliers.

Santa Claus is Coming Out features not only the performance of Solomon, who at various points in the show portrays Santa, Mrs. Claus, Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer, and a host of other characters, but also music, multimedia and puppetry. These elements are presented in the format of a documentary.

Despite Santa's rather unconventional subject matter, the show has received its share of rave reviews.



"Solomon is a very gifted writer with a nicely sharp satirical knife," wrote a critic from the Chicago Tribune, reviewing the show. "Playing a gallery of characters of various genders and political stripes, Solomon is a very funny and detailed performer."

This is not Solomon's first performance on a University of Massachusetts stage. Two years ago, he brought another one-man show, MotherSON, to Amherst, and played both himself and his mother at the time of his own "coming-out."

MotherSON ran off-Broadway throughout 1998, prior to its national tour, and earned him a Jeffs citations nomination for outstanding actor in a leading role. He has also performed extensively for children, including stints as head writer for the CityKids Foundation in New York. He was nominated for an Emmy for Best Children's Special for the script of the television pilot of CityKids.

Santa Claus is Coming Out will be performed on Saturday, March 2, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets will cost $3 for students with UMass IDs, $5 for Five College students, and $7 for general admission. If interested, call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 545-2511, or 1-800-999-UMAS, for reservations.

Root's latest comes up short

Rusted Root fails to live up to their former reputation on their latest album, Welcome to My Party.

By Scott Eldridge II
COLLEGIAN STAFF

RUSTED ROOT
Welcome to My Party
Sire Records

From the title track of Rusted Root's latest work, Welcome to My Party, there is a new vision and clarity in work of this band. Rusted Root, known for their percussion-driven hits in their previous releases, has returned to the studio with a new and decidedly different sound.

Straying from the drums and rhythm heard in When I Woke, Welcome to My Party tries for more vocal strength, and seeks new influence from all members of the band. Led by the vocals of Michael Glabicki, this album is the work of many talents, including songs written by vocalists Jenn Wertz and Liz Berlin. Rusted Root is releasing this album after a year-long hiatus where the members pursued other interests. The sound of Welcome suffers accordingly, as many of the new ventures differ from that which was Rusted Root.

Welcome to My Party has one of its best nuances in the title track. While there is still a defined power found in the song that comes from the lyrics and vocals pushed forth by Glabicki, as opposed to the instrumental strength of past success. The album, in general, and the title track more specifically, seems to be striving for radio play, not the raw sound that Rusted Root was previously known for. Catchy and well played, "Welcome to My Party" is a song that brings up images of Collective Soul and Five For Fighting, and all the other radio bands of yesterday and today.

The album goes on to some failed attempt at reggae-rock with "Women Got My Money." Glabicki is once again pushing his vocal ability forward, but it is masked by the almost nasal and penetrating background vocals. Instead of enjoying the new sound created, there is an urgency to get through the track, hoping that there is something better yet to come. In some ways, the whole album seems to be rushing. Nowhere is there a place where one can dwell and revel in the essence of musical genius. Instead, Welcome jumps here and there trying too hard to gather everyone's new views on music and life, instead of concentrating on what collective skills and styles the band possesses.

There are saving graces on this album, but there really isn't enough to bring back Rusted Root. When Jenn Wertz, who left the band shortly after the release of When I Woke, teams up with Glabicki on "Blue Diamonds," it is the return of that well orchestrated mix of vocal strength and instrumental presence that has made Rusted Root unique. In the sound of "Blue Diamonds," there is a melodic quality finally achieved that the rest of the album strives for.

Perhaps the biggest change in style comes from the album's final track. Instead of the traditional drum-that are present throughout When I Woke and the two follow-up albums, Remember and Rusted Root, percussionist Jim Donovan explores new ideas through techno tracks and synthesized beats. While the band considers this a means of pushing the boundaries and exploring the options, many traditional fans may place it closer to the idea of straying from a good thing. The traditional instrumentals of past albums are forgotten, and the replacement doesn't fill the void.

There is clarity of vision, there is distinct sound and quality of music in Welcome to My Party, but it is not the same, and it is not what fans have come to expect. On tour, this album could come back to the full strength of strong instrumentation and intrigue, and perhaps refresh that which has been successful in the past. Bands will always take breaks; bands will always refresh their vision, and strive for clarity and new attitudes. It has happened to the best, and worst, of all bands. Rusted Root is an example of a band that had it right, and came back to something less than their best.

Wrestling's believe it or not

Unsolved Mysteries of Wrestling

In the wacky world of wrestling, where what is fake is real for some-thing like that) some stories take on life of their own. It can be hard for the marks (wrestlingspeak for fans who don't know what they're talking about) to keep track of reality. Watch wrestling with a group of people and you'll likely hear one of wrestling's many myths being touted like it is a fact. Well, here is the truth. It will help handle the truth.

Myth: Vince McMahon "made" wrestling, or he made wrestling popular.

Fact: Wrestling, and the World Wrestling Federation (WWF) for that matter, had been popular long before Vince got his hands on it. By 1984, wrestling was made up of dozens of successful regional promotions. People have been taught to believe that Vince took wrestling out of the smoke filled little arenas and into the big time. Well, not exactly. The WWF sold out Madison Square Garden and all of the other major arenas in the Northeast consistently during the late 1970's and early 1980's. Most importantly was already among the most watched shows during the early-mid 1980's on local television stations long before Vince took over.

Myth: Vince McMahon is a creative genius.

Fact: Vince McMahon owes much of his success to other people. He didn't come up with ideas for himself, did take some risks during the 1980's and made the WWF the first successful national promotion ever in the United States. Then his program went belly up and almost out of business in the mid 1990's, because of his inability to change with the times. It was 1985, and Vince was still promoting the WWF like it was 1965. When a WWF Magazine writer named Jeff Russo was promoted to become the head writer of WWF programming. He convinced McMahon to take the product in a more adult oriented and edgy direction, and the result was several years of huge success for the WWF that has begun to fall off over the past year.

Many of Russo's ideas were taken from the now defunct Extreme Championship Wrestling promotion which had a cutting edge adult orientation that existed several years before the WWF caught on that fans didn't want to see plumbers, clowns and cartoons as their wrestlers. Also, ECW was the competition (really the only competition) for WWF's pre-Monday Nitro program, going head to head with the WWF's Thursday program "Raw" forcing Vince McMahon to leave the Stone Age and edge with the times.

It's laughable when people dismiss Russo as the catalyst for the WWF's success, large simply because he did not succeed as a writer in WCW and the WWF has remained relatively strong since he left. The fact is when Russo was first hired as the head writer for the WWF, the ratings immediately went up, and continued to go up during his entire tenure. Since he left, WWF ratings have slowly, but steadily declined, along with all other aspects of WWF business. To this day, the WWF copies the Russo formula, just with as much success. If McMahon is such a "genius," why can't he figure out a way to reverse the WWF's downward trend? Also, why did he completely blow the potential biggest money angle in wrestling history last year when the WWF bought WCW? Why is he blowing the current NWO angle? Because he isn't nearly the "genius" that some label him as.

Myth: There were 93,000 people in a world indoor attendance record!

IN THE RING

the Silverdome in Pontiac, Michigan to witness Wrestlemania three headlined by Hulk Hogan vs. Andre The Giant.

Fact: Eighty thousand people were in attendance at the Silverdome in Pontiac, Michigan for Wrestlemania three headlined by Hulk Hogan vs. Andre The Giant. While the crowd is impressive, and the biggest in WWF history, the 93,000 figure is a lie.

Myth: Andre the Giant was undefeated before his Wrestlemania III match with Hogan, and there was serious doubt as to whether he would agree to lose to Hogan.

Fact: Andre had lost around a dozen times in his career prior to the Wrestlemania three match with Hogan. Most of the losses were in Japan and Mexico. There was no doubt at all that Andre would agree to lose to Hogan, and allow Hogan to both slam him in the process. Although Hogan claims that he didn't know whether the big guy would agree to lay down for him, "he is simply trying to add to the mystic of the match. Andre was almost completely immobile during the match due to a serious back injury.

Months prior to the match, the plan was for Andre to take time off to recuperate. If Andre was really going to win, why would he have planned to take months off after the match. He took about six months off after the match due to the injury?" Also, Hogan was not the first person to slam Andre like he wishes people to believe. Andre had let some of the big name stars in Japan and Mexico slam him before Hogan "pulled out his back" slamming Andre. (Yeah, sure Hulk. Andre jumping up into your arms and you "slamming" him was real difficult.)

Myth: The original Ultimate Warrior and the original Undertaker died, the people that play them now aren't the originals.

Fact: While only the densest of wrestling fans actually believe this, there are a few lost marks. The Ultimate Warrior was always played by Jim Hellwig (before he legally changed his name to "The Warrior," seriously). There were some rumors in 1991 that the original Warrior died of AIDS when he disappeared from the WWF.

When a much smaller Ultimate Warrior showed up a few months later, speculation began that the original was indeed gone. The only difference in appearance was that the "new" Warrior wasn't taking steroids everyday like the Warrior the fans were used to. At the time, the WWF was being investigated by the federal government for drug use and Vince McMahon distributing steroids to wrestlers. Because of the heat, the WWF took some time off from pushing wrestlers on steroids, only to return with a vengeance a few years later. Mark Callaway is and always has been The Undertaker. That rumor shouldn't even be dignified with an explanation.

Myth: Triple H and Stephanie are "really" married.

Fact: No they aren't. They are a couple, but they are not married.

Myth: Triple H and Chyna are married.

Fact: No they aren't. They used to be a couple, but they broke up when Triple H decided it was a better career move to be dating the boss's daughter.

And finally for the non-wrestling fans-

Myth: The blood in wrestling is fake. They use blood capsules and/or ketchup.

Fact: To achieve a bleeding effect, wrestlers cut themselves with razor blades, which means they bleed "for real." There's nothing more annoying than watching wrestling with non wrestling fans who loudly proclaim that "The blood is fake," or make some joke like, "I wonder if they use Heinz or Big Y brand ketchup."

Send letters, comments or questions to collegianwrestling@yahoo.com. I'm looking for storyline ideas for the WWF. Got any awesome ideas for the WWF? E-mail them to me, and maybe, just maybe I'll put them in the paper and make fun you.

Kurt Pofesky is Collegian Staff Member.

UMass BRIEFS:

Football

Tom Masella has been named the new defensive coordinator for the University of Massachusetts football team, it was announced Wednesday by UMass head coach Mark Whipple. Masella, who spent the last three seasons as defensive coordinator at Louisiana Tech University, will begin his duties with the Minutemen immediately.

"We are excited to have someone with Tom's experience joining our staff, and he will bring tremendous enthusiasm and multiplicity to our defense," said Whipple. "He has been a head coach in the Atlantic 10 Conference, and was the defensive coordinator for the Western Athletic Conference champions last year. There is no one better suited to lead our defense this season, as we strive to win a championship."

Last year, Masella's defense ranked 13th nationally in Division I-A in turnovers forced and 11th in interceptions. He helped lead the Bulldogs to an overall record of 7-5, including the Western Athletic Conference championship and an appearance in the Humanitarian Bowl. In 2000, Masella's defense ranked 30th in the nation in pass defense and placed two defensive players on the All-Louisiana team.

He took over the Bulldog defense in 1999, orchestrating a major upgrade in Tech's ability to stop opponents as the Bulldogs improved in almost every defensive statistical category from 1998. Louisiana Tech surrendered almost a touchdown less per game in 1999, moving up 22 spots in scoring defense. Tech also moved from 87th in the nation in total defense in 1998 to 67th in 1999, thanks in large part to the job done in the defensive secondary where the Masella-led Bulldogs improved to 32nd in pass efficiency defense compared to 79th in 1998.

Women's Water Polo

The 20th-ranked University of Massachusetts women's water polo team is set to host No. 14 Hartwick on Saturday, March 2, at the Pratt Pool on the campus of Amherst College. Game-time is 1 p.m. The Hawks took two out of three games from the Minutewomen last year. On March 10, UMass was victorious by a score of 6-3 on the road, but lost the next two, including a 14-7 setback in the Eastern Championship.

"We are looking forward to playing a team ranked ahead of us nationally," said UMass head coach Donna Heinel. "We hope to perform better than we did in last year's Eastern Championship game against Hartwick. We are hoping for a clean, competitive game on Saturday."

UMass enters the game with a 4-5 record, having just split two games at home last weekend against No. 18 Brown and Yale. Junior Jacy Mackey (Chino, Calif.) scored a hat trick for her first goals as a Minutewoman in the Yale contest, while junior Kelly Chassy (Morgan Hill, Calif.) tallied two scores against Brown. She leads the Minutewomen with 17 goals and 19 points this season. Perry, junior Mattie Newell (Dillsburg, Pa.) and senior Megan Thompson (Chesterfield, Mo.) each have eight goals on the year. Defensively, junior Amy Black (Fremont, Calif.) leads the squad with 18 steals and three blocks.

Hartwick comes to Amherst with a 6-7 record. They went 2-2 last week at the UC-Santa Barbara Tournament and have already defeated No. 11 Long Beach State, No. 12 UC-San Diego and No. 15 Pacific this season. They are led by senior All-American Megan Thomson, who has 30 goals and 40 points on the campaign. In net, Sara Daesler has accumulated 122 saves this season.

The six-game homestand concludes Saturday, March 9, when they Minutewomen host a CWPA League Tournament. They will welcome Connecticut College, Harvard and No. 18 Brown to the Pratt Pool. The action begins at 10 a.m.

Women's Swimming and Diving

Senior swimmer Becky Hunnewell (Sandwich, Mass.) was named Atlantic 10 Athlete of the Week and WHMP/UMass co-Athlete of the Week, after rewriting the UMass record book at the 2002 Verizon Atlantic 10 Swimming & Diving Championships Feb. 21-23, in Buffalo, N.Y.

Hunnewell placed first and established school records in the 100 (58.11) and 200 (2:01.96) yard backstroke to garner Most Outstanding Performer honors for the second consecutive year. She swam the first leg of the 400 free relay team that finished second in a UMass record time of 3:30.47. Hunnewell also became the first woman in UMass swimming history to post a NCAA B-cut consideration time with her winning mark in the 200 back. She was also named to the all-conference team for her performance.

The Minutewomen placed fourth in the nine-team field at the Championships and return to action March 2 at the Rutgers Invitational.

Courtesy Media Relations

lax

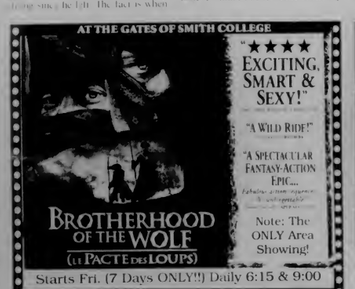
(continued from page 8)

cerned with ECAC games and the automatic qualifier handed to the winner of the regular season title. But needless to say, now isn't a very good time to run into the Minutemen.

UMass has been especially difficult to deal with after losses in the last couple of seasons. After a 10-7 loss in 2000, the Minutemen traveled to SB and dominated the Wolves 17-4. Last year following a 9-8 setback to Syracuse, UMass took its vengeance out on Rutgers in a 17-7 win.

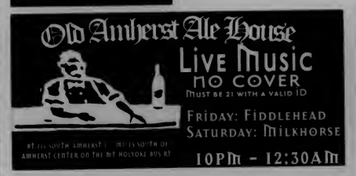
And that's without even mentioning the fact that the Maroon and White have outscored Stony Brook 34-12 in their last two meetings. It won't be easy for the Wolves to keep up with the explosive Minutemen attack, especially with some heavy graduation hits. But fortunately for Coach John Espey, he does have his top gun coming back in senior midfielder Kevin Pall. Pall was the only one able to solve the UMass defense in last year's 17-8 loss to the Minutemen. The senior had a pair of goals and an assist as his Wolves managed only eight goals including a three-spot in the second half.

"It was only 7-5 at halftime last year," said a modest Cannella. "I'm sure they're looking at that tape, and I know they're not scared of us."



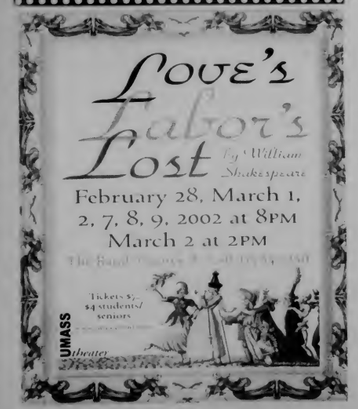
But after Pall, there was a huge talent drop-off on the SB roster. Seniors Jon Tompkins and Tristram Gillen combined for three goals from the attack position in last season's contest, but the Wolves will need a lot more scoring than that to keep up with a reloaded Minuteman attack.

The loss of Rich Kunkel (45 points) leaves a gaping hole up front for UMass, but there are numerous candidates to fill the role. Rookie Craig Conn scored his first career goal against Holstra and sophomore Kevin Gibbs garnered the start against the Pride. Besides the two underclassmen, Dan Paccione and Marc Morley provide some veteran leadership up front.



Paccione had a hat trick against Holstra, but Morley, under the watch of defenseman Nicky Palatucci, had a quiet three assists, so expect him to breakout against the Wolves.

No matter how well the attackmen perform, it will be the midfield that decide UMass' fate on Saturday and for the rest of the season. Preseason first-team All-American Kevin Leveille anchors a deep and talented group.



Leveille, junior Chris Fiore and sophomore Jeff Zywicki combined for seven goals and nine points in the one goal loss to the Pride. Needless to say, the midfielders need to score for UMass to be successful.

Write for Arts

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995

Q&A Barber Shop
GRAND OPENING
Introducing its new Hip-Hop Fashions
SEAN JOHN
POLO
PHAT FARM
ROCA WEAR
HATS
COOGIE
ICEBURG
AKADEMIK
FUBU
Amherst's only Hip-Hop Wear
233 North Pleasant Street 549 3999
(part of Q&A Barber Shop, above Cousins Market
Hours Mon Wed 10 8
Thurs Fri 10 10
Sat 10 7

AS CONTROLLER FOR A MAJOR FASHION HOUSE YOU COULD:

SPEND $800,000
ON A SHOW THAT LASTS 12 MINUTES

TRAVEL 6,760 MILES
TO OPEN A FLAGSHIP STORE IN TOKYO

CHARGE $1,699
FOR A PIECE OF FABRIC 4 FT LONG

HOW DO YOU GET A JOB LIKE THIS?
WWW.STARTHEREGOPLACES.COM/BIZ15
Go here and take the first step toward the career you want.

START HERE. GO PLACES.
If you know business and accounting, you can get a job anywhere. Because the skills you learn in business – strategic and analytical thinking, communication, and leadership – are always in demand. In some of the coolest industries in the world. Even in fashion.

American Institute of Certified Public Accountants

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for permanent position or summer job? Come to the Hospitality job fare, March 6th 2002 from 9:00 am to 3 pm in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 50 companies attending. For more info. Please call the Career Day office 545-3438.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. - Now Available, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sept. 1 year lease. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.mhp@brandywineapts.com stop by or call (413) 549-0600.

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstluxuryrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR SALE

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstluxuryrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

'92 Geo Metro Hatchback, automatic, sunroof, AC, 65,000 miles, cheap reliable transportation. $1300. 585-0599.

CHILD CARE

Occasional after school childcare two school age children "also occasional summer care" transportation needed. John 549-5448.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Wanted: Honest, responsible, hard working student for evening product promotions. Must be 21+ and have reliable transportation. Please contact 203-984-5880 for more info.

EMPLOYMENT

$12,342.00 Congratulations Dave Sullivan (Sophomore-Umass) for a great first week!!! Last two weeks of Recruiting for CWP Program 617-216-4741 or jbrown@collegeworks.com

SUMMER IN MAINE Jewish, Coed overnight camp in the southern Maine seeks staff: Boys Unit Head (23+), Camping/Tripping Director (23+), Judaics Director (23+); swim, water-ski, and boating/ sailing instructors (lifeguard certification req'd.) ; archery (training avail.), ceramics, general athletics, gymnastics, photography, radio, low ropes, theater; general counselors, office personnel. For information, contact: Ava Goldman, Director, JCC Camp Kingswood, 333 Nahanton street, Newton, MA 02459, 617-244-5124, or e-mail: director@camp.wonsbarg

Wanted seamstress- simple alterations 545-4031

EMPLOYMENT

Wanted: Spring/ Summer Interns. Must be Rebels, Innovators, desenters, seeking leadership outside the box. Average pay $7200.00. 617-216-4741 jbrown@collegeworks.com.

Personal Care attendant for male Quad. Week day mornings $10.12 hr 546-0666.

Pet Sitting, spring break and some weekends this semester. N. Amherst area 3 times per day for pets. 545-4013.

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 1-866-291-7884 ext. 485.

Wanted student to assist new web based business located on Cape Cod. Must have Marketing web skills, Contact Howie @ [illegible] pa.com

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941) 329 6434 www.cruiseareers.com

FOR SALE

Couch good shape $200/BO 259-1020.

Free Dog to a good home!! We need to find a home soon Female 1 1/2 year old-Pursie call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

FURNITURE

New computer desk $99.00 413-210-3145.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Happy belated birthday Ms. Watena Mulbah and we wish you many more to come we hope your day is full of lots of love and surprises. May God bless you. From your mother Jean Mulbah your aunt Ciatta, Uncle Samuel and family your brothers Michael and Uteenway Mulbah.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich (P Mulvey, E Mckeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413 374-6310 D Goodrich@hotmail.com

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon, student discounts 1-800-u-can-mix. www.universitybartending.com spaces limited call for information.

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

Room all-inclusive no smoke/ no pets $400 available now 253-0627.

In house on Main St. CHEAP! Call 253-2575 or 297-1444.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TO SUBLET

Two bedrooms available in Puffton Village on bus route, free heat/hot water-sublet available thru summer. Call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.co

WANTED

m 1-800-678-6386 Get $$PAID$$ to lose up to 5-40 lbs. 1-888-709-8197 www.health.mgmt.com

Looking for a trustworthy person to drive my car to Costa Rica. Call Frances 323-5799.

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Monty By Jim Meddick

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Monty By Jim Meddick

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Noodle By Jacki

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Quote of the Day

"...I WAS THROWN OUT OF COLLEGE FOR CHEATING ON THE METAPHYSICS EXAM; I LOOKED INTO THE SOUL OF THE BOY SITTING NEXT TO ME."

-Woody Allen, Annie Hall.

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 42 LOW: 22	HIGH: 47 LOW: 33	HIGH: 56 LOW: 16

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You don't want others to think that you're too "needy" today. Do what you can to remain independent and self-sufficient at all times.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You must make sure that you're "up-to-date." Have you collected any and all information that is available to you? Do your homework.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're going to want to listen to others today, as you have much to learn and only so much time in which to learn it. Focus on immediate concerns.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You're likely to hear from a loved one today who has no been kept "up-to-date" as far as your own affairs are concerned. Share all the news freely.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – A long period of creative activity is likely to begin very soon, and you'll want to be sure that you're ready to give it all you've got.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Those who find themselves far from home will want to get in touch with friends today. Others may want to reaffirm connections close at hand.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 21) – People and situations may prove more forgiving than you expect. Today is a day to try something new.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may be surprised to learn something that, like it or not, comes to you the hard way. Still, there are some things you'll want to leave to others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You enjoy an important revelation today, but it's the kind of thing you want to share with others right of the bat. Let it "mature" a bit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You'll going to get some last-minute information today, which enables you to step forward and "announce" yourself in some new manner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You're going to want to make an early start today, but remember that there is only so much you can do on your own. Teamwork is the key, today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – The decision of a friend or relative may not sit well with you today. Now is the time to voice your objections; later you'll hold your tongue.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH
New England Clam Chowder
Roast Turkey
Onion Quiche
Greek Style Tofu (vegan)
Pasta Bar
Calico Macaroni
Grill Station
Clam Roll
International Nachos
Chili Turkey
Garden Chili
Corn Dogs

DINNER
New England Clam Chowder
BBQ Salmon
Veal Madeline
Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)
Garden Chili
Pasta Bar
Calico Macaroni
Grill Station
Clam Roll
International Nachos
Chili Turkey
Garden Chili
Corn Dogs

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Melissa Hammel
Photo Technician: Jeff Swartz
Layout Tech: Jennifer Eastwood
Production Supervisor: Pete Preston
Production Staff: Mike McCormick, Jess May

HSCN

Humane Services Cable Network

1	CBS
4	NESN
5	Fox Sports NE
6	PBS
7	HSC N Movie Channel
8	WB 56
9	HSC N Movie Channel
10	TV Guide Channel
11	FOX 61
12	ABC 40
13	NBC 22
14	International Channel
15	UMATV
16	HSC N Movie Channel
17	ESPN
18	ESPN 2
19	UNC 19
20	ESPN Classic
21	Good Life
22	CNN
23	CNN HL
24	Weather Channel
25	Learning Channel
26	Home Channel
27	A&E
28	Discovery Health
29	Food Network
30	NASA
31	Home & Garden TV
32	Travel Channel
33	Lifetime
34	CNN
35	Tech TV
36	BET
37	UPN 38
38	USA
39	TNN
40	MTV
41	VMT
42	VH-1
43	TNT
44	TBS
45	E! Entertainment
46	Sci Fi Channel
47	Court TV
48	Nick at Nite
49	Comedy Central
50	Cartoon Network
51	Game Show Network
52	TV Land
53	FOX Family
54	Univision
55	Telemundo
56	College TV Network
57	C-SPAN
58	C-SPAN2
59	Bloomberg Television

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 1, 2002

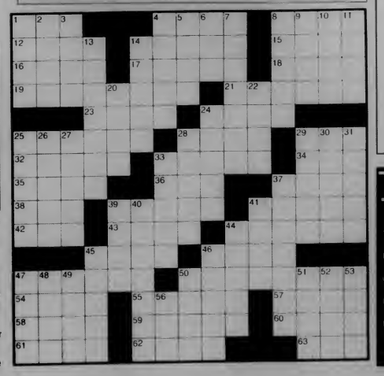
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		R&B 40: A Soul Spectacular (In Stereo)						Nova "The Missing Link"
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	First Monday (N'V) (In Stereo)		Miss USA Pageant (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	First Monday (N'V) (In Stereo)		Miss USA Pageant (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Funniest Home Videos		Best Commercials		20/20 (N'V)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Sabrina-Witch	Raising Dad	Rebe	Maybe It's Me	News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Dateline (N'V) (N) (In Stereo)				Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Sabrina-Witch	Raising Dad	Rebe	Maybe It's Me	News	Paid Program	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Dateline (N'V) (N) (In Stereo)				Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	NAACP Image Awards (N'V) (N) (In Stereo)				News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Dateline (N'V) (N) (In Stereo)				Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	R&B 40: A Soul Spectacular (In Stereo)				News	Nightline
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Funniest Home Videos		Best Commercials		20/20 (N'V)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	NHL Hockey						Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel (N)	Shipmates
WTBS	29	Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	★★½ "Money Talks" (1997, Comedy) (PA) Chris Tucker				★★ "The Golden Child" (1986, Comedy) Eddie Murphy
A&E	41	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	Ent. Tonight	Biography: "Nick Nolte"		★★½ "Tender Mercies" (1982, Drama) Robert Duvall				Law & Order	Prosecutor
CNN	25	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Amer. Stories	The Point	Larry King Live		Newsnight		Crossfire	Moneyline
COM	30	Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show	Geeks	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Premium	Premium
DISC	52	Discover Magazine		Yellowstone to Yukon		Story of the Elephant Man		Madame Tussaud's Museum		Mole People: World Below		Justice Files
ESPN	31	Sportscenter			Reel Classics	Outside the Lines (N)		College Basketball: Detroit at Marquette. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	32	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★½ "Bodiedown Palace" (1999, Drama) Claire Danes				"A Dangerous Affair" (1995)
MTV	35	WWF Tough	Flipped	Becoming	Making-Band	Making-Band	Making-Band	Making-Band	Dismissed	Dismissed	Celebrity	WWF Tough Enough 2
NICK	36	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Sponsqb	Sponsqb	Oddparents	Oddparents	Cheers	Cheers	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	59	Star Trek "Flash Forward"		Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)		Strange World "Spirit Falls"		Chronicle (N) (In Stereo)		Lexx "Moss" (N) (In Stereo)		Strange World "Spirit Falls"
TLC	37	Thunderstorms		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Junkyard Wars "Gliders"		Daytona Motorcycle Madness		World's Weirdest Performers		Junkyard Wars "Gliders"
TNT	20	★★½ "The Enforcer" (1976, Drama) (PA) Clint Eastwood				★★★ "True Crime" (1999, Suspense) (PA) Clint Eastwood Premiere						★★★ "True Crime" (1999) (PA) Clint Eastwood
USA	62	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "The Brotherhood"		Combat Missions (In Stereo)		★★½ "Nothing to Lose" (1997, Comedy) Martin Lawrence				"Naked Gun 33 1/3"
HBO	45	(4:30) ★★½ "Big Momma's House" (2000, PG-13)				Panic Room		★★★ "Any Given Sunday" (1999, Drama) Al Pacino, Cameron Diaz (In Stereo) R				Dennis Miller
MAX	46	(5:15) ★★½ "Forrest Gump" (1994) Tom Hanks.				★★★ "Rising Sun" (1993, Drama) Sean Connery, Wesley Snipes (In Stereo) R		★★★ "Finding Forrester" (2000, Drama) Sean Connery PG-13				Red Shoe
SHOW	49	★★½ "Mr. Mom" (1983, Comedy) Michael Keaton (TV 14)				★★★ "Sleepy Hollow" (1999) Johnny Depp. R		Hero's Story		Stargate SG-1	Chris Isaak (N) (In Stereo)

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com



ACROSS
1 Winner's cry
4 Rooster's sound
8 Tree skin
12 First-aid plant
14 Japan neighbor
15 Unkind
16 Walk heavily
17 Less polite
18 Alaskan port
19 Flood protection
21 Herman or Reese
23 Cravings
24 Savor-fare
25 Say by heart
28 — helmet: satan wear
29 Cultural Revolution figure
32 Ladd and Shepard
33 Like Rambo?
34 Pixie
35 Zingy taste
36 Wapiti
37 Londoner, casually
38 First letter
39 Caterwauls
41 Perhaps
42 Md. neighbor
43 Keats' works
44 Sheet material
45 Elmer of cartoons
46 Florem and Beatty
47 Very or loo
50 Clerical garments
54 Writer of verse
55 Luncheonette lure
57 Aloud
58 Entertainer Adams
59 Cares for
60 Columbus' ship
61 Hawked
62 Isn't straight
63 Implore

DOWN
1 Puppy cries
2 Singer Fitzgerald
3 Right away
4 Puffs along
5 Disposes of
6 — -track mind
7 On the — angry
8 Poet Stephen Vincent —
9 Say frankly
10 Icy coating
11 Swiss painter Paul
13 Making whirlpools
14 Heron
20 Poker stakes
22 Nymph who pined away
24 Bloodsuckers
25 Had lots of status
26 Make happy
27 Venice "street"
28 Becomes tiresome
29 Actress Streep
30 It may be airtight
31 Again and again
33 Asked for milk
37 Woodwind
39 "Anne Get — Gun"
40 Weirdo
41 Beauty packs
44 High plateaus
45 Honored
46 Reputations
47 Mimics
48 Dull-witted one
49 Nun's apparel
50 Inlet
51 Baby bed
52 Batman creator
53 Smelting residue
56 King, in France

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

H	I	M		D	I	S	C	S		V	A	D	E	R
O	N	O		I	N	P	U	T		A	L	I	V	E
L	T	D		A	F	I	R	E		L	O	P	E	D
E	R	E		L	O	N	E	W	O	L	F
S	O	L	D	E	R			P	E	T	A	L	S
		E	R	M	A		G	A	Y		H	A	L
A	B	E	S		C	A	R	L		P	E	S	O
O	D	O	R		P	U	P	A	S		H	A	T	E
P	I	L	E		R	T	E	S		P	O	D	S
E	E	L		T	I	E		P	S	A	T
C	U	S	T	O	M		P	R	O	B	E	D
		A	P	P	R	O	V	A	L		L	A	O
B	E	L	L	E		A	M	O	R	E		A	T	M
B	R	O	O	K		M	A	T	E	Y		S	E	E
S	A	U	N	A		P	R	E	S	S		E	N	S

12-1-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 3.01.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Sophomore Pugh leaves UMass

By Eric Soderstrom
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Steve Lappas made public yesterday Jameel Pugh's decision to leave the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

A sophomore, Pugh will not make the trip to Cincinnati for Saturday's game at Xavier or to Philadelphia next week for the Atlantic 10 Tournament, in order to concentrate on his studies.

Pugh said it was difficult for him to depart from the Minutemen at this stage in the season, but finishing the semester out strong academically was his top priority.

"It was really tough," said Pugh, the 6-foot-4 inch, 240-pounder from Sacramento, Calif. "But looking at my schedule, I had a lot of things to do. I just felt it would be too much to jeopardize my schoolwork for these games. I figured it's best to just look forward and try to make the best of what I have left."

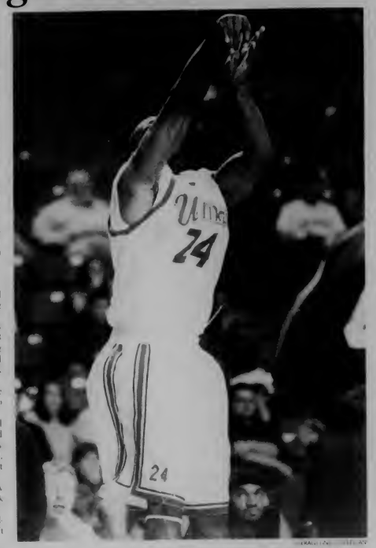
Lappas broke the news before practice yesterday afternoon in the Mullins Center but stressed that he and Pugh remain on good terms. Lappas also said that he would do his best to help Pugh in his transfer process.

"Lappas and I are doing fine," said Pugh, a recruit of the James "Bruiser" Flint era. "We talked about it and he understood why I had to do it at this time. He also understood the situation that I was in, and the goals that I want to accomplish in the next few years of my life. So he is willing to help me in any ways possible."

Pugh, who hasn't been immune to controversy, averaged 3.3 points, 2.1 rebounds and 11.4 minutes in 12 games this season for the Minutemen.

After playing only four minutes in UMass' first three games, Pugh skipped out on the team's trip to North Carolina State the weekend of Dec. 1, saying later that he missed the team bus because he overslept.

Pugh didn't find the floor again until Dec. 11, when he played nine minutes in his team's 69-59 loss to UConn at the Mullins Center. He then played 18 minutes in UMass' 64-49 win over Central Connecticut four days later, scoring 11 points. After that game, Pugh and Lappas both said they were on good terms and had resolved the NC State situation. Pugh's 26 minutes a week later against Maine were a career-high.



After averaging just under five points and 12 minutes in UMass' next three games, Pugh scored a career-high 22 points in 22 minutes in a 93-86 loss to Fordham Jan. 12.

But Pugh, ranked the 33rd-best dunker of all-time by Slam Magazine and famous locally for his two consecutive Midnight Madness dunk titles, averaged only six minutes in the next six games. In two of those contests, he did not play at all. The final game of that stretch, a 70-59 loss at Rhode Island on Feb. 2, proved to be Pugh's final six minutes of time in a UMass uniform. He did not play in the next six games, including Wednesday's 74-69 win over the Rams.

His intentions not announced yet, a sign held in the stands Wednesday night read, "Pugh, thanks for all the memories." Being Senior Night, most took it as somewhat of a joke. But the conjecture of Pugh leaving was indeed valid.

"They leaked it out, those were co-managers," said Pugh, of the foreshadowing. "Wow. Now that I really think about it. The last game here I don't know. I don't have a reaction for that yet."

It is also rumored that sophomore Willie Jenkins will be leaving the team, but not until the season is over.

Sophomore Jameel Pugh (above) has played in his last game for the Maroon and White.

Minutemen go down to the wire

By Eric Soderstrom
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Hoop season may be over in Amherst, but the Massachusetts men's basketball team still has at least two games left before it can begin to forget the struggles of the 2001-02 campaign.

An NCAA tourney appearance is still technically possible, but it is so very far from the realms of probability. Winning the Atlantic 10 tournament gets UMass an automatic bid, of course. But that also figures the Minutemen (12-14, 6-9 A-10), who have secured fourth place in the A-10 East, beat either Duquesne or George Washington in the first round, Xavier in the second round, and barring upsets, St. Joseph's in the third and Hall-of-Famer John Chaney's Temple squad in the championship game.

A spot in the National Invitational Tournament is also theoretically possible, but that demands UMass beat Xavier (20-5, 12-2) in Cincinnati Saturday (Noon; ESPN), in its final game of the regular season, advance to the second round of the A-10 tournament, beat the Musketeers for the second time in five days, and then find victory in the third round, probably against St. Joe's. That would guarantee UMass at least a .500 record, and a chance for NIT consideration.

But beat Xavier, the A-10's best team, twice in the same week? That's tough.

"That's why it's important for us play well [Saturday]," said Lappas yesterday before practice. "You have to think it's tough to beat the same team twice in five days. Even if it's not a good team, that's hard."

Leading the Musketeers is David West, the sure choice for A-10 Player of the Year, who is averaging 18.5 points and 10.1 rebounds per game. The junior forward has ripped apart league foes, dominating the low post. The only way to stop this guy is get him off the blocks and hope he has an off-shooting night.

But Xavier's hazardous offense doesn't stop there. Sophomore guard Romain Sato has been toying with the conference's guards, using his 6-foot-5-inch frame and great handle to full advantage.

"He's going to be a tough guy for us to match-up with," said Lappas, who will start Shannon Crooks on Sato defensively. "He's a really good shooter, he has good size, and he's very athletic. He does a lot of good things. He's really a good player. He's had a great year."

Junior guards Lionel Chalmers and David Young (who, at 6-feet-3-inches, will be guarded by Raheim Lamb) join Sato in the starting backcourt, while senior forward Kevin Frey rounds out the starting five.

"They've played the best [of the teams in the league]," Lappas said. "They play very well together, and they've had a tremendous year."

Especially at home, Xavier is 11-1 in the fairly new Cintas Center, its only loss a 75-55 ripping from No. 4 Cincinnati. The Musketeers are averaging 10,219 fans a game.

Back on Dec. 1, the Minutemen defeated N.C. State 69-62 in front of 10, 801. And the A-10 tourney should draw a large crowd.

UMass is 1-0 this season while playing in front of crowds over 10,000. But that's a tough stat to count on.

Postseason begins tonight

Minutewomen play LaSalle in first round

By Jesse Greenspan
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Everyone on the team knows it.

The only possible chance the Massachusetts women's basketball team has of advancing to postseason play is through winning the Atlantic 10 conference tournament from March 1-4 in Philadelphia.

"We've been on a big roller coaster... but in February we've played some good basketball," head coach Jeanie O'Brien said. "We have to play our best now, and I am not going to say we're going to go down and win on Friday, but I am quite sure people are going to do me, then we picked the wrong time for us to have this team turn around."

The possible road to glory begins today at 6 p.m., when the No. 3 seed Minutewomen (10-17, 8-8 A-10) compete against local favorite LaSalle, which has only posted a 6-21 (2-14 A-10) record on the year.

Even though the Explorers are dead last in the A-10 Western Conference (No. 6 seed), their offense is still capable of doing damage from the outside and from down low.

Three-point specialist (almost 40 percent from behind the arc) Suzanne Kelly's leads the team with a 12.1 points per game (ppg) average, and is complimented by senior Kat Foley on the inside, who is scoring at an 11.8 ppg clip of her own.

Head Coach John Miller also has a legitimate third scoring option as Beth Hudak has used a versatile inside-out game to average 10.4 ppg.

However, when these two teams met last on Jan. 10, UMass was able to shut down the LaSalle attack while simultaneously posting its largest offensive output of the season (77 points).

In that contest, the Minutewomen got out to the early first half lead, and were led by two unlikely sources, Siiri Livandi (a season-high 14 points) and Caroline Nehls (12 points).

If the Maroon and White is able to get past the Explorers, then it will have a new challenge waiting in the quarterfinals (Saturday at 6 p.m.), as No. 2 Richmond received a first round bye courtesy of its 14-15 (8-8 A-10) record.

The Spiders are led by standout Amber Gopper, who is among the tops in the conference with a 15.8 ppg average. Backing her up for head coach Bob Foley will be Ebony Tanner (11.8 ppg, 8.3 rebounds per game) and Michele Kuclanes (11.3 ppg), who are both capable of posing legitimate problems for the UMass defense.

Another player the Minutewomen will have to look out for is Krysten Gull, who notched 10 straight points in the Spiders' 58-41 come-from-behind victory over the Maroon and White on Jan. 13.

"Our biggest opponent has been ourselves," O'Brien said. "The days we don't shoot the ball well and the days we play with a lack of composure and discipline, that's what got us."

Tanner was also a thorn in Massachusetts' side on that day, totaling 16 points and 12 boards, while holding UMass' Jennifer Butler to a mere 4-for-16 shooting performance.

One thing that O'Brien and her players have going for themselves is that they are playing their best basketball of the season. Right now, the Minutewomen are riding a streak in which they have won 4-of-5, including huge victories over conference favorites George Washington and Temple.

"I still think we have one of the most talented teams in the league," O'Brien said. "We've underachieved to this point, but the last four weeks we've played some good basketball."

In fact, the win over GW in their last regular season contest was the only conference loss the Colonials suffered all year, and showed that when UMass plays well, it is capable with competing against any team in the league.

"We've got to earn our respect," O'Brien said. "We feel like we can go down [to Philly] and compete with anybody."

Final stats for the regular season have Butler leading the squad with 13.4 points and 12.0 rebounds a game, while freshman guard Katie Nelson is second in points (9.1 ppg) and first in assists (3.1).

Butler also garnered a second-team All-Atlantic 10 nod, in part because she has totaled 19 double-doubles in 27 contests.

Amber Sneed and Nekole Smith also posted solid numbers on the year, as each is averaging 8.1 ppg.

Freshman Katie Nelson was snubbed from the A-10 All Rookie Team at last night's A-10 banquet.

Junior Chris Fiore scored two goals in last weekend's heartbreaking loss to Hofstra.

Bounce back time for men's lacrosse

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last year's match-up against Stony Brook held a host of implications for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team. The Minutemen were fighting an emotional let down on the heels of a 17-13 upset over Hofstra and the Seawolves represented the opening game of the conference season.

My how things have changed.

Stony Brook has since left the ECAC and instead of trying to continue a winning streak, UMass is attempting to right the ship after a heartbreaking 12-11 overtime loss to Hofstra last Saturday in Amherst.

"The guys have reacted pretty well in practice, but it's a game that we let slip away," said coach Greg Cannella, still a bit shaken from the loss. "But if we can't prepare for Stony Brook like we prepped for Hofstra, then what are we doing?"

There certainly isn't as much at stake this time around, as the Minutemen have to be more con

Turn to LAX page 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
MONDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE NINETY TWO ☆☆☆☆☆ 3.4.02

Students protest proposed department mergers

By Kathryn Seymour
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The University of Massachusetts language students have united to protest the proposed merging of five Language, Literature and Culture departments.

Across campus this week students are collecting names for a petition that opposes the amalgamation.

Dean Lee Edwards of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts released a proposal Tuesday Feb. 19 that designs to combine the departments of Asian Languages and Literatures, Comparative Literature, French and Italian Studies, Germanic Languages and Literatures and Spanish and Portuguese.

Dean Edwards explained that, "the budget of the College has increasingly revealed itself as inadequate" and that the "present situation is untenable." She followed to propose "a merger rather than an elimination of programs." The proposed merger will involve over 500 current UMass language majors and 60 faculty members.

Students from all five departments last week formed a Foreign Language Action Committee that met again this Monday. Senior Chinese major Randy Debastiani said that the aim of the committee is, "moving against the merger and preserving the integrity of each department."

Freshman Japanese major Shannon Wilson explained that the committee was aware of the irony in uniting to protest unification. However, she suggested that the student group proves that the problems of the merger are academic and not personal.

The committee is primarily an initiative of Asian studies students who fear that they will be the most affected. Jack Lloyd, a graduate student in the Asian Languages Department, explained that this merger, "may be the first step in getting rid of the department of Asian Language and Literature." UMass-Amherst is currently the only public institution in New England offering degree programs in Chinese and Japanese.

"This department attracts passionate people and has so many on the dean's list," Pamela Tuffley, a graduate student in Chinese, said of the Asian Language and Literature majors. "I would be heartbroken if we can't change this."

Students of other departments are also concerned and are joining the committee. Foreign language faculty members have already voiced their concerns to local papers.

"There is no intellectual justification for this," German professor Sara Lennox told the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Chisato Kitagawa, chairman of the Asian Languages and Literature department, said that he hoped the departments could find an alternate plan for consideration by the provost. Under guidelines for the merger, staff and students have 30 days to respond to the proposal. Both staff and students said that this was not sufficient time. However, students from the affected departments have expressed their concerns, already turning out in masses on Tuesday, the first day of petitioning. Volunteers collected 700 names against the mergers.

The Foreign Language Action Committee's initial response was the petition outlining the potential flaws of the proposal. Their primary objection is that, "the merger will harm the depth of each department's curriculum, and it will cause conflict over the different goals of each program."

"I think I want to take a course in how the Chinese empire affected Peruvian linguistic development," one student joked about the absurdity of joining together certain departments.

The committee also questioned the possibility of larger subjects dominating the new department. Half of the undergraduate majors will be Spanish-based. Many wonder whether greater student numbers will secure greater swing in departmental decisions.

Jerome Kirkpatrick, a junior comparative literature major, responded to this idea, saying that the merger would "take away from the autonomy of the individual majors."

Many have questioned why these five departments are singled out for amalgamation. Committee members asked why the Classics, Judaic and Near Eastern Studies, Linguistics and Slavic and East European Studies departments were not part of plans for mergers. The present five- department combination perplexed many.

"Comparative lit?... why not throw in some mathematics while you're at it," Matt Saradijian, a French major, said ironically.

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this article.

Steam line work slated to begin soon

The University of Massachusetts is expected to begin work on the steam line system this coming week.

The work is intended to replace a steam line that runs under the sidewalk in front of the Fine Arts Center to North Pleasant Street and along the east side of North Pleasant Street to Morrill Science Center. The old steam lines will remain in working order until the new one's are completed and can be hooked into the entire system.

The work is being done by Handford General Contractors of Springfield and all of the slated projects will be completed by fall of 2002.

The project is one in a series that includes a new-handicapped accessible parking lot for the Fine Arts Center and the redesigning of bus stops along North Pleasant Street.

The contractors will be attempting to cause the least amount of changes to pedestrian walkways and to the bus schedule, however any that are required will be posted at either the bus stops or on the PVTA website.

The total cost of the replacement of the steam line will be 4.2 million dollars, which will be paid for out of the capital outlay funds.

- Melissa Hammel

Afghan drugs seized by Canadian navy

The HMCS Toronto, a Halifax-class frigate, captured two metric tons of drugs last month.

COURTESY NAVAL TECHNOLOGY

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two metric tons of Afghan hashish or opium were captured off an abandoned vessel off the coast of Pakistan on Feb. 13.

The investigation of a seized drug shipment by Canadian naval forces continues. Coalition forces are searching for possible links between the drugs and al Qaeda or other terrorist groups.

While on patrol off the coast of Pakistan on Feb. 13, the Canadian frigate Toronto spotted a dhow, a small wooden boat, towing a speed boat. When the warship approached, two men leapt from the dhow into the speedboat and fled. The engines of the dhow were still running.

"This situation constituted a navigation hazard, and international maritime law permitted HMCS Toronto to board the abandoned vessel," the Canadian Navy said. "Aboard the dhow, the boarding party dispatched from HMCS Toronto discovered about ninety 25-kg bags containing plastic packages of drugs stamped with the phrase 'Freedom of Afghanistan.'"

Depending on the drug, officials estimate the shipment's street value from 41 to 72 million dollars.

The drugs and the dhow were destroyed by the Toronto's main armament.

The seizure marks the second smuggling capture by the Canadian navy during coalition operations.

A week before the drug seizure the HMCS Vancouver "seized an oil tanker suspected of smuggling Iraqi oil and coordinating oil-smuggling operations in the Arabian Gulf."

Vancouver is temporarily part of the USS John C Stennis Carrier Battle Group. The Canadian navy has contributed five ships to anti-terrorist operations.

"HMCS Toronto is a Halifax-class patrol frigate serving with the Canadian Naval Task Group (CNTG) deployed in the northern Arabian Sea on Operation APOLLO, Canada's military contribution to the international campaign against terrorism," the Canadian navy said in a released statement. "As well as Toronto, the CNTG currently includes the destroyer HMCS Iroquois, the replenishment vessel HMCS Preserver and the patrol frigate HMCS Charlottetown."

Canada also has 1,000 troops stationed in Afghanistan. On Friday the Canadian military announced that it would be sending an additional 150 troops.

On the Net: The Canadian navy: http://www.navy.dnd.ca/

Gruinier speaks on classroom dynamics

By Jennifer Eastwood
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Lani Gruinier, currently a Harvard University law professor, spoke of the relationship between power, gender and race in the academia setting Saturday night at 8 p.m. in Johnson Chapel at Amherst College.

Gruinier related personal stories, classroom accounts of colleagues and theory from her latest book, The Miner's Canary, co-written with Gerald Torres, before an audience of just over 100 people, diverse in terms of race, gender and age and which included a large percentage of the community.

The lecture, titled "Rethinking Gender and Power: Building Diverse Learning Communities" was part of Amherst College's celebration, commemorating 25 years of coeducation.

The celebration covers two milestones in the college's history. In 1976, the first women (transfer students) graduated from Amherst College, while the first women who would complete all four years of their college education at Amherst entered as freshmen that same year.

Guinier's lecture centered upon the theme of rethinking educational procedures by using the metaphor of miner's canary. Miners, she explained, would take a caged canary into the mines with them. If the bird started showing signs of distress, it meant there was something wrong with the atmosphere in the mines.

"People of color, women, gays and lesbians and people with disabilities are often the canary, singling problems with the atmosphere in the mines," Guinier said. "We tend to [diagnose] the canary. Then, we decide to fix the canary... put a little gas mask on it or something. But the problems are affecting all of us. Fixing education will fix the 'miners' as well. By democratizing our classrooms, we fix not the canary, but the atmosphere in the mines."

Guinier then related a story of a calculus professor at the University of Texas who noticed his African American students were not excelling as much as his Chinese American students. He questioned why and received possible explanations ranging from more black students come from single parent households to they just don't study as hard.

However, the professor found that his African American students were spending just as much, and often more, time studying than the Chinese Americans; the Chinese American students, though, were studying in groups, while the black students were studying alone.

This discovery led him to set up an informal group study session with the African American students, so that they too could get that same sense of community and sharing of ideas. His African American students' grades skyrocketed, and most of them obtained the top percent of grades among those taking his course by the end of that semester.

The professor then realized that he had been using the traditional "chalk and talk" or "sage on the stage" method of teaching and that if he reformatted his entire approach to teaching to mirror that of the study session, then all of his students, not just the African Americans, would benefit.

"Education is about education, not transmission of information," Guinier insisted. "It's a process of mutual learning and discovery, and it's that process that transforms education to an experience of joy."

Guinier also named what she sees as the three, conventional dimensions of power. First is the visible conflict, where it is obvious to see what group wins and thus gains power and what group loses and thus relinquishes it. The second is an examination of who sets the agenda or makes the rules for the game. And the final dimension, she pointed out, is the story the winners tell the losers and the way in which winners convince losers that all parties deserve their lots in life.

This framework in which to think about power came to Guinier upon witnessing a "golf ball relay race" at a party for her son, then 11 years old. Each dimension, she said, is less spoken about than the one before it, thus leaving very few to adequately discuss who has what power in society and reasons behind it.

By 9:30 p.m. and with the lecture finished, half of the crowd dispersed, leaving the remaining half to gravitate towards pockets of groups recapping the talk and the issues covered.

Food for Thought bookstore provided a table outside of the lecture hall, which sold copies of Guinier's books. Several people took advantage of the opportunity to have Guinier sign copies of her printed works.

A refreshment table was set up in the Gerald Penny Memorial Black Cultural Center across from Johnson Chapel to allow those from the lecture to reconvene to further conversations provoked by Guinier.

In this setting, a group of Smith College students remarked

Turn to AMHERST, page 3

Dartmouth students protest Arctic oil drilling

By Katie Martin
THE DARTMOUTH (DARTMOUTH COLLEGE)

(U-WIRE) HANOVER, N.H. – A 10-foot-tall cardboard oil rig and chains of aluminum-can pipeline were the props for dozens of demonstrators who stopped Dartmouth students crossing the Green Thursday afternoon during a protest of potential oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

Thursday's collaborative effort of campus environmental groups was part of the "Arctic National Wildlife Refuge Day of Action," one of the initiatives that was agreed upon at last week's "Greening of the Ivies" conference at Dartmouth attended by environmentalists from all eight Ivy League institutions.

"Care about caribou," Brent Reidy '05 yelled at passersby.

He and other demonstrators urged students to call their senators, hoping to influence the upcoming U.S. Senate vote on President George W. Bush's energy bill.

The legislation may include an amendment to allow oil drilling on the refuge's 19 million acres of intact arctic and sub-arctic lands in northeastern Alaska. The vote is expected to be close.

In addition to the protest on the Green, tables of telephones set up in the Collis Center and Thayer Dining Hall allowed students free calls to their state senators or to U.S. senators from New Hampshire.

Participating students expressed support of New Hampshire Republican Bob Smith, who is facing pressure to change his opposition to drilling. They also hoped to change the mind of New Hampshire's other senator, Republican Judd Gregg, who supports drilling.

"The office definitely noticed the calls from the Dartmouth students, and he definitely appreciates the support," said Eryn Witcher, a spokesperson from Smith's office.

"It was the first time that some students had ever called their senators. They got to see the rule that they can have in the policy process. People were really excited about it," said Oliver Bernstein '03, coordinator of the Tucker Foundation's Environmental Conservation Organization.

Erica Mintzer '02 spearheaded the day's events along with Reidy, Alexandra Fleming '05 and Jesse Foote '01.

Other Ivy League schools had their own events. At Cornell, students organized a massive email and pamphlet campaign to spread the message across their campus.

"Yale has been doing stuff with energy since last week," Noah Chesnin, president of Yale's Student Environmental Coalition, said.

Students at Yale held a symposium entitled "Our Energy Future" last Thursday and spent this week gathering signatures for petitions on sustainable energy use, including the "Declaration of Energy Independence."

Rachelle Gould, a student at Harvard, said, "We're tabling in dining halls across the campus. I think we only got about 50 letters last night, but we're heading out again tonight, with higher goals."

At Dartmouth, passers-by paused inquisitively. Some students applauded the efforts. Others disagreed.

"Call me cynical, but if oil drilling is done on American soil, America will be feeling the impact up close. It will get people to think about the gross consumption of oil in this country," Anthony Bider-Hall '05 said.

Jim Lantsch '02, who lived in Alaska for several years, also disagreed.

"The economy of Alaska depends on oil. Too much attention is being paid to the campaigns and not enough to what impact it is going to have on the state. Prudhoe Bay has shown that drilling can be done in an environmentally safe way," Lantsch said.

Opponents assert that, contrary to Bush's claim that drilling is essential to national energy security, drilling in the wildlife refuge would only provide the United States with a four- to six-month supply of oil.

They note as well that the oil from wells in the refuge would likely not begin to flow for perhaps as long as 10 years.

"This is only a band-aid solution to United States' energy problems," Mintzer said.

Whether or not students agreed with the protest, most were impressed with the display of activism.

Overall, the demonstrators considered their effort a success.

INTERNATIONAL BRIEFS

International students at disadvantage, U. Montana spokeswoman says

By Brian Altenwitz
Montana Kaimin (U. Montana)

(U-WIRE) MISSOULA, Mont. – Foreign students are invisible. Or at least that's how many of them feel, said Rieko Akiyoshi, a University of Montana spokeswoman for foreign students' concerns.

Akiyoshi brought a list of concerns to the UM Diversity Advisory Council Wednesday focusing on problems foreign students encounter on campus and possible solutions.

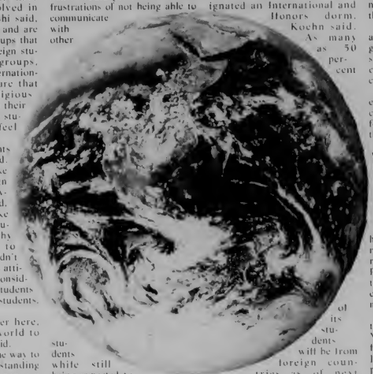
Started in 1991, the Diversity Advisory Council is an organization of students, faculty and staff. Its members are chosen by UM's president and are charged with promoting good relations between people of different races, cultures and sexual orientation. The group has a yearly budget of $10,000, of which about $7,000 goes to fund projects that promote diversity and recognize students and professors who do the same.

Because many foreign students don't speak English well and some Americans equate English-language skills with intelligence, some foreign students said they don't receive enough attention from fellow students or professors, Akiyoshi said.

"We can tell that other people think we are dumb because we can't say a thing (in English)," she said.

Some foreign students have problems getting involved in campus groups, Akiyoshi said, because they try to join and are not called back. The groups that are most friendly to foreign students are religious groups, Akiyoshi said. Most international students aren't aware that many American religious groups seek converts to their religion, and when the students find out they feel betrayed, Akiyoshi said.

Often foreign students also feel unappreciated. Some Americans act like they are doing foreign students a favor by allowing them to study abroad, Akiyoshi said. She spoke of a young Chinese student who was told by another student not to speak in class if he couldn't speak English well. This attitude doesn't take into consideration what American students can learn from foreign students, she said.



"By bringing us over here, you're bringing the world to your classrooms," she said.

Akiyoshi proposed one way to improve campus understanding of other cultures – create a model classroom where American students could experience what it's like not to understand the language or cultures of another country. The teacher would speak a foreign language that most of the other students understood, and American students would get a taste of the frustrations of not being able to communicate with other students. As many as 50 percent of its students will be from foreign countries as of next semester. American students will live at the dorm so foreign students don't feel isolated or like they live in a ghetto, she said.

Currently, some foreign students don't like to live in the dorms because they are unable to study and often have roommates who aren't sensitive to their needs, Koehn said.

Koehn also suggested starting a program to help with the language barrier in which professors from foreign countries could help students from similar countries.

The University has 420 foreign students from 76 different countries. UM also has 50 professors from countries around the world.

Vatican archives opened for Holocaust research

By Jennifer Lachance
The Marquette Tribune (Marquette U.)

(U-WIRE) MILWAUKEE – In hopes of ending controversy surrounding the Catholic Church's role in the Holocaust, Pope John Paul II announced this month the opening of Vatican archives containing Nazi-related documents from 1922 to 1939.

Researchers are interested in the inner workings of Pope Pius XII's pontificate because the Holocaust and the deportation of Jews took place during that time period.

"The Vatican is not going to release all the archives," Marquette University history professor Michael Phayer said. "They will only open those that shed a good light on Pius XII."

The Rev. Steven Avella, an associate professor of history, said he believes the Vatican should open all the documents.

"We have nothing to fear from the truth, even if the news isn't good," Avella said. "Let the chips fall where they may."

By releasing certain documents, according to Phayer, the Vatican will prove Pius XII was doing all he could at the time to help prisoners of war, no matter what race or nation.

"Each bishop in every archdiocese has a job to correspond with the Vatican to let them know what's going on in their area," said Mark Johnson, an assistant professor of theology. "Anything that touches anything in the church gets sent to Rome through them."

The event's timing also impacted student's perceptions' on the lecture, Jomarie Cruz, a junior Latin American Studies major at Smith, noted.

"She was really accessible on a Saturday night, which provided a more diverse audience," said Cruz.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Gargunta Business Manager
Shimauti Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Desrpres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tihora Gitzyes-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrum Sports Editor
Brent Smrowski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

AS CFO OF A PRO BASEBALL TEAM YOU COULD:

PAY YOUR #1 STARTER $23,162.33 (PER OUT)

GIVE AWAY 15,000 BOBBLE HEAD DOLLS
(3 TIMES/SEASON)

RAKE IN $13.9 MILLION
IN NATIONAL TV REVENUE (PER YEAR)

HOW DO YOU GET A JOB LIKE THIS?
WWW.STARTHEREGOPLACES.COM/BIZ15
Go here and take the first step toward the career you want.

START HERE.
GO PLACES.
If you know business and accounting, you can get a job anywhere. Because the skills you learn in business – strategic and analytical thinking, communication, and leadership – are always in demand. In some of the coolest industries in the world. Even in pro sports.

American Institute of Certified Public Accountants

■ amherst

continued from page 1

that their interest in seeing the lecture stemmed from the fact that Guinier will be the upcoming commencement speaker at Smith College.

One such student, Fareen Ramji, a senior Physiology major, was first introduced to Guinier's work during a lecture she gave at Smith in 1998.

"We found a lot of things she talked about were things we already do in many of our classes, [such as] the sharing of power in terms of group work, even to the extent of sitting in a circle that includes the professor," Ramji pointed out. "It's becoming more common."

Some parties took the opportunity to critique Guinier's thoughts.

"[The cannery metaphor] is a biological thing," Christine Livingston, a senior English major at Smith College explained. "Women not speaking [in the classroom] is a social thing, so in a way, I don't know how it works."

Livingston added that she would have to read Guinier's book to look at her use of the metaphor in further detail.

The event's timing also impacted student's perceptions' on the lecture, Jomarie Cruz, a junior Latin American Studies major at Smith, noted.

"She was really accessible on a Saturday night, which provided a more diverse audience," said Cruz.

Oregon State Senate fights tuition increase

By Brook Reinhard
Oregon Daily Emerald (U. Oregon)

(U-WIRE) EUGENE, Ore. – The Oregon Legislature reached a compromise Thursday that tables a proposed tuition increase and dulls program cuts for higher education.

Student leaders cheered and University of Oregon officials were dismayed as legislators avoided action on a University-backed amendment to budget proposals that would have allowed individual Oregon University System schools to raise tuition rates up to 3 percent beyond normal levels.

As part of the compromise, legislators agreed to restore $5 million to the undergraduate education budget for OUS. The increase will fund exclusively "student-professor" costs, including salaries and academic budgets.

"This is a solution that all of us can live with," said Jodie Lester, executive director of the Oregon Student Association, an Oregon higher education advocacy group.

Legislators have been meeting all week in their second special session to solve to the state's $846 million budget deficit. Although several budget proposals are being discussed, OUS is likely to face $48 million in cuts, which include almost $9 million in reductions at the University.

The budget, and its tuition amendments, is being debated in the Senate Budget and Finance Committee, and house representatives are watching the process.

University President Dave Frohnmayer said Thursday's decision to table the budget will make his and other administrators' jobs more frustrating. He said the amendment, if the Legislature decides to pass it later, would help the University avoid drastic program cuts.

"We'd hope for legislation that would have given us full flexibility," Frohnmayer said. "The budget crisis means program cuts – it means enrollment caps – unless we have the authority to increase tuition."

The amendment would have increased the amount of money OUS could receive in tuition dollars by $8.4 million. OUS director of government relations Grattan Kerans said. Under the proposal, the University could have increased tuition more than $100 per student over this year's cost and other previously proposed hikes.

Tim Young, a student representative for the State Board of Higher Education, said the legislature attempted to balance program cuts and student access.

"It's a pretty wise move on the Legislature's part," said Young. "At least it's in line with our goals."

He pointed out that when the budget-cutting process started in October, the State Board of Higher Education flagged in-state undergraduate education as its No. 1 goal.

"We felt that having another tuition increase would have been more than low-income students could bear," Lester said.

Kerans said the Senate's action Thursday was unexpected, but not out of character with a legislative body during a special session.

"Anything that happens today can unhappen tomorrow," he said.

Soldier killed in action not yet identified

The Pentagon has not yet released the name of the soldier killed in action on March 2.

The soldier died as a result of combat south of Gardez in Afghanistan. The fighting started on March 1, as Afghan troops and coalition forces, including U.S. soldiers, attacked al Qaeda terrorists and "non-Afghan Taliban" fighters in caves.

At least three Afghan troops have been killed in this action as well.

"An unspecified number of U.S. and Afghan forces have been injured," Central Command said in released statement.

Central Command, which is in command of Operation Enduring Freedom, said the fighting was severe.

"Firefights have been intense at times in heavy combat actions," Central Command said in a released statement. "The exact size of the enemy forces occupying a series of cave complexes is not known."

Weather has been a factor in the weekend fighting.

"The weather has been cold and terrain is snow-covered and mountainous, ranging from 2,500 meters high at the valley floors to 3,500 meters at the mountain peaks," Central Command said. "To date more than 80 pieces of ordnance have been dropped from aircraft in support of Afghan, U.S. and coalition forces."

—Keri Campbell

Finders keepers: kleptomania

By Payal Teli
Daily Orange (Syracuse U.)

(U-WIRE) SYRACUSE, N.Y. – Kleptomaniacs shoplift, but not all shoplifters are kleptomaniacs.

This distinction is important especially when throwing around the word "klepto."

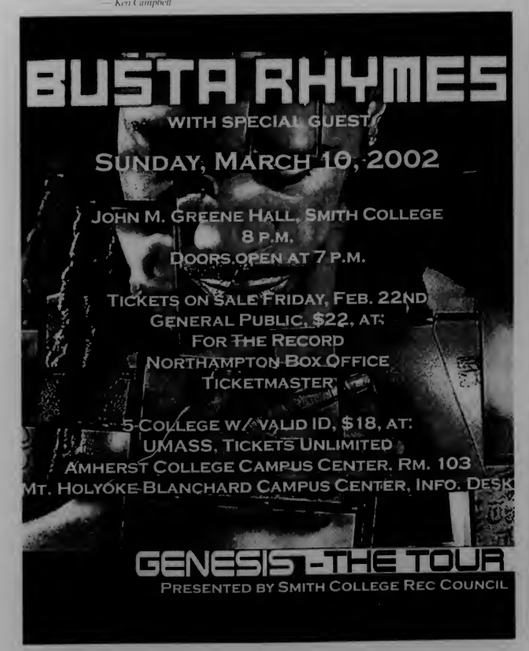
Whether they're filling CDs and sunglasses from friends' houses or jamming everything from lipstick to Palm Pilots down their pants, both kleptomania and shoplifting have serious implications. And store security angered by the dent in sales, doesn't take kindly to excuses.

Kleptomania is a rare psychological disorder in which the afflicted person caves into his or her impulse to steal. He or she steals on a whim but not for the object's monetary value or personal gain, said Dr. Dennis L. Bogin, a clinical psychology professor at the State University of New York Upstate Medical University.

The urge to steal becomes so insistent the person is compelled to take something in order to satisfy it, said Bogin, who has a practice in Syracuse, N.Y. Tension builds up until he or she steals the object. Relief, and sometimes pleasure, follows once the act is committed.

This impulse-driven behavior may be categorized as compulsive, meaning no matter what the kleptomaniac tells him- or herself, the person cannot prevent the act. And despite multiple legal repercussions, he or she continues to steal.

Those with compulsive disorders share a common brain chemistry. How their rigid, repetitive behavior manifests itself depends on environmental and social factors, Bogin said.



Sometimes kleptomaniacs keep the objects; sometimes they feel guilty and secretly try to return it. Whatever the case, they steal partially because of a "high" they get from the encounter – if they're not caught.

Initially the victim seeks help for another type of problem, such as depression. During treatment, the patient may reveal his or her compulsion to steal, Bogin said.

There have been attempts to treat the disorder. Drugs such as Prozac and Paxil may curb the kleptomaniac's urge to steal, according to a study at the Chaim Sheba Medical Center in Israel; however, those kinds of drugs calm the compulsive part of any disorder and therefore are not a viable cure, Bogin said.

Spinning along

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM "WRITING IS A BOOK THAT ALL PEOPLE SEE, OR HEAR, BUT YOU DO NOT." PLUTARCH ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Budget woes common

other states feel the pinch

It's often easy to feel isolated in our current budgetary condition. However, the University of Massachusetts is not alone in its financial despair. We run this editorial with us as an example of what other states are facing and what solutions they are examining.

(A Wire) Raleigh N.C. – The North Carolina Constitution states that the General Assembly "shall provide that the benefits of The University of North Carolina and other public institutions of higher education, as far as practicable, be extended to the people of the State free of expense." Three key words: public, practicable and free. Those have been at the center of debate on campus and off as the N.C. State Board of Trustees recently approved a $400 tuition hike in addition to a possible 4.8 percent increase that may come from the General Assembly. But perhaps one of these words, public, deserves further attention in these tough economic times for higher education in North Carolina.

The News & Observer reported Wednesday that some N.C. legislators, including Sen. Walter Dalton, are suggesting that we turn our budget-slashing considerations toward state funds given to private schools in North Carolina. Now, more than ever, this is essential.

The $6-year-old N.C. Legislative Tuition Grant program provides $1,800 to every North Carolina resident attending a private college in North Carolina. The State Contractual Scholarship Fund provides private colleges with $1,100 in supplemental aid to be given to each full-time state resident enrolled at their institution. If public education is to take such a beating, it is only right that these programs need to pass under the microscope as well.

Although some of this money is no doubt needed to support students at private colleges whose tuition is astronomical in comparison to North Carolina universities – as our state constitution states, our government's primary responsibility is to N.C. residents attending N.C.'s public colleges.

And as tuition increases, a strong possibility to help ease the strain is to "grandfather" in the tuition that students pay. Similarly, if this money for attending private schools is cut – and it certainly should be – if public schools are suffering, it should occur in the future.

Rep. Verla Insko (D-Chapel Hill) summed it up best: "Our public campuses took a cut. Should we not also apply that same percentage cut to the private schools? We've asked that from everyone else."

When times get tough, no one wants to cut education. Nevertheless, public education has been cut and certainly, so should state support for private education.

This article first appeared in North Carolina State University's Technician.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

Justice isn't a word in Rhode Island

KEN CAMPBELL

When I reached middle school, the powers that be split us kids up alphabetically into different homerooms. Jason Burgeson sat in front of me for four years of middle school and four years of high school. Jason was a fun loving guy who relished hanging out with his friends, playing hockey, writing, acting and a slew of other activities. Jason and I starred in several plays and he graduated with me from Apponequet Regional High School in 1998, and decided to attend St. Cloud State University in Minnesota. In June of 2000, Jason returned home to Lakeville, Mass. for summer vacation. On June 8, Burgeson and his friend, 21 year-old Amy Shute from Coventry, RI, went to a club in Providence.

After the club closed in the early hours of June 9, Jason and Amy drove two friends to a nearby bar in Jason's Ford Explorer. Jason and Amy were standing by the truck when Gregory Floyd, 19; Harry Burdick, 21; Sammie Sanchez, 20; Raymond Anderson, 19, and allegedly Kenneth Day, 21, approached the car. Floyd and Burdick pulled a stolen gun on the two students and forced them into the Explorer. They took 18 dollars from them. The Explorer then drove off, followed by a car with Anderson, Sanchez and allegedly Day. They drove to a golf course, then under construction, in Johnston, RI.

There, four men and one alleged man got out and forced Jason and Amy onto the ground. Jason and Amy were told to kneel. Amy knelt behind Jason and wrapped her arms around him. The carjackers/kidnappers and allegedly Day then argued about what to do. Floyd held the gun. Anderson took Amy's jewelry, except for a ring that her mother had given her. Allegedly, Day suggested the men should rape Amy. Floyd argued against it. Day then allegedly told Floyd to shoot the two kids huddled together on the ground, crying. Day then allegedly told Floyd that Jason and Amy had seen their faces, and they would have to kill them. At point-blank range Floyd aimed for their heads and fired twice. Jason and Amy were killed instantly. He did then handed the gun to another accomplice, who shot Jason again in the head.

Providence Patrolman Stephen Gencarella spotted Jason's truck around 9 p.m., about eight hours after the bodies were discovered. Floyd was driving the car. Gencarella arrested him. Floyd rolled on the others, telling the police everything. Within hours of the bodies being discovered all four carjackers and Kenneth Day were in custody.

On June 14, 2000 I walked across the Dahlborg-MacNevin Funeral Home's parking lot to a small knot of people that had been my closest friends in high school. We just kind of looked at each other.

"We always thought you'd be the first to go," my friend Adam told me. I started crying for the first time in years. We all did. We all hugged.

I couldn't go to the cemetery. I won't go into too much detail about the funeral – I'm sorry, it still hurts. I kept thinking about how he died. The waiting was probably the worst. I don't think I could have kept a stiff upper lip in that case. I kept seeing Jay. He was there, laying there, right there at the front of the chapel. The place was packed with people. I hadn't seen in years, many of them crying. Even sitting there in the chapel I didn't believe. Not denial, but denying denial – he's there. He's dead. I know that on some level. But it didn't click.

I mean, life does go on, but only if you're breathing. My friend was dead. I had to move on. I kept telling myself that. I loaded the pistol anyway. I do it in secret. Anybody watching would have thought it was suicidal.

I left one chamber empty, tossed it under my pillow. The first night, the hammer dug into the back of my neck. I piled pillows up until I couldn't feel it. Each sweltering summer night I lay awake until I slipped my hand around the grip. Security blanket – who needs it when you got a Colt under your head?

It's a really raw deal. Once you're dead, your worries are basically over. But everyone left has to deal with it.

I slept with that gun under my pillow that summer. It was the only thing that kept the dreams at bay.

In the following weeks, Rhode Island turned the case over to federal prosecutors, in the hopes of getting the death penalty for the five men that, excuse me as I choke, allegedly killed my friend. The thought of a needle proved that there is no honor among thieves, and Burdick and Anderson agreed to testify in exchange for life sentences (maybe) in federal prison. A month after the one-year anniversary of Jason's slaying, Sanchez pleaded guilty. Floyd then admitted that he was the triggerman, and pleaded guilty in return for a non-death penalty.

Now, nearly two years later, Day remained, charged with aiding and abetting a carjacking, death resulting and conspiring to carjack, resulting in death. Eight days of grisly testimony, eight days of graphic photos and forensic evidence in federal court.

And then last week, on Feb. 27, it was over.

No, justice was not served. U.S. District Judge Ronald R. Lagueux said that the prosecution did not have a case against Day, despite testimony from admitted accomplices and a mountain of forensic evidence. Lagueux said that the federal prosecutors didn't have the evidence necessary to prove that Day was intending to kill someone on the night of June 8, 2000.

Even the jury was stunned at the announcement.

Fortunately, Day is not free. A previous alleged – God, I hate that word – victim came forward and said Day was the guy who robbed them before the murders. He's in jail on these unrelated robbery charges.

The state of Rhode Island says that they're going to file charges against Day.

Until then, Jason and Amy's families will have to relive the nightmare that has been going on for nearly two years. While Day sits in a cell in the Adult Correctional Institute in Cranston, RI, Jason lies in the Precinct Cemetery. Jason will never hear music again, something he loved. He'll never write poetry again. He'll never take the stage, kiss a girl, take a drink. Laugh, joke, confide, advise, comfort, or be there again.

It is a social injustice of the worst degree that the man who allegedly ordered his death gets to do all those things. Granted, Day'll do them in a cell. But Day will still draw breath. Day will still see sunlight. He will still hear the rain, watch birds, wonder, think – all the things that my friend can never do. And that, gentle reader, is wrong. It is reprehensibly wrong that the Burgeson and Shute families will have to suffer through another round of pre-trial legal wrangling and cajoling.

It is inhuman that Day won't be brought to justice swiftly. I'm not really sure what I want. That's not really true. I know what I want. I want my hurting to stop.

My only comfort is in Jason's words. Jason, who told me once that writing was the only way to truly, honestly represent one's self, wrote these words years before his brutal murder.

"If I had to give you one piece of advice, it would be to look into the future, for the past hurts too much."

Sleep well, Jason.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

Dear Pedro

PEDRO GOMES

One day I found myself staring blankly at the paper and thought to myself, "I wonder why there isn't an advice columnist for a paper such as this." After that thought, I then proceeded to think, "Maybe I should write an advice column." So here it is: my advice column.

Dear Pedro,

I am a senior in high school and today I received my acceptance letter for UMass. It's not the only school I have been accepted at, but because of my financial situation I am strongly considering UMass. My question, though, is this: with recent budget cuts, would UMass still be a wise decision?

Billy

Well Billy, you have a big decision ahead of you, and I am glad that you considered me in helping you make it. I say go for it. Join the big ol' UMass family. With recent budget cuts I think the University will be better for it. You see, it's going to be like the real world. Getting into classes is going to be as difficult as finding a job. Then when you finally start classes, you're going to hate every single one you're in. This is also similar to real life because the first job you get you'll probably detest, but like at the University, the longer you stick with it, the better it will be. Unless the budget cuts prevent you from getting into classes even as a senior, which seems to be the case on occasion. Then you can chalk that up as another real life experience, like getting laid off. Either way, in the end everyone will respect what you have achieved because of the struggle you undertook to graduate, or, worst-case scenario, your diploma won't be worth the paper it's printed on because everyone in the country will know that you probably took a bunch of useless courses so you could graduate.

On second thought, go to UConn. They didn't get a budget cut; they actually got a budget increase.

Dear Pedro,

I understand that you're an RA and that the RA Union has been a big issue this semester. I was wondering if you could give me some more info on the issue before I cast my vote.

Jilly

The RA Union: should it exist or should it be abolished? I don't think that's a question I can adequately answer for you, seeing as I am graduating and don't think it's my right to take a side. I think the people who can take a side to this inquiry are junior high students who are one day considering they might go to UMass (if it still exists when they go to school, because who the hell would want to go to a school with no professors, that's silly) and become RAs. With such a high turnover rate, how can you expect students who become RAs for a semester to make a decision on something as important as a Union that will never affect them? I know I can't make a monumental decision like that, so give those junior high students a call and get them to vote, because it's going to affect them.

But there's one thing you've got to admit: the RAs who started this whole thing made a wise choice in picking the UAW to be our Union. You see, often times when I am on rounds I come across inebriated individuals, and I am always at a loss for what to do. Recently, it's been easier to handle these situations. Now when I come across an inebriated individual I think to myself, "What would a member of the United Auto Workers do in this instance?" My thoughts then shift towards car tune-ups, fan belts and oil changes. After I break from my reverie I realize that this individual has thrown up on my shoes and walked away. Problem solved. Thank you, UAW.

Dear Pedro,

Did you get that letter from the Chancellor about how RAs are not paid but are purely found to be in a leadership positions. That letter angered me, but I don't know what I should do about it. Please don't print my name.

EvinKay IchardsonRay

Suck it up. That's what we are, leaders. Let me give you an analogy. Take the captain of a sports team for instance. They're leaders right? They don't get paid, right? They're just like RAs. Say a team member is having problems with another team member, who do they go to?

The captain.

Also, if a team member is having a hard time adjusting to playing that sport, who do they go to for advice?

The captain.

Say a team member is really depressed and people think that the individual might be suicidal, or have an eating disorder or possibly have substance abuse problems. Who is the first person called to intervene?

The captain.

And who is there for the team member when they lock themselves out of their room at four in the morning and need a key, but then they go back in their room and realize that it's too cold in their room so they need someone to repair the heater while at the same time they are trying to find a place they can go to become more educated about sexual harassment issues?

The capta...oh wait. I mean RAs. Team captains don't do that.

Well, I guess the Chancellor was wrong in saying that we're only leaders. Maybe she can redeem herself by showing that she too is a "leader," doesn't really have a "job" and will take a pay cut. That would really make a statement.

Pedro Gomes is a Collegian staff member.

World-wide greed

BRIAN LOHNES

In recent years it has become an increasingly popular occurrence for people from [illegible] to pack up their belongings and move to a new locale to start over again, all under the auspices that you are doing the Lord's work. To think that these men were hearing confessions from other people and "forgiving" them for their sins while acting as they did is astounding. It will be interesting to see how the Catholic faction that is Bishop Mack in the long run to this entire gorgeous scandal.

So while the priests are molesting our children, the corporate culture is molesting our finances. Imagine looking well-dressed enough to trick a room full of members of Congress and plead the 5th amendment, which for all of you unaware of it is the amendment that matters around half of criminals. Even [illegible] those bastards pleads the 5th it should be whacked across the back of the head with a bamboo rod with John McCain doing the swinging. I can't possibly believe that the leaders of Enron have any sense of the chaos they have caused for thousands of their former employees. Hearing stories about how the big wheels of the corporate command to miraculously [illegible] of their stock days before they had well blew their straw boats. Jeez. The flip side, of course, are the stories of employees getting ready to retire days before the company was finally exposed as a fraud, their entire retirement package worthless, ending any chance they ever had of living the rest of their lives out comfortably as they should be able to.

Just imagine getting ready for graduation and suddenly word leaks out that U Mass is no longer in existence. You get no diploma. Not even a record of enrollment at the university is available. You have nothing and you have no recourse to fight back with. You are powerless, like the kids molested by the priests, or the workers molested by their corporation.

The feeling of having no power in a situation is probably the worst feeling in the world. Here's an example. Recently, at my apartment we received a notice of discontinuance of our phone service unless we paid 157 dollars. Upon the initial heart attack at seeing the number, I dialed the phone company and tried to figure out what the major malfunction was. I told the operator that I wasn't a deadbeat and it must be their mistake because I pay my bills on time, then she told me they had not gotten a payment since October. This was due to the fact that we had not received a phone bill since then, which we quickly found out as we looked through our bill records. Now I was sure that it was their mistake and I called back to tell them that, completely unaware that they have probably heard this excuse 10,000 times and thought I was another idiot trying to weasel his way out of paying. In this situation I didn't have a leg to stand on; how do you prove a bill was never sent? It is a total catch-22. The argument that "I didn't send payment because I never got the bill," does not work because you can't prove anything with a check you never wrote. Truth was not a defense in my situation, so we ponied up the 157 pesos.

It is a sad day in the world when even a religious leader can't be trusted. It makes a guy doubt just about everything in this world, except the phone company: they always have it right.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian columnist.

Write for Ed/Op. Send your columns and letters to collegianeditorial yahoo.com, or stop by our office at 113 Campus Center basement.

www.dailycollegian.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 3.4.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Mel Gibson-as-hero

Makes for box office gold

Taking two weeks off should have done At The Movies good, but not when Mel Gibson's We Were Soldiers seizes the box-office's top position. Raking in a soldierly $20.2 million, Soldiers stars Gibson as William Wallace, a Scotsman trying to free his country from the grip of British overlords.

Oh snap! It stars Gibson as an American settler trying to free his country from the grip of British overlords.

Oh snap! It actually stars Gibson reversing his usual role, this time trying be the overlord as he, and his very innocent troops, attempts to control the Ia Drang Valley in Vietnam, circa 1965. The battle was one of the first fought in Vietnam.

Hollywood pundits guessed that the film's smaller-than-expected opening may have something to do with the fact that studios release one gritty war drama a week these days, and the shock and revulsion of Saving Private Ryan's opening sequence has dissipated considerably.

Countering the deadly serious nature of Soldiers is the hilarious 40 Days and 40 Nights, starring a dreamy Josh Hartnett as an idiot. For Lent, "Hunk"nett gives up sex for 40 days, not to prove to God that he's obedient, but to prove to his friend that he can do it. But like any mate, Hartnett is challenged when a stunningly beautiful woman comes into his life.

What will he do?

When will Hollywood clue in that its version of suffering isn't the rest of the world's? In The Skulls, we were supposed to feel sympathy for Joshua Jackson because he was given money, and cars, and women, and then it was taken away from him, reducing him to the level of...the rest of us. No!

Excuse our disinterest. (Days made $12.5 million more than it ever should have, by the way.)

John Q. made $8.4 million. Take that you corporate HMOs! Hollywood won't take your abuse of the common man for granted anymore! Instead, it will portray the common man as a gun-waving lunatic willing to do anything to get his son a heart-transplant. It's a nice idea, but whatever happened to serious social critique?

Dragonfly breathed $6.8 million worth of life into Kevin Costner's ruined career. The Mothman Prophecies. Dragonfly. Fear Butterfly, the next in Hollywood's riveting bug-themed movies.

Return to Neverland tore at the shreds of Disney's dignity, cashing in on that wacky Peter Pan and his crazy Sidekick Wendy one more time. The animated abomination pulled in $6.5 million.

The bottom-five were even worse, if that's possible.

Queen of the Damned made $5.8 million. The last movie featuring Aaliyah was quite possibly her worst, and that's saying something of an actor who appeared in Romeo Must Die.

Big Fat Liar kicked Frankie Muniz's career between the legs, making only $4.8 million. The star of "Malcolm in the Middle" had better enjoy it while he lasts, because he'll be a pimply-faced 18-year old soon and nobody will remember him.

A Beautiful Mind swiped $4.4 million from theatergoers clearly attending because it is the only arthouse film in wide release. There's no other explanation than that.

Crossroads made $4 million, thus making Britney's first vehicle a profitable one. If the implication is unclear, it is that, like Chris Kattan's moneymaking Corky Romano, we might see Britney Spears in another movie.

Lastly, The Lord of the Rings snuck back into the top-ten with $3.1 million. Attention Sci Fi society – do something else with your time.

Next week will no doubt be worse. Ice Cube is starring in one of the two major releases (the cleverly-titled if-it-were-three-years-ago All About the Benjamins) and Guy Pearce continues his attempt to remake every book on the ninth grade reading list, when he stars in The Time Machine.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian staff member.

At the movies

with Sam Wilkinson

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Mel Gibson stars in We Were Soldiers.

Stick around for joy: Furtado brightens Avalon

COURTESY DREAMWORKS RECORDS

Nelly's show at the Avalon...whoa.

By Michael Delano
COLLEGIAN STAFF

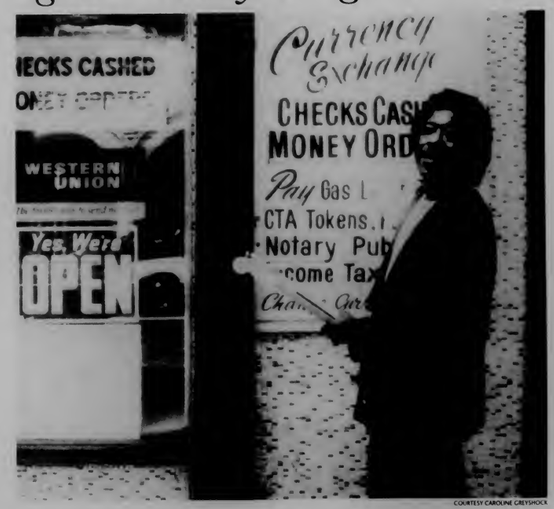
NELLY FURTADO
Avalon
March 1

Nelly Furtado's spirit crackled throughout the intimate Avalon on Friday night and her jubilant energy more than made up for elements of predictability during her 75-minute set.

A monolith banner with her name and ominous opening music had the audience half-prepared for Nelly to be lowered from the ceiling onto a golden throne. But the moment she bounced into "Baby Girl" it was clear there wouldn't be any powertrippin' following an amazing string of successes that culminated last Wednesday night with a Grammy for Best Female Pop Vocal performance. Audience banter was minimal, but she always appeared jovial and welcoming, reading cards from fans and handing the mic over so front-row attendees could embarrass themselves by yelping some Nelly lyrics.

There was never any doubt Nelly was on a mission with her music, and the songs spoke volumes. The general theme could be found amidst her first hit "I'm Like A Bird," nestled mid-set: "I'm like a bird.../I don't know where my soul is, I don't know where my home is." Inside and outside, Nelly is a raging free spirit, emotions swinging wildly this way and that, grabbing onto any number of musical influences.

No, she doesn't want to be your "Baby Girl." Too much soul power to set free to be tied down right now. She's sorry, though, 'cuz she'll "...Make You Cry." She'll only fly away, but meanwhile her "...Love Grows Deeper," and takes a little piece of her as time goes. "Hey, Man!" she's ready for ya, but "each and every single day" she knows she's going to have to eventually give you away. If there's one constant, it's that Nelly is "Trynna Finda Way."



Confusion? Anxiety? Yeah, it sounds like love and life, and Nelly is way too caught up in the bliss of it all slow down for anything resembling a mopey ballad. The bubbly musical potpourri from her debut Whoa, Nelly! isn't so much re-imagined as it is recreated for the stage with drums, guitar, bass, keyboards, and turntables. Say a prayer for Nelly's poor band, though, who, as happy as they look, are forced to wear the cheesiest neon pink and green-over-black outfits while Nelly herself rocks the same gaudy colors and makes them look good.

As fresh and exciting as Nelly's sound is, though, there can be only so many surprises from a performer with roughly a dozen songs to her credit. There was little doubt the night would climax with biggest hit "Turn Off The Light" and current hit "Shit On The Radio (Remember the Days)." And sandwiching the relationship woes of "Hey, Man!" with the social consciousness of Marvin Gaye's "What's Going On" seemed an ill fit.

But while there were no impromptu covers or jam sessions, a snippet of the "Get Ur Freak On" remix and a crowd-pleasing medley of early 90s pop including Kris Kross' "Jump" and Mary J. Blige's "Real Love" were set forth with complete conviction. The airy, extended versions of "...Radio" and "...Light" that closed the show were executed to perfection, as both have flexible structures and some of Nelly's most enduring melodies that can withstand the strain of repetition.

Whoa, Nelly!, still among the worst album titles of recent memory, at least captured in cliché the surprising creativity and energy of a new talent. All that same confidence and excitement translates perfectly to the stage, and one almost feels guilty for expecting, not being surprised by, such a sparkling live show.

Blues legend Buddy tonight at the Calvin

COURTESY CAROLINE GREYSHOCK

Bluesman Buddy Guy is coming to Northampton's Calvin Theater tonight at 7.

There was a time when the Chicago blues were synonymous with Muddy Waters, who charged out of the late-1940s with a vocal and musical style that continues to be emulated each time a guitar is picked up with the blues in mind. For many he was and would remain the Chicago blues, a lone figure that would stand the test of time as the mold from which poured Everything Else.

Then came Buddy.

Buddy Guy, who had originally planted his roots in the Baton Rouge music scene, took off for Chi-Town in the late 1950s, and although he was slow to gain his footing, he eventually won the town over with his pure guitar work and raw vocals.

The legend, as they say, though it would take some time to mature, was born.

The years following his arrival in Illinois saw Guy join up with the town's royalty: Waters, Otis Rush, Freddy King. Though collaborations were made with the establishment, both professional and social, Guy set about creating an agenda of his own, one which yielded one of the more remarkable pairings in blues history. With harmonica ace Junior Wells, Guy would record and tour behind a number of successful albums that gained the pair critical praise. (Start with the 1972 release "Buddy Guy and Junior Wells Play the Blues." Move just about anywhere from there).

As goes the resume of most legends, Guy has spent the latter half of his career in the mentor's seat, trying with every note to re-energize the craft that ultimately brought him to prominence.

His influence has been acknowledged by a wide array of guitarists: from Jimi Hendrix and Eric Clapton to the late Stevie Ray Vaughan, who shared a stage with Guy at his last performance on August 26, 1990 in East Troy, Wisconsin.

Guy's career has largely been spent in the spotlight since his 1991 release "Damn Right I've got the Blues." His latest, "Sweet Tea," has again won the bluesman mass critical praise.

Despite a remarkable catalog to draw from, Guy is often a reflecting pool live, paying tribute to those he has had a hand in shaping. The blues are a tough set of streets to negotiate, but those walking them are selfless with their help and knowledge. Guy, perhaps more than anyone, has seen both sides.

Guy performs this evening at the Calvin Theater in Northampton. Worth the effort to get there? Damn right it is. Show starts at 7 p.m.

- Matt Despres

DELTA DELTA THI.
27 UPSTANDING YOUNG MEN.
34 BILLION SNEAKY LITTLE SPERM.

You're relentless when it comes to safer sex and contraception. Still, the occasional stray sperm can sneak through. Emergency contraception, taken within 72 hours after intercourse, can keep that little sperm from complicating your life. Contact your doctor, visit www.goprarb.com or call 1-888-FOT-2-LATE. ACCIDENTS HAPPEN. That's why there's morning-after contraception.

Mulder and Scully, where are you?

By Ruth Marcus
COLUMBIA DAILY SPECTATOR (COLUMBIA U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK – It's not that I have a weak stomach. I can handle all sorts of gore; I giggle with the Godfather and watch the X-Files over dinner. So I was interested when I read a synopsis that likened Trouble Every Day, the new film from Claire Denis, to an episode of the "X-Files." But Trouble Every Day is nothing like my favorite television show; Mulder and Scully are unforgivably absent, so the brutality of the characters remains unexplained and their horrible homicides unjustified. Oh how I missed those plucky FBI agents by the conclusion of the film!

Trouble Every Day chronicles the honeymoon of two unfortunate Americans, Shane and June Brown (Vincent Gallo and Tricia Vessey), on their honeymoon in Paris. They struggle with their love in the face of Shane's crippling disease. You see, his lust for his new wife is more than sexual. Rather than desiring to kiss his sweetheart, Shane literally wants to eat her up. He flees her embrace to huddle in the bathroom where his mind and the audience's vision are clouded by images of June covered in blood. But, unlike most vampire films, Trouble Every Day doesn't revel in the affliction. Instead, the film renders the desire for blood a medical sickness with accompanying angst so overpowering that Gallo apparently is unable to shave, smile, or get haircuts.

Shane is not the only character with cannibalistic tendencies; he is just slower to act on his impulses. Core (Beatrice Dalle), a Parisian woman to whom Shane is implausibly connected, devours an unfortunate trucker within the first minutes of the film. The film then progresses in a style that resembles snapshots of imagery and snips of conversation. This hyperactive editing depersonalizes the characters and reduces the plot to snatches of information, pain, and vulgarity. In place of a plot, the audience is presented with postcards. For example:

Mother, Hi! Shane and I are in Paris now, but he's being really distant. He leaves without telling me where he is going then comes home to startle me in the bathroom. I'm not afraid of him mother, I swear, but that bite mark on my arm hasn't healed yet. And he apparently doesn't want to even sleep with me, he leaves bed to run to the bathroom and ... well, you know. Paris is pretty though! Love, June.

Or: Dear Mom, My husband locks me all day so I can't eat people, but tonight some neighboring boys broke into the house! I was so excited I couldn't resist sleeping with one of the boys and then chewing him to death. See you Thursday, Core.

Upon arriving in Paris, Shane goes in search of Leo (Alex Descas), the unfortunate fellow whose wife enjoys eating the neighbors. Leo is a doctor with whom Shane worked in Africa, as is revealed in the longest dialogue of the movie, an altercation of about four minutes. Leo has apparently invented some pill to curb cannibalistic desires. The pill does not quite do the trick, however, and the audience is treated to several scenes of cannibalism, each more graphic and horrifying than the one that preceded it. I suppose that scenes such as these could be seen to push the limit of conventional artistic expression. The filmmakers may indignantly argue that their work is revolutionary and may expect their innovation to produce more than immediate revulsion.

Unfortunately for the director, the revulsion will probably outweigh any impulse to change one's perception. A work of art should do more than revolt and confuse; it should not just record atrocity but should provide some, however minimal, artistic reason for the horrific representation. "The X-Files" achieves this through Mulder and Scully's investigation of the atrocities: their discoveries offer logic within the framework of supernatural horror.

Trouble Every Day could desperately use such logic, for its plot not only lacks reason but is also often incoherent. This is a film that will be noticed not for acting, directing, or even originality, but for its brutal representation of inhuman lust and violence. See Trouble Every Day if you want to be sickened by a production that makes you question the purpose of art. But you could probably save $10 and achieve the same effect by looking at Andy Warhol prints while drinking curdled milk.

COURTESY CHRISTIAN STEINER

Music a trios

The Kalichstein-Laredo-Robinson Trio, who made their debut at President Carter's inauguration, will perform works by Beethoven and Shostakovich, amongst others, on Sat., March 9 at Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

Men's lax squeaks out first win

The lax bench intently watches its teammates pull out the 9-8 victory over Stoney Brook

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Considering the short but well documented history between the Massachusetts and Stony Brook lacrosse programs, Saturday's 8-7 Minuteman win was a lot closer than it was supposed to be and frankly, a lot closer than it had to be.

After one half UMass held a 16-10 shot advantage, an edge in time of possession, one crossbar and a 3-1 deficit. SBU coach John Espey and his team executed the lacrosse version of the four corners offense to keep the UMass guns at bay and almost pull off an upset.

"I worked for them last year," UMass coach Greg Cannella said after his team's second straight one goal contest. "If you remember last year it was 7-5 at halftime. They are very well coached and they play hard, but you have to win the close ones."

As expected from a team that has thrived through the play of it veterans, senior Dan Paccione buried the game-winning tally with just 52 seconds remaining. Paccione dodged two Seawolf defensemen before wrapping around the crease and beating backup goaltender Philip Reed.

"To tell you the truth I wasn't really thinking anything," Paccione said. "I saw I had my man beat so I took the chance. I'm glad I put it in because I wasn't having a good day shooting the ball at all. Besides that goal I really didn't think I had a good game."

Paccione's goal marked the Minutemen's first win of the season and an important one after last week's overtime loss to Holstra.

"It's huge," senior defenseman Matt McFarland said. "It's always tough to get the first one, especially like this, but you have to give Stony Brook credit. They played great, they are gonna' surprise some teams this year man."

A team like the Seawolves is always dangerous, especially with 13 seniors on the roster. And especially when one of those seniors is the top returning goal scorer in the nation.

McFarland drew the unenviable task of marking 30-goal scorer Kevin Pall, but by the end of the day it was Pall who was wearing the undesirable shoes. McFarland, a third team All-American last year held Pall to just a pair of goals on the afternoon.

On the other side of the ball it was Marc Merlet who led the way with a goal and three assists. Merlet has struggled by his standards – if you call 7 points in two games struggling.

He scored his first goal of the year in the second half but that was after he banged a shot off the crossbar of a wide open net and failed to convert on numerous clean low chances in the first half. But his first SU goal of the season came on a picturesque feed from Paccione.

For an hour-and-a-half the whole of the Minuteman offense just as much. The biggest culprit was the first two quarters' fumbling their lowest half of offensive since a weather delayed 5-3 loss to Navy two years ago.

But eventually the UMass offense started playing. Freshman Greg Tunda scored his first career goal to spark a run in the third quarter to give the Minutemen a 9-3 lead. But Stony Brook would not die, cutting it with a four goal run of its own to take a 9-8 lead.

The Seawolves' comeback attempt, however, ended when freshman Kevin Lacoste fumbled the ball to Matt McFarland who kept it from the Stony Brook offense.

The Minutemen, who improved to 1-1 on the season, will look to continue their winning ways when they travel to Hofstra to take on the Pride on Wednesday. Faceoff is set for 3:30 p.m.

Reed started in goal for Stony Brook but was pulled after giving up three goals in the first 10 minutes of the game. The senior came in and attacked the UMass offense for the rest of the game, only giving up four goals in the remaining 50 minutes.

Northeastern 11, UMass 7

UMass controlled the game from the opening whistle, outshooting the Huskies 40-21 and holding a 7-2 advantage in corner kicks.

Senior Jeff Reed scored two goals and added an assist to lead the Minutemen (3-2, 1-0 Atlantic 10) to victory.

UMass will host Fairfield on Wednesday at 3:30 p.m.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/1 – Thursday 3/7
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
40 DAYS & 40 NIGHTS
WE WERE SOLDIERS
IN THE BEDROOM
HART'S WAR
JOHN Q
COLLATERAL DAMAGE
BIG FAT LIAR
SUPER TROOPERS
CROSSROADS
RETURN TO NEVERLAND
THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO
BLACK HAWK DOWN
A BEAUTIFUL MIND
LORD OF THE RINGS
IN THE BEDROOM
*NO PASSES-NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Free trip to Israel!
Sun
History
Trekking
Jerusalem
Archaeology
Beaches
Masada
You!
Register
www.Israel4Free
www.Israel4Free

See your article printed in The Collegian

Write for Arts

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
-MARCH 8TH - 10TH
-LEWIS-SEBRING ROOM
-VALENTINE HALL
-AMHERST COLLEGE
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

University of Massachusetts Boston
Exploring the Coastal Environment
July 15–August 8, 2002
This inquiry-based, hands-on program provides an introduction to maritime history, nautical science, oceanography, and coastal zone management. Highlights include a week-long voyage along New England coast aboard the schooner Ernestina and visits to Mystic Seaport and the Marine Educators Conference. Six undergraduate credits.
To learn more, contact:
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Corporate, Continuing and Distance Education
100 Morrissey Blvd.
Boston MA 02125-3393
617.287.7913
www.conted.umb.edu
UMASS BOSTON

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
BACON'N CHEESE SKINS 8.45 4.48
FRIED SHRIMP TEMPURA 7.25 3.63
SWEET POTATO FRIES 6.75 3.38
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
http://virtual-valley.com/judies
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
61 N. Pleasant St.
253-3491

UMass
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Softball(M/W/C) 3/11
Co-rec Soccer 3/11
Volleyball Special 3/12
OFFICIALS NEEDED:
Softball Clinics 3/25, 3/27, 3/28
Co-rec Soccer Clinics 3/26, 3/27, 3/28
Volleyball Special 3/26
Call for clinic attendance requirements, times and locations!
More Info
215 Boyden, 5-0123
On the Web!
http://www.umass.edu/umass

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for permanent position or summer job? Come to the Hospitality Job Fair. March 6th 2002 from 9:00 am to 3 pm in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 50 companies attending. For more info. Please call the Career Day office 545-3438.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. - Now Available, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sept. 1 year lease. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. [illegible] stop by or call (413) 549-0600.

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. [illegible] 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR SALE

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstliving.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

'92 Geo Metro Hatchback, automatic, sunroof, AC, 65,000 miles, cheap reliable transportation. $1300. 585-0599.

CHILD CARE

Occasional after school childcare two school age children "also occasional summer care" transportation needed. John 549-5448.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Wanted: Honest, responsible, hard working student for evening product promotions. Must be 21+ and have reliable transportation. Please contact 203-984-5880 for more info.

$12,342.00 Congratulations Dave Sullivan (Sophomore-Umass) for a great first week!!! Last two weeks of Recruiting. CWP Program 617-216-4741 or [illegible]

SUMMER IN MAINE Jewish, Co-ed overnight camp in the southern Maine seeks staff: Boys Unit Head (23+), Camping/Tripping Director (23+), Judaics Director (23+); swim, water ski, and boating/ sailing instructors (lifeguard certification req'd.) ; archery (training avail.), ceramics, general athletics, gymnastics, photography, radio, low ropes, theater; general counselors, office personnel. For information, contact: Ava Goldman, Director, JCC Camp Kingswood, 333 Nahanton street, Newton, MA 02459, 617 244 5124, or e-mail: [illegible]

Wanted seamstress simple alterations 545-4031

EMPLOYMENT

Wanted: spring/ Summer Interns. Must be rebels, Innovators, deserters, seeking leadership outside the box. Average pay $7200.00. 617-216-4741 jbrown@collegeworks.com.

Personal Care attendant for male Quad. Week day mornings $10.12 hr 546-0666.

Pet Sitting, spring break and some weekends this semester. N Amherst area 3 times per day for pets. 545-4013.

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 1-866-291-7884 ext. 485.

Wanted student to assist new web based business located on Cape Cod. Must have Marketing web skills, Contact Howie @ [illegible]

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941) 329-6434 www.cruisecareers.com

FOR SALE

Couch good shape $200/BO 259-1020.

Free Dog to a good home!! We need to find a home soon Female 1 1/2 year old-Pursie call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

FURNITURE

New computer desk $99.00 413-210-3145.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Happy belated birthday Ms. Watena Mulbah and we wish you many more to come we hope your day is full of lots of love and surprises. May God bless you. From your mother Jean Mulbah your aunt Ciatta, Uncle Samuel and family your brothers Michael and Uteenway Mulbah.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich (P Mulvey, E Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_Goodrich@hotmail.com

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon, student discounts 1-800-u-can-mix. www.universitybartending.com spaces limited call for information.

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

Room all-inclusive no smoke/ no pets $400 available now 253-0627.

In house on Main St. CHEAP! Call 253-2575 or 297-1444.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TO SUBLET

Two bedrooms available in Puffton Village on bus route, free heat/hot water-sublet available thru summer. Call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sunsplashvacations.com

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

TRAVEL

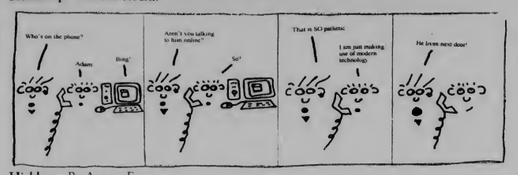
#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.co

WANTED

m 1-800-678-6386 Get $$PAID$$ to lose up to 5-40 lbs. 1-888-709-8197 www.health-mgmt.com

Looking for a trustworthy person to drive my car to Costa Rica. Call Frances 323-5799.



Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Noodle By Jacki

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Loose Control By submerged duck

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"My head feels like my mouth's been drinking."

-Klinger

Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 38 LOW: 14	HIGH: 37 LOW: 19	HIGH: 47 LOW: 20

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You can pick up the pace today, but take care that you don't try to do too much at any one time. Concentrate on completion.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You'll have a good deal to talk about when all is done, and you'll be quite proud of what you've accomplished if you stick to your guns.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your reaction to news received through the grapevine can make things worse or better, depending upon how the news is taken by others.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – The time has come for you to take some dramatic measures in order to see that others fall "into line" with you. Your plans can benefit all.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You needn't do things old-fashioned way today. Explore new options – and don't listen to what all those negative souls have to say. Wait, you are one of those negative souls. Ok, the stars say today that some upstarts are going to try something risky and scary. You must crush them at all costs. Status quo forever.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may think everything has been taken care of quite nicely, but the fact is that you may have left one loose end untied. Tend to it as soon as possible.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can have a great deal of fun with a kindred spirit today trying to outdo each other at every turn. Be sure to maintain a playful spirit.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You aren't the only one to come up with just the right stuff today. Fortunately, there are others with whom you can team up with very successfully.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You'll enjoy a rare and special opportunity to step into another's shoes before the day is out. What you learn can serve you well in the future.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You are likely to find that the same old thing isn't going to do it for you today. Do what you can to surround yourself with a new stimuli.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You're on the verge of a very big development, and today you'll want to look back and study just what you've been doing. Is everything in place?
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may feel as though you're letting someone down, but if you focus on yourself in a certain way you can actually help more than hinder.

www DOT daily collegian DOT com

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Italian Minestrone

Chicken Nuggets

Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

DINNER

Italian Minestrone

Moroccan Lamb Stew

Chicken Margarita

Le Commensal Entree (vegan)

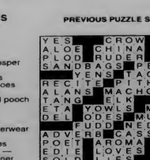
Today's Staff

Night Editor	Ken Campbell
Photo Editor	Richard Blake
Copy Editor	Jesse Greenspan
Designer	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	Alicia Upano, Shannon Farrington

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

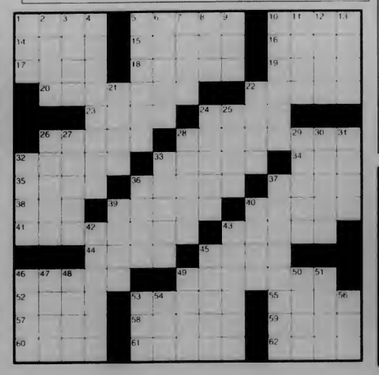
MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 4, 2002

		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		All-Star Bluegrass Celebration (In Stereo)			Best of Sarah Brightman (In Stereo)			Austin City Limits (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	1	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "Celano v. Foster"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "Celano v. Foster"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	My Wife-Kids	Wayne Brady	The Chair (In Stereo)		Once and Again (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	56	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	7th Heaven	Reality Ck? (N)	Angel "Sleep Tight" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Fear Factor (In Stereo)		Third Watch "Superheroes"		Crossing Jordan (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	7th Heaven	Reality Ck? (N)	Angel "Sleep Tight" (In Stereo)		News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT		30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Fear Factor (In Stereo)		Third Watch "Superheroes"		Crossing Jordan (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	61	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Malcolm-Mid.	That '80s	Ally McBeal "Heart and Soul"		News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Fear Factor (In Stereo)		Third Watch "Superheroes"		Crossing Jordan (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		John McDermott: A Time to Remember			Wrinkle Cure With Dr. Nicholas Perricone			Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	My Wife-Kids	Wayne Brady	The Chair (In Stereo)		Once and Again (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	Hughleys	One on One	Parkers (N)	Girlfriends	Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel	Shipmates
WTBS	22		Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	★★ "Conspiracy Theory" (1997, Suspense) (PA) Mel Gibson. Julia Roberts						★★ "Burglar" (1987)
A&E	44		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Mother Love"		Biography Biography: 15 Years and Counting" (N)				Biography "Biography: 15 Years and Counting"		Greenfield	Moneyline
CNN	25	23	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Live From...	The Point	Larry King Live		News night		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	53	36	Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show	Geeks	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Heroes of Black Comedy		Daily Show	Mark Twain
DISC	23		Discover Magazine		Aquatic Ape		Stormpro# -- Coastline		Mega-Tsunamis		Disasters: Hurricane Floyd		Justice Files
ESPN	31		Sportscenter		Women's College Basketball: Big Ten Tourn. -- Teams TBA				College Basketball: MAAC Championship -- Teams TBA				Sportscenter
LIFE	27		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: Paula Zahn		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"She's No Angel" (2001, Suspense) Tracey Gold. Premiere				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33		MTV Special	Ice Cube	Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Prime Time Players (In Stereo)		Real World	Real World	Real World	Flipped (N)	Dismissed	Kidnapped
NICK	43		Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Dom-Explorer	Pelswick	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show
SCIFI	45		Star Trek (In Stereo)		Earth: Final Conflict "Crossfire"		Outer Limits "Descent"		★★½ "Blade Runner" (1982, Science Fiction) Harrison Ford. (In Stereo)				Crossing Over
TLC	29	24	Killer Bees		Ultimate Ten Unsolved Crime		Junkyard Mega-Wars				Building the Impossible (N)		Junkyard Mega-Wars
TNT	20		NYPD Blue (In Stereo)		Pretender "Prison Story"		Law & Order "Sheriff"		Witchblade "Maelstrom"		Law & Order "Untitled"		Soloite: Nicolas Cage
USA	32		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Defensive Action"		Nash Bridges "Sniper"		★½ "Short Attack II" (2000, Action) Nikita Ager. Thorsten Kaye				JAG "Defensive Action"
HBO	50		(5:45) ★★½ "Star Trek: The Motion Picture" (1979) G				★★½ "Vertical Limit" (2000, Action) Chris O'Donnell. PG-13				Jamie Foxx-Security		"X-Change" (2000) R
MAX	51		(4:45) ★★½ "A Very Brady Sequel" (1996) PG-13				★★ "Miss Congeniality" (2000, Comedy) Sandra Bullock. PG-13				★★½ "Bedazzled" (2000) Brendan Fraser		Real Sex 20
SHOW	65		★★ "The Burbs" (1989, Comedy) Tom Hanks, Bruce Dern. PG				★★½ "Dead Presidents" (1995, Drama) Larenz Tate. R				★★½ "Malice" (1993, Suspense) Alec Baldwin. R



www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Collegian Graphics, the Lisa of the Simpsons



ACROSS
1 Pony's gait
5 Story
10 Cookbook direction
14 Shrill
15 Not in a whisper
16 Ripped
17 Olden times
18 Wooden shoes
19 66 and 1-80
20 Wire-haired pooch
22 Clues
23 Bellyache
24 Diva's solo
26 Woolen outerwear
28 Stocky
32 Glass bottles
33 Take a ram —
34 Beer container
35 Purposes
36 Kermit's comment
37 Graceful wraparound
38 Golfer Woosnam
39 Squash
40 Theme
41 Most of the air
43 Skirmish
44 Throw a party
45 Toupee cousins
46 Plunged
49 Bubble machine
52 Wading bird
53 Wisdom tooth
55 Concept
57 PC list
58 Theater cheer
59 Fossil fuel
60 Ballot marks
61 Daisy Mae's friend
62 Goofs up

DOWN
1 Quaser word
2 Kind of squad
3 Man-eating giant
4 Long johns
5 Mudpack
6 Funny Steve
7 Oat
8 Carry wearily
9 Sullivan and Murrow
10 Run of luck
11 Scintilla
12 A Flintstone
13 Kinski role
21 Pries the oars
22 Dampen a stamp
24 Winning
25 Bogie role
26 Red Sea peninsula
27 Lacked
28 Rose feature
29 Go to the rink
30 Like a haunted house
31 Pre-weekend shout
32 Ore deposit
33 Vinegar jar
36 Machine teeth
37 Winter's start
39 Yummy
40 Part of MHz
42 Lab monkey
43 Bathroom feature
45 Use a loom
48 Two nickels
47 Wild mountain goat
48 Honeysuckle, e.g.
49 Comedian King
50 Smelt
51 Be a parent
53 CEO's degree
54 Planet, poetically
56 Hirt and Gore

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

12-3-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 3.04.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Musketeers win duel with Minutemen

UMass ends season with defeat; A-10 tourney only way to NCAA's

By Eric Soderstrom
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CINCINNATI – Massachusetts men's basketball coach Steve Lappas mentioned Thursday that no matter how many times it's always difficult to beat the same team three times in three days.

Too bad that was before Saturday's 72-52 loss at Xavier, after which Lappas deemed the Musketeers good at running up the score in the final minutes.

"We learned some things tonight," said Lappas, nodding his head in overt sarcasm. "You know, they wanted to keep scoring at the end, that's fine.

"It's their home game, we had a good party, it's all right," he continued. Lappas' Minutemen (12-15, 6-10 A-10), with a win in the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament Wednesday afternoon, will face Xavier (22-5, 14-2) again in the A-10 quarterfinals. "We'll see what happens."

That attribution alone might not be enough to top the No. 7 Musketeers, the proud owners of the A-10's regular season title. If UMass happens to advance to the second round of the conference tournament, it can't afford to sink down in the second half like it did Saturday in Cincinnati.

After a worthy first half performance amid a rowdy 10,250 on Cintas Center loyes, the Minutemen allowed Xavier a 12-3 run to open the second half with a 50-35 lead with 15:27 remaining. A turnaround jumper from Lamb and a Rhymer with 10:40 to go brought the score to 58-46, but that's the closest UMass got.

On the next two Minuteman possessions, Anthony Williams drove into the paint and both times had the ball come from his clutches. The Musketeers converted the turnovers, the second a vicious alley-oop slam from Drew Yeung to extend the Xavier lead to 36-41 with 8:45 to play.

The Minutemen's disastrous shooting in the second half combined with the Musketeer's strong inside play contributed largely to the UMass collapse.

"We want another shot at Xavier[, definitely, especially with the way we played in the first half," said Micah Brand, who went 3-of-4 in the opening stanza, but missed all five of his attempts in the second. "There were a lot of shots that we got and made in the first half that we didn't get or make in the second half."

After shooting 50 percent (15-for-26) in the first 20 minutes, the Minutemen managed a miserable 21-4 per cent (6-for-28) output in the next 20 to tie their season-low single-half shooting percentage (tan 5, first half vs. St. Joseph's, Jan. 29, first half vs. Dayton).

Eric Williams led UMass for the first time this year with 15 points, including three 3-pointers, while Shannon Crooks scored 12 on 4-for-16 shooting.

Xavier's David West, who dominated inside, led all scorers with 22 points in perhaps the final home game of his Musketeer career, as most are led to believe that West, a junior, will leave school to pursue an NBA career. Lionel Chalmers and Romain Sato both netted 15 points for Xavier, Sato adding 11 rebounds to complete the double-double.

UMass opened the game strong, with a Rhymer swat on West one minute in followed by a Raheim Lamb fast-break lay in to give UMass a 2-1 advantage. And though that would be the Minutemen's only lead of the afternoon, they had little difficulty executing their offense early.

Still, after UMass pulled to within 26-23 thanks to a Crooks trey and a Williams jumper, the Musketeers ended the half on a 12-5 run to snatch a 38-32 advantage midway.

"I was really proud of the effort our guys gave," said Lappas, now with one regular season in the books as UMass skipper. "But here on the road we just didn't have enough."

Xavier	72
UMass	52

Second half woes sink men's hoop

JUSTIN PEARSON

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CINCINNATI – All season long, the Massachusetts men's basketball team has made a habit of coming out flat in the first half, only to produce an inspired second half performance. It won over Arkansas-Little Rock, Dayton and St. Bonaventure in dramatic comeback fashion, but couldn't pull out the victory. Thursday, it played one of its best 20 minutes of the season in the second half of a loss to Boston College. On this night, the Minutemen were troubled by a team as poor and inconsistent as the 14-21 Eagles at Conte Forum, scoring 57 points in the game, only to fall short in the end, 72-52.

Saturday afternoon's tilt with No. 7/8 Xavier looked like it had all the ingredients for one final UMass second-half comeback. The teams went into the locker rooms at the sold-out Cintas Center evenly matched in nearly all statistical categories and Xavier holding a slight 36-32 lead, largely in large part to a distinct advantage at the free throw line.

In the second half, however, no amount of free throws would save the Minutemen as they put forth one of their worst halves of the season en route to a 72-52 defeat. They hit just 1 of 10 three pointers and 6-of-26 field goals overall, tying the mark for worst single half performance of the season at 21.4 percent. No player scored more than five points, and the team scored a paltry 20 on a whole while giving up 34.

"They were running their sets and there wasn't really any pressure on them and they shot 50 percent in the first half," said Xavier center David West, who had 22 points and six boards. "We just had to turn up the pressure defense in the second half."

While the poor second half lost the game for UMass on Saturday, only time will tell if it also stole the momentum that the Minutemen had begun to stockpile for a run deep in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

The Maroon and White had won two straight before heading off to Cincinnati to face the Musketeers. In those contests there was a return to the U-Mass basketball that was evident early in the season with strong play inside, timely outside shooting and tough hard-nosed defense.

But all of that disappeared in one 20-minute stretch in Ohio. The good feeling was gone, the wind had been taken out of the UMass sail and all that remained was a belief that this performance was an anomaly and not a true showing of its capabilities.

Our mindset is that we know we can play with them and we know that we are going to have to play them again in order to win the tournament like we plan on doing," said Anthony Anderson following a 0-for-9 shooting day against the Musketeers. "We proved a little bit we can play with them and everybody else in our league, so we just have to come out and do it."

The time has now come for the real Minutemen to step forward. Each and every player now knows that the next loss will be their last and it is up to them and them alone to keep this season alive.

"It's do or die time...it's a gut check, who wants it," said senior center Kitwana Rhymer. "If you want it you are going to bring it and I believe that we want it so we'll bring it. I have no question about it."

RAHEIM LAMB/COLLEGIAN

Raheigm Lamb and the men's hoop team fell to Xavier last Saturday at the Cintas Center.

RICHARD BLAKE/COLLEGIAN

After falling to the Musketeers, 72-52, UMass coach Steve Lappas realizes his team must win the A-10 tournament in order to qualify for the postseason.

Coach Cal, seniors, NIT and quotes all featured in weekend of Ohio basketball

UMASS NOTEBOOK

By Eric Soderstrom
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CINCINNATI – Kitwana Rhymer's college basketball career will end the next time UMass loses. And with that reality now implanted in his thoughts, Rhymer refuses to give up hope.

"I know we can do it," said Rhymer after Saturday's 72-52 loss to Xavier. "There's no question that we can do it. I've got faith in all of these guys. They play hard."

Recalling his team's big wins over the tourney-bound rosters of Oregon and N.C. State earlier in the year, Rhymer believes the Minutemen are still capable of similar feats.

"We've done it once, we can do it again," the fifth-year senior remarked. "Just like we went 4-0 [to start the season], we can go 4-0 again, and right into the tournament."

Fourth-seeded UMass begins Atlantic 10 tournament play Wednesday at noon versus George Washington. A first round victory means a quarterfinal match-up with Xavier.

A visit from coach Cal

Perhaps the second most recognizable face in UMass athletics history (next to "Dr. J" Julius Erving), former Minutemen hoop skipper and present Memphis coach John Calipari watched Saturday's game from press row in a seat next to Athletic Director Bob Marcum. With his team's contest at No. 4 Cincinnati less than 24 hours away, Cal's Tigers – sitting on the bubble – had practice scheduled for 4 p.m. in Xavier's Cintas Center.

"This will be a UMass-Temple type game," he said of the rivalry. "I expect to get slapped in the mouth. Expect to get pushed in the back. And you better make plays."

Derek Kellogg, UMass' point guard from '92-'93, was also in attendance in a seat behind the Minuteman bench. Kellogg is now an assistant coach at Memphis.

Not Invited Tournament

With its loss Saturday at Xavier, the Minutemen have mathematically eliminated themselves from the National Invitational Tournament. The only possible way UMass can even its record at .500 is to win all four possible games in the A-10 tournament. That, however, would grant them an automatic bid to the NCAA tourney, negating any point for the NIT invite.

Quote of the week

"I've got a 15-year-old daughter now. I told Steve Lappas I'm mad, she's got a boyfriend – he's Greek. Steve said, 'don't feel bad, my daughter's got a boyfriend – he's Italian.' " – John Calipari from press row of the UMass-Xavier game.

THE FACES OF BUDGET CUTS PAGE 2
WE ARE NOT ALONE PAGE 3
CONTACT YOUR REPRESENTATIVE PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
TUESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ BUDGET CUTS ☆☆☆☆☆ 3.5.02

FIGHTING BACK

SGA seeks to spread the pain

By Kristin Shrewsbury
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Fair Share Act, the loss of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst Escort Service and raising student fees have caused much concern and debate within the Student Government Association.

Three weeks ago, members of the SGA Senate approved a motion called the Fair Share Act requesting that the Administration to take a five percent decrease in salaries for this upcoming fiscal year. The motion, which has failed to get a response from the administration, has further developed into a campus-wide petition.

"I've heard talk about what the administration is perceiving from this motion, and I've heard that individuals think it's our way of receiving retribution," Speaker Aaron Saunders said. "When we passed this motion, it was our way to get the campus united and to have everyone working on the same level. It's impossible to say that we're all working together and acting as one university when parts are being not even marginally, but substantially hit harder, and when other parts aren't being hit at all."

Saunders further explained that he felt the motion expressed what the SGA felt is the right thing to be done by the administration. He continued by explaining that everyone needs to make sacrifices when dealing with these budget cuts, and it's the SGA's job to advocate on behalf of the betterment of students.

"We have 95 staff members being laid off, an $1800 increase in student tuition and everyone is being hit in different ways," Saunders said. "We have to work together, and our job at the SGA is not to tell the administration what to do, but advocate on the behalf of students and make sure they're getting the best education as possible. And part of this is asking them to take a pay cut. It's not us trying to be on a power trip, but merely stating it's the right thing for the administration to do."

Senators have been working on motions directly affecting areas on campus largely hit by the recent $14 million in campus-wide budget cuts.

The UMass Escort Service, which has been expunged from UMass Security, has since been moved under the direction of University Transit Services. The move sparked much debate as well as an overall concern for the future safety of students at UMass.

As a result of the elimination of the Escort Service, University Transit will have the PVTA bus system running two extra loops a night, leaving the buses running nightly until 2:30 a.m.

"It doesn't really seem like a transferring over of services," Saunders said. "The escort service says on their web site that it's there to provide safety in area's than the transit system cannot."

Senators met with Javier Cevallos, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Barbara O'Connor, Acting Chief of the UMass Police department in an effort to discuss the future of the Escort Service.

"Aside from the PVTA adding two additional campus loops, Campus Safety will also still be providing the walking escort service for students who may need it," Senator Tracy Kirschen said.

Senators have also been addressing the issues surrounding tomorrow's Resident Advisors vote to become a union. In last Wednesday's Senate meeting, President John Sheehan addressed the issue, along with fellow Senator Jessica Temen in expressing their full support in RAs right to vote.

"I'm not stating that I'm in support of or against the RAs unionizing, but what I am in favor of is there right as undergraduates to be heard as well as be able to freely discuss the issue," Sheehan said.

SCOTT ELLIS/COLLEGIAN

Students began protesting budget problems as soon as they became apparent. From initial protests they began to organize.

Schools surviving budget cuts

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(The State of the Schools Series has reached its almost midpoint. Yes, there are six schools left to go, but the picture of the University's academic well-being is cleay. Slightly. Look for the rest of the series in the coming weeks.)

If Education's Bailey Jackson, Science and Math's Leon Osterweil, and Management's Tom O'Brien share little pedagogically, they more than accommodate for it through a unity of perspective.

If it had to be summed up, then yes, the budget cuts have been bad, but no, the University isn't over. Which isn't to say that recent budget cuts have been easy.

Osterweil, the Dean of the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, described a department loss of 10 percent. He expects to lose 35 faculty members to the two types of retirement – 10 to traditional and 25 to the now-offered early retirement. He expects the brunt of the retirements to negatively impact Math, which will lose 12 professors, or almost 20 percent of its working employees.

Jackson, the Dean of the University's School of Education, has seen fewer retirements – although the six he anticipates certainly won't be easy for his smaller department – and he expects state help because of a "commitment to teaching" made by various members of the University administration. That written, he still expects to see things get worse before they get better.

O'Brien's School of Management will be significantly benefited by a new addition to be completed this coming summer, but he expects to fill none of the School's vacant teaching positions. SoM has lost more than 30 percent of its professors in the past few years, so while the impact of one year's budget cuts aren't hard-hitting, the damage on top of decline is tearing at the school itself.

Yet all three see a silver-lining and on an albeit huge dark cloud.

O'Brien, "There's no goodie locker. There's no hidden source of golden doubloons," he says. But he expected the cuts and, like any economist, saw the seven lean years after seven, by Massachusetts standards anyway, fat years. He adds, hopefully, defiantly even, "we will get through this."

Jackson doesn't foresee significant damage to Education, saying that the School will do its best to maintain the programs it has traditionally offered. While he foreshadows a school poorer in future years – he ominously described more budgetary hits in his interview with the Collegian – Jackson seemed to have faith that careful planning could minimize the damage.

Osterweil is similarly concerned, but optimistic that the quality of the University's staff will soften the blow. "We're blessed by a cadre of administrations and faculty who are dedicated to guiding us through this storm. We have to ready to be continually ready to do incredible science in the coming years."

All three seemed unwilling in interviews to submit or roll over. Although surely under incredible pressures – most acknowledge that cuts painful for students will come if they haven't already come – none seem willing to run up the proverbial white flag.

Will all three share such confidence with their fellow faculty administration? It is as of yet unclear, but under the "Save UMass" banner, it seems that few are willing to surrender.

At least just yet.

Saving UMass

By Melissa Hammel
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Save UMass Coalition, a group of concerned faculty and community members at the University of Massachusetts, has snapped into action following the news of yet another round of budget cuts for the University.

The coalition, which includes nearly 400 instructors from departments across campus, was founded in February as a way of combating the effects of budget cuts upon the academic portions of the University.

"The idea for this came out of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, when they met to figure out a response to budget cuts," Stephanie Luce, an assistant professor of Labor Relations and member of Save UMass explained. "Participation is really wide ranged."

She went on to explain that professors involved in the coalition included people from all of the departments on campus.

However, Luce explained that some of the most interest in the coalition was from both students and faculty in the departments that were facing the most major budget issues.

Josh Mason, Secretary-Treasurer for the Graduate Employee Organization and a member of the coalition explained that the level of faculty involvement in protesting the cuts has been unprecedented.

"There has always been a history of undergraduate involvement on campus but it is striking as to how active the faculty has been," Mason explained. "The amount of participation has been encouraging."

He went on to explain that the group centers on group participation and attempts to connect the campus community against the damage that budget cuts can cause.

"It is really centered upon getting people involved. This is the only way that we are going to change things," Mason said. "What we are saying is that this is not acceptable, we are not going to manage the cuts, we are here to fight the cuts."

Mason explained that the Save UMass Coalition is concerned with the loss of faculty throughout the department, the severe depletion of library resources and the loss of resources such as childcare.

"We are looking at the end of this University as a research institution," Mason explained. "We are also facing the loss of nearly one-third of our faculty. I am fairly certain that no other major university has experienced a loss of that magnitude."

He went on to explain that the loss of the childcare center and the 24 percent increase in tuition for undergraduates has affected the way that the University provides its education.

"Childcare is something that affects a small number of parents but more than you would think. This school was often thought of as a family friendly university," Mason explained. "This is not only going to harm the students but change the very nature of this university. It used to be open and available to all students, but that is no longer the case."

The Save UMass Coalition will be holding a series of teach-ins this week in order to promote student involvement against the cuts. Professors will relay information as to how students can combat the effects of budget cuts at a local level.

"The professors are giving their students information about budget cuts and asking students to write letters," Luce said. "With the amount of professors participating we will reach well over 10,000 students."

For more information about the Save UMass Coalition's teach-in see page 5 for related story.

These are the faces of budget cuts...

COLLEGIAN

THESE CHILDREN WILL BE WITHOUT CHILDCARE NEXT YEAR. JAVIER CEVALLOS IS ONE OF THE ADMINISTRATORS THAT HAD TO MAKE THAT PAINFUL DECISION. SEE PAGE 1 FOR MORE FACES.

Faces of budget cuts

Lecturer Howard Adams, Public Department of the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics. He says he has been hard hit by cuts, but he doesn't think that UMass will survive. (Photo by Richard Blake)

UMass Chancellor William Bulger has been criticized for his failure to bring money to the university. Will the situation change now that the University's motto has grown fat? Time will tell. (Photo by Sean Lundie)

Another child impacted by recent budget cuts. What else can be written? (Photo by Gerald Ling)

TIRED OF FEE INCREASES?
WORRIED ABOUT YOUR DEPARTMENT'S FUTURE?
SICK OF BEING CLOSED OUT OF CLASSES?

Save UMass
TEACH-IN
March 6 and 7
You can make a difference!

UMass is being hit with the worst budget cuts of any university in our generation. It has to stop.

RALLY
March 7 at noon, at the Student Union

Let the legislature and trustees know they have to fight for UMass Together we can turn things around. During the Teach-In we will:

- Share information about the fee increases and program cuts
- Register everyone to vote
- Write to legislators – We'll deliver the letters
- Get your parents to start lobbying the State House
- Make sure our leaders hear our voices

We are only a few of the hundreds of teachers already participating in the teach-in. The list gets longer every day. Join us!

SAVE UMASS
WWW.SAVEUMASS.ORG

Jack Ahern, Audrey Alstadt, Arlene Avakian, Lee Badgett, Benjamin Bailey, Becca Balint, Jesse Barba, Doris Bargen, Melissa Barringer, Joe Bartolomeo, Carlin Barton, Amanda Bemis, Madeline Bergstrom, Joyce V. Berkman, Katherine Bliss, Richard S. Bogartz, Dominica Borg, Frank Borgers, Joy Bowerman, Shawn Boyd, Tom Braden, Elizabeth Bramerd, Peter Brandon, Elissa Braunstein, Mark Brentner, Phil Bricker, Anne L. Broadbridge, David Buchanan, Michelle Budig, Richard Burt, Brenda Bushouse, Barton Byg, Marta Calas, Donal Carbaugh, Dean Cardasis, Deborah Carlin, Ethan Carr, George Cernada, Abby Chandler, Manama Changamire, Diane Chase, Dan Clawson, Melissa Click, Stephen Clingman, Susan Cocalis, Thomas Cobb, Christine Cooper, Barbara Cruikshank, Margo Culley, Marcia Curtis, Mike Davidsohn, Jay Demerath, Nancy deProsse, Alex Deschamps, Arlyn Diamond, Carmen Diana Deere, Laszlo Dienes, Jennifer DiGrazia, Vince DiMaro, Nick Dines, Kate Dionne, Pat Dodds, Elizabeth Dreyer, Joanna Dubinsky, Alper Duman, Justine Dymond, Mike Edwards, Eric Fellman, Richard Files, Jerry Epstein, Martin Espada, Melanie Faith, Dave Lavalette, Debbie Fellin, Ann Ferguson, Kade Finott, Gene Fisher, James Foley, Harris Freeman, James Freeman, Henry Geddes, Daniel Gerber, Naomi Gerstel, Ariana Ghasedi, Jane Gnacobbe-Miller, Erik Gnig, Zan Gonsalves, Michael Grogan, Meir Gross, Sanjiv Gupta, Elisabeth Hamin, Susan Hammond, Rebecca Hardin-Hirsh, Anthony Harris, Lisa Harvey, Bob Hazard, Chris Heathwood, James Heintz, John Hemment, Lisa Henderson, Ann Higgins, Nathan Hill, Nika Hogan, Flouroy Holland, Laura Holland, Judith Holmes, Brian Houle, Nick Hundley, Janice Irvine, Bill Israel, Nora Jablonski, Jenny Jaeckel, Ronnie Janoff-Bulman, Sut Jhally, Kyle Johnson, Brian Jordan, Eva Juarros-Daussa, Tom Juravich, Doug Kandt, Gary S. Karpinski, Robert Keefe, Elizabeth Kestel, Rhada Radhakrishnan, Hilton Kelly, Alicia Kennutt, Henriette Kets de Vries, Barsha Khattry, John Kingston, Arthur Kinney, Randall Knopper, Philip Kozel, Elizabeth L. Krause, Sundar Krishnamurty, David Kristjanson, Agustin Lao-Montes, Karen Lederer, Sara Lennox, David Lenson, Joanne Levenson, Mark Lindhult, Stephanie Luce, Sunaina Maira, Luis A. Marentes, Bridget Marshall, Nicole Matos, Patricia Matthew, Gary Matthews, John McCarthy, Gerry McFarland, Patricia McGirr, Heidi McKee, Raquel Medina, David Mednicoff, Surinder Mehta, Jerrold Meyer, Susan Michelman, Liz Miller, Lucien Miller, Richard Mmear, Joya Misra, Suzanne Model, Bill Mosbius, Charles Moran, Alice Nash, John Nelson, Carl Nightingale, Richard Nolan, Vicky Nunez, Brian O'Connor, Brian W. Ogilvie, Lisa Olstein, Jose Ornelas, Ceren Ozselcuk, Ellen Pader, Max Page, Lee Palmer, Michelle Paranto, Daphne Patai, Joe Pater, Shannon Payne, Maureen Perry-Jenkins, Randall Phillis, Mya Poe, Margaret Price, Don Proulx, Teresa Ramsby, Jane Rausch, Janice Raymond, Charles Rearick, Mary Reda, Leo Richards, Janet Rifkin, Margo Robb, Tom Roeper, Lauren M. Rosenberg, Niki Rothwell, Srirupa Roy, Natasha Sarkisian, Erica Scharrer, David Schimmel, Cathy Schlund-Vials, Monika Schmitter, Robbie Schwartzwald, Nina M. Scott, Harry Seelig, Lisa Selkirk, Sejal Shah, Geoff Shepherd, Norm Sims, Peggy Speas, Jenny Spencer, Ervin Staub, Maria Stehle, Ron Story, Banu Subramaniam, Michael Sugerman, Robert Sullivan, Cindy Suopis, Alan Swedlund, James Tate, Richard Tessler, Brooke Thomas, Craig Thomas, Suzanne Tiranno, David Todd, Rebecca M. Townsend, Jennifer Turner, Shelley Velleman, Chris Vials, Katherine Vorwerk, Dickie Wallace, Viera Wallace-Lorencova, Eileen Walsh, Eve Weinbaum, Ron Welburn, Bill Weye, Dara Wier, Mary Wilson, Max Wolff, Richard Wolff, Barbara Woloch, Peggy Woods, Keith Wright, Laura Wright, James E. Young, Pat Zukowski, Robert Zussman

Save UMass is an ad hoc coalition of students, faculty, and staff, supported by campus unions, working to stop the fee increases and budget cuts.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
MONDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE NINETY THREE ☆☆☆☆☆ 3.05.02

Teach-ins try to save UMass

Nothing remains sacred as the UMASS budget cuts hit every aspect of campus life.

By Emily Quirk
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

A campus-wide Teach-In will occur tomorrow at the University of Massachusetts, in efforts to rectify the onslaught of budget-cuts and tuition increases that have affected all public colleges and universities in Massachusetts.

This protest is sponsored by Save UMass: "a non-hierarchical organization of faculty, staff and students from all walks of campus life," as described by Karen Cardozo-Kane, an active member and English professor at UMass.

During the Teach-In, teachers will explain in full detail to their students the extent to which certain departments will feel the brunt of these cuts, while asking students right there in class to take action by writing a letter of concern to Massachusetts legislators.

"The Teach-In itself is going to be huge," said Cardozo-Kane. "An estimated 300 (plus) professors [will reach] up to 10,000 students." It will take place between March 6th and 7th.

Throughout the campaign, professors will review the ongoing crisis of budget cuts, while giving the opportunity to students not only to voice their thoughts and opinions on the subject, but a chance to register to vote. The teachers will also be asking them for support in letter writing to figures ranging from UMass President William Bulger, to Chair of Trustees Grace Fey, to representatives of the Massachusetts legislature.

"Doing this work directly in classes allows well-intentioned students to take actions they may have been procrastinating," explains Cardozo-Kane. "Of course, no student will be coerced into participating or penalized for not participating."

Another goal of the Teach-In is generating the same amount of letters to students' parents, urging them to write and thereby increasing the overall amount of letters being sent to Massachusetts's legislators.

Teachers are expected to ask their students to emphasize three aspects in their letters, which include: a) that UMass is a great university, and students want to keep it that way, b) that students have, or are in the process of registering to vote, and c) that students and their parents want to know whether the legislator supports UMass.

"Ultimately our budget woes are part of a political process," explains Cardozo-Kane. "The Teach-In campaign will make a major intervention by producing thousands of 'real' letters to legislators by students explaining how they are personally affected by the cuts and potential deterioration of the university."

The campaign began under four weeks ago, with the initial size being around 100 faculty members and other professional staff. Since then, the amount of support shown to this new Ad-hoc committee has been "incredible," says Dan Clawson, the alleged mastermind behind the campaign and professor in the Department of Sociology at UMass.

"If we don't make our voices heard, UMass will be neglected," Clawson said. "If thousands of students and parents write letters, we can keep UMass a top quality public university. But as things now stand, next year will be much worse than this one. Imagine having the same amount of students, with ten percent fewer professors."

UMass-Amherst is the first of the four UMass campuses to conduct such a campaign, though the others have "started to think about it," said Clawson. "We've been urging all of them to do this."

The concern that only public

Turn to TEACH-IN, page 5

Poetry slam opportunity for open mic expression

By Rahwa Asmerom
Collegian Staff

Renowned poet and performer Regie Gibson was the featured guest at the 2002 Poetry Slam held on March 1 on the 11th floor of the Campus Center.

The New World Theater, Distinguished Visitors Program and the Office of ALANA Affairs sponsored the free event, which included an open microphone and a poetry slam.

The night started off with a jazz selection performed by the Jeff Robinson Trio, received warmly by the very diverse audience, some of which had to sit on the floor for lack of seats.

The emcee for the event was Vivian DeJesus who kicked off the open mic portion of the event by reading an original piece. "I wrote it right after September 11 and I want to share it with you," said DeJesus. She then proceeded to introducing the performers, referring to them as "brave souljahs."

All in all, twenty-seven people signed up to be part of the open mic and themes for performances ranged from true love to racism. One poet by the name of Fedra presented a piece entitled "I Cant Help but to Wonder" where she spoke of the effects of being labeled. Another performer named Ije gave a powerful reading of an untitled poem about loving.

Following the performance of a young poet from Springfield named Petal, DeJesus said, "This is what I'm talking about. That is our youth, if we don't show them love then what's going to happen."

The last open mic performance was made by Albert Turner, a graduate student at the University of Massachusetts who helped in organizing the night's show. All of the performances were accented with the background music played by the Jeff Robinson Trio.

A short intercession followed the open mic after which the featured artist made a performance. Gibson, the winner of the 1998 National Slam Competition, has been featured in a number of productions including the 1997 movie Love Jones.

He is also the founder of the Church Of The Funky Word which, according to his website, is a literary and musical arts ensemble that utilizes ancient, contemporary and original literary text which combines world music and rituals from various world cultures.

His hour-long performance included spoken word, songs and poems accompanied by both the jazz band and his own drumming. One of his poems warmly received by the audience was about the fun of teenage years.

"My brother and I got away with a lot," Gibson said, and explained how he and his brother continuously had to sneak out of the house to go to parties because of a strict family which included a devout Jehovah's Witness for a mother and a Chicago police officer as a father.

"This poem is for being wild and getting your party on while your parents swear you're asleep."

More about Regie Gibson and his work can be found online at www.regiegibson.com.

MLK vigil honors civil rights activists

By Astarica Martin
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Marking the end of Black History Month, a small vigil honoring Malcolm X and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. took place at the Malcolm X Cultural Center last Thursday, Feb. 28. It was organized by the Black Student Union.

The vigil was held not only to remember the two black leaders, but also to pay tribute to the many people who, during the Civil Rights Movement, sacrificed their time, money, energy, and sometimes their lives to make this world a better place for minorities.

The set up of the Malcolm X Cultural Center was meant to be comfortable. The chairs were set up in one direction to face the speaker, and there was a table covered with a black cloth, set with white candles to be lit in the remembrance of the activists in the Movement. On another table were food and refreshments.

Before the event officially started, there was a social to get the people acquainted with each other. From roughly 7 to 7:30 p.m., students gathered to eat and socialize until the ceremony began. During the informal discussion, some of the students were asked what they were there for.

"[We're] here to support the event," Neo Moholala, a sophomore Communications Disorders major, said.

"[I]...thought I should be here," Evandro Carvalho, a junior sociology major, replied with a similar answer. "[I] came to support [the event]."

Most of the students who attended were blacks and other minorities.

The actual vigil opening started at 7:45 p.m. BSU representative Arthur Hunt, began the event. Hunt, a finance major in the School of Management, welcomed the crowd and followed up by explaining the meaning of the event.

"This is more of a commemoration, to remember those who sacrificed for you and for me," Hunt said. "It is a reminder that the Civil Rights Movement is not over."

For about 10 to 15 minutes, Hunt went around the whole room asking others to share what the Civil Rights Movement meant to the individual. Some students said that they were grateful, others said that if it were not for the struggle they would not be studying at this University and others made the comment that there is still a constant battle for civil rights in the US for everybody.

"I am thankful for what the people did, because not many of us today would have done what they did," Francisca Barros, junior Sociology major said.

After everyone had shared, the participants in the room all gathered around the table full of white candles. One candle was lit for every Civil Rights Activist, especially Dr. Martin Luther King and Malcolm X.

The lighting of the candles was followed by a moment of silence to reflect on the ones who sacrificed their lives for the youth in that room, and all across the country.

A young lady by the name of Keasha, sang "Amazing Grace" at the end of the ceremony.

To close off the evening, every person around the table was asked to explain what he or she could do to continue the Civil Rights Movement on their own.

"I will help out in my community first because that is where change all begins," said Barros.

A vigil remembering Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X was held last week in the Malcolm X Cultural Center, organized by the Black Student Union.

National Briefs

New York

By Michelle Blackley
WASHINGTON SQUARE NEWS (NEW YORK U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK – Former Mayor Rudolph Giuliani's proposal to create a privately funded center to house thousands of documents from his administration, including historic documents from the World Trade Center attack, has been labeled unlawful by some state officials.

New York University is among a number of city academic institutions submitting proposals to host the center, University officials said.

The executive records filed papers with New York State to found the Rudolph W. Giuliani Center for Urban Affairs Inc., according to a recent article in the New York Daily News.

The center's first order of business is to create a Giuliani library containing thousands of copied documents with the originals remaining the property of the city.

In an advisory opinion requested by the Associated Press, the director of the state Committee on Open Government, Robert Freeman, said the plan conflicts with past state court rulings.

"No document or record that had been or is now maintained by any agency of City government may in my opinion be characterized as private or belonging to the former mayor or any other person," Freeman wrote.

The center would be part library, part educational forum and part think tank, former Deputy Mayor Anthony Coles said in the Daily News article.

He also said affiliating the library with a city based college or university is a possibility.

Giuliani received his bachelor's degree from Manhattan College in the Bronx. He earned his law degree from NYU.

NYU spokesman John Beckman said no plans have been submitted to house the documents at NYU.

"We, among other institutions of higher learning, are sending a proposal, as requested by associates of the former mayor, that he might be linked to numerous activities of existing programs," he said. "The proposal does not include any contemplation of becoming a repository of Mayor Giuliani's papers."

A revised plan proposed making the records property of the city, while private archivists at the Giuliani Center process them over three years, according to the Associated Press.

Any records deemed by archivists as private, relating to city security, law enforcement or pending litigation, would be separated and marked "restricted," according to the Associated Press. "If requests are made for those documents, the city's top attorney, Michael Cardozo, would decide whether to grant access."

But Idilio Gracia Peña, who was the city's archives director for 12 years, said in the Daily News article the city charter lays out regulations and standards for how documents with historical value must be handled.

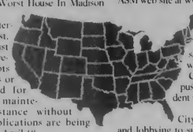
"Documents with historical value belong in the municipal archives," Gracia Peña said. "They belong to the people of New York."

Earlier this year, the voluminous documents from Giuliani's two terms in office were boxed at City Hall and sent to The Bronx, a private high-security storage facility in Long Island City, Queens.

Saul Cohen, a lawyer at the high powered firm of Proskauer Rose, a board member at NYU and Columbia University and friend of Giuliani, said the co-mayor and the city's Records and Information Services Department had reached into an agreement that gave the mayor 30 days to create a plan to archive the documents.

"The city is only too happy to have us take on the documents," Cohen said in the Daily News article.

It is not unusual for outgoing mayors to donate a copy of their documents to a university.



LaGuardia Community College holds the papers of former Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia. Robert Wagner and Ed Koch.

Former Presidents George Bush, Jimmy Carter and John F. Kennedy are among the only politicians to have established libraries with their papers.

Wisconsin

By Michelle Orris
Badger Herald (U. Wisconsin)

(U-WIRE) MADISON, Wis. – With the goal of improving landlord accountability and off-campus living conditions for the University of Wisconsin-Madison students, the Associated Students of Madison's Tenants Rights Campaign hosted a press conference Wednesday to kick off the Worst House In Madison contest.

Before entering the contest, a student must have made previous attempts to contact his or her landlord for building or maintenance assistance without results. Applications are being accepted until April 18.

"We are trying to publicize irresponsible landlords, not lazy tenants," Chris Tatarowicz, co-coordinator of the Tenants Rights Campaign said.

Applicants must write a short essay outlining their landlord problems to worsthouse@yahoo.com. Cash and prizes from local businesses will be awarded to the winners.

Tatarowicz said students should not be concerned with negative repercussions of entering their house in the WHIM contest.

"Landlord retaliation is illegal, so students should not worry about how their landlord will react," Tatarowicz said. "Nothing will ever change if no one vocalizes their problems."

The Tenants Rights Committee sponsors the contest out of concern for limited student-tenant resources. As a result, the TRC is launching an online survey where tenants can inform fellow students of their landlords' qualities, whether positive or negative. The results will be compiled and posted online so students can research potential landlords and housing histories.

Erica Christoph, campus coordinator of the city's Tenant Resource Center, said survey questions address issues such as landlord repairs, responsiveness and illegal entering or showing.

"This data can put pressure on landlords who aren't ranked highly," Christoph said.

As an added incentive to fill out the survey, five students who complete the evaluation before April 1 will receive gift certificates to local establishments. The survey is accessible through the ASM web site at www.asm.wisc.edu.

ASM Tenants Rights intern Christina McCabe Wagner said the group is also working with City Council members to push legislation for student tenants.

"We are attending City Council meetings and lobbying to support UW-Madison tenants," Wagner said.

The Council is scheduled to discuss tenants' rights and responsibilities at its March 5 meeting.

"Too many students are not even aware of the living conditions of their fellow students," Tatarowicz said. "We need to increase awareness and inform tenants of their legal rights."

The first contest was held in 1998 and was held again in spring 2001. Properties owned by the Houden family "won" both contests. Its tenants experienced rats, sloped ceilings and floors and light fixtures dripping water.

Ald. Mike Verveer, District 4, said the Houden family has a poor track record and has been repeatedly inspected by the city.

Verveer said the contest benefits student tenants.

"I can't speak highly enough of the Worst House In Madison project," Verveer said.

Although he said resources today are scarce for tenants seeking to investigate prospective landlords, Tatarowicz is optimistic that by the end of the semester students will be better informed as the result of the committee's efforts.

"We're starting from the ground up to ultimately reach better living conditions for UW students," Tatarowicz said.

California

By Dexter Gauntlett
Daily Bruin (U. California-Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – No butts about it, hundreds of University of California-Los Angeles smokers soon may be puffing their cigarettes illegally if the California Medical Association has its way.

The CMA – composed of approximately 35,000 physicians who work to promote smoking awareness and direct money from tobacco settlements to health care programs – voted Sunday to increase both the legal smoking age from 18 to 21 in California and punishment for violators, and called for stricter enforcement of existing smoking law.

CMA is currently in the process of searching for an author to propose the bill to the state Legislature as soon as possible.

"What we hope is that, even though we know it won't stop every kid from smoking, it will at least put the legislation out there for a horrible habit that is detrimental to your health," CMA spokeswoman Heather Campbell said. "Our goal was to have a smoke-free California by 2000, but now that date has been pushed back to 2010."

Assemblyman Paul Koretz, D-West Hollywood, Calif., whose district includes UCLA, has been in communication with CMA but has not been asked officially to author the bill, said Scott Svonkin, chief of staff for Koretz.

"Assemblyman Koretz is very interested in raising the age limit to 21. There's no need for someone to get access to deadly cigarettes," Svonkin said.

Koretz, who is on the state Committee on Public Health, worked with the CMA when he was a member of the West Hollywood City Council to pass the 1994 legislation that made it illegal to smoke in California restaurants.

Peter Warren, vice president of communication for CMA, said the legislation is in response to tobacco companies making a stronger effort to target youth.

"Four-hundred twenty thousand customers die every year, and in order to survive as a business, you have to replace them with kids," he said.

Philip Bromberg, a 20-year-old political science student and smoker, said the bill would be an effective way to reduce the availability of cigarettes.

"It's a lot harder to pass for 21 than 18," he said.

And even though he supports the legislation, Bromberg pointed out what he considered an inconsistency in policy.

"Eighteen-year-olds are eligible to go to war and smoke but not drink," he added. "If they want to raise the smoking age, they should also raise the draft age."

While many physicians in California support the increase in age limit, some groups such as the Fight Ordinances & Restrictions to Control & Eliminate Smoking (FORCES) oppose the legislation.

President of FORCES' California chapter Ray Domkus said although he is in opposition to the legislation, the bill wouldn't bother him because it would be very ineffective.

"People don't pay attention to the smoking age," he said. "If they want to smoke, they could raise the age to 40, and it wouldn't stop people from smoking."

Domkus said he is a stern believer in civil liberties, and in today's society everyone claims to be a victim.

"Once upon a time when a man decided he wanted to do something, he would do it," he said. "It was his own freedom to do as he pleased and to take responsibility for his actions, and now since everyone's a victim, there's not any sort of responsibility."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year except for holidays and periods set from the University. A Massachusetts corporation operating solely on business generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. In turn, the Daily Aggie in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information call 413-545-3500, weekdays between 9:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginzye-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

jostens
PURCHASE YOUR OFFICIAL UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CLASS RING
A Jostens representative will be on campus
March 5th & 6th
10am - 3pm On the Campus center Concourse
Save up to $200.00
$50 DEPOSIT REQUIRED *MAJOR CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED

UVC and Craft Center invite all to open house

By Andrew Chin
Collegian Correspondent

The Union Video Center (UVC) and Student Union Craft Center will have an Open House in celebration of its patrons, accomplishments and longevity on Wednesday, March 6.

"The students are in charge of the program," said Marsha K. Schoeffler, general manager of UVC-TV19. "This is their idea. To advertise what we do here, recruit new members, to make people aware of available resources that we offer."

The open house will begin with tablecasting the events throughout the day starting at 11:00 a.m. There will be a live welcome message, introducing the open house at the UVC and at the Craft Center. This will then be followed by a taped promo at 11:30 featuring shows and events, highlighting behind the scenes of some of the shows and dances. At noon, the on-air tour of the facilities will begin, followed by the Craft Center's Open House Feature at 12:30 p.m. This will be taped earlier in the day.

The morning will also include refreshments, such as bagels and coffee, starting at 11 a.m. Audiences can participate through Mock News Tapings at 1 p.m. This will allow participants to have a feel for what it's like to sit under the lights and read out the news from a teleprompter.

Wrestling vignettes performed by the UVC wrestlers will be broadcast at around 2 p.m. along with a taped choreographed fight done by the performers themselves.

Workshops in the UVC studios will include cablecasting, multicam, camcorder and editing. All of these will begin promptly at 4 p.m. and end at 6 p.m.

"This is a great place to get hands on experience," Schoeffler remarked, showcasing a collection of taped works dating back to as early as the 1970's. "Many people who have started out here have gone on to very successful careers, some as far as CNN and ESPN."

The Craft Center, which was founded in 1971, also offers an educational service. The Craft Center provides the creative outlet for the community. It is a craft supply store that sells materials at a low cost to students and provides consultation and collaboration with RSOs, RAs, university and academic departments and students.

"As an art and business agency," said Paula Holdecker, the director for the Craft Center. "Our secondary purpose is to teach student staff-members how to manage a facility such as this one."

The Craft Center will have craft demonstrations done by faculty staff. These demonstrations will include free marbling bath, button making, and stained glass trinket making. From 4 p.m. to 6 p.m., workshops will be held that pertain to stained glass, silver demonstrations, marbling, silk screening, etc.

The Center will also have a poetry reading performed by University students. Sign-ups for the readings will start at 6:30 p.m. and the program will start at around 7. Refreshments will also be served.

■ teach-in

continued from page 1

schools, as they are funded by the state, will be the sole victim of such deprivations is key in fueling this "vibrant exercise in grassroots organizing and coalition building," explained Cardozo-Kane, as she recognized the need for "freedom and equal opportunity to quality public higher education."

All resources for the Teach-In campaign, including all paper, envelopes, stamps, and copying have been purchased through donations given to Save UMass. Among those donating were the faculty members themselves, librarians, other professional staff, as well as Jeffrey Amherst Bookshop, Atticus Books, Collective Copies, and Staples.

This demonstration of resourceful camaraderie will conclude on Thursday, when a rally will be held on the steps of the Student Union at noon. Of course, all students are encouraged to participate in this event as it may help shape the unstable future of UMass and public schools in general.

"Lack of support for UMass," said Cardozo-Kane, "is a failure of civic commitment to one of the most cherished American ideals – the right to a good education for those who cannot afford private institutions."

Information used in this article was taken from "Teach-In Day" A Step by Step Guide to a Better UMass.

RA Union goes to a vote

After weeks of heated debate and campaigning, the vote will be held to decide whether or not UMASS will be the home of the first undergraduate union in the country. The RA union will exist under the auspices of the United Auto Workers Union that also serves the Graduate Employment Organization, or GEO. In addition to campaigning by RAs for the union, the Chancellor, Housing Department and Residence Life have all come out against the idea of collective bargaining.

news meeting tonight @ 5:30

We're not like every other high-tech company. We're hiring.

No one told you the hardest part of being an engineer would be finding your first job. Of course, it's still possible to get the high-tech work you want by joining the U.S. Air Force. You can leverage your degree immediately and get hands-on experience with some of the most sophisticated technology on earth. To find out how to get your career off the ground, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit our Web site at airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995

Multiculturalism & Identity in the wake of Sept 11.

The events of September 11 changed our world, and now it is possible to begin a new dialogue toward a more inclusive multicultural world. It is a timely undertaking and one that is appropriate for the School of Education.

Sponsored by the School of Education.
This conference will feature an impressive array of students and speakers to discuss these issues March 7 - 9.

March 7: Welcome reception 5-7pm in faculty club
March 8-9: Panel discussion 9am-5pm in Campus Center Rm 162 Reception will follow

All are Welcome!
For more info call 545-0008

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

UMass robberies:
Stop them from happening

Like this place wasn't weird enough as it was.

On two separate occasions last week, UMass students were robbed at gunpoint.

Last Wednesday in Washington Dormitory, two men robbed a student in his own room. One of the men showed a gun, and the student gave up the prescription medicine that the men were after. On Thursday, two men entered Chadbourne Dormitory with a semi-automatic handgun. They robbed two residents of cash and marijuana.

Behavior like this is a threat to us all. It cannot be tolerated.

UMass police have warned us all to close and lock our dorm rooms – even if we're there. Is this fair? Is this reasonable?

UMass as a community deserves better than this. No one should have to live in fear. Students should not be concerned with their livelihoods, or their personal possessions, or their lives. ESPECIALLY their lives.

Unfortunately, for at least two different groups of students, it's a reality. Twice last week, some of our very own gave up their possessions because they had no alternative. They feared for their safety.

So what do we do to stop this? What do we do to prevent this from happening to other students or ourselves?

First, anyone who knows anything needs to come clean. It's too important to the safety of our campus. "Being a fink," or "natting someone out," – they're not considered to be honorable things. Realistically, though, it's the right thing to do. People who resort to violence or the threat of violence need to know that it isn't acceptable, and that the UMass community as a whole will do its very best to find those responsible for it. There is no better thing that anyone in the know could do for all of us than to call the police hotline, 577-8477, anonymously and get what they know about these robberies out in the open.

What would have happened if there had been a struggle? What would have happened if someone had been shot? Last week's events are disturbing, but they could have been a whole lot worse. Next time, they very well could be.

If something looks seriously suspicious, tell someone. If you've got a neighbor down the hall that looks like "trouble", keep an eye on him/her. Living in a dorm room is no different than living back home in our neighborhoods. Neighborhood watches? It sounds corny, but the practice wouldn't be a bad idea.

We've got to take care of our own. We've got to keep a watchful eye out for our neighbors. Say something. Do something. Now. Stand up for yourself and for your fellow UMass residents.

What happened last week was upsetting. If someone gets shot in similar circumstances this semester, it will be tragedy. And we'll have no one to blame but ourselves.

Staff editorials are the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial staff.

Information from the Hampshire Gazette was used in the writing of this editorial.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

Don't bother the customers

MELODY ZAGAMI

The Boston Globe is delivered to my door, bright and early, every morning. I, like millions of Massachussites, have a subscription so that I may count myself among the informed. The time spent reading my paper is my time. It is a personal little break in the day where I can focus on that which takes place in the real world and lose sight of my petty little problems which are nil in comparison to say, that of Jane Swift or Jayson Williams.

I suppose I have never taken into account how The Globe gets to the end of my front walk each morning. I've always imagined there's some little Globe Fairy that flies the paper to my doorstep each morning fresh from the printing press. On the days when my usual fairy can't make it then there's an alternate fairy or the paper is teleported to my doorstep from The Globe mothership. Apparently none of this is true.

Much to my chagrin, there's an actual man (yes, a human man) that brings the paper to my door just as the sun is rising (so he claims – I'm certainly not getting up at such a ridiculous hour to investigate). And my human newspaper carrier, he wants my money. The jokes on him. I have no money, and probably never will.

You're saying, "But Meeced, why is this an issue? You're supposed to tip your newspaper carrier. It's only right, it's only decent." I agree with you 100 percent. However, the manner in which my newspaper wielding individual has chosen to ask for his tip is a bit strange and has lead me to feel guilty. Which is upsetting because it was just last year I recovered from the guilt of stealing a tube of "magic mood change" lipstick in 1987. Now the vicious cycle has begun again.

During the holiday season I was planning to give my newspaper fairy a handsome tip, a dollar, maybe two, a coupon for a free Egg Mcmuffin, something that said, "Thank you for your hard work, dedication, and newspaper delivering."

Then, I received a memo, in with The Sunday Globe, that read:

Happy Holidays!

I'm on Tim Hall, your Sunday only newspaper carrier!..... My address should you want to send a tip or any correspondence is ... A little bit about myself: my son and I live just over the bridge at the base of Sagarikal. . . . My son's name is Nathan, and he will be five in February. We are currently awaiting a decent snowstorm so that we may do some serious sledding! When not raising my beautiful son, I work at the motorcycle shop in Northampton. In my "spare time" I pick away at launching a non-profit dealing with pre-fatherhood education.

Do you see what I mean? At first I had to laugh (being the mean, cold-hearted, bitch that I am) at the wholesome Ned Flander-esque tone. Note that he only delivers the paper once a week.

While The Sunday Globe is heavy, it's not like he's carrying them on his back while pulling his son in a sleigh behind him. I'm not saying he doesn't deserve a tip, but I was slightly turned off by the memo. A "Happy Holiday" would have sufficed, but his life story, is that necessary? Then, just yesterday, what falls out of my Globe's protective plastic baggie, but the same holidas memo from Newspaperman Tim.

Only this time, Tim attaches an extra note at the bottom listing possible feelings about his delivery and corresponding tips. These suggestions ranged from, Five dollars – "Something is dissatisfactory with your delivery" to twenty-five dollars – "You're eternally grateful and wish to help send my son to college."

I'm all for Tim's son, Nathan, receiving a good education. But is this necessary? I feel even if I had tipped him, I would still get Tim's memos with my Sunday Globe. I don't want them. I don't want to know anything about my newspaperman. I want us to have a deliverer/deliveree relationship. Take for instance, my interaction with the Wings guy. Wings guy: "That'll be $10.55." Me: "Thanks man, here's twelve, keep the change."

I don't know the Wings guy, but I tip him because he's there. I see him delivering Wings to drunken college students in the inclement weather. Tim throws my newspaper from his car, once a week, and then demands I give him twenty-five dollars so his son can go to college.

I swear I'm not evil. I am a firm believer in altruism. I always tip waitresses at least 20% (unless they spill something on me). I always put my change in the little tip jars at local establishments and Dunkin' Donuts. Namely, it's because I'm happy with their interaction with me. I like the way they made my coffee or their efficient service.

But Tim is begging. Tim's making me feel guilty that I don't care about his son, that I don't want to help him realize his dream for his non-profit. If he had skipped all the autobiographical crap, I might have left him a little something, but I'm so turned off by the repeated written requests for payment that I just don't know what to do. Perhaps I will call The Globe and ask that the weekly fairy also do my Sunday delivery.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian columnist.

Read it.
Live it.
Ed/Op.

© The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. Dist. by UFS Inc.

At home with the non-traditional student

SHARON MAHONEY

Some of my younger classmates complain about how studying conflicts with their social lives. Give me a break. I wish I had a social life to miss. You want distractions? Be glad you're not married and living forty miles from campus:

Me: (At computer, typing an assignment.) "...socio-political cross-currents at the time of the Reformation combined to..."

Houseplants: Water us.

Me: What?

Houseplants: Water us. We're thirsty.

Me: Go away. I'm busy.

Houseplants: We can't go away. We're plants.

Me: Shut up.

Houseplants: We're wilting. We haven't been fed in months.

Me: Cool it. You can wait till the weekend.

Houseplants: We'll be dead and brown by then. You'll be sorry.

Me: "Sigh" (Gets up, waters plants. Returns to desk. Resumes typing.)

Cat #1: Okay—you go for her lap. I'll climb onto the keyboard

Cat #2: Got it.

Me: Wha—! Hey, get your claws outta my leg. And you – leave the mouse alone.

Cat #1: I'm hungry.

Cat #2: I'm bored.

Me: I have a paper to write. And I can't read this textbook with your furry carcass lying across it.

Cat #2: Screw the book. You're supposed to give us your undivided attention. All day.

Cat #1: Even while we're asleep.

Cat #2: Besides, you need to clean our litter box. Right now. Or else.

Me: I have a better idea. (Locks cats in their carriers.)

Cats: Yowl yowl yowl yowl yowl yowl yowl yowl yowl yowl yowl

Me: &@?$&! (Closes door to room. Resumes typing.)

Phone: "Ring"

Me: I'm not home.

Ans. Machine: "Hello, we can't come to the phone right now..."

Me: Thank God for technology. (Continues typing.)

Husband: (Over answering machine message) Honey? Are you home? Please pick up. It's important.

Me: Grrrr. (Picks up phone.)

Husband: Hi, honey. Hope I'm not interrupting.

Me: "Mumble mumble"

Husband: What?

Me: Nothing. What do you want?

Husband: I just called to see how you were doing.

Me: Fine. Great. Anything else?

Husband: I'm going to be stuck in Connecticut until nine tonight. Can you get the groceries and pick up the mail for me?

Me: Oh, sure. I'm not doing anything important.

Husband: Thanks, honey. I love you.

Me: Mumble mumble you, too. (Hangs up. Goes back to desk.)

Laundry: Uh uh uh uh UH! Not so fast!

Me: And what's YOUR beef?

Laundry: You gonna walk by us just like that?

Me: Just watch me.

Laundry: You like stepping over a knee-high pile of clothes? And what about these gym socks? They've been here a week. This smell ain't gonna get any better, lady.

Me: They're HIS socks. Let him wash them. Hey, we're fermenting here. We're talking RIPE. Take a whiff.

Laundry: Ugh. How pleasant. (Kicks laundry into corner.) It can wait.

Me: Fine. Just wait until you want a clean change of underwear.

Laundry: Threats, nothing but threats. (Sits down at computer. Begins typing.) "...I other dit fered with More on the role of government as the ultimate arbiter of social order..."

Me: Hey, sweetheart.

Refrigerator: (Ignores it, continues typing.) "...taking the whole Church-state dynamic to a new level..."

Me: Come on. You know why I'm calling you.

Refrigerator: I'm not interested.

Me: Oh, sure you are. It's been three whole hours since breakfast.

Refrigerator: So?

Me: There's a nice hunk of cheesecake in here with your name on it.

Refrigerator: I can't stop to eat anything. I haven't got time.

Me: Go on. Just a little snack. You know you want to.

Refrigerator: No.

Me: If you don't eat it, you know he will when he comes home. Who deserves it more, you or him?

Refrigerator: Hm. (Opens fridge door, takes cheese cake.) Okay. Happy now?

Me: "Atta girl. How about some whipped cream on top?

Refrigerator: "Groan" (Inhales cheesecake, sits down at desk.)

Phone: "Ring"

Me: I give up. (Picks up receiver.) Hello?

Former Co-worker: Hey Sharonee? How the hell are you?

Me: Hi, Claudia. Aren't you at work?

F. Co-worker: Yep, but things are slow around here today, and I was just wondering how you were doing.

Me: Well, I'm really busy and...

F. Co-worker: I bet you are, you lucky so and so. I wish I could go back to school, lounge in a lecture hall twice a day, not have to worry about a boss or a huge workload or...

Me: Well, actually, Claudia, I'm kind of busy today.

F. Co-worker: So when are you going to come by and visit? We miss you. Everyone's really curious about how you like being in school again.

Me: School is great. They keep me really busy. In fact...

F. Co-worker: Everyone here is SO jealous of you – it must be nice to schedule your own day, do what you want, not have to deal with customers or bosses...

Me: Claudia, I can't talk right now. I'm working on a paper.

F. Co-worker: Well, why didn't you say so? You don't have to get all huffy.

Me: Listen, Claudia, I'll email you later on this week and we can arrange to get together. Okay?

F. Co-worker: Whatever. Bye. (Hangs up.)

Me: (Stares at phone receiver in despair. Picks up campus directory, looks up number, punches it in.) Hello, University Housing? Yes – I'd like to change my living arrangements for next fall. Someplace quieter would be nice. How about one of the towers in Southwest? That ought to do the trick.

Sharon Mahoney is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor:

How many scams can you stomach before saying enough is enough?

While the words "public education" couldn't stop falling from the lips of our state's elected officials, behind the scenes the Massachusetts state legislature rerouted your tax dollars right out of the higher education budget to God knows where, jacking up your fees over $2,000 this year. With emphatic assurances of success coming straight from the top, thousands of Enron workers were handed empty nest eggs after years of loyalty instead of solid retirement savings. And now, a scam to call our very own here at UMass – a proposal to appear on this March's SGA ballot that would give your hard-earned fee monies over to Collegians for a Constructive Tomorrow (CFACT) to improve "the environment and society." Sounds great, right?

Before you sign on to this question going to the ballot, ask yourself what taxpayers, college students and their parents, and Enron workers just want to know, the literal million dollar question: where does the money go?

CFACT (www.CFACT.org) is a right wing organization that "puts people before nature." It features briefing papers on such topics as "Recycling – Panacea or Municipal Nightmare" and "Light of Reality Doesn't Shine Brightly on Solar or Wind". Funded through a hefty amount of nuclear power industry dollars, the agenda of the organization is clear. But hey, more power to them. Who are they, anyway? What do they want to do here at UMass? What are the general programs they hope to promote? And why do they want a seven-dollar fee on the UMass term bill?

Let's compare and contrast. Thirty years ago, students at UMass-Amherst were disturbed at the ability of special interests to manipulate consumers, infringe on public health, and unfairly influence our political process. They decided to start MASSPIRG, Massachusetts Student Public Interest Research Group, with a small waivable fee on the term bill, to fight for the public against the special interests.

Students were able to team up with lawyers, lobbyists and organizers to work on issues like clean air and water, better public health, and consumers' rights. With a 30-year track record, MASSPIRG has been able to demonstrate the effectiveness of their program. Pairing student activism with professional advocates and organizers has definitely worked. That explains exactly where, and how your money your money is spent.

Now, I am not comparing the agendas of these two organizations. Political learnings aside, the point here is that with MASSPIRG, I know what I am getting for my money. With CFACT, according to the ballot question that you will soon be asked to sign, the need for and use of the funds is highly questionable and vague at best.

So, in the spirit of a good, old-fashioned consumer alert, I encourage you to take a pass when asked to sign for this ballot question. Let's have a scam-free UMass for as long as we can.

Aaron Saunders
UMass Student

Dear Editor:

Steven Kenigsberg and I attended the same school for years, but we didn't become friends until we shared a 24-hour train ride to summer camp in 1996. We lived in the same tent; Steve was so timid he barely said a word at first. He couldn't even muster the courage to approach my friends and I and ask if he could join our tent for the summer. As he slowly began to open up, I discovered what a wonderful person he was. Two years ago, he and his father made Aaliyah to Israel, to carve out a better life – something that was not possible for them in South Africa.

This past weekend was one of the worst Israel has seen in months. As worshippers were leaving synagogue at the end of the Sabbath, a suicide bomber self-detonated outside, ushering in this coming week with carnage rather than joy. In Ofra, a terrorist sniper murdered ten people. On Sunday morning, at 7:30 a.m., Palestinian terrorists ambushed five Israeli soldiers just south of the Kissufim crossing in the Gaza Strip. Four were wounded; Steven was murdered as he stepped out of the jeep.

I was privileged to know, love, and respect Steven, who was younger than most of the students at UMass. Steven was not a religious zealot, although he respected and cherished his Jewish upbringing. Steve was a nineteen-year-old guy who should be kicking around a soccer ball and thinking about girls. He was not the ferocious villain that Israeli soldiers are made out to be. No, he was not born to kill.

When you hear that people have been killed, it hurts. When you see a face, hear about their family, it cuts you a little deeper. But nothing prepares you for the unnecessary murder of your childhood friend. Someone you not only knew, but also shared your personal space with for an extended period of time. The Islamic Jihad proudly claimed responsibility for the murder, releasing the following statement: "The Islamic movement and all the Palestinian people will not stop terrorizing our enemy all over the occupied land. We will avenge every drop of blood from our Palestinian martyrs."

Steven was my friend. I will miss him.

I send my condolences to Steven's family: Kevin, Marc, Joel, and Linda Ann; even in Amherst my heart is with you.

Steve, rest in peace, my friend. I pray that you are the last victim we have to bury.

Daniel Ginsberg
UMass Student

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 3.5.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Party fouls and RAs

ASK ELENA

By Elena Panesis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Dear Elena – I was at a party, did a keg stand for too long, and threw up on my crush. I'm so embarrassed! Should I buy her a new shirt to replace the one I ruined? Take her out to dinner as an apology? I'm afraid she'll never speak to me again, but I really, really like her! What do I do? – Hungover in Alpine Commons

If it makes you feel any better, I gave my first crush a much-deserved bloody nose on the playground of my elementary school. He attempted to immaturely flirt with me by stealing my precious Skip It (definite sign of an 80's child) so I had to make him pay in blood!

Anyway, now that I've vented, let's focus on your dilemma which I feel can be remedied with a few easy steps. First, I am wondering how well you know this girl. Is she a friend of a friend or someone that you just stare at and sigh about without much dialogue? Also, how did she react to the situation? Was she understanding, irritated or were you too plastered to recall (no offense)?

Most likely you have a mutual friend in common and have spoken in some capacity. Also, I am assuming she was not too harsh with you considering the situation. Seriously, you have to prepare yourself for things like this when going to large parties where alcohol is plentiful. For example, someone poured punch all over one of my sassiest tank tops at Delta Sig last year. I was annoyed at first but it does not stop me from occasionally venturing to that frat to relive freshmen memories.

If this girl is sympathetic and sweet, which I feel must be the case since you are so smitten, then I would not stress too much over the situation.

I say buying her a new T-shirt or even a mall gift certificate to replace the ruined garment is the perfect way to make amends and get the ball rolling! Send the package over with a little apology note and after a couple days give that cutie a call. Once again tell her that you are immensely sorry and that you still feel the need to make it up to her by taking her out on the town for dinner. Make sure to insist that she takes this opportunity to explore your more sober side.

Most likely she will say yes if she is as sweet as you say and since you set this up as an apology dinner rather than a date. Since you will definitely not be consuming any alcohol on this occasion, be sure to charm her with your wit, good looks and irresistible sense of humor – a heart-melting combo. If all works according to plan, then you will woo this lady in no time!

To give you hope while composing your apology note, watch two of my favorite flicks from the teen/chick genre, Ten Things I Hate About You and Legally Blonde. Do you recall when Julia Stiles' character Kat Strratford vomits on the swing right next to Patrick Verona played by my favorite Hollywood hunk Heath Ledger? Or how about when manicurist Paulette in Legally

Turn to ELENA, page 8

Soilwork... getting dirty is SO good

By Michael Delano
COLLEGIAN STAFF

SOILWORK
Natural Born Chaos
Nuclear Blast

The great metal album that never was released in 2001 (System of a Down's Toxicity excluded) is finally here, a few months late. In fact, Soilwork's Natural Born Chaos is the best metal album of the millennium so far, hands down.

Certainly, such a bold statement can have sprung only from madness!

Nope. Without a doubt this is the finest metal album that has been crafted in quite some time. This is the definitive word on the much-buzzed "Gothenburg" sound: a style born in Sweden that has encompassed At The Gates, In Flames and Dark Tranquility, among others. The hallmark of the Gsound is basically accessibility: it's death metal with training wheels. But lest "training wheels" gives the impression of a watered-down version of death metal, take note: in its purest, blackest, most sinister form death metal is often laughable and regressive. These training wheels are the only way to get any kind of forward movement going.

The training wheels are built around melody, occasionally clean vocals, and a certain amount of unpredictability. Song structures rarely vary, but there could be sporadic non-fatalistic lyrics, instrumentals, even humor, who knows. Until this point, In Flames was credited with bringing the G-sound to both its greatest commercial and, arguably, artistic peak with 2000's Clayman. A fine album, but not up to the same standard as 1999's Colony or 1997's Whoracle, their defining moment.

But these albums are all in the past now. Great as they were, they were just stepping-stones en route to Natural Born Chaos. Ignore the new metal buzz. Forget Burnt By The Sun. Forget The Haunted (unless Dolving comes back). Soilwork is here!

The saga of Soilwork began in earnest last year when they released A Predator's Portrait. What then seemed like an incredibly polished and accomplished G-sound primer can now be seen as the blueprint for their current masterwork. Hooks, people! That's what it's all about. All ten songs on Portrait had that (gasp!) pop sense that got their hooks in you and wouldn't let go. Chant "Fail! Fail! Fail!" with "Grand Failure Anthem". Mock shudder at the gloomy theatrics of "Shadowchild". All relentlessly catchy and brutally heavy.

NBC sees that formula evolved to perfection. Every song shines on its own and fits/flows with ease amongst the others. This is an album, but not a concept one or a slipshod collection of songs – instead an impeccably paced and produced work that progresses logically. The highlights are every song.

The music combines metal's past and present, and reaches far across the genre's subgenera. The headfirst rush of death metal still permeates most heavily throughout, but Soilwork will throw in soaring choruses ("Black Star Deceiver"), geetar solos (all), and even classical Scandinavian musical influences a la early In Flames.

Half the brilliance is the consistent quality, the other half the surprises: "As We Speak" opens like an And Oceans song while "Mercury Shadow" wouldn't feel out of place on an old Machine Head album. Right from the get-go, blazing opener "Follow the Hollow" inverts the usual song structure by using clean vocals on much of the verses and growling deep and fast on the chorus.

NBC also represents the pinnacle of Soilwork's songwriting. Nuggets of dark beauty ("Weed out the sun, under the gun, kneel down for the ricochet") mix with pseudo-wisdom ("faith will bring you treason") and senseless oddities ("Post ironic we laugh dream in sonic diamond over load") to create a never-subtle, always-crowded, but interesting and compelling approach.

Metal fans, take heed from one of your own. You need this. There can be no delay. Follow the hollow.

Imaginative Wolf

COURTESY UNIVERSAL PICTURES

Monica Bellucci in Brotherhood of the Wolf.

By Johnny Donaldson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BROTHERHOOD OF THE WOLF
Directed by Christophe Gans
Starring Samuel Le Bihan, Mark Dacascos and Monica Bellucci
(In French with English subtitles)
Playing at the Academy of Music

You know you're in the hands of a born filmmaker, the kind of auteur that get the snobbish cineastes of Film Comment drooling, when even their most flawed films pulse with excitement. Cameron Crowe's Vanilla Sky may be a murky and uneven psychological thriller, a sleight of hand that never quite adds up, but there's no denying the palpable sense that Crowe wanted to shift and restructure the very DNA of movies. (Crowe made the ridiculous, confusing sci-fi plot transcendent.) Baz Luhrmann's Moulin Rouge would be a great film were it not for its first act, an orgiastic, Ken Russell-like nightmare of glitter and confetti; still, even under the weight of so much tinsel, the movie is madly, exuberantly, alive.

The first movie this year to have that kind of go-for-broke passion comes not from America, but from France, and is called Brotherhood of the Wolf. But it's as far from the staid New Wave of Truffaut and Rohmer as Moulin Rouge was from Tomb Raider.

Brotherhood of the Wolf is an audacious, sensational and utterly preposterous melange of horror, romance, martial arts, costume drama and God knows what else. (It's like a Merchant Ivory film as directed by John Woo from a Clive Barker script.) Director Christophe Gans has stuffed his film to the point of overflowing, but he miraculously per-

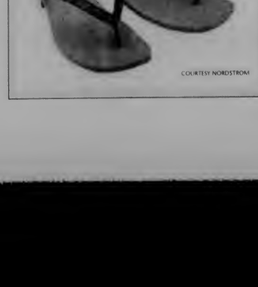
Turn to WOLF, page 8

Spring fashion on tight budget

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

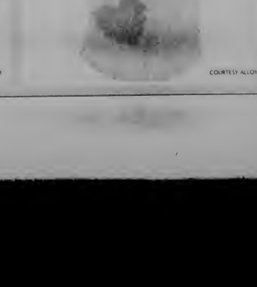
Is anyone else out there starting to pay the Wings delivery guy in change? (NOTE – Not recommended, as said delivery guy will hate you and will most likely "forget" the bleu cheese for the buffalo wings next time.) Drinkers, did you start the semester tossing back Absolut martinis, and are now relegated to choking down Country Time lemonade and Rubinoff $8.95-a-liter vodka?

Yes, fee raises, spring break trip payments, and not much hope for future job prospects have left many students desperately scraping for cash. Myself included. But what's a person supposed to do to look sassy this spring, when they have no cash for a wardrobe update? Worry not; with a little creativity and some skill in the sewing department, you can repair old clothes to create the looks that are in this spring!



Fabulous Feet – So many beautiful shoes, so little closet space and available cash. The solution lies in flip-flops. (Or call them thongs, if you'd prefer, like my mom does – but that can get a little embarrassing in the stores. "Hey Shauna, how many black thongs to you really need? Ooh, these sequined thongs are really cute." Oy.) Flip-flops are about the cheapest things out there – and can be purchased in a variety of colors for $3.50 per pair or less at stores like Old Navy, Wal-Mart and Target. Get cute lilac ones to wear with your new floral skirt or a red pair to match your polka-dot bikini. You can even add flair by personalizing the shoes with ribbons bound around the straps, sequins or beads applied to the straps – or add some silk flowers. Whatever you choose to add, make sure that you use fabric glue, as it is flexible and will bend with your foot's movement.

Perfect Pants – If you're like me – laundry inept – you've probably shrunk, oh, every pair of pants that you've ever owned. For those of wee stature, it probably doesn't bother you much, but tall girls know that this is a HUGE problem. With warmer weather approaching, though, it's no big deal. Cut or fold the pants into capri length, and what was a disaster is now designer.



Dazzling Denim – Tired of your old worn out jeans or denim skirts? Update the style a little by letting down the hem of the pants. JCrew and American Eagle are touting these "let down" pants as the latest style. Carefully rip out the hem at the base of each pant leg, then unfold the pants – there will be a cool three-colored stripe at the base of the pant – plus it will create a slight flair to the shape of the pant. Iron the former-hem creases (this will take awhile) and you've got a pair of the latest jeans for free.

Sultry Skirts – While any length skirt goes this year, the mini-skirt is making a strong comeback this season. (Pause in reading, listen to resounding male cheer.) If you're tired of last year's skirt, just shorten it to mini-length, and your knees will be free to soak up the spring sun and the ogles of male classmates. (What, like y'all have never seen knees before? C'mon now.)

Turn to xxx, page xx

COURTESY NORDSTROM

COURTESY ALLOY

wolf

Mark Dacascos and Samuel Le Bihan in Brotherhood of the Wolf.

Let down the fears of your old jeans for an updated look.

style

continued from page 7

Worried about your sewing skills? Cheat a little. At sewing and craft stores like Jo-Ann's Fabrics, one can buy iron-on tapes that will hold your skirt's hem at its new length, no sewing required.

Peasant Pizzazz — The peasant look is BIG this season. Roomy blouses, ruffled skirts and flowing fabrics. Add a touch of pizzazz to your look this season by wearing a scarf around your waist in the place of a belt. Thread the scarf through each belt loop. Tie on the hip and let the ends flow free.

Applique Plus — If you've got some plain shirts that just don't have the flash you're looking for or if you've got that stack of T's and tanks that are retired due to various spaghetti sauce or mustard incidents, don't fret me. Shout does not work as well as it's claim! There's an easy solution. Head over to the local craft or sewing shop and purchase iron-on transfers, rhinestones, or cloth appliques and add them to your shirt. Pun it up a plain pink crew neck with a glittery Hint. Or hide a hideous stain with a dragonfly. It's the way this dog works for your boyfriend. "Yankees Suck" or some similarly witty shirt saying should almost cover the barbecue sauce stains. There ARE solutions other than forking over your nearly maxed out credit card at the mall this spring. Remember that you're not poor — you're exploring your artistic side. So get out the needle and thread, and go to town on your closet.

Elena

Hey Elena — I'm an RA and a junior with a problem. I have a thing for one of my residents (she's a younger man). I know that it's probably not a good idea to get involved with someone that I have some authority over but I really like him. What should I do? — Jen I

Jen, let me start off by telling you that I feel your pain! I'm a senior RA that sometimes feels a little too old to get attached to a new younger "I still have two more years of college" type. Also: Residence Life does not exactly smile upon relationships on floors — especially those involving RA's and residents. Distance makes the heart grow fonder and let's face it; together less can do just the opposite.

Yet, put all those complications aside and seriously think about your feelings for a minute. If you really care for this guy and you think the feelings may be mutual, then who cares if you happen to be a couple years older and hold a higher rank on the floor. You should never limit who you date based on arbitrary restrictions like age and status. You obviously want this guy, so make your normal advances because life is too short to place restrictions on love!

Got a question for Elena? Write her your quandaries on anything like dating, friends, family, school, work, health and more at askelena@yahoo.com. All emails are kept confidential and anonymous when printed so feel free to ask away!

UNIVERSITY PRODUCTIONS & CONCERTS
Presents
ADDISON GROOVE PROJECT
&
THE COLD DUCK TRIO
&
PLATYPUS COMPLEX
March 6th in the Student Union Ballroom
$3 Students
$5 Non-students
Doors open at 8pm
21+ cash bar

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

BUSTA RHYMES
WITH SPECIAL GUEST
SUNDAY, MARCH 10, 2002
JOHN M. GREENE HALL, SMITH COLLEGE
8 P.M.
DOORS OPEN AT 7 P.M.
TICKETS ON SALE FRIDAY, FEB. 22ND
GENERAL PUBLIC, $22, AT:
FOR THE RECORD
NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE
TICKETMASTER
5-COLLEGE W/ VALID ID, $18, AT:
UMASS, TICKETS UNLIMITED
AMHERST COLLEGE CAMPUS CENTER, RM. 103
MT. HOLYOKE-BLANCHARD CAMPUS CENTER, INFO. DESK
GENESIS 6: THE TOUR
PRESENTED BY SMITH COLLEGE REC COUNCIL

A-10

continued from page 12

native cut the lead to 60-59 Temple with 2:02 left. After Temple center Lisa Iakubowicz make one-of-two free throw attempts, Nekole Smith reverse-pivoted into the lane and sunk the lay-up to tie the game up at 61 with 1:11 left.

The Minutewomen didn't sink a basket in the final minute-plus, including a shot clock violation, to end their season.

"Defensively they did a good job," O'Brien said. "We didn't execute very well. We held the ball too long and didn't get a shot here or there that we could have or should have."

Coming out of halftime with a two-point lead, the Owls took advantage of eight UMass turnovers to extend their lead to 11 with 11:42 left in regulation. But the Maroon and White answered with a 13-3 run, led by Ebony Pegues' seven points in the stretch, to tie the game at 46 apiece with 5:58 to go.

Three minutes later, with the score at 52-52, Iakubowicz made one free throw attempt to give her Owls the lead. The Minutewomen were unable to score in the next two minutes of action.

"We turned the ball over in situations without pressure, trying to make just a little too tough of a play," O'Brien said.

Isaac extended the lead to two with eight seconds left in regulation by making the front end of two free throws, but missed her second attempt. Butler grabbed the rebound and called timeout.

O'Brien substituted Govan into the lineup during the timeout. The freshman received the ball at the baseline in the backcourt and took off, weaving in and out of traffic and into the key. Govan flipped the ball up and onto the rim as time expired. The ball rattled around the basket four times and dropped into the net to send the game into the extra frame.

Temple Head Coach Dawn Staley was disappointed with her team's breakdown in the final seconds of the second half, but understood why it happened.

"I know our players," Staley said. "They didn't want to be the ones to foul and put her on the line, but it might not have been that bad instead of just an uncontested lay-up."

The former two-time National Player of the Year also commented on the kind of effect that play had on her team heading into overtime.

"I thought they took the momentum into overtime with that kind of play," she said.

O'Brien didn't design the play during the timeout; it was simply a matter of the freshman seeing an opportunity and taking it.

"I had an opening, so I went for it," Govan said.

The first half was a back-and-fourth battle that saw seven ties and four lead changes. The largest lead of the first half was a five-point lead held once by each team.

Temple's backcourt duo of Isaac and Stacey Smalls combined for 34 points (17 each) while Smalls played all 45 minutes of the semifinal matchup.

"We are a much faster basketball team with her in the game. She's puts a lot of pressure on [the other team]."

As has been the case for most of the season, UMass lost because of missed layups (a handful), turnovers (25) and free throw shooting (13 vs. 22 for Temple).

"Free throws are always the big key," O'Brien said. "We had a couple easy baskets that rolled in and out."

"We rely heavily on our turnover margin," Staley said. "I thought we turned it over a little bit too much in the first half [eight], but then got control over it."

Nelson led the Minutewomen 15 points in 40 minutes.

***

Amber Sneed scored 14 points and grabbed 16 rebounds in UMass' 85-73 quarterfinal win over Richmond Saturday.

Richmond, the A-10's top-scoring team controlled the tempo of the game, but, amazingly, couldn't keep up with the conference's 11th-best scoring offense (out of 12 teams). It was the Maroon and White's obsessive desire to get the loose balls that made the difference in this case.

"That's just doing the little things," O'Brien said. "I told them, 'you've got to value the basketball like it is the most special thing in the world.' Not just dribbling and passing, when that thing is on the floor, it is special. You can't win without it. So you've got to go get it."

Five Minutewomen reached double figures behind Smith's 16 points on 6-for-11 shooting.

"A lot of different people at different times were able to step up and I think that was big for us," O'Brien said. "Nekole did a good job offensively. She got us some easy points. [That] took some pressure off people having to make shots down the stretch."

With the Maroon and White's best rebounders (Butler and Caroline Nehls) plagued by foul trouble throughout the game, Sneed played 36 minutes and dominated the defensive boards (11).

"Amber played solid," O'Brien said. "Nothing fancy, [but] scored some easy buckets, did some intelligent things. She just played within herself and came up big rebounding. When Jen goes out of the game, one of the best rebounders in the country, somebody else has got to pick that up and she really did a good job going back and chasing the ball."

Back-to-back three-pointers by Nelson extended a two-point lead to eight with 6:43 left in the first half and the Minutewomen never led by less for the rest of the game, leading by as many as 21 in the second half, despite trying to deal with a Spider squad that was trapping throughout the second frame.

"They can score a lot of points," O'Brien said. "We knew that they weren't going to go away from us. Fortunately we were able to make some shots when they were running around trying to trap. We got five or six layups in the last couple of minutes."

There were a total of 47 fouls called in the game. Six UMass players ended the game with four fouls. After the game, O'Brien talked about her preference for letting the players decide the outcome of games, especially in the postseason.

"I'm all about letting the players decide," O'Brien said. "They need to let them play. There were a lot of touch fouls and fouls that they didn't call the first 15 minutes that they called the last 15 minutes. And that's a struggle because then you don't know how to defend."

***

Six steals in the game's first 10 minutes gave the Minutewomen an early ten point lead in Friday's first round 58-46 win over LaSalle in the A-10 Tournament.

UMass extended its lead to 17 by halftime. The team logged a dozen steals in the first half behind four by Cleo Foster.

The Maroon and White went into cruise control in the second half, but may have set the odometer a tad too low, allowing the Explorers to cut the lead all the way down to four with 3:22 left in the game.

"It would have been nice to be able to put them away," O'Brien said. "But they are one of those teams that doesn't go away."

But six Pegues points down the stretch extended the lead back up to double digits and gave the Minutewomen their first round win.

"We need to keep her playing under control because she can score," O'Brien said. "She is a good shooter and does a good job penetrating. Her problems come when she tries to do too much."

"She played very, very hard tonight."

Nehls' seven rebounds, including four offensive, and all-out hustle were also a strong contribution to the victory.

"That's what you need from your seniors," O'Brien said. "You just have got to be solid. That's what she gave us; good stability down the last five minutes when it got to be tight."

UMass BRIEFS:

Hockey

Nick Parillo scored two goals, including the game-winner, to lead Merrimack College to a 5-3 victory over the University of Massachusetts in Hockey East action Sunday at the William D. Mullins Center. It was the last game of the season for the Minutemen, while the Warriors will play at New Hampshire next week in the first round of the Hockey East playoffs.

Merrimack opened the scoring at the 12:52 mark of the first period when Luke Smith netted his first goal of the season with assists going to Ryan Kiley and Tim Reidy. Massachusetts evened the score just over a minute later when senior Martin Miljko scored off a rebound of a Greg Mauldin shot. Senior Toni Soderholm also assisted on the goal. The Warriors regained the lead with 1:56 remaining in the first period when Anthony Aquino scored off a feed from Alex Sikatchev to give Merrimack the 2-1 lead.

The Warriors took a two-goal lead just 57 seconds in the second period when Parillo netted his first goal of the game. Sikatchev and Aquino picked up the assists on the only goal of the period.

Mauldin brought the Minutemen to within one when he scored off a rebound of his own shot at the 12:55 mark of the third period. Soderholm and Miljko assisted on the goal.

Merrimack came back with Parillo's second of the game to take a 4-2 lead at the 15:28 mark. Junior forward Tim Turner cut the Warriors' lead to 4-3 when he scored from the slot with 3:41 remaining in the game. Freshman Peter Trovato and sophomore Nick Kuiper assisted on the goal. The Warriors iced the game with an empty-net goal by Ryan Cordiero with 23 seconds remaining.

Senior Mike Johnson made 29 saves in the net for Massachusetts, while Joe Exter stopped 34 shots for the Warriors. The victory improves Merrimack to 11-21-2 overall and 6-16-2 in Hockey East, while the loss ends the Massachusetts season with an 8-24-2 overall record and a 3-19-2 record in Hockey East.

Women's Water Polo

The 20th-ranked University of Massachusetts women's water polo team fell to No. 14 Hartwick College, 11-9, in double-overtime this past Saturday afternoon. The Minutewomen now stand at 4-6 overall this season.

Both teams scored two goals apiece in the first overtime period, but Hartwick recorded the only tallies in the second overtime. This was the first overtime game for the Minutewomen this season.

-Courtesy Media Relations

www.dailycollegian.com
moc.nagiellocyliad.www

STUDENT TRAVEL
It's YOUR trip, take it!
London.....$274
Amsterdam....$351
Paris.....$349
Los Angeles.....$198
New York.....$115
Washington D.C.....$78
Fares are round-trip from Hartford
Restrictions may apply. Tax not included.
BUDGET HOTELS for as little as $18 A NIGHT!!!
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

College Street Motors
it's spring Time!
Time to bring your winter blue car in for a Front-End Alignment, Tune-Up, Trip Check and Oil Change.
Complete Foreign and Domestic Car & Truck Repair
260 College St. Amherst MA. 01002 (413) 253.3200 or 256.6712

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/1 - Thursday 3/7
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
40 DAYS & 40 NIGHTS (R) 12:50 4:30 7:10 9:50
WE WERE SOLDIERS (R) 12:00 4:30 7:40 10:30
IN THE BEDROOM (R) 12:20 4:15 7:15 10:20 (12:30 PM on Thurs 3/7 Only)
HART'S WAR (R) 3:50 10:40
JOHN Q (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05
COLLATERAL DAMAGE (R) 9:55
BIG FAT LIAR (PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:20 9:50
SUPER TROOPERS (R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15
CROSSROADS (PG13) 12:40 4:35 7:05 9:45
RETURN TO NEVERLAND (G) 12:35 2:30 4:40 7:15
THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO (PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00
BLACK HAWK DOWN (R) 12:05 7:10
A BEAUTIFUL MIND (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
LORD OF THE RINGS (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30* Sensor Movie - 3/7 IN THE BEDROOM doors open at 11:45
• NO PASSES- NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Domino'S Pizza
Two Weeks Only
ONLY .99 cents
Buy Any Pizza Get The Second Pizza For .99 Cents
GOOD Sunday Monday Tuesday Wednesday Thursday ONLY
$6.99 MEDIUM $7.99 LARGE 1 TOPPING PIZZA LUNCH SPECIAL GOOD 11am TO 4pm 2 SODAS 99¢
$11.99 LARGE PIZZA WITH 1 TOPPING +CINNA STICKS
$10.99 EXTRA LARGE 2 TOPPING PIZZA 2 LITER SODA BREADSTICKS 10 WINGS
$7.99 1 10-IN PIZZA +1 TWISTY BREAD +1 COKE
$12.99 LARGE 1 TOPPING PIZZA 2-LITER COKE
$9.99 MEDIUM 2 TOPPING PIZZA +2 SODAS
256-8911

NASTIER THAN A FRAT RAT
NATIONAL LAMPOON'S VAN WILDER
IN THEATRES SPRING 2002
WWW.NATIONALLAMPOON.COM
PG13 FILM IS NOT YET RATED
© 2001 Van Wilder Movie Productions, GmbH & Co. MovieNet und MoviePark KG. All Rights Reserved. NATIONAL LAMPOON® AND © Communications. All Rights Reserved.

Your Neighborhood Wireless Technology Store
Introducing America's Choice℠ calling plans
With America's Choice, all your plan minutes are national minutes!
300 Anytime monthly airtime minutes
UNLIMITED nationwide long distance
on America's Choice network.
PLUS
3000 National Night & Weekend Monthly Home Airtime Minutes for LIFE
All for only $35 monthly access when you sign up for one year and remain on the same plan. The America's Choice network covers over 248 million people in the U.S. Network not available in all areas.
WIN THE ULTIMATE WIRELESS PACKAGE!
Register for a chance to win at your nearest @Wireless location or at www.shopatwireless.com. Retail value $1500!
FREE $20 GAS CARD! with the purhase of a Nokia 5185 phone. Annual contract and mail-in form required
HOLYOKE MALL (413) 533-2500
HADLEY 327 Russell Street (413) 587-3248
@Wireless www.shopatwireless.com
35 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1-800-613-2355 for details, dial ext. 226 for franchise opportunities.
verizon wireless Authorized Retailer

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM UMass SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Anderson has turned heads this year with his play for UMass. | File photo

Anderson up for A-10 hardware

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

Postseason awards will be handed out on Tuesday night in Philadelphia at the annual Atlantic 10 men's basketball awards banquet. With the conference tournament slated to tip off Wednesday afternoon at the First Union Spectrum, players, coaches and other guests will gather at the Hyatt Regency to unveil the all-conference teams as well as the Player of the Year, Defensive Player of the Year, Rookie of the Year, Coach of the Year and the Chris Daniels Most Improved Player of the Year.

While it is doubtful that any of the Minutemen will follow in the footsteps of Monty Mack and earn First-Team All A-10 honors, a number of Minutemen are in the running to return to Amherst carrying a little extra baggage.

Point guard Anthony Anderson is one of the frontrunners for conference Rookie of the Year. The native of Lynn is second on the team in scoring, assists and steals while leading the club in three-point field goals made. In addition to those numbers Anderson has picked up a season-high four A-10 Rookie of the Week awards. If chosen, Anderson will become the first Minuteman to garner the award since Marcus Camby, picked up the hardware in 1994.

"I think so," said senior shooting guard Shannon Crooks when asked if he thought Anderson should be Rookie of the Year. "He's controlled the team all year. He did a great job, he didn't really turn the ball over and he came on strong toward the end of the season hitting a lot of shots and being aggressive. It's the little things so I think [he should win the award]."

Anderson's fellow newcomer Raheim Lamb is looking to join his teammate on the All-Rookie Team. Lamb ranks fifth in scoring and rebounding for UMass at just under six points and four boards a game while making 14 starts.

Rounding out the awards recipients could very well be Crooks during his final season in Amherst. He leads the Minutemen in scoring, assists, steals and free throws made as well as providing much needed experience and stability on the UMass perimeter. While his senior year with the Minutemen has been filled with numerous ups and downs, a postseason award would be a fitting tribute to the latest 1,000 point-scorer in UMass history.

"I think Shannon could easily be on one of the teams (first, second or third team all-conference)," said Head Coach Steve Lappas. "And I think Shannon might even be most improved player; I think that's also a possibility."

Anderson's only major folly is his 45.8 free throw percentage.

Minutemen find win in unfriendly territory

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Northern teams are just no support in prospect, with southern squads [illegible] of college baseball.

And the Massachusetts baseball team [illegible] on opening day last Friday [illegible] South Florida Bulls, 5-2.

"It's a lot of things working [illegible] UMass Head Coach Mike [illegible] They have been playing out [illegible] for those things after you [illegible] more of a problem than [illegible]

"The question is difficult," the [illegible] said. "In addition to [illegible] season games they had [illegible] had also played probably 20 [illegible] games. We had played one."

[illegible] Jesse Santos was the [illegible] at Tampa as he threw a com- [illegible] one-hitter striking out five [illegible] only a single earned run.

[illegible] the senior from [illegible] also allowed leadoff hitter [illegible] to cross the plate and [illegible] inside to settle down. However [illegible] from that point on, and [illegible] Senior shouting error in the [illegible] A-to-Courter-to-first 4-6-3 [illegible] to the only other time the [illegible] scored.

[illegible] gave up a run in the first and walked six, struggling a bit. Stone said. "But he got into his groove in the [illegible] got stronger by the end. He [illegible] good command and good [illegible] 86-88 mph in the final innings. [illegible] used with him and it worked out [illegible]

[illegible] Santos was the story on the [illegible] designated hitter Chris Morgan [illegible] played the hero at the plate [illegible] among all of last season with a [illegible] nearly the senior went 2-for-5 [illegible] all three Minuteman runs [illegible] RBI single in the third and [illegible] RBI single in the fifth.

[illegible] short-stop Cullan [illegible] was also largely responsible for [illegible] and White victory, as he [illegible] 2-for-3 with a run scored.

Anthony Stone and the UMass baseball team swiped one down South

Season ends in overtime

Temple ousts Minutewomen

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA – Temple broke a 61-61 tie with six made foul shots in the final 52 seconds of overtime to win its Atlantic 10 Tournament semifinal matchup over the Massachusetts basketball team Sunday at the Liacouras Center, 67-61.

Temple	67
UMass	61

UMass committed five turnovers in the extra frame, allowing Temple to jump out to a four-point lead with 3:04 left, but a Katie Nelson tres cut the lead to one on the next possession.

A-10 Second Team selection Jennifer Butler was called for her fifth foul, a questionable touch foul, on Temple's offensive turn, sending Owl shooting guard Natalia Isaac to the free throw line. The senior drilled both shots, bringing the lead back up to three.

"We need Butler on the floor and they call that little tick-tack fifth foul on her," said UMass Head Coach Joanie O'Brien after her team was outrebounded in the overtime period. "That kind of took the wind out of our sails just because she is such a great rebounder and that is where we were struggling a little bit."

After the teams swapped turnovers, Isaac threw Nelson to the ground during an inbounds play, sending the freshman to the line for two. The Ellicot City, Md.

Turn to A-10, page 9

With their previous overtime loss to UMass in mind, the Temple Owls took revenge with an OT win in the A-10 Tournament.

Post-season homestand seems unfair

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA – The No. 1 seed in the East received quite an advantage at this weekend's Atlantic 10 Tournament at the Liacouras Center, which housed the event for the fourth straight year.

Temple plays its home games at the arena, something that Massachusetts women's basketball coach Joanie O'Brien saw as a big advantage for the Owls in their 67-61 semifinal overtime win over UMass.

"It has never been fair to play on somebody's home court," O'Brien said after the Sunday's loss. "The A-10 decided to do that, the athletic director decided to do that. It is a home game for them; they get to sleep in their own bed, so does St. Joe's, so does LaSalle. Everybody else has to travel. It does put you at a little bit of a detriment."

It should come as no surprise, then, that Monday's final was between St. Joe's and Temple (a 63-58 Owl victory) – two of the teams that were able to sleep in their beds throughout the tourney, not that Temple coach Dawn Staley will admit that her team had an advantage, with the conference considering a change in locale for next year's A-10's.

"Since they are trying to take the A-10 Championship away from us," Staley said, "I will say that the crowd didn't favor us tonight. Maybe they can bring it back next year."

UMASS HOOP NOTEBOOK

The comment, which the former Virginia standout said with a big smirk on her face, brought the press conference into laughter.

Snubbed by the A-10

The A-10 handed out its awards at Thursday night's banquet in Philadelphia. UMass' Butler was named to the A-10 All-Conference Second Team and Defensive Team. The junior's omission from the first team, as well as point guard Katie Nelson's from the All-Rookie Team was surprising news to Coach O'Brien.

"It is disappointing," O'Briend said. "For Katie Nelson not to be on the All-Rookie Team is a travesty, to be honest with you. I think she's the best freshman in the conference. For Jennifer Butler not to make the first team, as the only kid in the conference that averages a double-double. And she's a defensive gem. I don't know what people were thinking. I'm not into awards, but when you've got people that have earned it, they should get it."

Nelson was second among freshmen in the A-10 with 9.1 points per game. She also led all rookies with 36.5 minutes played per game.

Butler ended the season with 20 double-doubles and was the only player in the conference to average over 10 rebounds per game. She also came in second in the A-10 in blocks with 1.63.

The junior center surpassed 1000 career points in Sunday's loss to Temple. With seven in that matchup, she now has 1001.

Butler also broke the UMass career rebounding record during the A-10 Tournament. Her 10 rebounds against Richmond pushed her over Octavia Thomas for the all-time record. The Brooklyn, N.Y. native now sits at 915 rebounds for her career.

Premiere production

Having played in her first A-10 Tournament, Nelson claimed that her teammates did their best to give her an idea of what to expect beforehand.

"[I] knew it was going to be pretty exciting," said Nelson after the Temple loss. "Everyone [said] that it would be totally different from the regular season.

The freshman proved her toughness by knocking down a perfect 6-for-6 from the charity stripe in Sunday's overtime loss to Temple.

Nelson averaged 10.3 points, 2.3 assists, 2.0 steals, and 36 minutes per game during the A-10 tourney.

The Ellicot City, Md. native also pointed out how wide open the competition was in this year's tournament.

"Anybody could have won [the A-10's] this year."

Impressed by the way her young point guard has handled herself all year, O'Brien believes she has one of the next great players in the A-10 on her squad.

"[Katie] is going to have one of those careers where she is going to be one of those prime-time kids [in the A-10]."

DAILY COLLEGIAN
CLASSIFIED
113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for permanent position or summer job? Come to the Hospitality job fare. March 6th 2002 from 9:00 am to 3 pm in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 50 companies attending. For more info. Please call the Career Day office 545-3438.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. - Now Available, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sept. 1 year lease. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.info@brandywineapts.com stop by or call (413) 549-0600.

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Honda Accord call 259-0068.

Purchasing a new or used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

CHILD CARE

Occasional after school childcare two school age children "also occasional summer care" transportation needed. John 549-5448.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

$12,342.00 Congratulations Dave Sullivan (Sophomore-Umass) for a great first week!!! Last two weeks of Recruiting for CWP Program 617-216-4741 or jbrown@college-works.com

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Personal Care attendant for male Quad. Week day mornings $10.12 hr 546-0666.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER IN MAINE Jewish, Co-ed overnight camp in the southern Maine seeks staff: Boys Unit Head (23+), Camping/ Tripping Director (23+), Judaics Director (23+); swim, water ski, and boating/ sailing instructors (lifeguard certification req'd.) ; archery (training avail.), ceramics, general athletics, gymnastics, photography, radio, low ropes, theater; general counselors, office personnel. For information, contact: Ava Goldman, Director, JCC Camp Kingswood, 333 Nahanton street, Newton, MA 02459, 617-244-5124, or e-mail: director@kingswood.org .

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 1-866-291-1884 ext. 485.

EMPLOYMENT

EARN $1000 FOR YOUR GROUP. Work on campus to raise money for your student group or organization. Make your own schedule and earn great money. Please call 1-888-923-3238 EXT. 115.

Wanted: Spring/ Summer Interns. Must be Rebels, Innovators, Desenters, seeking leadership outside the box. Average pay $7200.00. 617-216-4741 jbrown@college-works.com .

FOR SALE

Free Dog to a good home!! We need to find a home soon Female 1 1/2 year old-Pursie call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

FURNITURE

New computer desk $99.00 413-210-3145.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Hey Sheila, we hope you have a wonderful birthday! We luv you!! XOXOXO The Crew.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich (P Mulvey, E Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_Goodrich@hotmail.com

University Bartending Classes start soon, student discounts 1-800-u-can-mix. www.universitybartending.com spaces limited call for information.

Private Boxing Lessons with retired Pro. Djata Bumpus. In Amherst call 413-731-1450.

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TO SUBLET

Two bedrooms available in Puffton Village on bus route, free heat/hot water-sublet available thru summer. Call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

WANTED

Get $$PAID$$ to lose up to 5-400 lbs. 1-888-709-8197 www.healthmgmt.com

Looking for a trustworthy person to drive my car to Costa Rica. Call Frances 323-5799.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1 ..... CBS 3
3 ..... NESN
4 ..... Fox Sports NE
5 ..... PBS 57
6 ..... HSCN Movie Channel
7 ..... WB 22
8 ..... HSCN Movie Channel
10 ..... TV Guide Channel
11 ..... FOX 61
12 ..... ABC 40
13 ..... NBC 22
14 ..... International Channel
15 ..... UMATV
16 ..... HSCN Info Channel
17 ..... ESPN
18 ..... ESPN 2
19 ..... UVC-19
20 ..... ESPN Classic
21 ..... Gavel-to-Gavel
22 ..... CNN
23 ..... CNN HL
24 ..... Weather Channel
25 ..... Learning Channel
26 ..... Hallmark Channel
27 ..... A & E
28 ..... Discovery Health
30 ..... Food Network
31 ..... NASA
32 ..... Home & Garden TV
33 ..... Travel Channel
34 ..... Lifetime
35 ..... A&E
36 ..... Tech TV
37 ..... BET
38 ..... UPN 38
39 ..... USA
40 ..... TNN
41 ..... MTV
42 ..... CMT
43 ..... VH-1
44 ..... TNT
45 ..... TBS
46 ..... E! Entertainment
47 ..... Sci-Fi Channel
48 ..... Court TV
49 ..... Nick at Nite
50 ..... Comedy Central
51 ..... Cartoon Network
52 ..... Game Show Network
53 ..... TV Land
54 ..... POS Family
55 ..... Univision
56 ..... Galavision
57 ..... Telemundo
58 ..... College TV Network
59 ..... C-SPAN
60 ..... C-SPAN2
61 ..... Bloomberg Televison

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 5, 2002

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Daniel O'Donnell (In Stereo)		To Be Announced			TBA	Connecticut Journal
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Ecosystem Evidence"		Guardian (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Ecosystem Evidence"		Guardian (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Dharma-Greg	Spin City	NYPD Blue "Hand Job" (N)		Philly "Here Comes the Judge"		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Gilmore Girls (In Stereo)		Smallville "Jitters" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Frasier	Watching Ellie	Frasier (N)	Scrubs (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	(-8)	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Gilmore Girls (In Stereo)		Smallville "Jitters" (In Stereo)		News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT	(+10)	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Frasier	Watching Ellie	Frasier (N)	Scrubs (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8 (11)	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	70s Show	Undecided	24 "7:00PM - 8:00PM"		News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	9 (22)	News	NBC News	Wheel Fortune	Jeopardy!	Frasier	Watching Ellie	Frasier (N)	Scrubs (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10 (6)	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Polish Americans (In Stereo)				Bobby Vinton Live: Songs From My Heart		Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40 (69)	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Dharma-Greg	Spin City	NYPD Blue "Hand Job" (N)		Philly "Here Comes the Judge"		News	Nightline
WSBK	45	Wheel Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		As If		Random Years	Ent. Tonight	Frasier	Shipmates
WTBS	22	Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	NBA Basketball: Orlando Magic at Indiana Pacers (Live)						NBA Basketball: Indiana Pacers at Sonics
A&E	44	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order (In Stereo)		Biography (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Good Girl"		100 Centre Street (N)		Law & Order (In Stereo)
CNN	20 (21)	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Live From... The Point		Larry King Live		News night		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	19 (30)	Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show	Seats	★½ "Tales From the Crypt Presents: Bordello of Blood" (1996)				Battlebots (N)		Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	29	Discover Magazine		Wild Discovery	Journey Fisher	New Detectives		New Detectives "Tainted Blood"		FBI Files "Hired Gun"		Justice Files
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Big East Championship -- Teams: TBA				College Basketball: Sun Belt Championship -- Teams: TBA				Sportscenter
LIFE	42	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★½ "Bump in the Night" (1991, Drama) Meredith Baxter Birney				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	MTV Special	Real World (In Stereo)		Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Osbournes (N)	Dismissed	Kidnapped
NICK	36	Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Told by Ginger	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show
SCIFI	25	Star Trek: Nem (In Stereo)		Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "The Donor"		★★★ "Back to the Future Part III" (1990, Adventure) Michael J. Fox (In Stereo)				Crossing Over
TLC	27 (28)	Escape Stories "On the Run"		Eye Spy: Red Handed		High Speed Pursuit: Inside		UFOs Uncovered		Secrets of the Paranormal		High Speed Pursuit: Inside
TNT	35	NYPD Blue (In Stereo)		Pretender "Bloody Jaks"		Law & Order "Narcotic"		Law & Order "Fools for Love"		Charmed "Trial by Magic"		Witchblade "Maelstrom"
USA	32	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Smoked" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Revelations"		★½ "10 Things I Hate About You" (1999, Comedy) Heath Ledger				JAG "Smoked" (In Stereo)
HBO	65	★★½ "The Arrival" (1996, Science Fiction) Charlie Sheen PG-13				Real Sports		★★½ "The Mexican" (2001, Adventure) Brad Pitt (In Stereo) R				Sat. Fest Under (In the curve
MAX	64	★★½ "The Replacements" (2000) Keanu Reeves PG-13				★★½ "Caddyshack" (1980) Chevy Chase, R		Delta Squad		★★★½ "Forrest Gump" (1994) Tom Hanks (In Stereo) PG-13		JAG "Smoked" (In Stereo)
SHOW	66	★★½ "Passion of Mind" (2000, Drama) Demi Moore R-13				★★ "Get Over It" (2001) Kirsten Dunst PG-13		Hero's Story		Chris Isaak (Unrated) (N)		Queeras Folk (N) (In Stereo)

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Noodle By Jacki

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"You really like to talk about yourself a lot, don't you?"

-Sonny, 8-year old in Philadelphia talking to a member of the WMUA Sports Staff

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 36 LOW: 19	HIGH: 48 LOW: 29	HIGH: 52 LOW: 30

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You're going to have to be specific and informative with others today if teamwork is to yield any results. Working together demands discipline.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You're going to have to discuss things that may seem a little "personal" to you today. Once you get started you'll share ideas freely.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're in need of a little more security today, either physical, financial or emotional today. Don't put all your eggs in one basket, however.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your ideas are likely to be opened today. Great ideas you've never fully acknowledged. What you do with this new perspective is wholly up to you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) –It is not up to you to override the directives of an authority.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Now is no time for "passing the buck." Work instead to find a solution—together with others if possible. If you must, do it on your own.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Something special comes your way late in the day, and you'll discover something important that will enable you to break through a personal barrier.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may be tired of hearing the same old thing from someone who wants only your time or your money. Today is the day to say "no" once and for all.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may require a few careful explanations today before you understand exactly what is going on around you. Pay attention, and listen up!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You'll have to keep certain information to yourself today if you're going to use the element of surprise to your advantage.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Your nerves are talking to you once again, and this time you're going to want to listen. Heed subliminal warnings today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may have an odd reaction to the seasonal phenomenon today, but, rain or shine, you can still get your work done if you concentrate.

collegian graphics: we like ice cream sundaes.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Yankee Corn Chowder

Beef Ragout

Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)

Greek Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

DINNER

Yankee Corn Chowder

Chicken Pot Pie

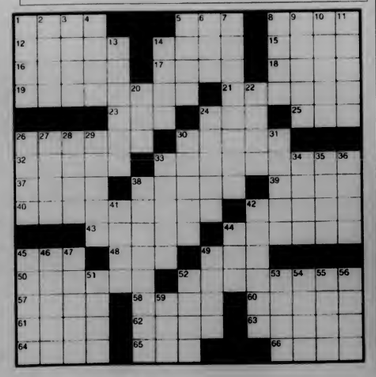
Boston Scrod

Vegetable Stir Fry with Tofu (W Basics) (vegan)

California Quiche (vegetarian)

Eric Soderstrom
Scott Eldridge II
Andy Vogt
Jess May
Frank DiMeglio
Erika Earl

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
Crossword not challenging enough?
TUESDAY NIGHT!!
Team Pub Trivia
win money and prizes
9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition



ACROSS
1 Bell
5 Flower adornment
8 Burter
12 Wide awake
14 In a while
15 Stair
16 Thread
17 Flip a coin
18 Plus
19 Excused
21 Farm baby
23 Enthusiasm
24 Wheel part
25 — Paulo
26 Thaw
30 Distorts
32 Clay target sport
33 Jury-rigged
37 Trunk possessor
38 Chopped line
39 Diet spread
40 Wildlife attracting deposits
42 Magic formula
43 Tudor king
44 Fracas
45 Homo sapiens
48 Prefix for "recent"
49 Montreal's prov.
50 Tie
52 Obsolete
57 Zip —
58 Band instrument
60 Please greatly
61 Portent
62 Oklahoma town
63 Tall peak
64 Grassy area
65 Look at
66 Toboggan

DOWN
1 Fishing spear
2 Mishmash
3 Midwest st.
4 Golfer Norman
5 Raucous diver
6 Dawn goddess
7 Motivated
8 Foundry refuse
9 Room dividers
10 Discombobulated
11 Scrapbook item
13 Hot dish holder
14 Stalk
20 Monsieur's wine
22 Urchins
24 Does a fall chore
26 Sonic boom producers
27 Gumbo ingredient
28 Touch
29 Motors
30 Zany
31 Boutiques
33 Smaller than mini
34 Islands to Cousteau
35 Declined
36 Painted linware
38 Places to eat
41 Home of jizz
42 Glove leathers
44 Famed pharaoh
45 "Star Trek" physician
46 Bakery come-on
47 Auto-safety advocate
49 Campus area
51 Peddle
52 Oscar's cousin
53 Heidi's mountains
54 Shadow
55 French I verb
56 Hero's act
59 One, for Pierre

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

W	A	S	P	S		A	F	A	R		P	L	A	N
A	D	U	L	T		G	A	L	E		H	E	R	O
C	A	N	O	E		E	R	O	S		O	V	E	R
O	Y	S	T	E	R		M	O	O	N	B	E	A	M
				L	O	P		L	A	I	L	S
A	T	H	L	E	T	E		V	I	A
L	A	Y	E	R		B	O	W	E	L		L	A	B
E	R	M	A		R	A	C	E	D		H	I	L	O
C	O	N		N	O	L	E		S	U	S	A	N
		Y	E	W			K	I	N	G	P	I	N
	H	O	A	R	D	S		S	O	U
P	O	U	N	D	I	N	G		U	G	A	N	D	A
R	U	S	K		E	A	R	L		G	L	E	A	M
A	N	T	L		S	K	I	P		E	M	I	L	E
M	O	S	S		T	E	N	N		R	A	N	I	S

7-5-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Illinois colleges face larger cuts

By Jillian Duchnowski
Daily Illini (U. Illinois)

(U-WIRE) CHAMPAIGN, Ill. – Gov. George Ryan recommends cutting state universities' operating budgets, but he supports some building projects in his budget recommendations issued last week.

Ryan suggested cutting 1.1 percent – more than administrators expected – from the combined operating budget for universities and colleges across the state. It will be another week before administrators will know how these recommendations could affect the University of Illinois.

His emphasis on building projects reflects the University's role in the state's long-term economic development, said Steve Rugg, Associate Vice President for Planning and Budgeting.

"Operations is an immediate investment," he said. "Investment in research facilities at the University will pay long-term dividends."

The capital budget recommendations included $18 million for the Microelectronics Lab expansion near the Beckman Institute, as well as $30 million for building renovations statewide. A $46 million remodeling project for Lincoln Hall, listed 12th on the higher education building projects priority list, did not receive funding.

In addition, the Post-Genomic Institute and the National Center for Supercomputing Applications will be funded as part of Ryan's VentureTech initiative after the projects were frozen in the middle of the planning process this year.

Although the General Assembly will revise Ryan's recommendations, his support is a "strong advantage," Rugg said. He said it is hard to predict how the final state budget will look.

"It's different every year, and it's very difficult to predict," Rugg said. "Each set of economic conditions is different; each set of projects is different."

The 1.1 percent cut in operations means $29.3 million less for funding areas such as academic and administrative departments next year. Ryan also asked universities to cover the $24.2 million increase for the State Universities Retirement System and $1.6 million for career academies, wrote Keith Sanders, Executive Director of the Illinois Board of Higher Education, in a Feb. 20 memo.

Sanders wrote that universities will again pay $45 million to the state group health insurance program, a cost another state agency once covered but universities paid this year when the state tax revenues fell short of projections.

Board members will incorporate the governor's recommendations into a budget plan that details appropriations for each university, board spokesman Don Sevener said. He said they intend to submit the proposal to Ryan and general assembly members by the end of the week.

"(Ryan has) given us a new bottom line, so we have to go back and make new middle lines," Sevener said. "Whenever the governor's budget is lower than our budget, which is typical, it requires a reallocation."

Chet Gardner, Vice President for Academic Affairs, thinks the revisions will be bigger than the cuts administrators for all three campuses anticipated last month. Administrators originally estimated that the cuts would be about $34 million. Ryan's suggestions could mean about $44 million in cuts next year, Gardner said.

"I think that when the dust settles, that when we finally get word from (the board), we'll probably get $10 million less than we thought back in January when a lot of these (budget) articles were being written," he said. "It's a fair budget for higher education, in view of the tax revenues."

State override cements budget reductions

By K.C. Howard
Minnesota Daily (U. Minnesota)

(U-WIRE) MINNEAPOLIS – When University of Minnesota accountants go to the bank in July, they will find $23.6 million less than what they anticipated this summer.

The Senate cemented the cut Thursday, when it voted 60-7 to override the governor's veto of a budget reduction bill, which rid the state of a $1.95 billion state deficit.

But legislators have not put down their scissors yet. While Republicans and Democrats say they hope to keep the University off the chopping block, they still have $336 million of budget shaving to do.

"We have to make sure the $23.6 million is the end of the line," said University President Mark Yudof. "They could try to assign another portion of that to the University, and if they do, it could be terribly difficult for us."

Yudof said program cuts would absorb two-thirds to three-fourths of the reduction. But he said tuition could also jump a couple of percentage points.

The Board of Regents voted in June to raise tuition 13.2 percent for the 2002-03 school year on top of a 13.8 percent increase this year.

"I wish I could tell the students that it wouldn't be two or three points above that, but it could be," Yudof said. Primarily, cuts will come from taxes on individual colleges, Yudof said.

System-wide, college deans have been saving nickels and dimes and avoiding filling staff and faculty positions to gear up for what they knew would be a fiscally tight school year.

But Yudof said students and employees won't see the lion's share of the cuts until next year.

"We were hoping for six percent raises ... I don't know if we can stick to that or not," Yudof said. "This is going to be painful, but tuition will be the last resort to balance the budget, and it will be a small share of the $23.6 million if it occurs."

The total cut in state funding turns out to be a 1.75 percent decrease in the anticipated $679 million of state money slated for University coffers in fiscal year 2002.

Legislators are working this week on "phase two" of budget cuts, and policy leaders from the House and Senate have given their word not to increase further cuts to higher education.

"We have a responsibility to do the second part of the forecast," said Sen. Deanna Wiener, DFL-Eagan, Chairwoman of the Higher Education Finance Committee. "We have a $400 million-plus problem, but I'm quite certain the Senate will not put that to be born by education."

House leaders could not get their representatives to cooperate and override Gov. Jesse Ventura's veto of the bill without committing to try to leave education alone after these initial cuts.

"I never heard anything that was specifically promised," said Rep. Lyndon Carlson, DFL-Crystal, who voted against the override twice. "But there were comments made by leadership in both caucuses that there would be no further cuts into education."

But these whispered promises give little hope to University officials weary of the current economic situation.

"It's never over," said Richard Pfutzenreuter, Vice President of the University's Office of Budget and Finance. "I think we've given enough."

The University will have a better idea of how the cuts will hit in approximately 30 days, Pfutzenreuter said.

He and other University officials are on the prowl for fiscal fat, but both say there is little to be found.

"I can't be optimistic that we're going to find some easy cut that has virtually no impact on students," Yudof said. "We're looking, but we haven't seen it yet."

Lobbying comes too late

By Gigi Wood
The Daily Iowan (U. Iowa)

(U-WIRE) DES MOINES, Iowa – Legislators told University of Iowa Student Government members they were too late when they arrived at the State Capitol in Des Moines Thursday to fight a one percent state budget cut and furloughs for state workers.

Members of the UI entourage were told legislators had already decided to endorse the cut, which would cost the university approximately $5 million, according to Doug True, the Vice President for Finance.

"It's unfortunate when legislators tell us it's a waste of our time," said UI sophomore Mayrose Wegmann, the president of UI Democrats. "But it's not a wasted trip. It's good to maintain a presence because we pay our tuition."

The Senate voted 26-20 Thursday to approve an amendment to the original budget proposal that allows state agencies to determine whether to implement furloughs. The vote was passed after UISG members spent the day educating legislators about the effect of budget cuts on state universities. Gov. Tom Vilsack will have three days to sign or veto the bill once he receives it.

"Instead of a furlough, we're going to allow UI department heads to decide what to cut, whether it's equipment, or conventions and trips, or laying people off," said Rep. Mary Mascher, D-Iowa City, who sits on the House Appropriations Committee, which approved the cut.

The original proposal would have forced state workers to take one day off a month to save the state $12 million this fiscal year and $52 million next year.

University officials have said furloughs would be difficult to implement because the school's employees are not all paid solely with state funds.

"This is a major step forward," True said. "Cutting the budget is bad enough."

University officials will spend the next few days deciding how to distribute the cuts and learning from deans what cuts can be made, he said.

"We're getting experienced at this after the cuts in November and July," True said.

Faculty Senate President Amitav Bhattacharjee said he welcomed the news of the amendment.

"We have said all along the furlough was a bad idea," he said. "We would much rather have control over what we cut rather than the (original) furlough."

Iowa lawmakers also agreed to use $44 million in rainy-day funds, which will primarily benefit K-12 education.

"We won a little bit today," said UISG President Nick Klenske. "A couple of months ago, they weren't going to use the rainy-day funds."

UISG was joined by students from Iowa State University and the University of Northern Iowa to persuade legislators to soften the budget cut's blow.

"If the water gets any deeper, we're drowning," said ISU student government President Andy Tofilon. "Why would college students stay in a state that disrespects them?"

UISG members will return to Des Moines in two weeks to fight against cuts in the fiscal year 2003 budget.

LSU harmed by budget cuts

By Samantha Sieber
The Reveille (Louisiana State U.)

(U-WIRE) BATON ROUGE, La. – With budget cuts required for Louisiana State University's College of Arts and Sciences, students and teachers are being inconvenienced by the current strain on the college's resources.

Students were told last week teachers were being allotted only 250 copy pages per class taught for the rest of the semester. This immediately caused problems for students who now are forced to print their own tests and assignments.

In one Spanish class, students have to take quizzes and tests from the overhead and the Internet.

"It is aggravating because we now have to take all tests on loose leaf paper," said Stephanie Pagit, a Mass Communication sophomore. "It is just not convenient."

Another student remarked her teacher was so agitated with the paper shortage he e-mailed the class a quiz at home instead of conducting it in class.

"It is ridiculous that a state university doesn't have money to give students proper facilities in the classroom," said Cristina Ippolito, a Sociology and Latin junior.

Students also want to know what happened to the school's funds.

"If they can't even afford paper, where is all the money going?" asked Lauren Wilbert, a Mass Communication sophomore.

Kit Price, a Mass Communication junior, said he is having a problem printing materials himself. Price also said problems like this should not occur in the central management of a college.

"Increased tuition with less benefits is not making much sense," Price said.

Psychology senior Erin Thompson said she is inconvenienced in her French class because she cannot write on quizzes anymore.

"It puts an extra strain on students," Thompson said. "It is an inconvenience. Not only do we have to buy scantrons for tests but now we have to buy extra blue books for quizzes. It's kind of annoying."

OPEN LETTER TO ECONOMICS STUDENTS AND THEIR FAMILIES

As you know from the hectic situation at registration, we are feeling the impact of the dire budget situation in the Economics department. To give some context to the current crisis, from Spring, 1999 to Spring, 2001 our majors grew from 404 to more than 800. At the same time our resources declined, and we had to make hard choices about how to allocate resources among courses. Some of you know this first-hand from repeated attempts to get into courses like Junior Writing or Intermediate Micro and Macro Theory.

We are now facing additional large cuts in our teaching and operational budgets for next year. Despite our efforts to find alternative sources of funds, in the worst-case scenario the combination of cuts and early retirements could reduce our course offerings by 30 percent next year. As you may know from accounts in the press, departments are not likely to get back funds to replace faculty or staff taking early retirement. In Economics, office staff taking early retirement will severely reduce our ability to service students in areas like scheduling and advising.

Confronted with loss of revenue, we have been accommodating our growing number of majors by increasing class size and patching together fixes for critical courses. We have now reached the point at which we simply cannot do more with even less. As a result, a significant number of Economics majors may not be able to get into enough courses to graduate on time. When it takes more than four years to graduate, you are in effect paying a tuition increase.

This crisis does not hurt the department or the University alone but also hurts the Commonwealth and all its citizens. A report by the Massachusetts Institute of Social and Economic Research (Massachusetts Public Higher Education: A Shrewd Investment with a Significant Rate of Return) calculates that almost half of the high school seniors who graduated from high school in Massachusetts in 1999 attended in-state public colleges or universities. The same report concludes that average earnings in 1998-2000 of full-time workers with a baccalaureate degree were $53,621, compared to $32,003 for those with no college degree. These numbers show how important public higher education is for the people and the economy of the Commonwealth, but we feel that the message is not getting through to the policy-makers in the state.

You and your parents can help by telling your story. Write or call your state senator and representative and let them know how a decline in the quality of a UMass education affects you and your family. The campus administration and faculty have told the story from our perspective, but only you can give a personal student perspective. Legislators do care about the state of education in Massachusetts, but they need to be reminded that the current budget situation puts public higher education, and your futures, at risk. They do respond to constituent concerns and respond more readily to personal accounts than to official statistics.

Please help keep UMass strong by taking action. Please send this letter to your parents, so they too can register their opinion with their legislators. If you need assistance in locating the telephone number or address of your senator and representative, you can check the state web site (http://www.mass.gov) or call the State House at 1-800-392-6090.

All of us in the Economics department would like to thank you for your patience in these difficult times. We are proud of our students and driven by our desire to provide you with the skills you need as citizens and in the workplace. We are glad that you chose UMass and hope that working together we can continue to offer you the education you deserve.

Yours sincerely,

Diane Flaherty
Professor and Chair

Craig Kielburger
NEWMAN CENTER INVITES YOU
To hear
Craig Kielburger speak about
ChildLabor and Children's Rights
March 7, 2002
7pm
Newman Center Cafe
Sponsored by
Rev. Brian Boland Memorial Lecture
472 N Pleasant St., Amherst, MA
413.549.0300

FTC
"Free the Children"
What can you do to free the children?

Over the past three years, the number of Majors in the Department of French and Italian Studies has increased by over 40%. Many are double Majors. Think about it!

COME SPEND A YEAR OR SEMESTER WITH US ON OUR PARIS PROGRAM, OR A SEMESTER IN SIENA, ITALY
(semester cost is almost the same price as if you were in Amherst)!

•COURSES CREDITED TOWARD YOUR UMASS AMHERST PROGRAM
•MAKE SIGNIFICANT PROGRESS TOWARD A MAJOR OR MINOR IN FRENCH AND FRANCOPHONE STUDIES OR ITALIAN STUDIES
•SPECIAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR STUDENTS OF MANANGEMENT, POLITICAL SCIENCE, and INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

FOR INFORMATION AND APPLICATIONS, email us at: freital@frital.umass.edu or stop by Room 312 Herter Hall

Dear Readers,

We encourage you to get more information about the state of our campus. Contact your elected legislator -- send a letter, call an office, or, better still, visit. Explain to them that the state of the University of Massachusetts is of concern to you.

Don't know who your rep is?

Visit www.state.ma.us/legis/citytown.htm for a town by town breakdown of both state Senators and Representatives. They need to know that we care about the well-being of our institution. This is our campus -- let's fight for it.

Sincerely,
The Daily Collegian

Students need:

- Faculty and Support Staff
- Classes they can get into
- Adequate library resources
- Buildings that are not falling apart
- Affordable public higher education

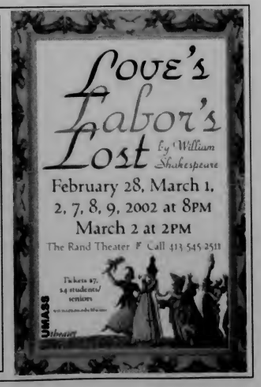
All of these are at serious risk. Help protect the quality of your education and the future of this University. Crippling the University will harm the state.

Let your representatives know how important it is to save UMass!

A MESSAGE FROM THE UMASS DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATION



Will our stages be bare?

On Feb. 28, the UMass Department of Theater proudly opens its newest production, the vibrant romantic comedy Love's Labor's Lost, by William Shakespeare.

But even as we celebrate those who worked hard to make this show great, we worry about the future of productions in the department.

We are very worried that the budget crisis may force us to mount fewer plays each year or diminish the quality of our productions. And that will affect our students directly. Students act in our shows, design our shows, and make them run smoothly. They need these shows to prepare for their professional careers.

Please help us help them. Support the department. Attend our shows. Let people know that theater matters.

STALLONE VS. JACKSON
ARTS PAGE 5.

WASTING TIME IN CLASSES?
READ ABOUT IT IN
ED/OP PAGE 4.

AXE IS SWINGING OVER SPORTS
SPORTS PAGE 12.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
WEDNESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE NINETY FOUR ☆☆☆☆☆ 3.06.02

UNIONIZED

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Resident Assistants and Community Development Assistants at the University of Massachusetts voted 138-88 to form the first undergraduate labor union in the country. The University has seven days to challenge the results of the election.

"We're disappointed at the result I think the vote showed that a lot of people are actually not in favor of a union: 88 votes is a significant number," Javier Cevallos, vice chancellor for Student Affairs said. "We'll take a few days to assess the situation and think about it, and then we'll decide what the next steps are going to be."

Housing Director Michael Gilbert declined to comment.

The Massachusetts Labor Commission reported that there had been no objections filed as of press time. Elections specialist Shirley DeMarco-Siciliano explained that 12 ballots were challenged during the election.

"All of the graduate students votes were challenged by the employer," DeMarco-Siciliano said. "Even if all of them went toward the "no-union" side, the result would not have been affected."

The RA union will be affiliated with United Auto Workers Local 2322.

"We're very excited, and we feel as though that the RA's have spoken that they want a union once again like they did when they signed the original petition," Tim Scott, a union organizer, said. "We look forward to sitting down and having RA's bargain a good contract to improve their working conditions."

"This is a group of workers who want to make a change in their job and they went about a legal process to do that," UAW local president James Shaw said. "We're going to go to the bargaining table and make those important changes."

RA's had mixed emotions over the results.

"Today is the proudest day of my life so far. We've been with this thing for like a year and a half and finally we see it's completion. It feels so incredible that we actually did this," David Synnott, a junior Arts and Sciences major said. "If the University doesn't try and do any union busting challenges to our union, if they don't challenge it then we go to collective bargaining. We're students too and students should not be worried about fee increases, we are students and we care about that as well."

Other RA's weren't so happy.

"I think it's a bad idea and I think they're going to have to face the consequences later. I don't think that this is a union appropriate situation," Melissa Parker, a Political Science senior said. "It's going to change the culture of [Residence Life]. I don't think it was well thought through enough. I generally think it's a bad decision."

"I'm really disappointed," Jen Mehmed said. "We had a pretty good open dialogue with RLM before this, and that unionizing really wasn't appropriate in this situation because our voices could have been heard if we tried hard enough."

"It's disappointing," Jen Casavant, a senior Psychology major. "I think it's going to create a very adversarial relationship on a campus where there is already not a great relationship between the admin and the students and this department was one of the departments conducive to change and responsive to change and to communication and this really isn't going to help."

But the overall mood in room 1001 of the Campus Center was jubilant.

"I think it shows how great we are and we are looking forward to an exciting union," Cristal Cruz said. "I am so excited. This is the happiest day of my entire semester."

Patrick Colvario is a senior History major who began working on the RA union three semesters ago along with senior Social Thought and Political Economy major Chris Fierro, Synnott, and UMass alum Asif Savani.

"I think that for the first time in my life that something I believed in from the start was the right thing to do," Colvario said. "We worked hard on it and it came true. I knew this was the right thing to do, and I feel like those things have been validated."

Colvario said that the waiting was the hardest part.

"At the end of every block [of votes] I knew that we won the block but every 'no union' vote was like a needle through the heart; it's tough to sit there and hear that," Colvario added. "We're RA's just like they are, we understand what they go through everyday as RA's, and that's why we did this, we did this so that RA's can stand up for other RA's."

Students stayed after the counting, celebrating or lamenting the result.

"Hi mom," Colvario said into his cellular phone. "We won."

Shaw feels that the union's next steps are pretty clear. "The RA's will elect their representatives to the bargaining table, we create proposals, those proposals will be reviewed by the membership at large for ratification, and then we sit down with the University," Shaw said. "If the University fights us, we'll fight back and guaranteed we get to the table someday. The University has fought us every step of the way, literally."

Ira Sills, an attorney for Siegel, Roitman and Coleman of Boston, represents the fledgling union. He doesn't think that the University would win an appeal.

"It would be highly irresponsible to spend taxpayers' money on an appeal that, in my view, they will lose," Sills said. "The democratic process has happened and it is over. Appeals will do nothing but delay the process."

But for now, some RA's are just happy to enjoy this victory.

"I'm ecstatic. It's the culmination of three semesters of work," Fierro said. "Hopefully the University will do the right thing and bargain with us."

SOME RESIDENT ASSISTANTS CELEBRATE THEIR UNION VICTORY.

Professor to speak on future of global racism

By Jake Lilien
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Noted scholar Vijay Prashad will deliver a lecture, "The Global Future of Race," in the Student Union's Cape Cod Lounge at 7:00 this evening.

Prashad, an associate professor at Trinity College, will discuss the ways in which race will be viewed by coming generations and current global perceptions of race. These issues are the theme of his upcoming book, which shares the lecture's title.

"He'll be talking about the broad, worldwide issues of race and racism," said Sonny Suchdev, a programming coordinator for the Office of ALANA Affairs, one of the lecture's sponsors. "We often act as if racism only occurs within our own country, when it's really a global phenomenon. There is such a thing as global racism."

Prashad's scholarship has focused mostly on issues of racism, both within the United States and worldwide. He is best known for his two previous books, The Karma of Brown Folk, and Everybody was Kung-Fu Fighting: Afro-Asian Connections and the Myth of Cultural Purity.

Prashad has studied extensively the concept of Asians as "model minorities" – the perception that Asians have succeeded as an ethnic group, and should be emulated by other minorities.

"He's tackled the issue, asking why people perceive that, and why a lot of Asians perpetuate that," Suchdev said.

In his books, Suchdev has often explored relations between blacks and Asians. In Everybody Was Kung-Fu Fighting, he called the model minority concept "a weapon against black America," saying that Asian successes are often used by conservatives as an example of why programs like affirmative action should be ended.

He has also written about the history of black and Asian solidarity, tracing it back to shared oppression in places like the Carribbean and South Africa.

In addition his teaching duties at Trinity College, Prashad serves as the director of Trinity's International Studies Program, and is on the board of the Center for Third World Organizing. He is a columnist for Color Lines, a magazine about racial issues, and a co-founder of the Forum of Indian Leftists.

"I think it's an honor that Professor Prashad will be on our campus," said Suchdev. "I think he'll give us a critical look at the issue of race relations. Activists, scholars, and really anyone in the UMass community, will be able to take a lot out of it."

Eight U.S. soldiers killed in action

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At least eight American soldiers have been killed so far in the Operation Anaconda offensive in eastern Afghanistan.

United States Army Sgt. Bradley S. Crose, 27, of Orange Park, Fla., Sgt. Philip J. Svitak, 31, of Joplin, Mo., Spc. Marc A. Anderson, 30, of Brandon, Fla., Pfc. Matthew A. Commons, 21, from Boulder City, Nev. were killed in action on March 4. Naval Aviation Boatswain's Mate-Handling Petty Officer 1st Class Neil C. Roberts, 32, from Woodland, Calif., Tech. Sgt. John A. Chapman, 36, of Waco, Texas, Senior Airman Jason D. Cunningham, 26, from Camarillo, Calif. were also killed March 4.

Army Chief Warrant Officer Stanley L. Harriman, 34, of Wade, N.C., was killed in action in on Saturday, March 2.

Approximately 40 U.S. soldiers have been wounded, sources say. Central Command estimates 100 to 200 casualties on the al Qaeda.

"I deeply regret that a number of U.S. servicemen and several Afghan fighters assisting us have been killed in action. At last count, there were nine Americans. That includes those that were involved in the helicopter crash. And there have been several Afghans as well," secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld said. "There have been a number of wounded U.S. and Afghans, although close to half of those are already back in the battle, and of the remainder, relatively few have life-threatening wounds. All of the individuals who were wounded have been fully evacuated from the area and are en route to appropriate locations to receive medical attention."

The attack was launched this weekend on al Qaeda and "non-Afghan"

Turn to WAR page 3

CHAIRMAN OF THE JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF GEN. RICHARD MYERS AND SECRETARY OF DEFENSE DONALD RUMSFELD CONDUCT A PRESS BRIEFING ON THE ON-GOING OPERATIONS IN AFGHANISTAN.

SGA nominations open despite lack of officials

SGA PRESIDENT JOHN SHEEHAN.

By Kristin Shrewsbury
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Student Government Association released nomination papers last Thursday for this year's upcoming presidential and trustee elections.

The elections, which have already sparked debate within the SGA Senate will be just one of the issues focused on during tonight's Senate meeting.

Conflict began in the Senate over the appointment of who was to be the next Chancellor of Elections. After much debate, the Senate appointed Linson Naval as this year's chancellor of elections.

The SGA is now facing new challenges regarding the presidential and trustee elections, specifically that relating to the constitutionality of them. In Title Eight of the By-Laws it states that the elections must be held by or on March 25, this however is not possible due to the previous lack of a chancellor of elections.

The By-Laws also call for a 14-day period for candidates to take out nomination papers and acquire the 250 signatures need as well as an additional eight days to campaign. The SGA however is now faced with the issue of holding possibly unconstitutional elections, a past familiar to many Senators.

Naval explained last Wednesday that he hoped to plan the elections on as timely a schedule as possible. He further explained that he would be working with on a timeline that would be fair to those outside the SGA.

"When we decide to hold the elections will be between me and the Elections Commissioners," Naval said. "I'd like to have them as soon as possible, but we have a timeline we need to follow, as well as determine what is fair for those who are outside the Senate."

Senators debated over the constitutionality of the elections by explaining that sometimes rules will have to be broken. Steve Hoeschele, chair of Finance, explained to the Senate that no matter how the elections are run people would always have issues.

"Some rules are just going to have to be broken due to the time constraints of our constitution, and someone will probably go to the Judiciary because of it," Hoeschele said. "But I feel it's the duty of the Senate to do what's right, and Linson will lead the commission in those efforts."

Members will also be discussing the possibility of having online voting for the presidential and trustee elections. Discussion over the possibility of online voting has struck pros and cons amongst Senators. Members have questioned the legality of the process and what it may mean for the future of SGA elections.

Senators will be meeting tonight to further discuss these issues and more in room 168C of the Campus Center.

DIVERSITY CALENDAR

FILMS

UMASS – The Radical Student Union will be sponsoring a documentary series on Wednesday, March 6, in room 911 of the Campus Center, in honor of International Women's Day. The schedule of screenings is as follows: at 1:00, the film Women of Hope/Latinas, Mirando el Caminio, a film about twelve unusual women who have broken new ground in their lives and achievements. At 2:00 p.m., The Broken Silence, a profile of Rigoberta Menchu. At 3:00 p.m., Wild Women Don't Have the Blues, the stories of pioneering blues women. At 6:00 p.m., The Women Next Door, a documentary about women involved in the Palestinian-Israeli conflict. Finally, at 7:30 pm., the documentary Tough Guise Violence, Media and the Crisis in Masculinity. Discussion will follow the films.

UMASS – Shaldon Magic, a film about a young Chinese photographer assisting an English P.T. Barnum character with his efforts to debut silent movies in Imperial Peking, will be screened in room 227 of Hetter Hall on Wednesday, March 6, at 7:30 p.m. This event is free.

AMHERST – The German comedy Mes Word Gist Everything Will Be Jinger, will be screened in room 4 of Amherst College's Merrill Science Center on Thursday, March 7, at 4:00 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. A discussion with filmwriter Fatima El Tayeb will follow the 4:00 showing. This event, part of the German film series, is free.

SMITH – The documentary, The Vision, about the life of Shri Mataji Nirmala Devi, will be screened on Saturday, March 9, at 7:00 p.m. in Helen Hills Chapel. Devi was a youth leader in Gandhi's freedom movement and Gandhi often consulted her on spiritual questions. This event will feature an introduction to Sahaja Yoga Meditation, music, and refreshments.

AMHERST – Luis Puenzo's film The Official Story will be screened in the Amherst College Campus Center Theater on Monday, March 11, at 7:00 p.m. The film is about a woman who begins to suspect that the child whom she and her husband adopted may be the daughter of the a couple killed because of the repressive tactics of an Argentine military regime. This event, part of the A Human Cost Film Series, is free.

HAMPSHIRE – The Iranian film The Day I Became a Woman will be screened in the Main Lecture Hall of Hampshire College's Franklin-Patterson Hall on Wednesday, March 13 at 7:30 p.m. The film, which explores the meaning of womanhood in modern Iran, will be presented by Hampshire Cultural Studies Professor Eva Rueschmann, and will be introduced by UMass Communication Professor Anne Ciecko. The Day I Became a Woman is in Farsi, with English subtitles. This event is free.

PERFORMANCES

SMITH – Paula Vogel's play Hot 'N Throbbing will be performed in the Mendenhall Theater Center's Hallie Flanagan Theater on Wednesday, March 6, Thursday, March 7, Friday, March 8, and Saturday, March 9, at 8:00 p.m. The play deals with the themes of sexuality and violence, and the boundaries imposed by society as well as those we impose on ourselves. Tickets are $7 for general admission, $4 for students. Call 585-ARTS for tickets.

UMASS – From the Inside Out, From the Outside In, a series of poetry readings in English, Spanish and Portuguese, will be performed on Thursday, March 7, at 7:00 p.m. in the Augusta Savage Gallery. The readings will be performed by faculty and students of the UMass Spanish and Portuguese Language Department. The Augusta Savage Gallery is located in the New Africa House, near Health Services.

AMHERST – The jazz trio Brew, consisting of Miya Masaoka and Magic Triangle alums Reggie Workman and Gerry Hemingway, will perform at Amherst College's Buckley Recital Hall on Thursday, March 7, at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $9 for the general public, and $6 for students.

AMHERST – Urban Bush Women will perform Hairstories on Tuesday, March 5, and Wednesday, March 6, at 8:00 p.m. in Kirby Theater. Tickets are $20 for general admission, $5 for students. Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for reservations.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Something Every Friday will present a "double-header" on Friday, March 8, at 8:00 p.m. in Blanchard Campus Center. The evening will begin with "Women's Folk/Rock Pioneers: a spin through women's music 'herstory' w/ DJ Crewmaster Jeanne Friedman," and will conclude with SALSA lessons by the Paradise Dance School. These events are free, and open to the public.

EVENT OF THE WEEK

UMASS – Author Anita Diamant will be speaking in the Top of the Campus on Thursday, March 7, at 8:00 p.m. Diamant, author of The Red Tent, will deliver a lecture, "Writing Women's Lives." The Top of The Campus is located on the eleventh floor of the Campus Center.

RELIGIOUS

SMITH – University of Illinois Professor Valerie Hoffman will deliver a lecture, "Where Are the Women? Spirituality and Gender in Islamic Sacred Space," on Tuesday, March 12, at 7:30 p.m. in room 106 of Smith College's Seelye Hall.

UMASS – Dr. Ali Hazratji will deliver a lecture, "Islam: Struggling to Surrender," on Thursday, March 7 in room 186C of the Campus Center. A question and answer session will follow the lecture.

PARTIES

UMASS – Everywoman's Center will be hosting an International Women's Day Celebration on Friday, March 8, from 11:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. in the Student Union's Cape Cod Lounge. Plans for the celebration include massage, food, music, dance, and an art show. This event is free of charge. Parking for members of the community will also be provided free of charge [on a limited basis]. For more information, call 545-0883.

UMASS – The English Speaking Carribbean Association will present Carribbean Riddims on the evening of Saturday, March 9, in the Student Union Ballroom. Dinner will be served. Tickets are $5 for Five College students, and $8 for general admission.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – African Carribbean Day 2002 will take place at Mount Holyoke College on Saturday, March 9, from 5:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. in Mary Woolley Hall's Chapin Auditorium. The event is a cultural show displaying African and Carribbean dances, skits, songs, and poetry, and is precluded with a dinner. Tickets range from $12 to $4. Admission for students with IDs who wish to attend all events if $8; admission for students with IDs for the show only is $6.

SMITH – Jhalak, a celebration of South Asian cultural activities, will take place in Smith College's Sage Hall on Saturday, March 9, at 6:00 p.m. The event will feature poetry readings, songs, dances and skits. Tickets are $4 for general admission, and $3 for students. A Jhalak dinner will be held at Mendenhall's Gamut, followed by a party at 10:00 p.m. Admission for the dinner and for the party are $1 each.

LECTURES/DISCUSSION

HAMPSHIRE – Elaine Chang of the University of Guelph will deliver a lecture, "Canadian Immigrant Autobiography," in Franklin-Patterson Hall's West Lecture Hall on Wednesday, March 6 at 4:00 p.m.

UMASS – Vijay Prashad will deliver a lecture, "The Global Future of Race," on Wednesday, March 6, at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Union's Cape Cod Lounge. Dr. Prashad, a scholar and activist, will discuss shifts in how race will be discussed in the 21st century and beyond.

UMASS – A panel discussion on Women in Leading Roles will take place on Thursday, March 7, from 11:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m., in the Top of the Campus. The panelists leading the discussion are Geosciences Professor Laurie Brown, WFCR Public Radio producer Susan Kaplan, and Barbara O'Connor, Chief of Police in the Department of Public Safety. Issues addressed will be the experiences of the panelists, and the ability of other women to achieve success in the working world. The Top of the Campus is located on the eleventh floor of the Campus Center. For more information, contact Hind Mari at Campus Activities at 577-3791.

UMASS – A panel discussion on Women and the Arts will take place on Thursday, March 7, from 3:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m., in the Top of the Campus. This event, sponsored by the Everywoman's Center, will include panelists such as Martha Richards, director of the Fund for Women in the Arts, and June Millington, co-founder of the Institute for the Musical Arts, and avant-garde jazz musician Miya Masaoka. Issues addressed will include the historical challenges and current obstacles facing women in the arts, the panelists' experiences as performers, administrators and advocates, and advice to other women in the field. The Top of the Campus is located on the eleventh floor of the Campus Center. For more information, call the Everywoman's Center at 545-0883.

UMASS – Massachusetts State Representative Ellen Story will speak in room 620 of Thompson Hall on Thursday, March 7, at 4:00 p.m., as part of the Women in Politics Lecture Series. This event is sponsored by the Center for Public Policy and Administration.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginczye-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

AS SENIOR VP OF FINANCIAL PLANNING AT A MAJOR MOVIE STUDIO YOU COULD:

O.K. A $93 MILLION BUDGET

HIRE 7,500 EXTRAS

RENT 273 PALM TREES
(AND 1 BIG FAN TO MAKE THEM SWAY)

HOW DO YOU GET A JOB LIKE THIS?

WWW.STARTHEREGOPLACES.COM/BIZ15
Go here and take the first step toward the career you want.

START HERE. GO PLACES.
If you know business and accounting, you can get a job anywhere. Because the skills you learn in business – strategic and analytical thinking, communication, and leadership – are always in demand. In some of the coolest industries in the world. Even in the movies.

American Institute of Certified Public Accountants

Women targeted by IBM

By Peter Preston
COLLEGIAN STAFF

IBM is one of few companies actively looking to diversify their workforce. Cathy Lasser, IBM's first and newly appointed Vice President of Business to Business, gave a lecture at Smith College this past Friday entitled "e-Business is She Business – a Transformation Story," as part of the Executive Access lecture series.

The Executive Access lecture series, sponsored by Smith's Picker Engineering Program and a grant from the Ford Motor Company, is an ongoing program in which top engineering professionals share their work and insight with students.

As outlined by Lasser, IBM has created several programs promoting a more diverse work force.

"We want the diversity of the company to reflect the diversity of the real world," said Kate Shaw, another IBM representative present at the lecture.

The first way that IBM is recruiting women is through middle school and high school informational programs with the intention of promoting interest in math and the sciences. The goal being to build a solid base of females with interests in engineering related majors once they get into college.

The concern of IBM is mirrored by the numbers of college freshman with interest in math and science majors. In 1995, 20 percent of freshman men and four percent of freshman women entered college with the intent of majoring in math or science. These numbers were down by 12 and three percent respectively from 1985. The decline in interest has been reflected in a workforce in which very few women were even there to begin with.

The "dual path" program within IBM allows engineers to experience both sides of the business. Lasser, an engineer with math and computer science majors and a master of business administration, began her work for IBM as a summer intern and followed the "dual path" program through the ranks.

As an engineer, Lasser was promoted through both sides of the business, the technical and the money side.

"Marketing is one of the only aspects of this business that I haven't been involved in," said Lasser.

In order to attract and assist female workers, IBM has installed several programs within the company in order to make life a little easier on the working woman.

The Work/Life program, a model in the industry, aims to retain key talents of employees by offering flexible work schedules, the option to work from home, a three-year leave of absence, and elder – and child-care services. IBM recently opened its first in-house childcare center at one of its New York locations.

The reason for IBM's growing interest in female engineers is the recent boom that the internet has provided for businesses.

IBM coined the phrase "e-Business," and wants to remain one of the leading forces in the new technologies. IBM looks at the Internet as the foundation for doing business in the future. The Internet can provide an exchange of information seamlessly and without people.

IBM is looking towards the female workforce in order to ensure a well-rounded representation of the real business world, as women own over forty percent of entrepreneurial e-businesses.

SCOTT HEAVEY/COLLEGIAN

Loading zone

A WHEELBARROW RESTS INSIDE BARTLETT HALL AS PART OF ONGOING CONSTRUCTION.

Film looks at advertising's effects

DAILY COLLEGIAN

MADELINE BAKER OF THE RADICAL STUDENT UNION INTRODUCES THE FILM Slim Hopes AS PART OF INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY.

By Catherine Turner
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Three days before the official International Women's Day, the Radical Student Union began its observance of the day by showing two films concerning women's issues.

The first film, Slim Hopes, was a movie about advertising and the obsession with thinness. Jean Kilbourne, who spoke on the video, described how women are dehumanized in ads, and how ads create false images and expectations for women and society.

"These stereotypes exist in all areas of our lives but none are as persuasive or pervasive as in ads," Kilbourne said in the film.

She said that women learn from a very early age to spend immense time, energy and money on trying to achieve flawlessness. Ads are constantly turning the [female] body into an object, used as a thing. She went on to profess that the self esteem of girls plummets at adolescence, and that a high percentage of young women have some sort of an eating disorder.

She then went on to describe that ads feature women that weigh 23 percent less than the average woman, thus fueling a booming diet industry. Kilbourne also warned that dieting, especially when young, is a sure way to get osteoporosis.

The subject then turned to the way women's bodies are distorted, dismembered and changed in ads by computers that can touch-up, airbrush and cut out unsightly portions of a woman's body. Kilbourne also talked about plastic surgery, commenting that women who get breast implants loose all sensation in their breasts as a result of the implant. She said that women are moving directly from being the subject of pleasure to being an object of pleasure.

The rest of her talk centered around food, and the connections between food, sex, women and control.

"It's a moral issue, the good girl is the thin girl," Kilbourne said. "Women are shamed for eating. Food should be a source of joy and pleasure as well as nourishment. But the thin girl is in control of her appetite. The fat girl is the bad girl. This prejudice keeps women in line. It's the last acceptable social prejudice."

Finally, she drew the connection between dieting and smoking: stating that cigarette ads target women by trying to get them to smoke instead of eat.

"We should approach this problem as a public health problem," Kilbourne said. "We must protest. We must change. Women need to support each other and men need to support women [too]."

After the first film there was a short discussion in which members of the audience commented on the film. A few people talked about the breast implant part of the video.

Madeline Baker, a junior Social Thought and Political Economy major said that she found it interesting that "a woman can walk around and not even know what's going on with her body," that it was almost like "alienation from your own body."

The second film, entitled War Zone was about a woman who walked around on the streets of New York City and New Orleans with a camera. Whenever a man made a catcall or a comment at her she would turn around and confront the man on his behavior on camera.

The woman in the film stated that she used her camera, "as a weapon that I could turn on men the same way they turn their aggression on me."

There were different reactions to the confrontation. Some men would seem embarrassed, others would try to explain themselves, and many more would become angry and even violent toward the filmmaker.

She also interviewed other women who have been harassed on the streets. One woman, Natasha from New York City, said that she also confronts men when they catcall her.

"The reason why I don't ignore it is because by ignoring them you're giving them the power," she said.

The film touched on many issues, including safety and rape. At the end, there was audio of a woman calling 911 to report someone had broken into her house. While the footage on screen was of rain dripping off of a benign awning, all the audience heard was a woman screaming as she was being attacked.

"I want the majority of men to know that their mothers and daughters are not safe on the street," the filmmaker said at the end. "Women in particular have to take their destinies into their own hands."

After the lights flickered on and the video ran out, a stunned crowd sat in silence. After a few minutes, discussion began.

"That movie is a real mix of kind of funny stuff and kind of scary stuff," Baker said.

Several members of the audience brought up the power-dynamics between men and women, and the anger and violence that many men project out when confronted about their behavior. Others brought up the fact that harassment occurs in public space.

"It's good to be aware but at the same time there are things you can do to make public space more safe," Lisa DePiano, a graduate student in the Regional Planning department said. "You don't want to be afraid of people. It's good to make eye contact and say hello, but I don't want to live in a world where I'm afraid to walk down the street."

Baker brought the evening's discussion together when she described both of the films in her final comment.

"Watching Slim Hopes and then this movie, we're looking at how women are portrayed and then how people react to that on the street," she said. "[We're] putting it in a cultural context."

The RSU is hosting several videos for International Women's Day, including Tough Guise, today as an addition to their regular film series.

For more information please contact the RSU.

■ war

continued from page 1

Taliban forces in a cave complex in the Shahi-Kot area south of Gardez, in the Paktia province of Afghanistan.

On March 1 troops from 101st Airborne Division and the 10th Mountain Division were inserted into the operational area, known as Objective Remington. Friendly Afghan forces assumed blocking positions around the area. Two thousand troops are under the command of 10th Mountain commander Major General Buster Hagenbeck. Approximately half of the 2000 troops are Afghan. U.S. conventional and Special Forces and Special Operating Forces, and coalition Special Operating Forces constitute the other half.

"The fighting, as you all know, has been fierce. Enemy forces in this area are dug in. They're in caves. They're also in natural fighting positions," Gen. Tommy Franks, commander of Central Command said. "They're using small arms: machine guns, rocket-propelled grenades, mortars. And I've also seen reports of man-portable surface-to-air missile systems. Although we have not had any aircraft struck by those systems, to my knowledge."

Several helicopters sustained damage from enemy ground fire. Over 80 pieces of artillery have been deployed on the battlefield.

"There are a lot of forms of artillery. Some of it — I never was a very good artillerysman, but I do appreciate the necessity of having massed fire. Massed fire can come from an artillery weapon, ground-to-ground fire. I will say that we have some such weapons in this fight now, specifically mortars that we have up there," Franks said. "Another form of, quotes, "artillery" is air-to-ground fires. We right now are employing strike aircraft, to include A-10s, F-15s, B-1s, B-52s, AC-130 gunships, as well as some French aircraft involved in providing close air support. And so, as a combat arms officer, I will tell you, you always want to have indirect fire support available, and that fire support has been and will continue to be available to these forces on the ground.

On the Net: Central Command:http://www.centcom.mil; the Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

Craig Kielburger

NEWMAN CENTER INVITES YOU

To hear
Craig Kielburger speak about
ChildLabor and Children's Rights

March 7, 2002

7pm

Newman Center Cafe

Sponsored by
Rev. Brian Boland Memorial Lecture

472 N Pleasant St., Amherst, MA
413.549.0300

FTC
"Free the Children"
What can you do to free the children?

jostens

PURCHASE YOUR OFFICIAL UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CLASS RING

A Jostens representative will be on campus
March 5th & 6th
10am - 3pm On the Campus center Concourse

Save up to $200.00

$50 DEPOSIT REQUIRED *MAJOR CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM "WISDOM IS A GOOD THING, BUT THE ONLY THING WORTH HAVING IS WISDOM." ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Athletics face threat of budget cut

The threat of closure and cuts has hit yet another aspect of day-to-day life at the University of Massachusetts; this time athletics is feeling the brunt of school's budget situation.

Following weeks of cryptic comments by the administration that no one would be spared from the current budget situation, those calling for a serious cut to athletics may have their way with the loss of the men's and women's swimming and water polo teams.

Alright, maybe they won't have their way specifically, those addressing the needs for cuts across campus asked that resource and monetary absorbing teams such as men's basketball and football face a redistribution of resources.

Those individuals, many of whom were professors asked for a reallocation of resources, not the elimination of programs and entire sports.

But in the typical style of the way that UMass deals with all budget cuts, they have chosen to eliminate entire sports rather than spreading around the funding.

This is not a new occurrence. In fact, we as a school did the same thing when we chose to eliminate the entire Consumer Studies Department, including the highly lauded apparel marking major. Rather than reallocate funding, the University chose to eliminate the entire school.

So in a sense, the proposed elimination of the aquatics programs is not a surprise. However, it is unwarranted. All four teams are ranked well within the scope of college athletics. Men's Swimming and Diving has won a total of nine New England Championships and five Atlantic 10 Championships, most recent being this year. The women's team recently won an Atlantic 10 Championship in 2001. Women's water polo has an amazing record with rankings in the top 20 U.S. National Water Polo teams as recently as 2001, while Men's Water Polo took the Eastern Championship in 2001.

Obviously, the quality of the programs that are facing the proposed cuts is not an issue, so what is? Attendance and intake of revenue are recent issues for a number of sports, not simply the aquatics program, so why does the administration hire a new assistant coach for football while in the same breath threatening to eliminate other sports?

And very similar to programs that are facing extinction, what happens to the student athletes that came to the University specifically for water polo or for swimming? Are their needs and feelings ignored much like those of the students in eliminated majors?

UMass has to find another way to deal with the budget cuts. Eliminating sports and programs only depletes the quality of the school rather than improving the situation.

Once again, the students suffer the brunt of the budget cuts.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian

Write for Ed/Op. Send your submissions to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com, or stop by our office at 113 Campus Center basement.

The battle of inches:

Examining our desensitization to the news

BILL LARKIN

I criticize the media often. Aware of the concentration of ownership shared by a few press magnates, I loathe the corporate, right-wing influence that cripples the fourth estate. A.J. Liebling, while zealous, was wrong. The press should be judged not only by the stories it covers, but also by the stories it ignores.

At times I feel alone, a handless prisoner screaming in a deaf cell.

Few of my associates and friends read a newspaper, or watch television news broadcasts. A smaller number visit news sites on the Internet or listen to news radio. They know little about money laundering, human rights abuses, environmental rape and military slaughter. These are the abortions ignored, or camouflaged, by my industry.

But there are other equally saddening events unfolding in our world that fill the presses, both mainstream and alternative. They pose the questions we, as citizens, have the duty to answer. Despite the censorship that shapes our world, we can use the fjords of available information to improve it. Before the hidden wounds may be healed, however, the obvious must be encountered.

Unfortunately, we are stuck in a world of informational pro-choice. We do not live in a totalitarian state. No armed sentry forces us to read the New York Times – despite its ills – over breakfast. And the costs are grave.

My faith is lacking, and my hopes are dashed by the concrete. Our biology curses our perception with the tendency to forget that which we encounter again and again. Therefore, although Associated Press photographers and Reuters reporters shell our newsstands with the horrors of the Arab-Israeli conflict, we dismiss the struggles as tired tragedy. That is, if we bother to read about them at all. In a modern world where time and affluence are directly proportional, citizenship ranks low on the hierarchy of American priorities.

On Monday, I read a story in the New York Times titled, "From Beneath an Olive Tree, a Palestinian Sniper Kills 10." Above the article's title, a photograph depicts mourners engulfed in a sea of narrow white tombstones. The crowd, shrouded in sunglasses and trembling hands, attended a funeral for nine Israelis killed by a Palestinian suicide bomber.

In response to the metaphoric shootings, the Israeli army invaded a Palestinian refugee camp. James Bennet writes:

"Today at the checkpoint here, spent M-16 shells littered the sandy ground, and blood stained one of the waist-high cement blocks intended to protect the soldiers. A shattered pair of wraparound purple sunglasses, a style favored by Israeli soldiers, lay on top of another block beside an overturned plastic coffee cup."

But Bennet's moving prose will fall on deaf ears. We are too accustomed to black tales of Arab-Israeli violence. And for shame. Despite the trans-Atlantic gulf, we are not separated from the bleak that spills from the Israelis and the Palestinians. We ignore the abuses of the both worlds, hungry for Arab resources and dependent on Jewish geopolitics. Our dollars flow to Saudi Arabia and our weapons sail to Israel.

Neither side possesses the diplomatic leverage to end the death cycle. The United States is the sole power capable of brokering peace. But, as long as apathy and ignorance color our media consumption, America will not move. Our corporate interests will never allow it. As the fighting persists, the Jews demand more machinery and the Arabs pander favorable trade. It may be possible for the public to demand otherwise, but we are too desensitized. The publication of continuous death along the Gaza strip has stopped moving a considerable block of Americans, if it ever did. Besides, George W. Bush's spin doctors have proven to us that intervention – as attempted by Bill Clinton – is futile. Forget about the ex-president's weak diplomatic abilities, his half-hearted efforts, or the pressures then faced by Ariel Sharon and Yassir Arafat. It's not our business. We just fight terror.

If only we would pay attention to the horror of this war. It isn't Afghanistan, where the Pentagon claims our soldiers are ridding that nation of its demons with laser-like precision while sparing every innocent. These battles can be understood on a personal level, but we're blind to it. I wish we could forget, and see tomorrow's headlines anew. I know our hearts are not made of stone, just our heads.

Maybe then we might care about the proposal made by the ruler of Saudi Arabia, crown prince Abdullah. According to the New York Times, he "suggested that the Arab world would offer Israel full normalization of relations in exchange for its withdrawal from all occupied territories." He said he intends to ask the 22-nation Arab League to support the offer at a summit in Beirut in late March. Although vague, the plan would ask Israelis to leave the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the lands they seized during the war in 1967. Israel doesn't want to do this, but they are tiring from the cycles of retribution perpetuated by suicide bombers and soldiers. If they complied, they might enjoy prosperous economic relations with their Arab neighbors, as well as the praise of the United Nations, who has also proposed a similar plan.

Let's let all this "War on Terrorism" rhetoric accomplish something humanitarian. Let's ask the state department to press both sides into a peace agreement: we have a few weeks.

I'm human too. I'm also tired of reading about the bloodshed. In addition to Israel, some of the other problems that curse our planet need our attention. The pox cursing other regions, such as Argentina, China, and Zimbabwe, has not disappeared. The only army that needs to proliferate is the press corps, and a Gaza Treaty goaded by the American public could help them launch a new offensive on global malady. But it all starts with you. Don't dismiss the tales of war – or any atrocity, human or environmental – on the newsstands. It's a battle of inches, fought across the fold and through the back-sections. When you shrug your shoulders, or toss the paper in the trash, you retire this country's humanitarian potential. And if not us, who else has the leverage?

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

ed=o?

Think about this

September 11th. The television cameras. The flames, smoke and dust. It makes me so angry to think about what they did. It makes us all angry. We have to live with it, whether we like it or not.

All your lives, your individual earnings and trials, triumphs and tragedies will become nothing but echoes from miles and miles down the road of history. History teaches us about ourselves. We are people unhesitant to spray fire and firebomb ourselves into oblivion.

I live in fear, just like you.

It's not always there, though. Sometimes there are more powerful things. Things like patience, clarity, simplicity, the presence of good friends, the security of a stable home, good music and…

Freedom, whatever that means. Because as free as you as you think you are (or aren't, hundreds, thousands and (since most of us are Americans) millions more are so much less free. If at all.

It kills me to think of what some have to do, just to survive. They carry a gun at their side at all times because of patriotic duty or feed a baby and themselves with only milk, bread and soup. Go to school where the books are old, the schoolyards are small and the basketball team is the only thing that matters. Choke on dust-filled air in a muggy basement all day making cloths that will be bought by a fortunate child who thinks nothing of where anything they consume actually comes from. Look at the things you own. They are what you show to the world. Are they you? Are they really you? What are they?

ADAM DIXON

They are what you see when you walk in the room. They grab your attention and draw you in.

They are your web, and we are all spiders, both instinctual and reasoning. We choose our hunting grounds carefully, for our webs will not last. They are delicate. They rip and break, but we rebuild them every time. They tear and fall apart before our eyes, and we die.

We watch ourselves die over and over, time and time again. We know it happens every day, yet we cringe to see it own life. This will never change. Yet we do everything in our power to prevent it from happening prematurely. None of us want to die before our time. It's like being robbed of virginity.

I just want it on my own terms. I want it to come when I'm ready. I want the most before I die. Sounds kind of selfish, doesn't it?

However, does it not sound like you? Do you have a problem admitting you're a selfish person? We all are, sometimes, if not all the time. We're Americans. We consume more natural resources and expel more pollution than any other industrial nation.

I wonder if our selfishness ever leaves, but is only hiding its vain polished head for a moment's time.

Some people ask if your so disillusioned from society, why not give yourself a break from society and detach yourself from it, like Thoreau, Buddha, Krishnamurti, Emily Dickinson, Ken Kesey and all the true hippies?

Maybe going off and doing their own thing worked for them, but I wish there was a way to change everything, instead of just feeling hopeless about the state of affairs our world currently faces.

Maybe I shouldn't try to change to the world. Maybe I should just stick to my own problem like everyone else. That's just the way things are supposed to be handled nowadays; everyone worries about their own little life, everyone is responsible for taking care of their business. If we get some free time, then and only then do we tackle the liberal causes.

Is it just me? Or will nothing ever get done this way? I mean, maybe it will, but I'll be an old bearded man before I see any major progress. Will the West Banks still run with bloody tides when I'm 80, or can Zionists and Palestinians learn to live in peace? Will one half of Africa be infected with HIV before I'm 50-years-old, or will pharmaceutical companies in America give up their patents so the same drugs can be produced in those countries for one-forth of the price? Will Americans allow another president to steal the presidency and make a mockery of our political system when I'm 60-years-old like they did when I was 17?

Here's something I'm still struggling to comprehend, because it means I can't blame anyone: change cannot be perceived externally in our individual hearts and minds. When Lincoln freed the slaves, did blacks stop working for whites for practically nothing? Was their status elevated, even in the north? No, of course not. And do you know why? Because a group of guys sitting in a room interpreting and deciding what a document says will never incite people to treat each other equally and with compassion. They may determine what is law. But at the time, did anyone think it truly unlawful to treat blacks poorly even after the Emancipation Proclamation?

The American public needed to see a Renaissance in Harlem, a civil rights movement, multiple assassinations, affirmative action and countless films by black directors before they could hope to empathize with the black community. Still, even after all this progress, I doubt anyone will tell me race isn't an issue in this country. It's always an issue and will be for a long time. African Americans and people who have been subjugated in the past have a hard time forgetting painful memories like slavery, just like the Jews can't forget the Holocaust of WWII and the Native Americans can't forget the Holocaust which started roughly five hundred years ago and has yet to end. The people that were wronged can't forget the pain and all the people who were responsible want to do…is forget. Our nature is short-sighted, but it is basically good.

Here's the thing: we still may have a long way to go until we fix all the problems our old and current leaders have given us, but for each person that chooses to take five minutes to write their congressman, buy a half-electric car instead of an eight-cylinder SUV, talk to someone they wouldn't have the day before, someone of a different gender, race or background. Anytime someone puts a little thought into their actions, it leads to great things.

I hate thinking of change as a gradual process, because there is so much more hope for the future when you view it as happening everyday, which can happen in your life and your life alone. But now it sounds like I'm contradicting myself, so I'll just put it like this: trust in what you know to be right if you've seen it work yourself. There's not much else you can trust completely besides yourself. If something doesn't work for you, then don't follow it. Trust in yourself to know right from wrong. Follow the right. It's really that simple.

Adam Dixon is a UMass student.

www.dailycollegian.com

Wasting time in classes

SAM WILKINSON

And so, in what will hopefully be my final semester of college, I find myself asking questions that surely all semi-cosmopolitan must ask themselves. "What will I do with myself?" "Where will I go?" "Am I going to graduate?" This is not a column about those questions.

Instead, I find myself raging at a University that would condescend to tell students what's best for them, especially students in their final semesters. How many of us have been forced to endure classes that neither matter to us personally, nor impact us professionally? How many of us have been forced to sit through classes because some body else thinks they would be a good idea?

I like most students. I did my time in the trenches: Entomology, Forestry, Ethics, Contemporary World Cinema, International Short Story and Astronomy. I sat through the classes and did the modicum of work necessary to pass them all. You my fellow near-graduates have surely done the same thing.

Well now that I'm in my final semester, I'm sick of it. I find myself rotting my way through both an introductory French class and an African History class for no other reason than I was told to be there. This is meant as no disrespect to the professors of both classes (who seem perfectly competent and interested in their academic pursuits), but I don't want to be there.

Initially, I don't want to be there for specific reasons: I won't speak French again and the students in my African History class are stupid.

I won't speak French again because I'm not planning on a move to Paris. I won't speak French again because the French will answer in English because God forbid anybody speak their most holy of languages. I won't speak French because it is Spanish that is sweeping the land. I won't speak French again because I just don't like it.

As for my African History class, I have never in my life run into students as stupid as those in my class. Not all of the students, of course, but students who insist on calling African ethnicities "tribes" or "natives" make me want to vomit. It is unbelievable in this day and age that people would ask questions like "why didn't the Africans become more like Europe if Europe was controlling them and stuff." Or "shouldn't Africa use all of its gold to buy technology and stuff, instead of all that jewelry?" Or "Is this class a diversity requirement or whatever, because I don't want to be here if it's not?"

This is making me a better person?

I think not.

Education is supposed be an exploration, but instead of finding our way here at UMass, our way is found for us. I'm willing to concede on requirements for my major – I'm interested in Political Science enough to trust the recommendations made to me by my department. However when my College, and the University, are telling me that I can't graduate because I haven't taken two semesters of French or that I haven't sat through enough introductory classes filled with freshmen, well, that leaves a bad taste in my mouth.

Not that UMass cares. To its way of thinking, I am more "diverse" now that I've studied the language of another people and the history of another continent.

Sigh.

I hardly imagine that studying the language of brutal oppressors (who, incidentally, badly damaged significant tracts of Africa while colonially controlling the continent) makes me any more diverse. Instead, it makes me the unwilling participant in a glorification of the European world that doesn't interest me.

Is tearing my hair out at the questions asked by my, and I am loathe to use the term, peers making me any more diverse either? I doubt it. Instead, I am learning about the real ignorance of the world. Are they you? Are they really you? What are they?

They are what you see when you walk in the room. They grab your attention and draw you in.

They are your web, and we are all spiders, both instinctual and reasoning. We choose our hunting grounds carefully, for our webs will not last. They are delicate. They rip and break, but we rebuild them every time. They tear and fall apart before our eyes, and we die.

We watch ourselves die over and over, time and time again. We know it happens every day, yet we cringe to see it own life. This will never change. Yet we do everything in our power to prevent it from happening prematurely. None of us want to die before our time. It's like being robbed of virginity.

I just want it on my own terms. I want it to come when I'm ready. I want the most before I die. Sounds kind of selfish, doesn't it?

However, does it not sound like you? Do you have a problem admitting you're a selfish person? We all are, sometimes, if not all the time. We're Americans. We consume more natural resources and expel more pollution than any other industrial nation.

I wonder if our selfishness ever leaves, but is only hiding its vain polished head for a moment's time.

Some people ask if your so disillusioned from society, why not give yourself a break from society and detach yourself from it, like Thoreau, Buddha, Krishnamurti, Emily Dickinson, Ken Kesey and all the true hippies?

We watch ourselves die over and over, time and time again. We know it happens every day, yet we cringe to see it own life. This will never change. Yet we do everything in our power to prevent it from happening prematurely. None of us want to die before our time. It's like being robbed of virginity.

I just want it on my own terms. I want it to come when I'm ready. I want the most before I die. Sounds kind of selfish, doesn't it?

However, does it not sound like you? Do you have a problem admitting you're a selfish person? We all are, sometimes, if not all the time. We're Americans. We consume more natural resources and expel more pollution than any other industrial nation.

I wonder if our selfishness ever leaves, but is only hiding its vain polished head for a moment's time.

Some people ask if your so disillusioned from society, why not give yourself a break from society and detach yourself from it, like Thoreau, Buddha, Krishnamurti, Emily Dickinson, Ken Kesey and all the true hippies?

Maybe going off and doing their own thing worked for them, but I wish there was a way to change everything, instead of just feeling hopeless about the state of affairs our world currently faces.

Maybe I shouldn't try to change to the world. Maybe I should just stick to my own problem like everyone else.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 3.06.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Jackson versus Stallone: A Call to Battle Stations Who will be the victor ?

At the beginning of time, two men were birthed by a power that cannot be conveyed through the clumsy tongues of mere mortal beings. For the purposes of this article, we will call these majestic entities Tito Jackson and Frank Stallone. Since the time of their spawning, they have existed as light does to darkness, or as fire does to water. Functioning as polar opposites each lay dormant paralyzed by the ebb and flow of the other's mythical grandeur, until several evil monks raided the Glam Slam Metal Jam and sacrificed Bret Michael's testicle thus neutralizing the balance that existed between good and evil. In their quests for universal domination, Frank and Tito will face off. Who will be the victor? There have been numerous accounts by anonymous sources all over Los Angeles who have witnessed pre-fight displays of confidence.

The following is a rant by Tito Jackson, accidentally recorded on a camcorder by a tourist family outside an Anaheim IN and Out Burger.

Let me first begin by stating outright that Frank Stallone is a worthless, sweaty, wig wearing, furry little bastard. He is neither an actor nor a musician, but rather a savage circus monkey, who at his half-Italian half-Mongoloid brother's expense shamelessly unleashes album after ungodly album upon the world and then, although he has never won critical acclaim (or anything for that matter), he posts passages regarding his legendary status on his website. Frank Stallone is a hollow half of a man. The only time I was ever decently entertained by Frank Stallone was during his surprise cameo in the clean-up scene that ran through the credits of his brother's first and last adult movie Ramboned, the first and least popular installment of the Rambo series.

Anyone who would dare side with Frank Stallone over me, "Poppa T" in this battle for the ages would most likely sell their soul to the devil for the favor of being sodomized by a rabid dog. Speaking of rabid dogs, did you know that Frank Stallone's mother claims that she can "predict the future by rubbing, penetrating and slapping human ass:" I guess one could say that she is kind of like a proctologist in the same sense that Frank Stallone is kind of like a musician (and for the record, both Frank's mom and Frank's career are covered in fecal matter). To me it is not surprising that Mrs. Stallone is a "master of the ass," she did give birth to two of the most gigantic asses on the face of the earth. Seriously though, how desperate does one have to be for money to put a hand down a stranger's pants? Frank Stallone is a terrible son to his poor mother. You'll never see my mom slappin' booty for a few bucks.

I, in addition to having a set of decent moral convictions and a deeply meaningful career, am also a brute physical force to be reckoned with. I quote from the findings of a prestigious group of scientists who conducted a variety of experiments pertaining to the structural integrity of my hair in the mid seventies (Tito pulls out an old piece of paper and begins to read), "In theory, Tito's hair (or "fro") would be able to withstand a severe barrage of arms fire, over three tons of pressure per square inch, and other such detriments including, but not limited to, certain forms of biological warfare." What the hell can Frankie do to combat a weapon such as my "fro," Frankie's greasy man weave is susceptible to melting and burning under the suns rays even on the most overcast of days. In the fight to come, the bottom line is this: I had 15 number one hits while Frank was still at his mother's breast. Physically, I have the edge on Frank, and if Frank tries to pull some slappy tricks like bringing in that bastard Chuck Zito, I can always count on Bubbles the Monkey, or the elephant man to save me.

Frank Stallone's press release in regards to the long awaited bid for power –

Why should I dominate the feeble Tito Jackson, well for starters I am the brother of the Italian Stallion, Sylvester Stallone. Sure, Tito is Michael's brother, but is Michael known for destroying bad guys? I had an amateur boxing career, which was put to test on May 12, 1992, when Geraldo Rivera decided to test his manhood against me in the ring. I dominated Geraldo with a stunning left from this mighty fist.

Even my friends are tougher: Chuck Zito, former Hell's Angel, a.k.a. The Italian Bad Boy, a.k.a. The Bodyguard to the Stars, a.k.a. Chuckie Pancamo from the HBO series "Oz." Yeah him – he gave Jean-Claude Van Damme a beat down back in '98.

To put it simply I am a god; I sit high in the sky, while Tito is left to crawl so low like a dog begging for scraps at the family dinner table. Yet the man standing before you has not escaped tragedy. In 1996, while lounging in my brother's vacation home on the French Riviera, I drifted off while sipping one of my whey shakes and awoke to a scene that was so innately shocking I passed out no sooner than I had awakened. The next time I opened my eyes I was in a hospital, they told me they had found me in a puddle of my own urine – I knew I had hit rock bottom. It took five years of intense reconstructive surgery and rehabilitation until I saw a man staring back at me in the mirror. Later that year a grace of good fortune befell me; my brother, busy filming Demolition Man, asked me to stand in for him in a James Lipton interview (Inside the Actors Studio). It allowed me to expound upon that which transcends literal meaning in my new movie Death Blow, the vessel through which God speaks.

The bottom line is that I am just too much of a man for Tito to handle, and I'm sick of hearing how great that lame-oid claims to be. It makes me sick to think that a person would even consider my losing to this piece of st. After I knock him out with this left, I'm gonna shave off that bionic afro and weave it into a hat to keep my manhood warm on brisk autumn days. Knowing this, how can one side with Tito; besides, even if I start to lose, I have Rocky in my corner. I'll take that over Captain Eo any day.

So who will be the victor? Well your guess is as good as mine. However, I must be honest; I'm hoping for another Jackson Five reunion.

Brent Souza is a Collegian correspondent.

COURTESY FINE ARTS CENTER

Triangle jazz series

By Eitan Novotny
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

What happens when you cross American Jazz with traditional Japanese music? Before you go look up the number of someone in UMJAMS to find out what they think, go get concert tickets. The Magic Triangle Jazz series' next concert is this Thursday, March 7, and they are bringing Brew to Amherst. Brew is a trio consisting of Miya Masaoka, koto, Reggie Workman, bass, and Gerry Hemingway, percussion. For those who do not know what a koto is (myself included before writing this,) it is a traditional Japanese instrument that has thirteen strings and has a body made from two pieces of Paulownia wood, originally intended to imitate the shape of a crouching dragon.

The unique voice behind Brew is Miya Masaoka and her modified 17 stringed Japanese zither; it has five extra strings and an electronic interface. Her musical training started on piano when she was young. She became seriously interested in the koto while studying for her bachelor of arts in music (magna cum laude) at San Francisco State University. After she completed a Master of Arts in Composition at Mills College in Oakland, Masaoka began working at places like STIM, in Amsterdam, Holland. There, she worked on a midi interface for the koto in order to expand its sonic abilities. Masaoka other work, which has included a concert with 3,000 bees and a concert with the sounds of ten naked Asian men, has been nothing but unique and enthralling.

Playing alongside Masaoka will be legendary bassist Reggie Workman. He has been in the music industry since 1957, and has worked with more greats than can fit in this space. Just to mention a few, Workman has worked with John Coltrane, Art Blakey, Wayne Shorter, Miles Davis, Max Roach, Thelonious Monk, Alice Coltrane and Marilyn Crispell. Workman has brought his virtuoso level playing to those and other over the

Turn to JAZZ, page 7

40 Days hilarious look at dating scene

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

40 DAYS AND 40 NIGHTS
Directed by Michael Lehmann;
Starring Josh Hartnett and Shannyn Sossamon
Playing at CineMark 12, Hadley

Any movie that starts off with a Technicolor Virgin Mary winking at Josh Hartnett while Jesus tosses him a thumbs-up has to be a good flick. 40 Days and 40 Nights is a surprisingly hilarious flick that actually offers sincere insights – amongst shots of seas of breasts and naked women strolling down the street.

Matt Sullivan, played by Josh Hartnett, is your basic twenty-something male. He likes women, and he likes sleeping with women. But there's that one girl that got away – Nicole (Vinessa Shaw), the knockout who stomped on his heart, and then got engaged to a yuppie schmuck soon after.

Matt's love life is, for a lack of a better term, screwed. Whenever he has sex, he feels sucked into a black hole once he realizes the woman he's with isn't Nicole. So, Matt takes a stand. He visits his almost-a-priest brother, and decides to give up sex (and all things sex related) for the forty days of Lent. His friends all tell him it can't be done, but he begins to find clarity he never knew before.

Everything is going well, until Erica (Shannyn Sossamon) walks into his laundry mat – and he totally falls for her. As his friends place bets on his ability to finish the forty days completely celibate, Nicole tries to shove her way back into Matt's life, and Matt starts to lose Erica. Trust me, it's really not as confusing as it sounds. Just remember the movie is geared towards guys – it couldn't possibly be that complex.

40 Days is a man's movie – naked chicks, lots of masturbation scenes and two very cute girls offering menage a trois. Basically, this flick is every guy's fantasy. But there is also a cutting social commentary on the way our society operates: Boy meets girl, boy sleeps with girl thinking about the girl he's still madly in love with, girl feels used, boy and girl go their separate ways, boy and girl are both miserable. But when Matt cuts out the sex, he "connects on a whole other level." He really gets to know the person, instead of just "gettin' it on."

Josh Hartnett, as any girl will tell you is completely adorable, but he played his character with an underdog panache that is seldom seen by Teen Beat heartthrobs. The supporting cast is huge but hilarious. And Shannyn Sossamon, in her first big film post-Knight's Tale-debut, scores as a real girl, with a different sort of beauty and a whole lot of character.

The love shared between Erica and Matt is true and sweet – and turns what could have just been a cynical and gratuitous movie into something better than just a laugh-fest. It makes you smile, and it makes you want something more than just a good time in bed. For girls, it'll be a guy who will ride around on a bus all day with you just to get to know you better. For guys, it'll be a girl in a thong photocopying her butt. Potato, po-tahto.

COURTESY MIRAMAX

JOSH HARTNETT (RIGHT) AND SHANNYN SOSSAMON FALL IN LOVE IN 40 Days and 40 Nights

COURTESY MIRAMAX

THE PAINFUL LOOK OF A MAN WHO CANNOT ACT UPON HIS DESIRES. YOWZA.

Custom's CD crude and Cranes' depressing

CRANES
Future Songs
Instinct

The early morning sun glaring through the window next to your bed is shining onto your thin eyelids irritating your reflexes and forcing you from slumber into consciousness. Glancing outside, you take in the beautiful clear weather and engage in semi-awake dreams involving the particularly hot chick or guy that sits near you in your first class of the day. On the floor next to the side of your bed, you reach down to reanalyze a paper you wrote while drunk last night and realize it wasn't that bad. In fact, it may be the best thing you have ever written. Today is shaping up to be a good day.

Why is it then that your head is heavy with depression to the extent that you would rather not climb from bed? Feeling as though someone just shot your favorite childhood pet in front of you, you wonder why your mental health has been crippled. Well, for starters, you left Cranes' new album Future Songs on repeat in your stereo last night, and that stuff will @#$% you up if you're not careful.

Future Songs isn't a bad album; it's just that after listening to it all the way through I feel as though I should be receiving veteran's compensation. It is a truly worthwhile effort. Both dark and disturbing, Songs presents simple yet haunting melodies riddled with reverb and delay effects that together construct a unique ambience that is both foreboding and mysterious, infecting each track with an eerie, otherworldly feeling that flows between songs.

The only negative sentiments that I will direct toward this band are in regards to the vocalist who should know better than to front a band with a voice like hers. She honestly sounds like a whining six-year-old with emphysema. Her narrow range and horrible lyrics contaminate every track, and effectively destroy every unique and well-produced song on the album. This band has a lot to offer; however, they would have a lot more to offer if they ever decided to beat their singer to the brink of death and then brick her into a wall. (Justen Ham)

significant others

CUSTOM
Faster
BMG

Maybe you've heard the song on the radio. Maybe you abruptly turned the station when you heard it. Either way, if you stopped and listened, you'd probably be surprised, or maybe even amused by the song "Hey Mister," the first single from Custom, a New York-based modern rocker with a flair for saying whatever sexually suggestive thought pops into his head.

If Custom was a DJ on the radio, instead of a musician, he'd be a shock jock, just not as good as Howard Stern or Opie and Anthony. "Hey Mister" tells the story of Custom flaunting his sexual relationship with a certain female in the face of the girl's father. As he puts it, "God gave her a perfect body, now I'm all up in it" and "hey mister, on your way to work in your Volvo, suit, and tie, we'll be crawling in your bed soon messing around, maybe getting high." But rest assured the female in question is not as easy as you might think, as Custom says oh so elegantly, "It's not she's a tramp, it's not she's not pure; she just likes getting her fuck on."

Then there's the rest of the album. It's got a touch of uniqueness in its sound but not content. Most of the songs are about relationships gone south. For instance, Custom discusses what happens when "a friend bangs another friend's girlfriend" in the aptly titled track "Morning Spank."

Meanwhile, the songs are heavily overproduced similar to Linkin Park, but more low-key than anything from the aforementioned hard rocking boy band. The background of most of the songs has a drum machine pounding away, leading one to believe that Custom isn't much of an instrumentalist. And then there's his voice that is annoying and raspy, which is probably why it sounds as if he talks rather than sings most of the lyrics. But hey, at least he doesn't sound like another Scott Stapp. (Kurt Polesky)

THE BEATNUTS
Classic Nuts Vol. 1
Loud

Juju and Psycho Les. The Beatnuts, are possibly the only rap act that can boast, with a straight face, actual song crafting skills. Players at the top of the hip-hop game can claim impressive wordplay, tight beats and effortless mic skills all at once. Countless other lessers can claim one or two of the three. The 'nuts claim pieces of all three, but actually have the ear for composition that holds them all together, so it never sounds like amateur hour on the mic while head noddin' beats are blazing, nor do lazy writing or flows screw up a perfectly good instrumental.

The dynamic for disaster is always prevalent, and the line between brilliance and dime-a-dozen, half-assed thug anthems is walked so carefully that sweating it is half the fun. Sometimes the beats can seem a little stale, but there is always that something on the track that keeps you movin.' Juju and Psycho Les on the mic are at times monotone and complacent, but more often their laid-back approach both draws attention to their sometimes lyrical sharpness and exhibits an unaffected shrug past their occasionally eye-rollingly silly rhymes.

Classic Nuts Vol. 1 is unlikely to satisfy those looking for the definitive Beatnuts collection. After five full-length albums and a remix EP, twelve tracks hardly seems comprehensive. What this compilation does do very well is drop 12 excellent cuts with no filler. Unlike most rap albums, these classics are so well arranged and chosen that its easily listenable from beginning to end, putting even the vastly superior OutKast's most recent compilation to shame. No skits, no unnecessary inclusions to bloat the track listing, just a fat-free collection of quality cuts that span from the streetwise "Reign of the Tec" to the crazy bounce of "Watch Out Now." Hey, the 'nuts were so straightforward in this comp, I'll finish their review with the most straightforward cliche possible: there's no escapin' this. (Michael Delano)

THE BEATNUTS ROCK THE HATS AND THE BEATS.

RUDE, CRUDE AND SOCIALLY UNACCEPTABLE. BUT DOESN'T HE LOOK COOL WITH THOSE SHADES AND SEDUCTIVE STUBBLE.

Newman Lenten Service

"Walking in the Light"

Monday, March 11th @ 7pm in the Newman Center Chapel

Reflection by Sister Carol Herbert SSJ

THE MONKEY BAR
BISTRO 63

Wednesday DJ Big Phil
Thursday The Return of Elements w/ DJ Fooz
Friday DJ Menace
Saturday DJ Christian

Rum & Coke and Coors Light - $2.50
Sex on the Beach - $2.75
Bud & Bud Light Draft 60 oz Pitcher - $5.00
40 oz Pitcher - $4.00

Featuring: Sam Adams Light
Bacardi Silver

Available for private parties
Call for information

The Monkey Bar
63 North Pleasant St.
Downtown Amherst
259-1600

BUSTA RHYMES
WITH SPECIAL GUEST
SUNDAY, MARCH 10, 2002
JOHN M. GREENE HALL, SMITH COLLEGE
8 P.M.
DOORS OPEN AT 7 P.M.
TICKETS ON SALE FRIDAY, FEB. 22ND
GENERAL PUBLIC, $22. AT:
FOR THE RECORD
NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE
TICKETMASTER
5-COLLEGE W/ VALID ID, $18. AT:
UMASS, TICKETS UNLIMITED
AMHERST COLLEGE CAMPUS CENTER, RM. 103
MT. HOLYOKE-BLANCHARD CAMPUS CENTER, INFO. DESK
GENESIS - THE TOUR
PRESENTED BY SMITH COLLEGE REC COUNCIL

■ jazz

continued from page 7

COURTESY FINE ARTS CENTER

MIYA MASAOKA, REGGIE WORKMAN AND GERRY HEMMINGWAY PLAY THIS THURSDAY AT AMHERST COLLEGE.

years. In the 1970s, he was the leader of the "Top Shelf Ensemble." From 1982, things changed musically for Workman with the forming of "The Reggie Workman Ensemble" and "the Reggie Workman Extravaganza" as well as other projects. With the new sound he has created, he has released many albums with his unique style of composing and playing.

On percussion for the ensemble is Gerry Hemingway. He has been composing and performing since 1974. As well as ensemble work, he has done a lot of solo work with many different percussive instruments. One notable project Hemingway has been evolved with (for 22 years) is the BassDrumBone with Ray Anderson and Mark Helias.

The melding of these three unique styles should prove to be a palatable mix for anyone who likes jazz. In addition, the electronic mix is going to probably be one not to miss, as Masaoka and Hemingway have worked with electronic elements heavily in their past. This show is one not to miss if you need something to do Thursday night.

Tickets are $6 for students and $9 for the general public. Advance tickets are available through the Fine Arts Center Box office, at 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS. The concert is at 8:00PM in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College.

The complexity of the memoir

By Kavita Mishra
BROWN DAILY HERALD (BROWN UNIVERSITY)

(U-WIRE) PROVIDENCE, R.I. – Jill Ker Conway, the best-selling author of the memoir The Road to Coorain and the first female president of Smith College, discussed autobiographical writing and the emergence of women's narratives in the male dominated genre Monday afternoon.

Ker Conway, who wrote the subsequent autobiographies True North and A Woman's Education, said memoirs and biographies are the only genres general readers can turn to today for insight into their own lives. Older generations read realistic fiction as "a guide for life," but modern fiction drifts from this standard by playing with endings, she said.

Writings in philosophy, literary criticism and psychology are also inaccessible to the reader because the languages are "highly specialized," Ker Conway said.

Biographical writing demands that an author analyzes in-depth the subject's free will, determinism, impact of life circumstances on motivation and questions of moral choices, she said.

Memoirs "raise great humanistic questions," she added.

In her first memoir, Ker Conway wanted to "pay tribute to the males" in her life, unlike the tendency of most feminist writings to find men as the source of all evil in their lives, she said.

"I wanted to write a narrative that makes a lot of feminist questions real and also recognizes father, brothers, lovers ... and does not focus exclusively on females," she said.

Autobiographical narratives gained in popularity after the breaking of traditional representations of the male "heroic mold," Ker Conway said. Memoirs of men in the world wars demonstrate the impact of modern warfare on the "misleading, destructive heroic imagery" with which they entered the wars, she said.

Male leaders and political figures dominated the autobiographical narrative until the late 18th-century. And authors still wrote autobiographies of women "as told to a male," Ker Conway said.

The abolitionist movement helped create a wider sphere for the women's narrative, she said. Women entered the genre in large numbers with the feminist movement and in the 1960s, she said.

Increased involvement of women in the Vietnam War as nurses, for example, produced an "outpouring" of autobiographies, she said.

Ker Conway stressed that authors must "change gears now and then to explain what the context is" and refrain from personalizing these background events when writing a memoir. Some authors maintain emotional tones when they describe world and political events, she said.

Major ethical concerns when writing a memoir include honesty, integrity and respect for other people's privacy, Ker Conway said. "You don't make yourself look too good."

The key to the genre is daily reflection, which involves questioning one's past, motivations and plausible future, Ker Conway said. Reflection is an "important and valuable exercise at any age," as evidenced by the emergence of memoirs by younger authors, she said.

Ker Conway is in the process of writing her second detective novel with close friend and former President of Mount Holyoke College, Elizabeth Kennan. The mysteries, Ker Conway said, revolve around a "mythical" academic community.

"We keep killing off our most-hated academic types," she said.

A visiting professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Ker Conway is also currently editing the memoir of her late husband John J. Conway, a Canadian war hero and professor of history at Harvard.

COURTESY AMAZON.COM

THE ROAD FROM COORAIN, BY BEST SELLING AUTHOR JILL KER CONWAY.

www.dailycollegian.com

Silver, Copper, Jewelry, Fimo, Beads, Leather, Silkpainting, Photo Screenprinting, Tie-dye, Batik, Marbling, Stained Glass and more

STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER

UPCOMING EVENTS:

Today! Wednesday, March 6

Collaborative OPEN HOUSE with UVC-TV19
We cordially invite UMass students, faculty, staff, and administration.
Bagels and coffee 11:00 am
Afternoon workshops and cablecasts, reception and lite fare 4-6 pm
Poetry and literary works/open mic 7 pm, sign-in 6:30pm

Art Cycles: Arts and crafts for young children and parents of UMass students. Children must pre-register and be accompanied by an adult. To register 545-1810.
March 30 - Dance to music, April 20 - The colors of spring, May 4 - Mobile delights

WE OFFER:
FREE MEMBERSHIP AND INSTRUCTION TO ALL UMASS STUDENTS, FACULTY, AND STAFF. MEMBERS FROM THE FOUR COLLEGES MUST PAY A SMALL FEE, $15/SEMESTER OR $25 FOR THE YEAR.

AS A MEMBER OF THE STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER YOU CAN USE THE FACILITIES ANY TIME DURING OUR DROP IN HOURS
Monday: Closed, Tuesday - Thursday: 11-5, Friday: 11-6
Saturday & Sunday: 1-6

SMALL EVENING WORKSHOPS THROUGHOUT THE SEMESTER, THESE WORKSHOPS ALLOW FOR INDIVIDUAL ATTENTION AS YOU LEARN NEW SKILLS AND TECHNIQUES. RA AND RSO WORKSHOPS ALSO SCHEDULED THROUGHOUT THE SEMESTER

BEGINNERS WELCOME!

The Craft Center is located in the basement of the Student Union Building across from the Hatch.
Phone: 545-2096

UNIVERSITY PRODUCTIONS & CONCERTS
Presents
ADDISON GROOVE PROJECT
&
THE COLD DUCK TRIO
&
PLATYPUS COMPLEX
March 6th in the Student Union Ballroom
$3 Students
$5 Non-students
Doors open at 8pm
21+ cash bar

Kerrigan out, owners weigh options

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Boston Red Sox announced the termination of Manager Joe Kerrigan's employment in a press conference yesterday. The team also announced that Third Base Coach Mike Cubbage will assume Kerrigan's oversight of the club's spring training program. The firing comes less than a week after the Red Sox fired General Manager Dan Duquette.

The firing of Kerrigan is another sign of change within the organization, under the control of new owner John Henry and Larry Lucchino, et al. The ownership team took official control of the club last Thursday after purchasing the team Dec. 20.

The Boston Globe reports that while there are a few names being considered to take Kerrigan's place, full time interim GM Mike Port could not name the official candidates due to Major League Baseball rules and regulations regarding tampering with officials employed by other teams.

However, a few names have entered the spotlight as probable candidates including former Red Sox Bench Coach Grady Little, former Pawtucket Red Sox Manager Ken Macha, former Montreal Expos Manager Felipe Alou, and former Philadelphia Phillies Manager Jim Fregosi.

Port said in the press conference, as reported by boston.com, "This kind of decision is always difficult to make, we have the utmost respect for Joe, and admire his work ethic and his achievements as a pitching coach. We firmly believe that this action is in the long-term best interest of this franchise."

While Duquette's firing was considered a foregone conclusion for a management team that has expressed a wish to make the club more accessible to its fans, which Duquette was decidedly not, the fate of Kerrigan seemed less obvious.

Kerrigan was promoted to manager on Aug. 16, 2001, when Jimy Williams was excused from the post. While the team seemed headed in a better direction, it finished the season under Kerrigan at 17-26, with many players, including superstar outfielder Manny Ramirez, expressing their disappointment in one way or another. Ramirez became the lead story in that squabble, when he refused to play the last game of the season, instead returning to his home in the Dominican Republic.

Last season was the final one for the Red Sox under the Yawkey regime, which began when Thomas A. Yawkey bought the team in 1933. Yawkey remained the owner until his death in 1976, and then the club was handed to Yawkey's widow, Jean. Jean Yawkey remained the matriarch of the club until her death in 1992, upon which control was given to a trust group, headed by John Harrington, which owned the club until it's recent sale.

Kerrigan, the Red Sox pitching coach throughout the 90s, came into the job under heavy pressure, having never managed a major league team and having taken the helm of a club that was two games out of the wild card race. However, due to bickering and ill will among players and management, the team fell apart.

Kerrigan was informed of his termination after the Red Sox' game with the Atlanta Braves, which Boston won 4-2. Port said that while Kerrigan was surprised by the news, he took it with the dignity that has been a trademark throughout his tenure with the team.

Several of the Red Sox players have backed Kerrigan in recent weeks regarding his employment, including star shortstop Nomar Garciaparra and recently signed outfielder Johnny Damon.

Cubbage, who by all accounts has not been officially named interim manager of the team, will take over Kerrigan's duties during the team's spring training session. Cubbage was hired in December to the third base coach position, having come from the same position with the Houston Astros. Cubbage also managed nine games for the New York Mets in 1991.

Celebrate good times, come on

[illegible] THIS WEEK AGAINST STONY BROOK WHEN IT COMPETES AGAINST NAVY THIS UPCOMING SATURDAY.

A-10 season all that's left for struggling men's tennis

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

At 0-8 in the winter/spring season, the Massachusetts men's tennis team cannot rely on the wins and losses column to track its improvement. After losing a tough match on the road to Ivy League Dartmouth 7-0 Thursday, coach Judy Dixon realizes that her Minutemen are overmatched against many of these fierce top-notch opponents in the Eastern region.

"Given the team we have, we're overscheduled," said Dixon. "Yet, I expected us to have Brent Davis [transferred] and Rory Theis [injured]. Dartmouth would have been a nice match for us had we had them in the lineup."

Bright spots in the seemingly dismal defeat included brilliant play by the doubles tandem of senior Todd Champeau and Steve Prisco, who just fell short in a tiebreaker to the solid pairing of Jeff Sloves and Drew Dinkmeyer, 9-7.

"Steve and Todd played very well together in doubles," said Dixon. "I think I'm going to leave the doubles as they are. Eric and Scott sometimes play brilliantly and then they fail to perform. There is no middle ground. Scott needs to serve better. But given what we have, it is the best we can do."

In singles play, No. 1 player Prisco again led the Maroon and White despite his ongoing health concerns, including back problems and vertigo. After missing multiple practices the senior captain captured the first set 7-5 against Dartmouth's Sloves. Yet, he unfortunately pulled a muscle in the third set and was forced to retire prematurely. Senior Champeau has also played a solid brand of tennis for the squad despite a lack of wins, as has California freshman Scott Sans-Leeb.

"Steve isn't 100 percent but he played great," said Dixon. "Todd played a guy that was out of sight. He's a freshman so that's why he isn't the No. 1 but he really should be. Scott also showed improvements. The only player who is really struggling right now is Reid Stubbs."

Saturday on home turf the Massachusetts men will battle the best of the Atlantic 10, George Washington University, as Dixon feels they are the pick to win the tournament in April. Last year, the Minutemen did not get the chance to battle the Colonials because the squad from Washington, D.C. cancelled due to poor travel conditions.

"G.W. is my pick to win the A-10 tournament," said Dixon. "They have four scholarships and a terrific No.1 in sophomore Matt Hane. We recruited him but they offered him a scholarship. It will be a good match for Steve. The Wright brothers, two twins from Florida, are grinders in the backcourt that can run all day long. They have the edge but we can be competitive and we get to play the contender for the championship."

The Maroon and White desperately need a healthy Prisco in the lineup in order to have any shot of defeating or even merely competing with the Colonials. Due to his pulled muscle, he will not be able to resume practicing until at least Tuesday night.

"In the match he calls on his athletic ability and his intense desire," said Dixon. "He was sick with a sinus infection so he couldn't practice. Because he couldn't practice, he pulled a muscle. So it keeps going round and round."

In terms of the rest of the season, the squad feels that conference matches against Dayton, St. Joseph's, Temple and Fordham could possibly register as wins on their record. Moreover, the spring break trip to Florida will test the Maroon and White's ability as it challenges some of the best tennis players in the country.

"My two seniors are playing well right now and I just wish that we could play a match where we had some leverage," said Dixon. "I think we will find that when we play Dayton, St. Joseph's, Temple and Fordham. The winter season is always tougher and I schedule that way strategically. That way when we get to the A-10's, it's refreshingly easier. We can actually say, thank goodness we're at the A-10's."

Oregon captures Pac-10 title and No. 9 ranking

By Jeff Smith
Oregon Daily Emerald (U. Oregon)

(U-WIRE) EUGENE, Ore. – More historic numbers keep popping up in regards to the banner season the Oregon men's basketball team is having.

The Ducks captured their first league championship since 1944-45 and first outright title since 1939.

They beat UCLA at Pauley Pavilion for the first time since 1984.

They finished the Pac-10 Conference schedule with a 14-4 record, which was their best league mark since that '39 championship squad went 14-2 in the Pacific Coast Conference.

And now they can add an Associated Press Top 10 ranking to the list. Oregon vaulted into the No. 9 spot in Monday's AP writer's poll for the first time since being ranked eighth on Feb. 4, 1975.

The 1974-75 Ducks reached the Top 10 after starting out 15-2, but then lost six straight to fall out. Both Oregon head coach Ernie Kent and assistant coach Greg Graham were players on that Oregon team and realize the magnitude of bringing the Ducks back to the elite level and winning the Pac-10 title.

"Ernie and I have been waiting for this for about 30 years," Graham said. "We've been here a long time. It's been neat to have a bunch of ex-players calling us and giving us encouragement and telling how much it means to them.

"So it's double special for us."

The news wasn't all good out of the Oregon camp Monday, though. Junior center Brian Helquist will miss this week's Pac-10 Tournament with a strained right knee, and it's questionable whether he will return for the NCAA Tournament.

Helquist suffered the injury in Oregon's win at USC last Thursday, scoring two points in 11 minutes. He sat out Saturday's UCLA game and had his knee checked out Sunday.

Because he didn't tear any ligaments, the Ducks are hopeful of his return – most likely in the Sweet 16 if Oregon were to make it past the first weekend with two wins. But nothing will be known for sure until Helquist goes through some rehabilitation and sees how it feels.

In Helquist's absence, more playing time will go to senior Mark Michaelis and sophomore Jay Anderson in the roles of backing up starter Chris Christoffersen, who can help the Ducks by staying out of foul trouble.

PAC-10 TOURNEY INFO: Oregon is the top seed in this week's conference tournament at Los Angeles' Staples Center and will play eighth-seeded Washington at 1:15 p.m. Thursday on Fox Sports Net.

In other first round pairings, No. 4 USC plays No. 5 Stanford, No. 2 Arizona plays No. 7 Arizona State and No. 3 California plays No. 6 UCLA.

www.dailycollegian.com

Multiculturalism & Identity in the wake of Sept 11.

Thursday, September 11 changed our world, and now it is possible to begin a new dialogue toward a more just and inclusive world. It is a timely endeavor, and one that is appropriate for the School of Education.

Sponsored by the School of Education.

This conference will feature an impressive array of students and speakers to discuss these issues March 7 - 9

March 7: Welcome reception 5-7pm in faculty club

March 8-9: Panel discussion 9am-5pm in Campus Center Rm 162 Reception will follow

All are Welcome!

For more info call 545-0008

Live Music

McMurphy's welcomes

THE GUITAR DUDES

every wednesday

NO COVER

positive ID required

Changing Jobs or Retiring?

Call A.G. Edwards for alternatives on how you can receive and manage your distribution from your company's retirement plan.

Michelle Spaziani

91 Main St.
Greenfield, MA
800-445-3685

A.G. Edwards INVESTMENTS SINCE 1887

Member SIPC • ©2001 A.G. Edwards & Sons, Inc.

Tired of the Dorms?

•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT IN THE CENTER OF TOWN•

Lincoln Real Estate

25 N. Pleasant St.

Women's lax seeks Pride in return from Crusade

Looks for two straight wins to start 2002

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

Last Wednesday in Amherst, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team manhandled a clearly subordinate squad in Holy Cross.

Today, exactly one week later in Long Island, the Minutewomen will play the subordinate role as they face-off with the 15th ranked team in the nation – the Hofstra Pride.

Nothing to lose and all to gain is the motto for head coach Phil Barnes' club, as it will look to improve its record to 2-0.

"Winning the game would be tremendous," he said. "We will be able to do that if each person focuses on performing their role on this team."

UMass is coming into the match-up with high confidence. Last week in its season opener it dominated the Holy Cross Crusaders, 15-2. However, Hofstra brings a difficult challenge to the table for the Minutewomen.

"Hofstra is a very tall team, they do a lot of feeding," Barnes said. "In order to combat that we really worked on our individual defense in practice this week."

Last season, Hofstra beat the Minutewomen 10-6 in the friendly confines of Richard F. Garber Field. UMass held its own in the contest as it was able to keep the score close till halftime, 7-5. The Hofstra attack proved to be too much in the end for the Maroon and White, which failed to gain control of the game.

For the Minutewomen, there would not be anything sweeter than to return the favor to Hofstra on their turf.

"We are looking forward to a great competition with a great team in Hofstra," Barnes said. "UMass-Hofstra is always going to be a great game in the sport of lacrosse."

In order to be successful, UMass will need to be on their "A" game. Coach Barnes wants to repeat the kind of performance that his team displayed last week.

"We are looking for another good team game," he said. "We want to work as a unit."

Good team play entails that every member is contributing in some form. Without a clear-cut star on this year's squad, team play on the offensive side of the field will be crucial.

"We need to make sure that we keep our movement off the ball at a rapid pace," Barnes said. "In practice we worked on creating more opportunities on our offensive chances."

The Minutewomen have had this match circled on their schedules all winter long. As the weary cliche claims, "to be the best, you must beat the best."

"I believe that all the girls are very excited for the test," Barnes said.

For the Minutewomen, the test is today.

■ Men's Hoop

continued from page 12

however. Six-foot-eight-inch junior Jaason Smith is the only featured interior presence for George Washington while UMass brings the likes of Micah Brand, Kitwana Rhymer and Eric Williams.

"Smith being the only person in there plays to our advantage," said Brand, who scored 17 points and grabbed 10 rebounds last time against the Colonials. "It makes it easier because he can't really play too much aggressive defense."

Sophomore guard Darnell Miller and freshman forward Tamal Forchion round out the starting lineup for George Washington, but are of lesser concern than Monroe, Thompson and Smith.

The key for UMass is Crooks, who is nearing his final minutes of college basketball. At 14.6 points per game, he is the Minutemen's leader and can't waver if he expects to bring his team into the upper levels of the Tournament bracket. If UMass is to make it to the second round and chance an upset against Xavier, Crooks is the one who must star.

"I believe in experience, and I believe poise is related to experience," Lappas said. "To win this tournament, there's no doubt in my mind you're going to have to win a game after being down four or five points with three minutes to go. That's where you really need the poise."

■ Cuts

continued from page 12

not revealed. Further, a short time after the teams had made initiatives to start letter writing and petitioning campaigns, an email was sent out from women's swim coach Bob Newcomb advising the teams not to take any such action.

The rumored eliminations come just three weeks after the Faculty Senate recommended a two million dollar cut to the Athletic Department. However, when voting to recommend the cut, the Senate specifically called for no teams to be eliminated, instead proposing budget cuts from the most expensive programs on down to the least.

It has been assumed that the Senate was making reference to a 3-8 football team that lost more than $2.5 million two years ago.

The men's water polo team is coming off of a Final Four appearance, with several players earning postseason honors, and the men's swimming team won the Atlantic 10 meet last month. The women's swimming team also finished strong, and the women's water polo team is just starting its season, currently holding a record of 4-5.

Ken Campbell and Elena Panesis contributed to this story.

■ O'Brien

continued from page 12

UMass is – nothing special.

As for the women's team, the fact of the matter is UMass women's basketball is only on the map because of Joanie O'Brien. The year before O'Brien got here, the team won zero games and was a laughingstock. Four years later, they were 19-game winners and true contenders for the A-10 crown. They are now a team that can beat anyone in the country on any given day. And O'Brien didn't even come at a high price.

Good luck finding a better deal than that Mr. Marcum, you'll need it.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian Columnist.

CINEMARK

CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL

367 Russell St. 413-587-4233

Schedule for Friday 3/1 - Thursday 3/7

DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS

Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com

40 DAYS & 40 NIGHTS (R) 12:50 4:30 7:10 9:50*
WE WERE SOLDIERS (R) 12:30 4:30 7:40 10:30*
IN THE BEDROOM (R) 12:20 4:15 7:15 10:20 (12:30 PM on Thurs 3/7 Only)
HART'S WAR (R) 3:50 10:40
JOHN Q (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05
COLLATERAL DAMAGE (R) 9:55
BIG FAT LIAR (PG) 12:15 2:35 4:55 7:20 9:50
SUPER TROOPERS (R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15
CROSSBORDER (PG13) 12:40 4:35 7:05 9:45
RETURN TO NEVERLAND (G) 12:35 2:30 4:40 7:15
THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO (PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00
BLACK HAWK DOWN (R) 12:05 7:10
A BEAUTIFUL MIND (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
LORD OF THE RINGS (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
Senior Movie 3/7 IN THE BEDROOM doors open at 11:45

•NO PASSES NO SUPERPASSES

cinemark.com

Work. Leisure. Work. Leisure. Work. Leisure. Why not have both?

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2002

What does a job at Ernst & Young give you? The best of both worlds. After all, the focus of our business has always been its people, and we are devoted to helping them realize their career goals while encouraging their personal aspirations. The result is you'll be challenged, but you'll also be rewarded. Maybe that's why we've been named one of the "100 Best Companies to Work For," four years in a row. So why not bounce on over and see for yourself?

ERNST & YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

TODAY get your summer job!! At HRTA Career Day Hospitality Job Fair, March 6, 2002 9:00 am - 3:00 pm in Campus Center Auditorium.

Looking for permanent position or summer job? Come to the Hospitality job fare. March 6th 2002 from 9:00 am to 3 pm in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 50 companies attending. For more info. Please call the Career Day office 545-3438.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. - Now Available, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sept. 1 year lease. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.mybrandywineapts.com stop by or call (413) 549-0600.

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone /Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. [illegible] 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstliving.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Honda Accord call 259-0068.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

$12,342.00 Congratulations Dave Sullivan (Sophomore- Umass) for a great first week!!! Last two weeks of Recruiting for CWP Program 617-216-4741 or [illegible]

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy CampusFundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

SUMMER IN MAINE Jewish, Co-ed overnight camp in the southern Maine seeks staff: Boys Unit Head (23+), Camping/ Tripping Director (23+), Judaics Director (23+); swim, water ski, and boating/ sailing instructors (lifeguard certification req'd.) ; archery (training avail.), ceramics, general athletics, gymnastics, photography, radio, low ropes, theater; general counselors, office personnel. For information, contact: Ava Goldman, Director, JCC Camp Kingswood, 333 Nahanton street, Newton, MA 02459, 617-244-5124, or e-mail: [illegible]

EMPLOYMENT

Exciting Opportunity! NSF Graduate Fellowships Available. The STEM Connections Project is Looking for Students. Are you interested in sharing your love of science with others? Are you looking for a position with a difference? Then we have a great opportunity for you. STEM connections is looking for Graduate students in science, math or engineering to work with K12 teachers in Springfield in 2002/2003 on a set of unique research projects. You will work with a faculty member to explore a science topic with other graduate students and at least one middle school science teacher. Each team will research the topic, work on curriculum development and provide in-class explorations with middle school students. Stipend for one year (20 hours/week) is $20,800. To be eligible you must: 1) Be a master or doctoral candidate in good standing at least your 2nd year by Sept. 02, 2) Be a U.S. Citizen or have Permanent Residency, and 3) Have a valid Drivers License. Applications are due on April 16, 2002 for the 2002-2003 fiscal year. All appointments run from June 1, 2002-May 31st, 2003. For more information and an application, contact: STEM connections Marie Silver, 413-545-0453, [illegible] www.pioneer.k12.ma.us

EMPLOYMENT

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 1-866-291-1884 ext. 485.

Wanted: Spring/ Summer Interns. Must be Rebels, Innovators, Deserters, seeking leadership outside the box. Average pay $7200.00. 617-216-4741 [illegible]

FOR SALE

Free Dog to a good home!! We need to find a home soon Female 1 1/2 year old-Pursie call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich (P. Mulvey, I. Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_Goodrich@hotmail.com

Private Boxing Lessons with retired Pro. Djata Bumpus. In Amherst call 413-731-1450.

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TO SUBLET

Two bedrooms available in Puffton Village on bus route, free heat/hot water- sublet available thru summer. Call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

TRAVEL

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Days $279! Includes Meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $ 459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

TRAVEL

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

Get $$PAID$$ to lose up to 5-400 lbs. 1-888-709-8197 www.health-mgmt.com

Looking for a trustworthy person to drive my car to Costa Rica. Call Frances 323-5799.

NEED A ROOMMATE??

NEED A SUMMER JOB!!!!

WANT TO BUY A NEW CAR?!!

CHECK OUT THE DAILY CLASSIFIEDS.

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

3	PBS
4	NESN
5	Fox Sport NE
6	ITV-15
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	WB / 22
9	HSCN Movie Channel
10	TV Guide Channel
11	FOX / 61
12	ABC / 40
13	NBC / 22
14	International Channel
15	UMATV
16	HSCN Info Channel
17	ESPN
18	ESPN 2
19	UVC-19
20	ESPN Classic
21	Cleveland Gravel
22	CNN
23	CNN HL
24	Weather Channel
25	Learning Channel
26	History Channel
27	A & E
28	Discovery Health
29	Food Network
30	NASA
31	Home & Garden TV
32	Travel Channel
33	Lifetime
34	TNN
35	Tech TV
36	BET
37	UPN-38
38	USA
39	TNN
40	MTV
41	CMT
42	VH-1
43	TNT
44	TBS
45	E! Entertainment
46	Sci-Fi Channel
47	Court TV
48	Nick at Nite
49	Comedy Central
50	Cartoon Network
51	Game Show Network
52	TV Land
53	A&E Family
54	Univision
55	Univision
56	Telemundo
57	College TV Network
58	C-SPAN
59	C-SPAN2
60	Bloomberg Television

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 6, 2002

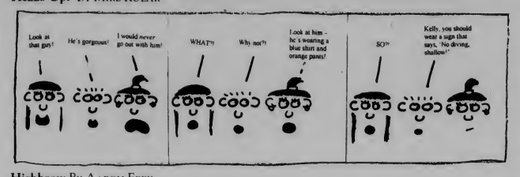
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		American Family "The Wall"		Legendary Liberace (In Stereo)				To Be Announced
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		King	Yes, Dear	48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		King	Yes, Dear	48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	My Wife-Kids	According-Jim	Drew Carey	The Job (N)	Downtown		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Glory Days (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News		NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)		Ed (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "Dead Irish Writers"		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo)	Tonight Show
WTXX		Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Glory Days (In Stereo)		News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT	10	News		NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood		Ed (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "Dead Irish Writers"		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo)	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons		Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond		That 80s	Grounded-Life	Bernie Mac	Titus (N)	News	Seinfeld
WWLP	22	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Ed (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "Dead Irish Writers"		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo)	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		American Family "The Wall"		To Be Announced				News	Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News		ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier		My Wife-Kids	According-Jim	Drew Carey	The Job (N)	News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News		Frasier		Enterprise "Civilization"		As If	Random Years	Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel	Shipmates
WTBS	29	Cosby Show		Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne		Ripley's Believe It or Not		★★½ "Cocktail" (1988, Drama) (PA) Tom Cruise, Bryan Brown				Ripley's Believe It or Not
A&E	40	Night Court		Newsradio		Law & Order	Trio-Sex	Biography "Gary Coogan" (N)		American Justice		City Confidential (N)		Law & Order "Purple Heart"
CNN	20	Moneyline			Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire		Live From...	The Point	Larry King Live		News night		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	43	Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)			Daily Show	Geeks		★★★ "Big" (1988, Comedy) Tom Hanks, Elizabeth Perkins				South Park	South Park	Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	23	Discover Magazine			Animal Mummies: Creatures			Engineering the Impossible				Skyscraper at Sea		Justice Files
ESPN	31	Sportscenter			College Basketball: Big East Pitt. Round -- Teams To Be Announced					College Basketball: Big East Tournament First Round -- Teams to Be Announced				Sportscenter
LIFE	67	Golden Girls	Golden Girls		Intimate Portrait			Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"The Patron Saint of Liars" (1998, Drama) Diana Delany				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	MTV Special	Osbournes		Direct Effect (In Stereo)			Prime-Players	Artists-Watch	Road Home	Cribs	Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Dismissed	Kidnapped
NICK	35	Rocket Power	Thornberrys		Hey Arnold!	Rugrats		Spongeb	Pelswick (N)	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show
SCIFI	30	Star Trek "Caught in the Mind"			Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)			Outer Limits (In Stereo)		★★½ "Alien" (1979, Science Fiction) Tom Skerritt, (In Stereo)					Crossing Over
TLC	25	Survivor Science "Jungle			Eye Spy: Caught in the Act			Monster Machines: Mixers		Junkyard Wars		Building the Impossible		Monster Machines: Mixers
TNT	42	NYPD Blue "The Abbott"			Pretender "Ranger Jarod"			NBA Basketball: Los Angeles Lakers at Utah Jazz (Live)					Inside NBA	★★★ "Twilight Zone: The Movie"
USA	32	Walker, Texas Ranger			JAG "Heroics" (In Stereo)			★★½ "Drop Zone" (1994, Adventure) Wesley Snipes. Premiere				Combat Missions (In Stereo)		JAG "Heroics" (In Stereo)
HBO	65	★½ "Switching Channels" (1988, Comedy) PG-			Panic Room			★★★ "Meet the Parents" (2000, Comedy) Robert De Niro. PG-13				Six Feet Under "In the Game"		Monica in Black and White
MAX	60	(2:45) ★★★ "Finding Forrester" (2000) Sean Connery. PG-13						★★★ "X-Men" (2000, Science Fiction) Hugh Jackman. PG-13				★½ "Monkeybone" (2001) Brendan Fraser		"Hidden"
SHOW	63	★★½ "The Spitfire Grill" (1996, Drama) Alison Elliott. PG-13						"Rad Sneakers" (2001, Fantasy) Dempsey Pappion				Soul Food "Who Do You Know"		Resurrection	"Running Red"

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com



Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Noodle By Jacki

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Quote of the Day

"Keep your face to the sunshine and you cannot see the shadow."

-Helen Keller

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 48 LOW: 32	HIGH: 54 LOW: 29	HIGH: 52 LOW: 35

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You can be sure you'll encounter an obstacle today in the form of criticism from a jealous rival, but this will only serve to strengthen your resolve.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may lack patience today. As a result, you may be the cause of more than one outburst. Make sure to control yourself and take a breath.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may not be able to keep things from taking an unpleasant turn, but this needn't be a lengthy trend. Soon, things will go your way again.

GEMINI (May 20-June 20) – You must take care that you're not so "inspired" that others simply label you a "crackpot." Keep both feet firmly planted on the ground.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You're going to try to solve a problem from the moment you rise to the moment you retire at the end of the day. Progress will surely be made.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – A combination of physical and intellectual activity can serve you positively today and keep all your gears "well oiled." Exercise caution during the p.m.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – If you feel you need a break today, someone close is ready to take over, but it may be more difficult for you to let go than you thought.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Take care that someone doesn't lead you down a path that proves far too emotional and unstable for your own good. Get a firm toehold!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Timing is everything today; focus on internal rhythms while catering to external demands. Find a balance between what you know and what you think.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You'll start something today that may get the better of you if you're not careful to balance need with impulse. Take care you don't overdo it!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Someone will bring a little more excitement into your life today than you had expected. You can bet it will be unusual in the extreme.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – The pace is likely to speed up quite unexpectedly today, thanks to the influence of someone who may have just arrived on the scene.

Collegian Graphics...of course you've heard of us!

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Farmer Market Soup

Sausage Cacciatore

Ravioli Alfredo (vegetarian)

Beans & Rice (vegan)

DINNER

Farmer Market Soup

Mandarin Chicken

Roast Beef

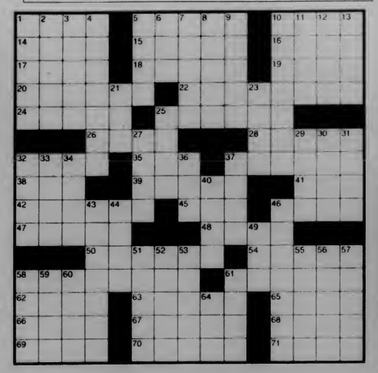
Mandarin Tofu (vegan)

Garden Burger (vegan) (W Basics)

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Melissa Hammel
Photo Editor: James Schaffer
Copy Chief: Jim Pignatiello
Production Supervisor: riki Akid
Production Staff: Lizzy Nielsen, Cara Horowitt

THE HARP IRISH PUB
TONIGHT
COME PARTY at THE HARP
in North Amherst
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900



ACROSS
1 Excess ads
5 Wallops
10 Polite cough
14 Make a salary
15 Theater part
16 Hill's opposite
17 Tart
18 Be part of the crowd
19 Competes
20 Moon, in poetry
22 Lab work
24 Digress
25 Current
26 Gambler's town
28 Felt sore
32 Fly ball paths
35 Left-turn from SSE
37 Fake
38 Thai neighbor
39 Inferior
41 Wire gauge
42 On time
45 Pasture grazer
46 Light sword
47 Camel stop
48 Well-briefed about (2 wds.)
50 Low bow
54 Cabbies
58 Something simple
61 Badge
62 "—— it!" joke response
63 Ceremonies
65 Magma on the move
66 Heavy book
67 Inch along
68 Writer Ambler
69 Excursion
70 Wading bird
71 Cold and wet

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

12-7 01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DOWN
1 Mounds
2 Millionaire's toy
3 Earlier
4 Wins over
5 Burglar's target
6 Twice XXVI
7 Houston pro
8 Traversed a route
9 Become aware of
10 Press onward
11 Fur
12 Nov. event
13 Screen
21 Casual farewell
23 Bullpen stats
25 Like early LPs
27 Salamander
29 Buffalo feature
30 Jean Stein bestseller
31 Allot
32 Dog-food brand
33 — ayis
34 Murmurs
36 Before
37 Steal a glance
40 Done laps
43 False move
44 11th-grade exam
46 Facilitated
49 Resistance unit
51 Roll
52 Burning up
53 Following
55 Nurse Barton
56 Costner of films
57 Loud kiss
58 Singer Eartha
59 Borodin prince
60 Half
61 All sports channel
64 Help-wanted abbr

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM UMass SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Seven sports potentially cut

By Sam Wilkinson and Andrew Merritt
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Rumors are swirling amongst athletes that as many as seven athletic programs might be cut in the following weeks as the Athletic Department attempts to save money. Women's volleyball, men's gymnastics and tennis, the men's and women's swimming and diving and water polo could all be on the chopping block.

Sources suggested privately that women's gymnastics and women's tennis were also under consideration, but that they were further down the list of possible teams.

Three individuals close to the Athletic Department confirmed rumors that the aquatics teams – swimming and diving and water polo – were under consideration for elimination. Two more individuals associated with the tennis program not only confirmed that the team's elimination was likely, but that recruits had already been encouraged to look elsewhere. Freshmen are also being encouraged to transfer.

While these nightmare scenarios have apparently been playing out, some seem unwilling to roll over at the possible eliminations.

Signs on campus yesterday encouraged students to attend aquatic events in the coming weeks. Those same signs also directed interested individuals to a website – www.umass-aquatics.org. Yesterday morning, the website echoed the Collegian's sources. It wrote that all four aquatic programs were being considered for elimination. By the end of the day, reference to elimination had been removed and the website would only thank visitors for their "overwhelming support."

The Daily Collegian was unable to locate the individuals running the website.

Bob Connolly, the University of Massachusetts' Vice-President of Communications, acknowledged that reductions were planned "in the near future" but was unsure that a list of teams had been submitted to the Board. He later spoke with Jim Julian, his liaison to the ongoing Athletic Review, then confirmed that no specific teams had been mentioned, but that "[Julian] expects, in fairly short order, some significant proposal from the athletic department in terms of a restructuring of the athletic program."

Elaine Sortino, the Department's Assistant Athletic Director, would only say, "no determination has been made, and if and when a decision is made, it will be jointly announced by the Chancellor and the Athletic Department."

Athletic Director Bob Marcum would only say, "whatever Elaine [Sortino] said is what I have to say."

As of press time, more unsubstantiated rumors were also swirling, including one that had Marcum, at a meeting, allegedly promising the swimming and diving programs that they would be saved if they'd promise their support for the polo elimination. It is unclear when the meeting would have taken place.

Marcum would only say that he had been meeting with all coaches. He also denied making any such offer to the aquatic programs. Sortino similarly denied that any such promise had been made.

Another source close to the program, but acting under anonymity, also mentioned that the teams were informed that the coaches had indeed had a meeting with Marcum, but the details of the meeting were

Turn to CUTS, page 7

SENIOR J.R. VANDERWALL MIGHT HAVE JUST COMPLETED THE FINAL MEN'S WATER POLO SEASON AT UMASS, AS THE ATHLETIC DEPARTMENT HAS CONSIDERED CUTTING ALL WATER SPORTS

O'Brien let go after 11 years

By Jesse Greenspan
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After 11 years at the helm of the Massachusetts women's basketball team, Kane O'Brien will not have her contract renewed for the 2002-03 season.

Athletic Director Bob Marcum made the announcement yesterday afternoon, only two days after the Maroon and White's season-ending 67-61 overtime loss to Temple in the semifinals of the Atlantic 10 tournament.

"We appreciate Coach O'Brien's contributions to our program during her years at the University," said Marcum. "At the same time we believe that it is time for the program to go in a new direction, and we will begin a national search for a new head coach immediately."

O'Brien took over the struggling UMass program in 1981, a year after the Minutewomen went 0-27, with only one of those losses coming by fewer than 10 points.

By the 1993-94 season, O'Brien had brought her squad into respectability, totaling a 14-14 record that was highlighted by a four-game winning streak at the beginning of the year.

The following season, the Minutewomen recovered from an 0-5 start to go 19-11 and qualify for the National Women's Invitational Tournament. This performance gained O'Brien the Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year Award, and began a four-year stretch in which UMass made its first two NCAA tournament appearances.

The first of those came in 1996 when the Maroon and White's 20-10 record made them a No. 8 seed in the tourney. Although it would fall to Michigan State, 60-57 in overtime, it would return to the NCAAs two years later against Iowa.

Once again, the Minutewomen could not make it out of the first round, falling to the Hawkeyes 77-59.

However, an 11-5 conference record that year garnered a first place finish for UMass in the A-10, which was the first time it had ever won a conference divisional title.

Since that point, though, O'Brien has not been able to match her success of the mid-90s, and her 12-18 record this season was the third consecutive losing season for the Maroon and White.

Still, O'Brien leaves the program as the winningest coach in UMass history, with a 158-164 record.

Under her tenure the Minutewomen advanced past the quarterfinals of the A-10 tournament for the first time, and even won a regular season conference title in the process.

Other firsts for UMass under O'Brien include a 20-win season, a win over a ranked opponent and an undefeated home season in 1995-96.

Before coaching in Amherst, O'Brien served as an assistant to Joe Ciampi at Auburn for five years, where the Lady Tigers compiled a 149-20 record to go along with two Elite Eight appearances and three trips to the championship game.

As a player, O'Brien was a three-year starter at Penn State before moving on to Auburn as a graduate assistant.

Men's hoop sets sail for Philly and A-10 tourney

By Eric Soderstrom
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PHILADELPHIA – Let us welcome back the discrepancies of college basketball – the effects of human emotion – for another year of postseason uncertainty.

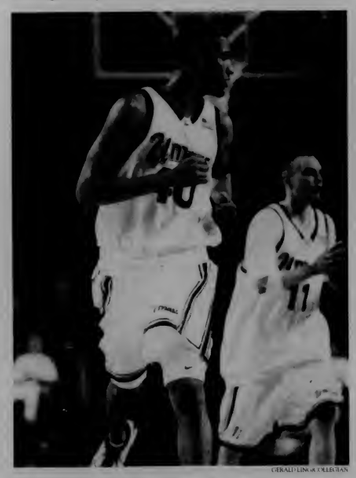
Because Massachusetts men's basketball coach Steve Lappas surely isn't going to. He won't have any of it.

"If we lose, it's because the other team just played better," said Lappas, whose Minutemen face George Washington today at noon in the first round of the Verizon Atlantic 10 Tournament at the First Union Spectrum. "We can't control all that other psychological stuff."

It's not as if UMass has a good reason to neglect any opponent at this stage in the season. This campaign's continuation feeds off victory, and expires without it.

"It's everything, it's the whole season," said Lappas, hoping to duplicate today his team's 75-60 defeat of the Colonials Jan. 23 at the Mullins Center. "If we don't play well and we lose, it's not because we overlooked it. Let's take that excuse and throw it out the window. I don't know if we're going to win, but that's not going to be the reason we lose."

The only concern for Lappas is the George Washington roster, headed by junior Chris Monroe's 21.2 points per game. Monroe, at 6-feet-3-inches, can score from anywhere and is good at exploiting opponents' weaknesses. Monroe scored a game-high 24 points in the teams' last match-up, despite stoppage efforts from Shannon Crooks and Raheim Lamb.



Running the show for the Colonials is freshman T.J. Thompson, who will enter his first-ever A-10 Tournament game opposite Anthony Anderson. UMass' first-year point guard and the A-10's Rookie of the Year as named last night at the conference's award ceremony.

"They're starting off even in that regard," said Lappas of the two All-Rookie Team selections. "Neither kid has ever played in the tournament, but I don't think that's going to be a factor. They're both good players. Now, I'm not saying they're both going to play good, but I don't think nerves will be a factor."

As they shouldn't be, counting the number of A-10 Rookie of the Week awards between them. Anderson took the honor four times this year and Thompson three times. Both do a decent job controlling their respective offenses and finding scoring lanes, while averaging just about 10 points per game.

It's not as even on the inside.

Turn to MEN'S HOOP, page 9

GERALD LIM / COLLEGIAN

MICAH BRAND (NO. 40) AND KYLE WILSON BEGIN THEIR QUEST FOR THE A-10 CHAMPIONSHIP TODAY AT NOON AGAINST GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Pushing coach out a mistake for Marcum

JIM PIGNATIELLO

University of Massachusetts Athletic Director Bob Marcum made a mistake yesterday so refusing to extend the contract of women's basketball coach Kane O'Brien.

Marcum extended O'Brien's contract last year after losing the 2000-01 season, in which her Minutewomen went a disappointing 12-17 (6-10 Atlantic 10). The fact that the extension was for just one year was a sure sign that the Penn State alumnus didn't like last chance here at UMass. It was just check time for the Maroon and White in 2001-02.

After a brutal 1-9 record to start the season, the Minutewomen finally found their groove during the A-10 schedule, going 8-8 in conference play – good for third place in the A-10 East heading into last week's tournament in Philadelphia.

The tournament just happened to be the highlight of the season, as UMass beat a terrible team in round one (Hawai'i), beat a very good team in the quarterfinals (Richmond), and took the No. 1 seed in the East to overtime on its home court in the semifinals (Temple).

The tough start was due to a number of factors, many of which were beyond O'Brien's control. First, Nekole Smith, the team's most natural scorer, was coming off a major knee injury suffered during last year's preseason. Smith was only at about 75 percent by the beginning of the season and was certainly without her "playing legs" for the first 10-15 games of the year. In those games, the Minutewomen suffered from a serious lack of offensive punch.

Ebony Pegues, who emerged as a legitimate scoring threat over the final third of the season was also coming back from injury and didn't become a true threat until about the same time that Smith starting looking like her old self. O'Brien's percentage of fault: zero.

Following the graduation of Kathy Conner, there was no true point guard on the UMass roster with the exception of two freshman, Katie Nelson and Monique Govan. While Nelson was as well prepared as any freshman could be to play right away, it didn't come without some growing pains. Unfortunately, when it is your 15-minute-a-night point guard suffering the pains of growth, your whole team will suffer in some ways, especially in the turnover categories.

Once Nelson's game caught up and Govan was ready to contribute significantly, the team played much, much better, including a 6-2 record in the team's final eight games. O'Brien probably should have found Conner's replacement a year earlier, so she gets 50 percent of the blame on this one.

The team couldn't make free throws. Some players can't shoot free throws and this team has a whole bunch that fit under this category. Coach O'Brien admitted that her team practiced this aspect of the game as much as everyone else, but many players didn't really show any improvement throughout the year. O'Brien's blame: zero percent.

So there were a few things that hindered the 2001-02 version of the Minutewomen that were out of Coach O'Brien's hands. Not that she was perfect; there were plenty of questionable decisions that a coach makes each season, but nothing that hurt the team as much as the few examples above.

Now, Marcum has decided that the team should head in a different direction, despite the fact just one member of this year's squad, Caroline Nehls, will be departing due to graduation.

How can you head in another direction with the same players? It just can't happen. The prudent, intelligent thing for Marcum to have done was offer O'Brien another one-year extension. With seven players heading into their senior years next season, a true verdict of the program's, and O'Brien's success could be easily judged during 2002-03.

If she failed, Marcum could have let her go and offered the job to a candidate who could plug seven holes from the graduating seniors. If not, O'Brien will have proven herself worthy of a multi-year deal.

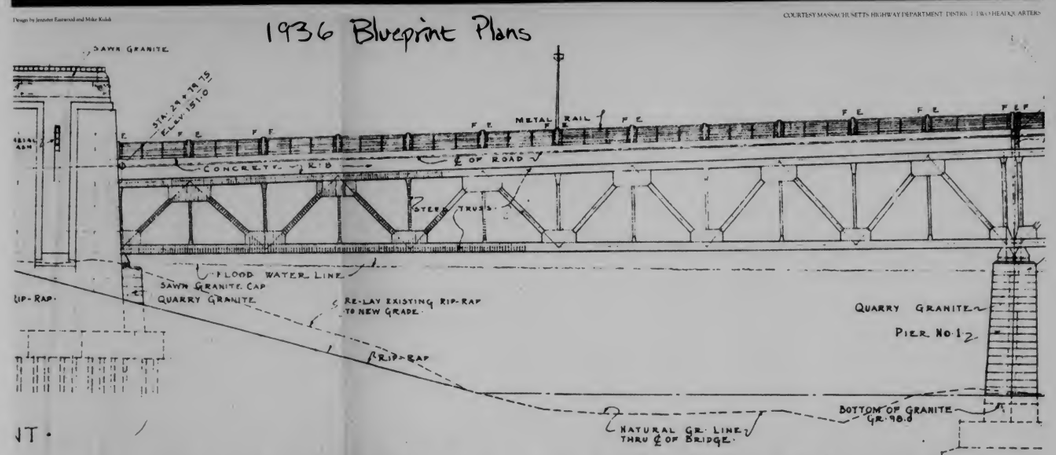
Instead, Marcum has thrown a team that finally gelled during the postseason into flux for next year. Any cohesiveness discovered during the A-10 tourney is all for naught while these players are getting used to a new coach and a new system.

But this University as a whole and the Athletic Department in particular have never been about the decent, intelligent decision. It is always about the quick fix, never standing by your own.

The problem is that Marcum, as well as many fans, think of this school as a top-tier Division 1 University, which is not the case.

There is no football team to be proud of. Division I-AA simply doesn't count. No big-time sports program has anything less than a Division 1 football team.

The men's basketball team had a nice run a while back, but the Calipari years are sandwiched by years of being just another A-10 school, which is what



Turn to O'BRIEN, page 9

DOES T... RE? ARTS PAGE
OUTRAGE ED/OP PAGE 4.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
THURSDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE NINETY FIVE ☆☆☆☆☆ 3.07.02

Design by Jennifer Eastwood and Mike Kulak

COURTESY MASSACHUSETTS HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT, DISTRICT 1 HEADQUARTERS troubled bridge over local water

part one: a look behind the construction

Jennifer Eastwood
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Use Caution... bridge work ahead."

These words continuously flash across a humble roadside sign as motorists traveling on Rt. 9 towards Northampton approach the Calvin Coolidge Memorial Bridge in mid-renovation.

The bridge was built in 1937 and dedicated to President Coolidge, a former Northampton resident and mayor. It became a contributing element to the Hadley Center Historic District in 1994, nearly seven years after being denied an individual listing in the National Register for Historic Places. Presently, an estimated 30,000 automobiles pass over the bridge daily.

Bridge construction first began on Sept. 4, 2001, and plans state that it shall continue until at least the summer of 2003. The entire cost of the renovation will rise to $19.8 million.

Facts and figures such as these get tossed about through word of mouth, publications and the bridge's website on a regular basis. However, it is rare to hear mention of those who actually perform the renovation or about the actual construction itself...

The project, broken up into four stages (1A through three), will result in the widening of the bridge to include four traffic lanes (up from three) and the addition of a five-foot wide sidewalk on the bridge's north side. As such, the bridge deck, railings and light fixtures will all be replaced, while the bridge's approach ways and all of its granite facing will be repaired.

The building contract was awarded to the Southern New England Region of the Cianbro Construction Company in Bloomfield, Connecticut. First generation Italian American brothers, Carl, Ken, Bud and Chuck Cianchette, formed Cianbro itself in 1946. The company now hosts four division offices, stretching form Maine to Maryland, and was honored this year with the 2002 Build America Award, provided annually by the Associated General Contractors of America to high-merit projects in the categories of "new construction" and "renovation."

"Cianbro is one of the East Coast's largest civil and heavy industrial construction and construction services companies, with gross annual sales in excess of $350 million and over 2,000 team members," claims Cianbro's website. It also noted that the company placed in the top 25 best U.S. construction companies in reference to bridges, ranking number 18.

For construction on the Coolidge Bridge, the company needed to establish a headquarters nearby. This ended up being a small, quaint, gray-shingled building with blue shutters on its many windows that sets off to side of construction on the Northampton bank of the Connecticut River.

Barbie Rushford, Field Administrator and Safety Specialist, explained that the construction headquarters used to belong to the Environmental Police and was scheduled for demolition. When word was sent out that Cianbro needed an office on site, those plans were placed on hold, allowing the company to rent and refurbish the building.

"They [Environmental Police] didn't have enough money to fix it up," she said. "We [Cianbro] fixed it up by putting new windows in and a new roof on. It's a heck of a lot better than being in a trailer for three years."

Rushford, whose desk sets right in view of the office's main door, described her job as babysitting. Upon further questioning, she repeated, "Babysitting... the boss." Her tone was matter-of-fact as her eyes scanned across the adjoining room where three male construction engineers stood dressed in the full uniform of clodhopper boots, bright orange vests and hardhats. "Well, there is one other girl on site," she trailed off with a chuckle.

As time spent in the office passed, her point was demonstrated as men bustled in and out of the office door, often stopping by Rushford's desk to ask questions ranging from where a certain person was and working on at the moment to information about ordered supplies.

One such man was Tim Baril, one of the two on site field engineers who work on the bridge. Baril explained that his most recent jobs have included laying out the for pre-stress concrete beams now in the process of being installed and ordering supplies such as steal, bolts and lumber, all of which fall under a category he deemed as "the consumables."

Also responsible for surveying the site, Baril is now working on the pre-plans for the grid deck layout that will eventually be laid upon the bridge's deck surface.

"We're using a half filled grid deck," he explained. "It's sort of like a giant waffle we pour the concrete into, and that's what you drive on. It's instead of just laying concrete down."

While plans such as these have been foreseen since the beginning of the project, others (such as the railings) have

Turn to BRIDGE, page 3

...patrons on Rt. 9.

Diamant lectures at Campus Center tonight

By Jake Lilien
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The author of the recent best-seller The Red Tent will be speaking in the Campus Center tonight.

Anita Diamant will be delivering a lecture, "Writing Women's Lives," at the Top of the Campus at 8:00 p.m. The Top of the Campus is located on the 11th floor of the Campus Center.

Diamant has written several non-fiction works about women and Judaism, but is most famous for The Red Tent. The Red Tent is a retelling of the biblical story of Dinah, the daughter of Jacob. Dinah is mentioned only briefly in the Bible, as the beloved "only daughter of four mothers" (the four women who bore Jacob's children.) Diamant gained literary acclaim by writing a novel about an imagined life of Dinah, written from the character's own perspective.

Diamant's controversial choice to combine biblical stories with those of her own creation proved to be the foundation for the novel's success, as it allowed for a fully drawn portrait of the character. The "red tent" of the title refers to the place in which biblical women were placed to bear children and menstruate.

The Red Tent earned Diamant the 2001 Booksense of the Year Award, and has been published in 18 languages. Diamant's latest novel is Good Harbor, the story of the friend-

Turn to DIAMANT page 3

SGA discusses current safety issues

By Kristin Shrewsbury
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Campus safety was a top priority at last night's Student Government Association's Senate meeting.

In a meeting yesterday, Speaker Aaron Saunders, President John Sheehan and members of the Administration including Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Javier Cevallos, Director of Housing Michael Gilbert and Acting Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor met to discuss safety issues affecting the students at UMass.

They discussed 14 recent attacks and armed robberies on campus, one as recent as March 4, also looking to the future in terms of what steps to take next.

Due to budget cuts, the UMass Escort Service was cut from Safety Services in an effort to consolidate the program under University Transit. The transfer of services has left many concerns for the Senate to address. Much concern has arisen over the transferring of the safety to the PVTA bus system which will know be conducting two extra loops around campus, leaving the buses running until 2:30 a.m.

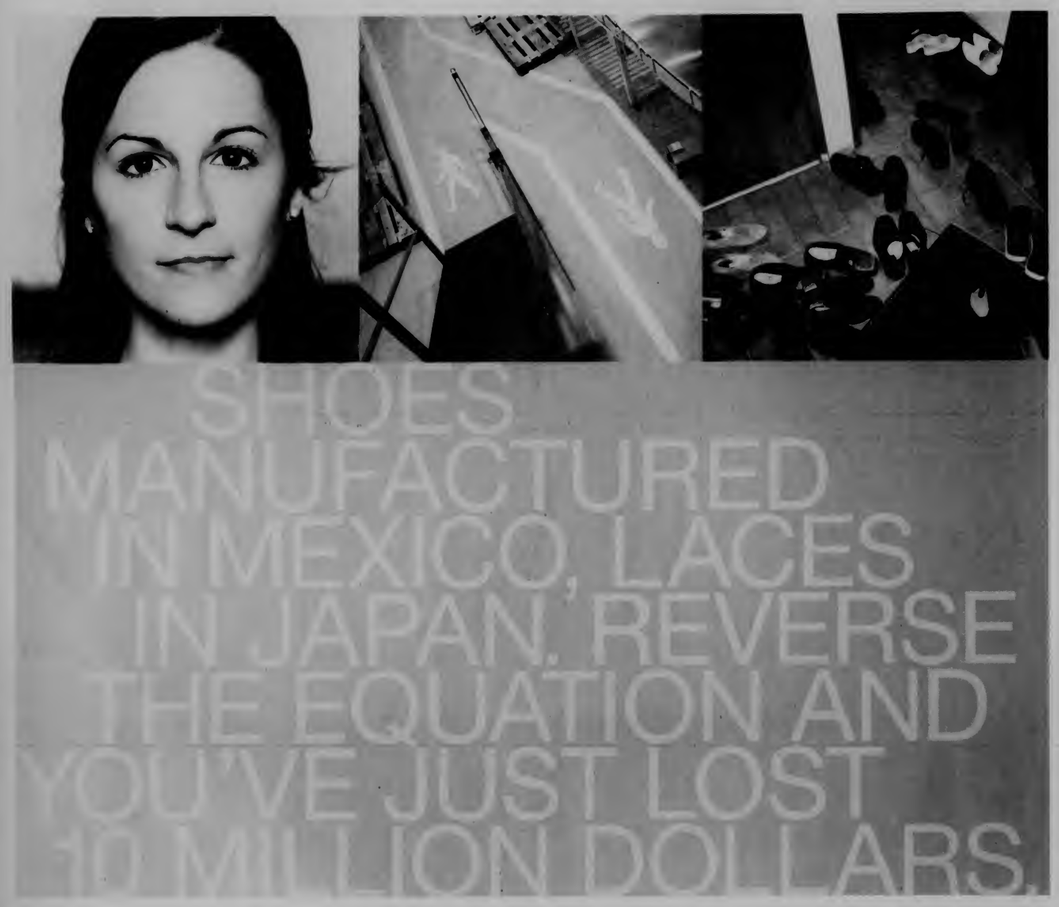
"I'm not satisfied with the Administration on this campus," Sheehan said. "We depend on the Administration for safety. We're made to feel safe here, but the bottom line is that the Administration needs to make students aware of any security issues on campus, whether it be through phone calls, emails or posters on campus."

Saunders agreed, by explaining that he felt that when it comes to safety the University has to put their foot down. He further explained that safety has been and is one of the SGA's top priorities.

"Today I walked a reporter from Fox 25 news from Boston around our campus and showed him the Southwest horse shoe and took them up by "rape Trail" and these people were beside themselves," Saunders said. "To see their eyes and the expressions on their faces gave me a perspective of what a freshman or any student sees when first presented these area's of campus."

Michael Whitehouse, chair of Public Policy however disagreed, stating that he felt the campus was safe and that people do not need to live in fear.

"We consistently talk about safety, but this campus is a safe place and we don't need to live in fear," Whitehouse said. "[The] rape trail is a myth and if you want to make this campus more safe we need to address actual safety issues."



Saunders disagreed, explaining that he felt that students are not going to want to wait an hour and a half to catch a bus, when they can simply take a five-minute walk through the woods. He further explained that it's scary for students to know that attacks are happening on their campus.

"It's scary to know that these events are happening at UMass. Especially when you give students a choice to wait for an hour and a half for the bus, or walk five minutes, then you've got to question what choice to make," Saunders said. "When it comes to safety we need to put our foot down and that's the bottom line."

Later in the meeting, Senators finalized the appointment of Linson Naval as the new Chancellor of Elections, swearing Naval in. His appointment opened the door for further discussion of upcoming elections and the possible use of on-line voting. Saunders however stated that on-line voting

Turn to SGA, page 3

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Look beyond the numbers.

bridge

continued from page 1

come about during mid-construction out of shire need.

"They [the railings] will be more modern and more safe," Theo Miga, a resident engineer at the Massachusetts Highway Department, District Two Headquarters, located in Northampton.

By safe, Miga meant that the metal in the current railings has deteriorated to nearly its breaking point. If a car were to hit the current railings, he further explained, the rotted metal would not be able to sustain the impact, and thus the car would actually break through.

Edward White, a Cianbro project engineer, agreed. "The existing railings are pretty well rotted at the bottom. It took us a couple of months, but we've come up with a replica of the original railing, and we'll be replacing it."

Cianbro, however, had not been originally contracted to replace the railing at all. The Historical Commissions of Hadley and Northampton had decreed that certain items, including that of the bridge's original railings, which are considered part of the structure's historical authenticity, should be preserved and be put back into place after replacing the damaged areas.

The contract did cite for a provision to allow for any replacements to areas in essential need though, so White brought representatives from the historical societies out to the bridge to illustrate the extent of the railings deterioration.

"After that, we gained both of their approvals," he said.

Cianbro made templates for the new railings, which will appear identical to the originals so as not to loose the Art Deco appearance.

"No one will be able to tell the difference," Frank Wenz, the Craft Superintendent, said. "But the new ones will be made of a much greater steel than from 50 years ago."

Wenz reported that progress on that is going along nicely, with the galvanized coating (the silver-looking coating placed on most roadside guard rails so as to protect the metal from harsh weather) just recently been painted on the railings.

More to come on the construction progress and current developments of the Calvin Coolidge Memorial Bridge, with a further look at traffic patterns in tomorrow's continuation on the bridge construction coverage.

Bridge construction will last until summer of 2003 and cost $19.8 million in total

Diamant

continued from page 1

ship between two middle aged Jewish women. The novel traces their relationship over the course of a summer spent in Cape Ann, Massachusetts. Like most of Diamant's other works, the themes of Jewish life and the female psyche are explored throughout.

Diamant's other works include Living a Jewish Life, Bible Baby Names, The New Jewish Wedding, The New Jewish Baby Book, and Choosing a Jewish Life. As a journalist, she has been published in The Boston Globe Magazine, Parents, Parenting Magazine, Hadassah, Boston, Yankee and Reform Judaism.

Diamant is a resident of West Newton, Massachusetts, a suburb of Boston. She lives with her husband and her daughter, Emilia, to whom The Red Tent is dedicated.

This lecture is sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Hillel House, the Jewish Student Union, the UMass Jewish Women's Collective, UMass Forum, the Judaic Studies Department, the Office of Jewish Affairs and the Commonwealth College, as well as several Five College organizations.

Anita Diamant, author of The Red Tent.

SGA

continued from page 1

would not take place until the new People Soft program is installed campus-wide for Fall 2002.

"We are all in full support of online voting, but we want to wait for People Soft to be installed so it will make it stick," Saunders said. "There are still security issues to be addressed as well."

A motion requesting a change in the percentages of budgets given per area government by the Ways and Means committee for their Spring Events Fund fostered debate. Questions arose over whether or not the Fund would be accurate to the events planned by each area government.

"If an area government needs more funding they can request it," Senator Brian Thompson said. "There allocations are based on their past performances and what they have done."

Senators debated to table the motion back into committee, but the Senate disagreed and the motion passed.

Three other motions were presented requesting By-Law changes; the Senate passed all three unanimously.

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts's calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as "Aggie Life" became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fly Brief Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a Broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tiburu Ginczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majcrowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

McMurphy's
4th Annual
Blarney Blowout
Sat. March 9th
Live Irish Music with The Tinkers
A St. Patrick's Day Celebration
Free Corned Beef Sandwiches
Prizes
Doors Open at Noon
No Cover
Positive ID Required

Seven O's
Rt. 116, Sunderland / next to Cliffside Apts
+ Every Wednesday Karoake
+ DJ Every Thursday
+ Live Music every Friday & Saturday
6 Televisions
3 Pool Tables
Draft Specials
Bud, Bud Light, & Coors Light
Pitchers $5.00 Pints $1.00
22 oz. $1.50 12 oz. $ .75
Food, Prizes and Live Music after the Game.
Come and Party with Us

Newman Lenten Service
"Walking in the Light"
Monday, March 11th @ 7pm in the Newman Center Chapel
Reflection by Sister Carol Herbert SSJ

Celebrate St.Patrick's Day All Month At The Harp
March Special: Black Velvets Champagne and Stout $2.75
Thursday
NBFB
Local Legends
THE HARP
Saturday
Uplifters
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
(413) 548-6900
Just off the bus route next to Cowl's Lumber
No Cover
"Start Your Own Tradition"

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM "WRITING IS A DANGEROUS ACTIVITY. AS A FREE ACTIVITY, MORE DANGEROUS." EDWARD ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

No more passivity

Get involved

At Noon this afternoon, on the steps of the Student Union, a protest will be held to challenge the recent wave of budget cuts that have affected every last one of us, from individual students to the faculty serving specific departments across campus.

The question is: how many of us will be there? How many of us will do anything about it at all?

No matter the set of circumstances, this University community has a history of passive interest in what's happening around it. We hear the news (issues involving rape, affirmative action, etc.), react temporarily and then forget, biding our time until the next hot topic falls into our laps.

This issue deserves our commitment.

Unlike other events in recent memory, there are few individuals left out this time around. Either you're personally suffering the consequences, or a friend is, or your department is being dismantled piece by piece. Unless you can hide behind the status of a top-level administrator, you're work and experience at this school is being compromised.

The protest this afternoon may not solve problems. In fact, it probably won't. It will, however, plant the seeds for the idea that change is possible. That, at the very least, we can show the state just how much our lives have been cut into.

The thing is, if we don't organize somehow, what's the motivation for the State of Massachusetts and those in Boston to do anything? With no angry or active response from the students at this school, they'll continue to slash away at the budget under the assumption that we're not concerned, that we don't mind our education being pulled out of our hands at every turn.

That we don't even care.

Let's make it clear we do.

First, educate yourself. Speak with professors and other students – the issues at hand go much farther than simple numbers. The faces attached to the numbers are telling the real stories. We're seeing undergraduates and faculty joining together in ways they never have before. Let's take advantage of this.

Begin writing letters to your state representatives. Have your family do the same. The letters they receive on one topic at any given time are probably far and few between – fill their boxes over and over again on this one and they will have to pay attention.

Productive methods for challenging this issue are available. It's time we take advantage of them. Stop scrawling immature messages across campus in chalk – those hollow threats fall on deaf ears and render the student cause meaningless.

Rather, go out of your way to communicate with those who are sitting back and taking from us. Until we do, this school will only slip further out of our hands.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

Outrage not manufacturable

ROB SCHULTZE

You know. I understand why people are pissed off about the budget cuts. Despite the fact that I am (ahem) graduating in May and find myself less stirred up than I might have been when I was a freshman or sophomore, I think it's a shame that UMass has to go through this tough period.

That doesn't mean that I am at all inclined to agree with the opposition, however.

Why must every good cause be championed by those so blinded by their own purity that they cannot see that they're only hurting their chances and alienating those who may be instinctively inclined to agree with them?

Take the elimination of childcare, for instance. Who really thinks that there should be no such program on campus? I mean, unless there's some Hard Times Dickensian-style villain twirling his mustache somewhere in the Republican Club, no one is really going to say that there should be no place for woman to bring their children while they work or get an education. It's a no-brainer; everyone instinctively wants to keep child-care around.

Then you see the children carrying signs. You know, guys, even the labor union has to give some attention to the child-labor laws. When I see little girls carrying protest signs it repulses me. Who's heartless now? I know parents should be pursuing lives or school rather than worrying about how the children will be spending their days, but shouldn't children be more worried about losing at tag or Super Mario Advance than showing solidarity for the cause?

"When I see little girls carrying protest signs it repulses me. Who's heartless now?"

When I was in elementary school my father got laid off. I could tell something was wrong. I used to sneak out of my bed at night and listen from the top of the stairs as they would worry about what was going to happen to us. It was a terrible time, but at least they tried to shield me from it.

They recognized that I was too young to have any real idea of what was going on and tried to hide the full force of what was happening so I could just live as a kid while they took the pain and worry and tried to make something happen. They didn't send me to my father's former factory to march around.

They didn't make me feel like it was somehow my fault or my responsibility to fix it. You people make me sick for purposely doing to your children what my parents took great pains to avoid. You should be ashamed of yourselves.

And see? You lose the support of someone who really wanted to lend, if nothing else, moral support to your cause. But what does it matter, right? You got a great photo op out of it.

Then, on Tuesday I find out that I'm only going to get half of the education that I paid for in one of my classes because we're having a Teach-In. The professor tells us she's going to stop class so she can tell us about the evils of budget cuts, not voting and powerful men. No, we can't leave, but we can doodle in our notebooks if we don't want to listen.

So not only are the budget cuts negatively affecting my education, but so is the fight against them. I mean, I wasn't heartbroken to not get my full dose of sociology, but I prefer it to be because I'm skipping, not for mandatory The Man-fighting.

Also – I thought teach-ins were supposed to be voluntary. Isn't that the point? People want to learn about a certain subject, maybe one which the powers-that-be would rather you weren't so educated about, and they come together as a group to be enlightened and formulate their own independent thoughts about what they should do with this new information. This, to me, is what a teach-in is supposed to be.

What I actually got had all the raw energy and pulsating excitement as a standardized test. It was like those Mandatory Fun icebreakers that RAs make you do on move-in day that everyone dreads – awkward silence waiting for it to end.

Note to faculty: you can't assign enthusiasm. Outrage cannot be given as homework. If professors would ask for students who wish to learn more to stay after class, that would be great: those motivated would get what they need to give them a push towards activism, and the rest could go home at watch SpongeBob. It's yet another example of The Cause pushing too far. Pushing people away.

Not everyone is going to be a crazy-in-the-eyes revolutionary, you know. Most people are moderates and would help if you would just stop giving them reasons not to. These aren't the 60s, and you can't manufacture passion in a student body that simply does not have it. Accept this, and try something truly revolutionary: talking to people, not down to them, and finding out what they would actually respond to. Not what you would like them to.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

Even duct tape has its limits

DAN LAMOTHE

When I got here this fall, my dorm room window had a crack in the pane. It wasn't a small one. The long crooked streak snaked across the glass. I put a work order in on it the first week. No one ever came.

Eventually, it happened. The wind slammed my window shut last week, and the weak, cracked glass gave away. A second streak appeared across the first one, leaving a section of glass in the middle of the pane that easily could have popped out at any time. "Aw, crap," I muttered.

Morphing into MacGyver, I did my best to fix the window temporarily with duct tape. I figured if I could at least hold the loose piece of glass in with the rest of the pane, I wouldn't freeze during these beauteous New England evenings with a gaping hole in my window.

It didn't work. As I pressed the tape carefully against the glass, the piece popped out into my hands. "DAMN IT!" I hissed. Why so upset? Probably because I knew how difficult it is to get things fixed around here. The ghetto window with duct tape and cardboard from the bottom of a shoebox attempting to hold the cold out did little to enhance the aesthetic quality of la casa de Dan. For the second time this semester, I put a work order in on the window. Miraculously, they fixed it on Tuesday. I never thought I would see the day. Why would I? Things get ignored here. It's just the way it is. The pool table in Webster has had about as much use to it as a coffee table, with nearly no felt on it for the past two years.

"Things get ignored here. It's just the way it is."

UMass and my window...they're cut from the same cloth.

This University has been held together with duct tape, band-aids, and bubble gum for too long. Faucets leak. Paint peels. Sidewalks get chewed into oblivion. The campus's physical merits are no different than the campus's academic, financial, or athletic ones. We make do with what we've got. That's how it is. No one expects miracles anymore at UMass because no one can provide them.

These days, no budget news is the only kind of good news around here. "The burden." "The brunt." There isn't a one of us that isn't sick of hearing these words in regards to our sorry financial condition. Who's bearing the burden and the brunt? All of us. We're sick and tired of hearing about it. We're sick and tired of reading about it. We're sick and tired of talking about it. We're sick and tired.

Where's the solution? There's got to be a way to turn this place around. Doesn't there?

The answer is of course there is. The problem is doing it is going to take time, lots of time. The hand of cards that we've been dealt for this semester and for the fall is lousy, but it's not our last hand in the game. UMass is going to survive. But what will it look like? What will be left?

A major concern is that what is going on now could scar UMass permanently. When a program is underfunded, it suffers. At least, though, its there. Once entire departments, programs, or schools get eliminated, though, its damned near impossible to bring them back. It doesn't matter whether it's the swim teams possibly disappearing or the foreign language departments potentially being merged – changes like that are nearly impossible to undo. This is what happens when a problem like our financial one gets fixed with duct tape too often: the whole damned thing finally falls apart.

Duct tape doesn't work here anymore. The window has to be changed. In regards to UMass's situation, that means new leadership for the Commonwealth as a whole. Letter writing is only going to get us so far. Until Governor Swift and her stubborn I-promised-a-tax-cut-so-here-it-is-don't-complain-about-the-consequences attitude is out of Boston, UMass is going to struggle. Improvements to our situation are going to happen scarcely, if it all. We're going to see a lot more of what we have already – no funding, and morons deciding where the meager finances that we do have should be spent.

UMass doesn't just have a crack in it anymore. It's broken. The bitter cold is getting in quickly.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

Crazy ideas in A crazy world

SHARON STIMPFLE

Victor Hugo wrote "An invasion of armies can be resisted, but an idea whose time has come cannot be stopped." I think that applies to that even idea is worth receiving. I think not. From the creation of the stiletto heel to the prohibition movement, many dim decisions disturbing inventions and distressing mistakes mark our time.

There are the abnormal ideas: pigs on hair, the pet rock and Michael Jackson's marriage to Lisa Marie Presley, the foolish ideas: chain mail, psychic hotlines, Milli Vanilli's Grammy. And the vulgar: the mullet hairstyle, thong underwear for men. O Town. Let us revere a special place for those that are simply unexplainable: the Red Sox selling Babe Ruth to the Yankees. (In the meantime, Red Sox fans dust off their anti-Jeter T-shirts, getting prepared for yet another season of hating the New York Yanks. What ideas are currently storming the public front?

On Friday morning Howard Kurtz, host of CNN's Reliable Sources, broke the story of David Letterman's possible move from CBS to ABC in the Washington Post column. His dirtscoop would result in the suspension of prestigious news show, Nightline, and Bill Maher's Politically Incorrect. Unhappy with CBS' older primetime audience and weak local news programs, Letterman is considering the Disney-owned network's attractive bid for a stronger lead-in. Ted Koppel has been Nightline's anchor and managing editor for 22 years, traveling the globe to report for ABC News for almost four decades. Would he prove more valuable to ABC if he began his feature report "Inside the Taliban" with two sequin-gowned supermodels hanging from his arms? Or perhaps, instead of filling breaking news stories for Nightline, Dave Marash can contribute his "top ten ways to irritate Barbara Walters" to boost the ratings.

Eighties teen idol Tiffany has decided to pose for the April issue of Playboy to "break down her Peter Pan typecast and possibly get show bookings again." Tiffany, Tiffany! We know you aren't LaToya Jackson, but do you really believe your phone will be ringing to ask about your music? An 80's girl at heart and in particular a fan of the glam metal rock bands this desperate cry for rehearsed attention leaves me shaking my head. March is Women's History Month. First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt in her battle for social justices, the queen of soul Aretha Franklin and the shrewd, chic Coco Chanel are among the celebrated. Tiffany must wonder why no Playboy bunnies cut the list, one can't help but wonder what could've been.

What else has surfaced in terms of radical ideas? On February 15, Duane Knudson of Texas A&M University in College Station announced the first reported success in cloning dogs or so the A.P. wire domestic shorthair called it. An aspirant was born last December. Knudson relates that many people have already started to store cat tissue samples in anticipation of future cloning successes. Basically, start saving your pets' tissues. People have already begun planning for the resurrection of their deceased kitteens.

Knudson warns, however, that in addition to a difference in color pattern, "a clone won't even be equipped with a memory chip from the owner of any other animal."

Hooray. There's a plus. Consequently, we can't hold a deep conversation with one and is scarred by cat's reaction to the pulling and baby doll dressing. I'd say I'm biased. Nevertheless, to those of you who are interested in issues of animal rights and the human-dog relationship with your paper, what do you make out of investing in a discovered copy of "Snow Joke or Alonso"? Especially when their closet tricks and get-ugly-in-the-pink strategies are exhausted hours trying. Sparky are non-inclusive.

Last, but not least, Fox announced on Saturday that Paula Jones is replacing Amy Fisher as Tonya Harding's "Celebrity Boxing" opponent. This can't be a good idea. Has anyone put into consideration the safety of Jones' new nose job?

Sharon Stimpfle is a Collegian Columnist.

More ravings from a lunatic

SEAN JACQUET

That's right. I'm back with more rants and ravings. I've actually been advised to maintain my cynicism throughout the entire column in the future. So, from this point on, I'll cease to be complimentary. Sound good, losers?

I must, however, agree with the outcry regarding the shooting of our campus ducks. Picking off those lovable creatures as they swim peacefully in our sparkling campus pond? What kind of a lowrent redneck practice is that? Someone tell Billy Jack and Toothless Ed to find a different hobby. Something other than firing paintballs at defenseless creatures.

And another thing: I wouldn't have thought such white trash activities happened in the Pioneer Valley. I mean white trash in Western Massachusetts? Like that will ever happen.

Speaking of crazy rednecks, what about this Yates woman in Texas. Andrea Pia Yates drowned her FIVE children while dealing with post partem depression. Apparently, she heard the voice of Satan and did not know killing her kids was wrong. It seems like there's a better way to deal with depression than murdering your own flesh and blood. I don't know. Maybe she could buy a paintball gun and go duck hunting with Billy Jack and Toothless Ed. Or better yet, we could all fire paintballs at these nitwits while their unarmed.

Sorry I had to compare the duck assassins to a yahoo like Andrea Yates. You just caught me on a rough day. Quite obviously, drowning children and shooting ducks are worlds apart. I guess what I'm saying is don't take anything I say seriously.

President Bush's war on terrorism has produced some odd rhetoric. For instance, Bush calls "terrorist states" the "axis of evil". "Axis of evil?" What is this, He-Man? Who's the leader of this "axis of evil", Skeletor? Or is it King Cobra? Maybe it's Dr. Claw. (If so, Inspector Gadget's all over it.) Where is their secret lair, Castle Grayskull? If the war on terrorism is just, the cause should sell itself. Bush shouldn't resort to cartoonish name-calling and asinine characterization. This is real life Mr. Bush, not a cartoon.

A recent editorial in this newspaper instructed students opposed to the fee increases and budget cuts to "shut our mouths." The author informed readers we have no right to complain because the University is acting in our best interest. OK, fair enough. But what about the kids forced to leave school because they can no longer afford it? What about the students unable to get classes in their own major? Or kids facing an extra semester due to class shortages? What about faculty being laid-off or forced into early retirement? These developments resulted from severe state budget cuts. There exists the potential for change. We can reverse the situation before it gets too severe. In order to do that, students must "complain" and refuse to "shut our mouths." This is serious, and students can't afford to remain silent.

The Catholic Church's cover-up of the Geoghan molestation should come as no surprise. For as long as there has been religion, there have been religious abuses. Religion has a nasty habit of bending their own rules for their own advance, or to save face. Cardinal Law's decision to transfer Geoghan from parish to parish is not only sickening, but also criminal. Law aided and abetted a known rapist more times than I care to say. Law knew of Geoghan's pedophilia and failed to stop it. Worse, Law allowed it to happen. Fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice, shame on me. Well, shame on you, Cardinal Law.

President Bush is apparently considering his war on terrorism to North Korea and Iraq. That makes sense. If I were President, I'd declare war on everybody. Why stop with Afghanistan? If we attack every country, eventually we'll get the terrorists. Hey, if everybody in the world were dead, there wouldn't be anybody left to terrorize. If American history is any indication, innocents are expendable as long as we get our guys. Or oil.

I thought I could ride this out, but Carrot Top is killing me. Why is this talent-devoid stooge the spokesman for 1-800-COLLECT. What logic is there to allow Carrot Top to sell your product? What qualifies him as a pitchman? Is it his mop of unkempt, orange hair? Is it the high-pitched, nasal voice? It's guys like this that make me think I'm in the wrong field. Should I start carrying around a trunk full of crap? Would people think I'm funny then? Christ, even Gallagher never landed a commercial gig.

Am I the only person in the world that doesn't have Instant Messenger? Any time I exchange phone numbers with someone, they ask if I have Instant Messenger. I know OF Instant Messenger. I just don't have. I thought I was making a big technological advance when I started using e-mail. Now, apparently, I'm behind the times again. It's so bad that my friends have nicknamed me "Caveman". At some point I'll have to jump into the 21st century, and develop some technological expertise. I mean, I still type with one finger.

Now for the important stuff. Every morning at the DC, I get orange juice out of the little dispensers. But what comes out isn't really orange juice. It's more yellowish water with a slight orange flavor. Listen, I don't want Tang! I don't want Hi-C. I want some good hearty OJ. I love real OJ, but this impostor liquid must go. This appears to be an easily correctible problem, so DC staff, please don't deprive a simple man of the one thing that makes him happy: pure, sweet orange juice.

Let me reiterate: 90 percent of what I say isn't meant to be taken seriously. Except the part about the orange juice.

Sean Jacquet is a UMass student.

IRONIC

Arts and Living 3/07/02

1. Once the corporate savior, 2. then a dancefloor staple, 3. is there hope for techno?

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The only redeeming value of 1995's Hackers is its soundtrack. A throwback to the beginning of a mini-revolution that ended as suddenly as it began, the soundtrack is a lasting testament to media bombast, corporate failure and one undeniable fact: machine-made music has a long way to go.

1.

In the mid-nineties, there existed a sudden and inexplicable void in popular music. Sales of mainstay groups left an industry unexpectedly deflated.

"Hair metal lasted for years..." execs pondered. "So why won't grunge? Or hip-hop?"

What those same execs hadn't learned (and still don't know now) is that the problem with early nineties stalwarts was overexposure. With Kurt Cobain's suicide, grunge lost its most accessible icon, and attempts to replace him failed. Dr. Dre begat Snoop Dogg begat Warren G begat performers

[turn to SAVIOR, page 6]

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Paul Oakenfold's Tranceport is a good album. Finely sculpted on big beats and smooth sounds, the album is as good a place to start as any for an aspiring electronic fan. Containing the genre's biggest dominating sounds, Tranceport's accessibility makes for an amazing electronic album.

2.

And that's why the album is, ultimately, so problematic.

The failure of the biggest electronic names forced corporate America to look elsewhere for musical revenue. As was traditional, the void that electronic music created was quickly filled, first by country, then by resurgences of hip-hop, straight rock and finally, hugely, pop.

But what of the struggling electronic artists whose time in the sun had passed so quickly? Few acts even got second shots at audiences, being written off as failures after flameout premiers. Those

[turn to DANCE, page 6]

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

If the initial Hackers bands and the second-wave DJs couldn't pull of a musical revolution – it was more of a brief skirmish that ended in bloodshed – can electronic music become anything more than a niche market?

3.

Perhaps.

It will take true creativity of the artists involved – tweaking sounds for a bigger market or endlessly piggybacking other performers won't cut it. Of course, that opens the doors to some truly great artists, including Dan the Automator, the Avalanches and Matmos.

DJs never took, partly because they didn't want to take, partly because the industry was half as committed to them as they'd been to their earlier musical projects. With the failure of DJs being the fault of everyone

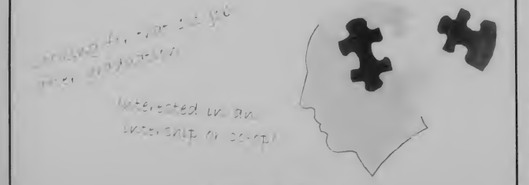
[turn to HOPE, page 6]

Alex Gold's turntable mastery is fine – if totally lacking in creativity. That's the problem.

DESIGN BY SAM WILKINSON

The Fourth Annual Western Massachusetts Sacred Harp Singing Convention comes to Northampton this weekend

When I sing I see shapes



I know that this statement will make me look like a UMASS drunk, but these shapes tell you how to sing. Now, after your laughter quiets, it is true. You can sing while reading shapes, and not have to have years of experience to do so. In addition, the largest social-singing event in the Pioneer Valley, the Fourth Annual Western Massachusetts Sacred Harp singing Convention, is coming on March 9 and 10 to Northampton. This gathering will most likely draw almost 500 people from all over the country to sing from the venerable Sacred Harp book.

Shape-note singing, as it is called, is nothing new. It dates back to 19th century. It is a form of folk music that was created to allow people of all musical skill levels, from the most tone deaf to the most experienced, to sing together. The first and most comprehensive book of music printed is the Sacred Harp book. The first edition was first published in Bremen, Georgia, in 1844 and has been continually updated, with the most recent being published in 1991. The Sacred Harp has been in print longer than any other book in American history except the bible. Most of the initial music in the Sacred Harp came from early American gospel music, melded with 18th century English parish church harmonies, old pop songs and Scots-Irish ballad melodies all heavily influenced with Yankee harmony and early 19th century frontier abandon. From the 1830s to the 1930s, churches and town halls in the Valley were regularly packed to capacity social singing events. However, social singing events went underground with the advent of TV and radio.

The local Amherst group that is hosting the convention has been meeting for over 15 years before they started the yearly get-together. The first convention they had in 1989 drew over 200 people from all over the country to come sing. The event continually drew over 200 people in 2000 and 2001 and continues to grow.

The convention will commence on the morning of Saturday, March 9th, with a "singing school" workshop. This will be the time to acquaint both beginner and experienced alike with the easy to read notation. The basics of the Sacred Harp and shape note singing will be covered for all those who have not done it before. At noon, a free potluck lunch will be held on the premises during both days. The rest of the time is spent singing the unique brand of music.

If you want more information, or want to join in and sing in this convention, contact Eliza Cavanaugh Convention Chair at (413) 772-0287 Info@WMSHC.org or look on the web at www.wmshc.org. –Liam Varvaro

Come to the

First Annual Social and Behavioral Sciences Career Day

Wednesday, March 13, 2002
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
163 Campus Center

Co-ops!
Internships!
Permanent positions!

For sophomores, juniors AND seniors!

Campus Career Network

Presented by the Campus Career Network

For more information, call 577-0417 or see the Campus Career Network web site
www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

■ savior

Continued from page 5

more and more watered down. Sales flagged after 1995, and the recording industry was desperate for new acts.

Enter the techno.

Like an unknown ronin to a Japanese village, electronica's arrival was unexpected and unprepared for. Described as the savior of American music by recording industry insiders desperate to believe, electronic music's spokesmen claimed that groups like the Chemical Brothers, Prodigy, Underworld, Crystal Method and others would revive an industry laid to waste by excessive overexposure. Executives, unsure of what, exactly, they were hearing, foolishly swapped cash cow and bought up the best acts. But creativity takes time, something record giants were unwilling to afford.

Instead, they took their stables of electronic artists, all totally unprepared for the 'big time,' and pushed them to the moon. The aforementioned bands got big contracts (for electronic artists anyway), added hooks-uncontentional to the traditional electronic sound, and were hyped as saviors.

It was a disaster on an unbelievable level.

America simply didn't know what to do with technotic albums that lacked lyrics. Where there should have been choruses, there were instead scary beat loops. Where there should have been soul, there were only repetitive beats. Where there should have been melody, there were instead frighteningly electronic voices. Where there should have been accessibility, there were only albums that seemed suited for dance parties, for drug use and for fast-paced movie soundtracks.

To that end, the Hackers soundtrack was an overwhelming success. Since nothing else in the movie was good – the sheer volume of stupidity confined to 90-odd minutes was overwhelming – at least the music was exciting new.

The soundtrack is a who's who at the electronic graveyard: Underworld, Prodigy, Leftfield, Orbital, the Stereo MCs. All of these were bands that later, at least partially due to their exposure on this soundtrack, led the electronic charge. Of course, it was a charge made in vain.

Underworld died a damning death with atrociously bad solo albums. Prodigy tried to achieve success on the back of a single called "Smack My Bitch Up," one of the worst decisions ever made by a band trying to break through. Leftfield's music was never as good as its soundtrack singles. Orbital and the Stereo MCs disappeared to obscurity as quickly as they had appeared on the nationwide scene.

Most frustrating now, all had shown signs of redeemable talent. That's an underhanded and mean way of saying that none of the acts captured on the Hackers soundtrack were ready for the 'big-time' but they definitely could have been.

If only they'd been given time.

Underworld's "Cowgirl" is a particularly affecting, beat-based manifesto. Repetitive vocals kill the song's digital flow, and at nearly eight minutes, it seems that Underworld didn't know when to call it a day. Orbital's "Halcyon & On & On" had the most promise: vocals that don't intrude, but rather glide on the song's simple beat. Listening to it now is a strange experience, if only because the beats behind the singer's voice map out the one traditional format adopted by techno "songs." Successful indeed, but indistinguishable in a time that would see the same beats repeated ad nauseam. Prodigy's creations were especially barry, hinting at the dark sound that could have been the English group's success had it not blown it all on one unbelievably stupid single. The rest of the album's acts – Plastico and Urban Dance Squad especially – deserve nothing more than those perfunctory mentions.

Where Hackers' soundtrack is most successful is in its newness at the time. On one album, new beats and new sounds got exposure at one of the earliest points in electronic music's infantile beginning. Where the album fails is its relative droll sound after years of constant overexposure. What beats were new here are old today, with literally thousands of variations existing.

What was innocent and new here had much further to go, and after its amazing rise to the proverbial top, its descent into the hellish depths of outright obscurity was unbelievable. And it happened on the backs of singular DJs...

■ dance

Continued from page 5

that did tended to show minor improvement, but hardly enough to justify second chances at the spotlight. If anything, what little promotion artists did get was out of obligation rather than genuine interest.

Electronica might have been down, but they certainly weren't out. As spectacular the failure might have been on a corporate level, techno's one-night stand (or cup of coffee?) with the 'big-time' brought fans to the music in droves. While the new fans obviously weren't arriving in numbers large enough to make the music commercially successful, electronic music's now larger fan base still thirsted for the beats.

Which created a strange bind for corporations who had failed to make electronic music dominate the market. Despite massive media blitzes and excessive hype, electronica seemed destined for a loyal, but small, market. Where the music industry wanted a phenomenon, it's been left with a niche.

With nothing else to do – the industry had invested enough to force their hand – labels responded with a second wave.

This time, the assault was launched by a collection of international DJs: Sasha, Paul van Dyk, Paul Oakenfold, Dmitri, John Digweed, Carl Cox (a holdover from Hackers), and the multitude of others. If big groups like Underworld, Leftfield, Prodigy and the Chemical Brothers couldn't deliver, then perhaps the world was more interested in singular, creative efforts from DJs across the world.

Or at least from Europe. Oakenfold and Cox and Digweed are from Britain, Van Dyk is from Germany, Sasha is from Wales, Dmitri from Paris is Turkish/French. They have recorded sets for release from five continents. They have achieved modest commercial success with their releases, although research for this article revealed that "going nearly gold in Europe" was about as successful as things got.

Things didn't go so well.

If the groups from Hackers were tweaking their sound for a more popular market and failing, the DJs never had a chance. They didn't even want the chance.

The DJs mentioned above have made a career on the dance floors of clubs around the world. From all-night raves to huge clubs in Ibiza, the Digweeds and Sashas have made music that keeps people moving. And that means a seemingly lack of diversity. Dance music has to stay fairly similar from beginning to end to keep people moving.

More thumb, though, without diversity, there can be little in the way of success.

*Trancepor*t is the perfect example of this failing. As mentioned above, it truly is a total album, featuring almost all of the highlights of late-90's electronica. Unfortunately, the album's lowlight is the longer-lasting problem. All of Port's tracks are totally interchangeable, thus creating an album that plays without memory. On a rock album, there might be a jewel of a song wedged between two or three rocks. It's easy to skip those and to get back to that one good song.

The album's musical stasis from beginning to end, at almost 74 minutes, is overwhelming. The beats sound largely the same from song to song, and it's hard to remember where the true highlights are. Like Underworld before him, Oakenfold makes a great album but seems unable to put on the breaks. In fact, if CDs could store 150 minutes of music, he'd likely have taken it to 148 minutes. That'd be less than three hours of music to a DJ who routinely has to come up with sets far longer than that.

As if the album's length isn't problematic enough, *Trancepor*t is a mix album of other DJs' productions. Highlights include "[Purple] Sasha vs. The Light" and "Cafe Del Mar (Three N One Remix)" but what are they?

Is the average music fan going to understand that Oakenfold took other DJs' work and slightly altered them? And those other DJs were simply working with still more artists' work?

More than ever, there was the muddled creativity of big electronic acts thought to be moneymakers; techno had become DJs' working on top of DJs' working on top of artists. With such an incestuous creative relationship created, techno couldn't help becoming its critics' main accusation: the same.

*Trancepor*t isn't radically different from any of its counterparts at the time: big beats, endless loops and driving dance floor music. But club music doesn't translate to commercial success, so techno still waits.

With groups failed, and DJs failed, could the music's future lie in creative fusion?

Indeed...

■ hope

Continued from page 5

involved electronica was written off as nothing more than a late-'80s fad, forever sentenced to European nightclubs and late-night teens-sessions.

All involved – those who had flirted with corporate success and—seemed salved by the agreement. The performers had their chance, had their niche, and while they wouldn't be appearing on the soon to be conceived "MTV Cribs," they'd survive. The music industry wrote off their attempt to popularize techno/ic music as a necessary investment that didn't pay off.

End of the story.

Almost.

While this shadowy agreement was being implicitly made, some electronic artists saw a third way. They wouldn't have to be the big bands that the industry craved, and they wouldn't have to DJ endless shows for Ecstasy-popping Spring Breakers. Perhaps their success would come through fusion.

Or synthesis. Or combination. Or amalgamation. Or creation.

Where electronic artists had failed to find success within their own genre, these as-of-then unknown artists would fuse the styles of both with older, more traditional styles. Instead of listening to electronic albums, listeners could have the opportunity to listen to media stews: blends of disparate popular music come together on mixed albums. It wouldn't be piggybacking fellow electronic artists; it would be unifying other artists.

Dan the Automator splashed onto the scene with Dr. Octagonecologyst, an album he recorded with the ever-bizarre Kool Keith. From the Ultramagnetic MC's, a strange group seeking purity in an increasingly impure hip-hop, Keith's collaboration with Dan produced an album that was a critical darling that appealed to both fans of hip-hop and techno. Automator carved out a middle ground between the two, a place that he has been forever explor-

Turn to HOPE page 7

YESTERDAY'S Collegian MISIDENTIFIED THE AUTHORS OF THE FRANK STALLONE VS. TITO JACKSON ARTICLE. THE CO-AUTHOR OF THE PIECE IS JUSTEN HARN. ARTS REGRETS THE MISTAKE, AND BEGS FOR NO VENGEANCE FROM CHUCK ZITO.

Sets and wit prove all not Lost

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST
March 7, 8, 9
Rand Theater

The design in the Theater Department's production of Love's Labor's Lost is right on target. The rest of it could use some work.

Despite, or perhaps because of, the fact that it's a comedy, LLL isn't light on language. As is typical with Shakespeare, puns abound, and in this play in particular, the wordplay is dizzying and the clever zingers unending.

Basically, it's like this: the King of Navarre and three lords (Berowne, Longaville and Dumaine) sign an agreement that they will concentrate on their studies for three years. But, by signing it, they agree to not to see a woman for the whole of that time. (It makes Josh Hartnett's 40 days seem like a pittance.)

Enter the Princess of France on an inconsequential matter of state business. With her, conveniently, are three ladies: Rosaline, Katherine and Maria. The business of falling in love begins immediately – each of the men keeping it hidden from one another, lest anyone find out about their rule breaking.

The design team does a fabulous job with the Theater Department's increasingly limited funds. The entire look anticipates spring, replete with Easter candy pastels and lush greens. The costumes, by Felicia McNeil, are easily the highlight of the design. The Princess and her ladies are garbed in delightful pastel dresses. The men are dressed in black initially, but as the intoxication of love takes over, the black gradually exposes pastels underneath.

The soft colors and dreamy environment calls to mind past productions, most notably Kenneth Branagh's recent movie. (Fortunately for the audience, however, this version is better than Branagh's atrocious attempt at a movie musical.)

But unfortunately the other elements of the production can't quite keep up with its smart look.

The play is meant to be fast-paced and quick-witted, which this production does well. It's short and sweet – exactly what this comedy should be. But quick-witted does not mean just quick, which some of the actors have forgotten. Half of the cast doesn't seem to know what they're saying (although their pronunciation is impeccable) and the other half doesn't think the audience knows what Shakespeare's saying (for instance, pointing to their head when they say "philosophy").

In Lucinda Kidder's director's note, she says she was looking for more than just the saccharine world of the love story. What she found in the text were "issues of real importance." But if those issues are in the play, they're certainly not in this production.

The King and his lords initially have all the grave seriousness of the post-adolescent. But, typical of the young, the seriousness fades in the face of ladies and love notes. The ladies often dissolve into fits of giggles. There is little in the production beyond the love story. Contributing to this is the silliness of the characters beyond the lords and ladies. Take Armado, for instance, a Spanish visitor to the court. Played by Jordan Zolan, he comes off as an over-the-top, whiny and lovelorn parody of a Spaniard. Or Holofernes (played by Matthew B. Lang), who comes off as a laughable pedant. Not that these character choices are necessarily bad, but if Kidder was looking for a more profound LLL, this was not the route to go.

Luckily, the central cast is sufficiently competent. The King (Jay Rodger) and the Princess (Kimberly Kaczorowski) trade insults adeptly. But Berowne (Adrian Villalobos) and Rosaline (Lindsay Grace Robitaille) are the true stars and the wittiest of the pairings (rather the Benedick and Beatrice of LLL). Overall, the show isn't bad, but bland, and there are even a few shining moments of humor, tenderness and unparalleled wit.

Celebrity boxing and Ozzy

Celebrity Boxin'

Topping this week's wacky news is the story that the "Long Island Lolita" Amy Fisher was scheduled to participate in a boxing match against the infamous Tonya Harding on the Fox special "Celebrity Boxing," airing next Wednesday night March 13th. Fisher became nationally known in 1993 when she shot Mary Jo Buttafuoco, the wife of the man Joey Buttafuoco she was having an affair with. Mary Jo survived the shooting, but suffered some permanent facial distortion.

However, this "dream" match will never take place as the New York Parole Board has stepped in to prevent Fisher from participating. "For reasons that they did not make clear to me or Ms. Fisher, they refused to allow her to engage in perfectly lawful behavior to earn monies to help support her child," Fisher's lawyer, Bruce Barket, told The New York Post. "We're extremely disappointed in this decision and believe that they have acted in an arbitrary and capricious manner."

Fortunately, all is not lost, as the special will go on. Paula Jones, who gained notoriety for her suing President Clinton for sexual harassment, will step in and fight Harding, who of course became famous when she orchestrated an attack on figure skating competitor Nancy Kerrigan.

Other matches on "Celebrity Boxing" include Gary Williams from "The Brady Bunch" taking on Danny Bonnaduce from "The Partridge Family," and rapper Vanilla Ice versus Todd Bridges (a.k.a. Willis from "Different Strokes." Gary Coleman wasn't available?)

Chains of Love

In a match that should be on "Celebrity Boxing," but unfortunately isn't, the "feud" between radio talk show host Howard Stern and singer/actress Kathy Lee Gifford may be brought to television soon. Stern has challenged Gifford to live with him in the "Big Brother 3" house. Stern is not scheduled to be a part of the "Big Brother" house, but the challenge was based on the condition that he would join the house if he Gifford would agree to live with him, so that the world could see him "harass her" every week. There was no response from Gifford as of press time.

XFL

Apparently, the XFL debacle wasn't enough to sour NBC on football. The network has signed a two-year television deal with the Arena Football League (AFL) that calls for the network to split revenues down the middle after "the recoupment of various costs," says NBC Sports President Ken Schanzer. NBC has signed on to broadcast 22 AFL games per year beginning in 2003. NBC has been clamoring to get professional football back on the network, since losing their portion of NFL coverage to CBS in 1998.

IRON MAN

Finally, some news on two intriguing new programs. MTV's "The Osbourne Family Show," a reality-based show featuring Ozzy Osbourne's family has got to get some points for its hilarious promos featuring Tenacious D. Although I missed the debut episode, the concept of "reality sitcom" looks unique, in this case, sort of like "The Real World" on crack.

Keeping with the reality theme, according to TV Guide, HBO has ordered seven episodes of the drama pilot "Baseball Wives." The show revolves around the wives of a group of Major League Baseball stars as they struggle to keep their relationships intact. The show could debut as early as January 2003.

Information from Tvguide.com and The New York Post was used in this article.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member

■ hope

Continued from page 6

ing. He first worked on Handsome Boy Modeling School's fascinating project uniting Dan with Dr. La Soul mastermind Prince Paul and sampling liberally from an episode of Chris Elliot's television show "Get a Life." More recently, Dan's dance Deltron 3030 (2000) – best album? and Gorillaz, which fused the following food-focused objects: Japanese pop, Britpop, inevitably cartoonies, the artist behind Tank Girl outlandish hip-hop rant and Dan's subtle combination of it all.

Lest he dominate the field last year's record by Australia's The Avalanches Since I Left You was one of last year's most impressive musical explorations – an anarchic combination of samples – some 1,000 in all – from movies, songs and various other forms of media. Since I Left You overwhelmed listeners with its fast-paced furs. Radically jumping from sample to sample while being held together with beats straight out of a 1970's lounge act, The Avalanches made an album with so disparate as to confuse yet so unified as to impress. Among the impressed was Madonna, who, for the first time in her career, lent a song ("Holiday") to the Aussies. The highlight of the album is the insane "Frontier Psychiatrist," a song going in too many directions to count while never actually getting there.

Finally, there is Matmos. If there were to be a Kronos Quartet of the Electronic world, it would be San Francisco's Matmos. A strange unification of sounds from across the musical world – the band's last album, A Chance to Cut is a Chance to Cure, was recorded featuring the sounds of human surgery – Matmos defies all traditional description. Having appeared on Letterman while touring with Björk, the San Franciscans defy explanation while relying in the most distant of ways on its electronic beginnings. The band is as truly out there as can be imagined and its music is surely not for everyone. But where it succeeds is its refusal to bow down to any traditional expectation of music, electronic included.

In their own ways, all three groups (and they are surely joined by many more) reveal that electronic music's future is as assured as any. While it may never achieve the huge commercial success that could only come with a second corporate push, technotica's role on the music scene might be as something other than a money-maker.

If the chart-toppers are on this Earth to make money, then perhaps these electronic acts are on this Earth to make art. Not in the sense of wildly superior to their chart-topping cousins, but in the sense that Dan, the Avalanches and Matmos are truly battering the traditions that have surrounded music.

Where once there were thick black lines dividing musics from one another, now there is an increased attention paid to the possibility of fusion. If electronic music accomplishes nothing else, it will have propagated the notion of musical amalgamation.

And while that isn't worth the hundreds of millions dollars that the recording industry truly believed, it will be the thing that keeps the recording industry going. Music needs someplace to go – electronica can take it there.

WE'RE A LOT MORE THAN JUST COURSEBOOKS
STUDENTS ONLY - THIS SEMESTER

TAKE 15% OFF
ANY NON-COURSE BOOK PURCHASES

Just show your student ID at our Bookshop or College Store

Jeffrey Amherst Bookshop and College Store
55 South Pleasant Street Amherst
Massachusetts 01002 253-3381

offer expires 5/31/02

Cate Blanchett's cosmic delight can't even save the post-overall mess of The Shipping News

Where did it all go wrong?

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

THE SHIPPING NEWS
Starring Kevin Spacey, Julianne Moore and Judi Dench
Directed by Lasse Hallstrom
Limited Release

With a coming attraction boasting the talents of Academy Award winning actor Kevin Spacey, director Lasse Hallstrom, and also an award-winning novel, The Shipping News seemed like a sure-fire hit.

So what went wrong?

It can be attributed to many things, really. First and foremost is the little word-of-mouth the film got. After opening in Los Angeles and New York to mixed reviews it only became expanded to other cities in a very small trickle. By the time that Spacey was nominated for a Golden Globe for his role in the film, the movie had already shriveled up and even disappeared in the few U.S. theaters showing it.

Additionally, and perhaps most obviously its destructor, the movie is generally weak in all regards. Its first act (that is, the first 30 minutes of the nearly three-hour snooze-fest) is, conversely, strangely addicting. Spacey plays Quoyle, a pathetic man with no ambitions or friends (a large reversal thance to Spacey's part in American Beauty), who becomes smitten with a prostitute named Petal (Cate Blanchett), only interested in a place to stay for a while. Quoyle either doesn't see through this, or perhaps looks past it, and the two have a daughter. I say that he has a daughter because apart from the birthing process, Quoyle does the entire childrearing as Petal moves from bar to bar and man to man until an untimely accident puts her out of the picture for good. This puts the audience in the position of seeing Quoyle as a good man all in all, albeit slightly unhappy, but later on he becomes angry and violent, and we slowly begin to lose any hope of redemption in his character.

Robert Nelson Jacobs (Dinosaur) who wrote the screenplay most likely had a daunting task adapting the hefty novel to the screen, but it feels too weighty even though there's really not much going on. He pens some clever lines, like when Quoyle is being taught how to write headlines for the "shipping" column in the newspaper (a section describing the seafaring trade in the town). He is shown a hazy horizon line over the water and told to title the story "Imminent Storm Threatens Village." Quoyle asks what happens if the storm never comes? "Village Spared from Deadly Storm," replies his experienced tutor. That gives a much-needed comic relief, however slight it may be, as does a later scene where Quoyle experiences his first eel flipper burger. Yum! Jacobs, overall, does not win audiences over like the book is said to have done for its readers.

I was into the groove of the hooks-story until just about this point, but when Aunt Agnis (Judi Dench) arrives at Quoyle's door, informing him that she's moving the two to Newfoundland, it began to lose credibility. Dench is a usual Hallstrom standby, but she always plays the same exact role: some curmudgeonly old coot who thinks she knows what's best but turns out that she's got as much problems as the next old bat. Agnis's past comes to haunt her as Quoyle stumbles upon a secret that is simply disgusting. Many movies have bizarre and somewhat unpleasant subplots behind them, but the line has to be drawn somewhere, doesn't it? I won't ruin it for you, because despite the movie's rapid decline into "watch me on TV" territory, I honestly believe that there is an intriguing, and potentially pleasing movie trying to shine through. Nonetheless, this sordid secret might be a result of having nothing more humane to do up there in Newfoundland (after all, they live like the Amish – no TV, no Internet, the nearest movie theatre a continent away) but as much "sense" as this might have made in the book, it does not translate so well to the screen.

I hate blaming Lasse Hallstrom, who has delivered two great films in the past two years (The Cider House Rules and Chocolat), but I can only ascribe the phrase that it's just not possible to win each and every time you go out there. Apart from the captivating first 30 minutes, Hallstrom doesn't have much to work with – a few flashbacks are acceptable to house being carried across a lake of ice), offering a new change of scene, but otherwise he has to rely more on the acting and technical components of the movie.

In addition to Spacey, Julianne Moore (Hannibal) stars as his on-again, off-again love interest, but her phony accent breaks any concentration a person may have on the film. Why doesn't anyone besides me ever think that people who do accents best are the ones who actually come from that area? However, while Pete Postlethwaithe (The Usual Suspects) and Rhys Ifans (Notting Hill) do not hail from Newfoundland, their accents at least lend some semblance to the native dialect of the area, and also excel in their mostly minor roles. But then there's Scott Glenn who

Catching the Spring fever

ANDREW MERRITT

Alright, that's it. It's officially time. I'm sick of winter. I'm sick of bundling up, walking backwards through Southwest to keep my nose from freezing right off and falling into the steam vent that makes some weird banshee noise under on that in future columns.

I'm ready for baseball. I'm ready to read box scores every morning. And apparently, the Red Sox are ready to give me stories to read. First of all, there's the question of how a team that owns the player who hit the longest home run of the season (Manny Ramirez) and the pitcher who suddenly made the entire city of Boston the American capital of the Dominican Republic (Pedro, no last name necessary) struggle to finish out the season. The 2001 edition of the Red Sox became a joke, a disjointed team full of whining outfielders, whining pitchers and vital pieces of the puzzle that were injured at the wrong times.

However, just like every year that I can remember there is hope. All the memories of last season – from Manny walking out on Everett questioning the existence of dinosaurs to the collapse we all hoped wouldn't come – are gone. Wiped clean off the slate. The team is happier, healthier and smarter now. Not to mention a little richer, having been bought by a couple of guys who seem genuinely interested in what the common fan has to say (how true that will be of this ownership will still be).

But there is controversy. Oh, the controversy. First, it was "why didn't Manny show up to camp on the first day?" Fortunately, it was just a doctor's appointment. And yes, he could have had his pinky cut during the winter months, but there's no good reason to punish the superstar outfielder because he skipped the first day.

The next issue to arise was the three big injuries that lost us Pedro. Turns out that little "tearing" in his shoulder cartilage could have ended his career. Well, good thing we ironed that out. But now Pedro's fine, in fact, he threw 94 mph fastballs at batters yesterday, surely to the delight of those fortunate souls who made the trip to the sunnier world down south.

Next, Nomar Garciaparra. The franchise. The future. The savior. For the last two months of the season, Nomar owned the most important wrist in New England. But Nomar tells us that everything's ok. Maybe not perfect, because who knows exactly how long it will take for the wrist to be 100 percent. But for now, we'll take it. We just want our shortstop back.

And the last devastating injury of 2001, Jason Varitek. Varitek, who hit .243 with seven home runs and 25 RBIs in only 54 games, earned a spot last year, breaking his elbow after landing on the fungo circle while diving for a foul ball.

While Varitek will never be considered the most important part of any team, his season-ending injury carried a lot more weight than anyone expected. As a result, the team had to look to Scott Hatteberg (.243, 5 HR, 25 RBI) and Doug Mirabelli (.270, 9 HR, 26 RBI) to fill in behind the plate. While Mirabelli did an admirable job in his first year with the Red Sox, Varitek's presence was sorely missed.

Now, everyone is healthy, and relatively happy with contracts and such, so it's time to play baseball. Maybe. First, who will manage the team? It obviously isn't Joe Kerrigan, who was fired two days ago. And while there would appear to be a whole queue of possible future Red Sox managers, popular opinion would seem to settle on three: Grady Little, former Sox bench coach and current Indians bench coach, Ken Macha, Oakland A's bench coach and former Pawtucket Red Sox manager, and Felipe Alou, Montreal Expos manager from 1992-2001.

While all three candidates have impressive qualifications, Alou has the most experience, far and

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Linguistics department is looking for monolingual speakers of English to participate in an hour long experiment. You will be paid $9. For details, contact Dr. Joe Pater at 586-2537 or [redacted]

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Available, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sept. 1 year lease. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.[redacted].com stop by or call (413) 549-0600.

One-bedroom, close to town, on bus route $500+. Avail. 4/1. 259-3720.

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in base ment, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEM BER NO FEES. www.[redacted].com (800) 253-7879

Sublet or take over lease beginning June 1st in Brandywine 1 bedroom. Laundry in building. Heat and Hot water. 549-0766.

Take over our lease. Starting June 15th!! 3 bdr. Putton Apt. $1050/mo. Cheapest rent for a 3 bdr. Call 549-1986.

APARTMENT FOR SALE

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEM BER NO FEES. www.[redacted].com (800) 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Honda Accord call 259-0068.

1999 Jeep Wrangler hard and soft tops, 30,000 miles Perfect condition $12500, 546-2474 James.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium Laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

$12,342.00 Congratulations Dave Sullivan (Sophomore-Umass) for a great first week!!! Last two weeks of Recruiting for CWP Program 617-216-4741 or [redacted]

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-291-1884 ext. 485

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the #1 CampusFundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus fundraiser.com.

SUMMER IN MAINE Jewish, Co-ed overnight camp in the southern Maine seeks staff: Boys Unit Head (23+), Camping/ Tripping Director (23+), Judaics Director (23+); swim, water ski, and boat mg/ sailing instructors (lifeguard certification req'd.); archery (training avail.), ceramics, general athletics, gymnastics, photography, radio, low ropes, theater; general counselors, office personnel. For information, contact: Ava Goldman, Director, JCC Camp Kingswood, 333 Nahanton street, Newton, MA 02459, 617-244-5124, or e mail: [redacted]

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

SUMMER FUN ON CAPE COD! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews on our property for all our summer employment oppor tunities March 7,8,9 & 21, 22, 23. Interviewing for Wait Staff, Bus Staff, Culinary Staff, Lifeguards and more! On-Site housing available. Check out our website at www.wychmerehar bor.com & Call Amy at (508) 432 1000 x 129 for details.

Wanted: Spring/ Summer Interns. Must be Rebels, Innovators, Desenters, seeking leadership outside the box. Average pay $7200.00. 617-216-4741 jbrown@collegeworks.c om .

EMPLOYMENT

Exciting Opportunity! NSF GraduateFellowships Available. The STEM Connections Project is looking for Students. Are you interested in sharing your love of science with others? Are you looking for a position with a difference? Then we have a great opportunity for you. STEM connections is looking for Graduate students in science, math or engineering to work with K12 teachers in Springfield in 2002/2003 on a set of unique research projects. You will work with a faculty member to explore a science topic with other graduate students and at least one middle school science teacher. Each team will research the topic, work on curriculum development and provide in-class explorations with middle school students. Stipend for one year (20 hours/week) is $20,500. To be eligible you must: 1) Be a master or doctoral candidate in good standing in at least your 2nd year by Sept. '02, 2) Be a U.S. Citizen or have Permanent Residency, and 3) Have a valid Drivers License. Applications are due on April 16, 2002 for the 2002-2003 fiscal year. All appointments run from June 1, 2002-May 31st, 2003. For more information and an application, contact: STEM connections Marie Silver, 413-545-0453, [redacted] or www.[redacted].com

ENTERAINMENT

Pre-Spring Break Party at Klub Kai Sat. 3/9 10-1 for tickets call 546-2609 or buy them at the door $5!!!!

FOR SALE

Free Dog to a good home!! We need to find a home soon Female 1 1/2 year old Pursie call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich (P Mulvey, E Mckeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D.Goodrich@hotmail.com

Want to be a bartender? Training and Job Assistance provided. $79.00 includes all. Toll free 1-888-581-8562 ext. 57. National Bartending Center.

LOST AND FOUND

FOUND: Woman's watch on Thatcher way Call to identify. Please leave message for Kurt. 545-0234.

ROOM FOR RENT

ROOM FOR RENT Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon? the warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is FESI giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TO SUBLET

Two bedrooms available in Puttton Village on bus route, free heat/hot water- sublet available thru summer. Call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-4350.

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlessvacations.com

WANTED

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Marathon FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sunco astvacations.com

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room w/ kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

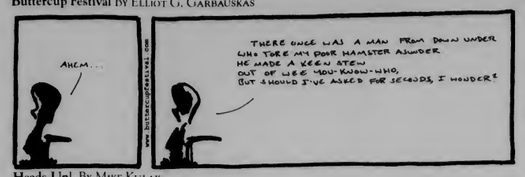
A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.[redacted].com 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

Get $$PAID$$ to lose up to 5-400 lbs. 1-888-709-8197 www.[redacted].com

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network



1	[redacted]
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18 19 20 21
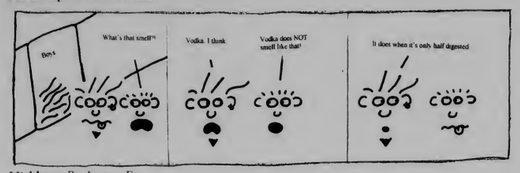
22
23
24
25
26
27
28
29
30
31
32
33
34
35
36
37
38
39
40
41
42
43
44
45
46
47
48
49
50
51
52
53
54
55
56
57
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
66

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 7, 2002

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		R&B 30 (In Stereo)				Chandler and Co.		This Old Hse.	Hometime
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Marquesas (N)		CSI: Crime Scene Invstgtn.		Agency The Player (N)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Marquesas (N)		CSI: Crime Scene Invstgtn.		Agency The Player (N)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Charmed Cole and Piper?		Charmed Enter the Demon		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra	Friends (N)	Leap of Faith	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER Secrets and Lies (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		Sabrina-Witch	Frash Prince	Friends		Just Shoot Me		Charmed Enter the Demon		News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra		Hollywood		Friends (N)	Leap of Faith	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER Secrets and Lies (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld		Raymond		Family Guy	Family Guy	King of the Hill	Futurama	News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Leap of Faith	Will & Grace		Just Shoot Me		ER Secrets and Lies (N)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Members' Choice						News	Nightline
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld		Fraser		Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News		Fraser		WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel	Shipmates
WTBS	23	Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends		Roseanne		★★★ "Hoosiers" (1986, Drama) Gene Hackman, Dennis Hopper					★★ "Wildcats" (1986, Comedy) Goldie Hawn
A&E	44	Night Court	News radio	Law & Order		Biography: The Italians: Fame		"Horatio Hornblower: The Fire Ships" (1998) Ioan Gruffudd					Law & Order
CNN	29	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Live From...	The Point	Larry King Live		News night			Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show		Goals		★★ "Police Academy 2: Their First Assignment" (1985, Comedy)		Man Show			Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	22	Discover Magazine		Everglades: Primeval Swamp		Would You Believe It?		Jack the Ripper: Mystery		In the Grip of Evil			Justice Files
ESPN	21	Basketball	Sportscenter	College Basketball: Southern Methodist at Texas Christian				College Basketball: Big East Quarterfinal - Teams TBA					Sportscenter
LIFE	43	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★½ "A Cooler Climate" (1999, Drama) Sally Field, Judy Davis					Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	57	MTV Special	Music Videos	Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Prime Time Players (In Stereo)		WWF Tough Enough 2		WWF Tough	Celebrity		Dismissed	Kidnapped
NICK	53	Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Told by Ginger	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show
SCIFI	59	Star Trek (In Stereo)		Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)		Outer Limits: Haven		★★★ "Willow" (1988, Fantasy) Val Kilmer, Warwick Davis (In Stereo)
TLC	24	Survivor Science		Eye Spy: Hidden Cameras		Caught: Crime, Cops				Sports Disasters		Sports Collisions		Caught: Crime, Cops
TNT	20	NYPD Blue (In Stereo)		Pretender (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Turnstile Justice				NBA Basketball Toronto Raptors at Dallas Mavericks. (Live)					Inside NBA
USA	49	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG (In Stereo)		JAG High Ground (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Most Wanted"		JAG "Boomerang"		JAG "Boomerang"		JAG "High Ground" (In Stereo)
HBO	26	4-4-5: Attack	★★★ "My Dog Skip" (2000) Frankie Muniz			Ice Age: First	★★★½ "Beetlejuice" (1988) Michael Hitchcock			Jamie Foxx-Security			Real Sex 19 (In Stereo)
MAX	25	Crime ★★★ "Rising Sun" (1993)		★★★ "Gladiator" (2000, Action) Russell Crowe, Joaquin Phoenix (In Stereo) R						★½ "Mercy" (1996, Suspense) Ellen Barkin R			Passion Cove
SHOW	65	★★ "The Score" (1998, Comedy) Tom Hanks, Brian Dein PG						★★½ "Pitch Black" (2000, Science Fiction) Radha Mitchell R				★★★ "Black Rain" (1989, Drama) Michael Douglas R

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com



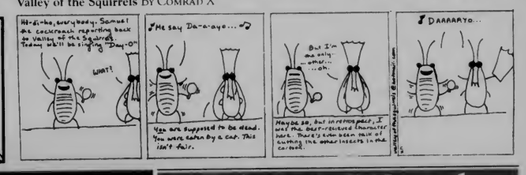
Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Noodle By Jacki

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Loose Control By Submerged Duck

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"It's better to be stupid and awake than smart and tired."

-Tibi's mom on studying for a test

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 55 LOW: 33	HIGH: 57 LOW: 36	HIGH: 63 LOW: 34

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Watch for the dangers caused by intruding on someone else's affairs today. This will prove perilous beyond your wildest imagination. Steer clear of obvious hazards.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – The best place for you to be all day long is safely at home, surrounded by what is most comfortable and familiar. If you must travel, use caution.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Though opposites attract, you are likely to find the greatest value in someone who has a great deal in common with you. You'll find a new friend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You and a Scorpio native have much going for you today. If you team up, you can be sure to maximize your profits, at least for the time being.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You haven't been quite as productive lately as you have been in the past, but this is a phase that will pass, once you open your eyes wider.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may be doing things in a manner that takes other people by surprise, but you know in your heart that it's the way you have to do them right now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Your organization may not be able to overcome what may prove to be one of your darkest moods in some time. Fight to remain positive and productive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Even a workaholic such as yourself can let go a little today and have some fun with a Cancer native who may be feeling slightly silly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – One promise is kept, but another is broken today – almost in the same instant. Be sure you're not the one letting anyone down.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Share your thoughts with those around you today, or you'll be disappointed when they don't acknowledge what seems obvious to you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You're going to need a little more today in the way of mental stimulation. Your body is getting a workout; now concentrate on your head.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Your patience may be tested by someone who doesn't understand your need to be left alone today. Your temper may flare. Go easy on yourself.

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
★
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thursday 3/7: Soulwork
Real Deal R&B
$2 cover
Saturday 3/9: Lucky Johnson
Funky R&B
$3 cover
Sunday 3/10: Tonite at Noon
Jazz
36 N. Pleasant Street • Amherst
413 - 253 - 4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

ACROSS
1 Yellow jackets
8 On the horizon
10 Blueprint
14 Former teen
15 Peril at sea
16 Melodrama VIP
17 Kayak's kin
18 Cupid
19 Higher than 20 Half-shell item
22 Ray of lunar light
24 Chop off
26 Thrashes
27 Grinder or cager
31 By means of 32 Tier
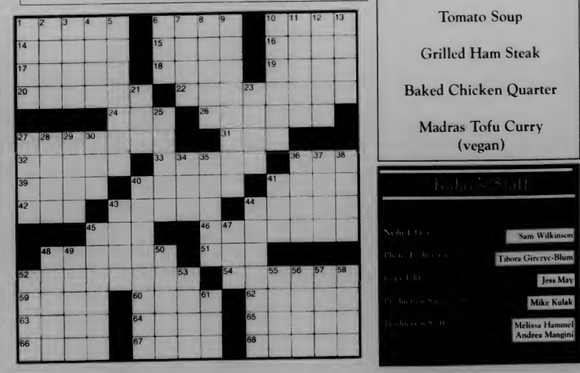
33 Wooden rod
36 Experiment room
39 Funny Bombeck
40 Hurried
41 Big Island port
42 Swindle
43 "48 Hours" lead
44 Winter Sontag
45 Evergreen
46 Honcho
48 Stockpiles
51 Worthless coin
52 Hammering
54 Kampala's nation
59 Zwieback toast
60 Scruggs or Haines
62 Sparkle
63 — mendacem
64 Omit
65 Rousseau novel
66 Consumer gds.
67 Mo. neighbor
68 Sari wearers



DOWN
1 Texas town
2 "Let's call it—"
3 Basks
4 Author's need
5 Pittsburgh NFLer
6 Census info
7 Raise corn
8 Cool in manner
9 Decided
10 Deep-rooted fear
11 Flat
12 Regions
13 Average
21 Compost
23 Fasten boards
25 Ride a bike
27 Knighted Guinness
28 Luau staple
29 Choir song
30 Pasture
34 Fall mo.
35 Calendar units
36 Not speak clearly
37 Jai —
38 Rhine port
40 Most disorderly
41 Warm greeting
43 Oddball
44 Tighter
45 Union soldier
47 Chit
48 Keep after
49 Deposes
50 Serpent
52 Wheels for baby
53 Toothy smile
55 Gluck of opera
56 Herr's refusal
57 "Tuna-Fishing" painter
58 Iowa city
61 RN assistant

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

T	R	O	T		F	A	B	L	E		S	I	F	T
H	I	G	H		A	L	O	U	D		T	O	R	E
Y	O	R	E		C	L	O	G		R	T	E	S
	T	E	R	R	I	E	R		L	E	A	D	S
		M	O	A	N		A	R	I	A
S	H	A	W	L		T	H	I	C	K	S	E	T
V	I	A	L	S		C	H	E	C	K		K	E	G
E	N	D	S		C	R	O	A	K		S	A	R	I
I	A	N		G	O	U	R	D		M	O	T	I	F
N	I	T	R	O	G	E	N		M	E	L	E	E
		H	O	S	T		W	I	G	S
D	I	V	E	D			A	E	R	A	T	O	R
I	B	I	S		M	O	L	A	R		I	D	E	A
M	E	N	U		B	R	A	V	O		C	O	A	L
E	X	E	S		A	B	N	E	R		E	R	R	S

12-4-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

COLLEGIAN GRAPHICS: WE PUT THE GOOD IN... WELL, YA' KNOW.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Tomato Soup OneyGa

Chicken Quesadilla

Beef Enchilada Casserole

Vegan Black Bean Quesadilla (vegan)

Garlic Eggplant Stir Fry (W Basics) (vegan)

DINNER

COFFEE & BISCOTTI SPECIAL

Tomato Soup

Grilled Ham Steak

Baked Chicken Quarter

Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Sam Wilkinson

Photo Editor: Tshora Gurevtye-Blum

Copy Editor: Jess May

Production Night: Mike Kulak

Production Staff: Melissa Hammel, Andrea Mangini

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM UMass SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

ONE LAST SKATE

Mike Johnson made the last of the Maroon and White for the final time against Merrimack Sunday. The senior is tied for the all-time shutout record with two shutouts.

Mike Johnson faces the end of his career...maybe

By Matt Brady
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Thirty minutes before game time, Mike Johnson is skating in circles, trying to take in all of what is going on around him. When he leads his team out of the locker room and onto the ice five minutes before faceoff, he is determined. A college athlete only gets to play his last game once.

"Before the game, it was the seniors, we were joking around a lot, it was a light-hearted atmosphere," Johnson said. "I wanted to play well because it could be the last time my dad ever saw me play, same with my sister – it could be the last time I see myself play. It could very well be the last time I put on goalie pads."

Johnson finished up his career as goaltender for the Massachusetts hockey team this past weekend – a career that saw him on the losing end of games more often than the winning end. Johnson, like all other college athletes, had to face the task of letting go of something that has been the central aspect of his life for so long – regardless of whether he continues playing.

"My roommates made fun of me – I came down and skated yesterday. But it really hasn't hit me yet," Johnson said. "Every morning I get this feeling when I wake up that I've got this, this and this to do before practice, and then 10 minutes later I think, 'wait a minute, I don't have to do anything.' I can do it whenever I want."

For Johnson, a goalie whose collegiate stats (3.27 GAA, .893 save percentage) don't necessarily reflect his talents, a career in minor league hockey is not out of the realm of possibility, especially with the wealth of teams both on the East Coast and abroad. But a little time off, especially for a guy who has played almost nonstop for nearly 20 years, certainly is well deserved.

"I've been playing hockey for so long it would feel strange to just not have it again. It's not normal, I guess," said Johnson, who posted an .892 save percentage this season. "I don't think I want to go play right now, I think I'll take a month and a half to let it really soak in – not playing. Now I have an opportunity for a month where I'm just a normal student – I don't have to think about practice or a game next week – I can just do what I feel like doing when I feel like doing it.

"Then, if I decide I don't really like where I am, I'll start working out, start playing again," Johnson went on. "I know I could get an opportunity somewhere to play – whether it's Europe, the East Coast league or one of the other leagues here – I'm sure I could make something work. If my dreams and heart are still with it, then there's always the possibility."

But playing between the pipes hasn't always been Johnson's fancy. Like many netminders, he began his career playing forward, and is quick to let everyone know that in his last game up front he scored five goals. This season, Johnson has often been spied on the ice after practice, skating up front with the rest of the forwards.

"I'd say it's three-parted," Johnson said. "First of all, I have to show these guys what I've got, so that when I come out there and play they pass me the puck. Secondly, it is just a love of the game – just being on the ice and doing something. Third of all, and most importantly, it's a new challenge."

Johnson's love of a challenge is partially responsible for his arrival at UMass. In his senior year at Minnetonka (Minn.) High, he was captain of both the baseball and hockey teams and was recruited for both sports at the collegiate level. His .610 batting average at catcher as a senior was enough to turn more than a couple of heads. What it came down to for him was the aspect of the challenge.

"That's the reason why I chose hockey over baseball," said the Excelsior, Minn. native. "Originally, when I was recruited for both baseball and hockey, the breakthrough was the fact that hockey was more of a challenge than baseball. With baseball, I'd go into the game and have a Wendy's double cheeseburger before the game, Twinkies on the bench and a Coke in the third inning, and I'd still go three-for four with two home runs. That's the way I am at everything – I like the challenge."

Johnson came to college for more than athletics, though, and he exemplifies the term "student-athlete." An Economics major, Johnson has been named to the Dean's List three times, and a 3.4 GPA is more than impressive for someone who donates six months of his academic year to athletics.

Still, for a player as competitive as Johnson is, playing on a team like the Maroon and White certainly must have taken its toll on the senior netminder.

"I'm disappointed that I didn't get more accomplished – that my class didn't get more accomplished," he said. "When we were upperclassmen, we didn't make the playoffs and that hurts."

So to prepare for a game one last time was a tremendously strange endeavor – one that all athletes have to go through at least once in their careers.

"Maybe an hour and a half before I had to be at the rink, I started to think that this is the last time I'm ever going to take a nap before a game, the last time I'm going to have a pre-game meal with these guys. It's all these last times running through my head."

And taking the ice for one last time?

"I got out on the rink and I got thinking, 'This game doesn't mean anything standings-wise, but I'm going to remember this game for the rest of my life,'" said Johnson, who tallied seven of UMass' eight victories this season. "It just sticks in your mind because you put so much heart and soul into something, and maybe you didn't get the results you were looking for, but you know you gave blood, sweat and tears for it. You played through injuries, played through adversity."

Then after Merrimack scored an empty net goal to ice a 5-3 victory en route to the Hockey East playoffs, Johnson returned to the crease for one final time in a UMass uniform.

"I didn't think about it being my last game during the game until they scored the empty net goal," he said. "It came to me, 'Wow, this is going to be the last 35 seconds in what could be my life.' So I just kind of stood there, looking around at all the lights and all the stands. To be honest, I cried a little bit on the ice before I came off. I didn't think I'd be emotional on the ice, but I was. I had a really hard time getting off the ice. It could be the last time that when I walked off the ice, there's little kids yelling my name, even if they just want my stick, it's something."

After the game, Johnson is entertaining the aforementioned youngsters, signing autographs for the 10 year-olds who view him as a superhero. He gives a stick to one and is showing another how to preserve his catching glove.

"I remember when I was that age, I was always too shy to go ask a guy for a stick or ask for an autograph," Johnson said. "These kids, they truly care about what you do out there. I have people tell me, 'My son or daughter watches the way you warm up, the way you scuff up the crease – they do the same thing.'"

And maybe, if things truly do go his way, maybe the people for whom Mike Johnson is a hero will get to be able to see him again, albeit in a different light.

"I figure if I don't play goalie, I can make a career as a men's league forward. I think they should give more NCAA eligibility if you change positions like that – I think I've got the skills."

Men advance to 2nd round

Four Minutemen hit double figures

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PHILADELPHIA – Freshmen just are not supposed to hit shots like that. In a game where experience and poise mean so much, most freshmen just do not have what it takes to knock down a backbreaking shot like that.

But Kyle Wilson did.

With just 1:23 to go in the first half from White Rock, British Columbia, Wilson's three-point field goal off of an inside-out with Eric Williams with the shot clock under five to give the Massachusetts men's basketball team a 66-58 lead over George Washington.

UMass	73
GW	62

Prior to the three, the Colonials had gone on a 9-0 run to cut the UMass lead down to just five. But that basket took the wind out of GW's sail and propelled the Minutemen to a 73-62 win in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament at the First Union Spectrum in Philadelphia.

"The two big shots of the game were an inside-out from Micah Brand to Shannon Crooks that [increased the lead] from five to eight and an inside-out from Eric Williams to Kyle Wilson when he made the three," said UMass Head Coach Steve Lappas referencing a three by Crooks with eight minutes to go. "Those were the two big shots and they were both inside-out three-point shots."

UMass (13-15) used an 11-1 run early in the second half to regain control of a game that it had led throughout the entire second half. A-10 Rookie of the Year Anthony Anderson scored eight of his team-high 16 points on a runner in the lane and a pair of treys while Eric Williams added a three of his own during the four-minute stretch that saw the Minutemen turn a 38-37 deficit into a 48-39 lead, an advantage that they would not relinquish.

In the first half UMass came out on a mission and quickly took control of the game, opening with a 13-4 run in the games first six minutes. GW (12-16) coach Karl Hobbs called two timeouts early on to try and stop the bleeding but it did not work as the Minutemen moved the ball at will, collecting five assists on their first five field goals and 19 on the game. Crooks led the UMass passing attack with a game-high six assists, often passing up his own shots to get his teammates involved.

"We had 19 assists and usually when our team is playing well that's what you'll see, a lot of assists," said Lappas. "I think the unselfishness on our team started with Shannon Crooks. In the first half he took two shots in the first 12 minutes of the game and was throwing some great passes and we were missing shots or he would have had seven or eight assists at halftime, but that's where it started."

Not helping matters for the Colonials was the loss early on of Jamal Forchion. He picked up two fouls in the first four minutes and his third with just under 10 minutes to go, earning a spot on the Colonial bench until halftime leaving Jaison Smith as the lone interior presence for GW. In the second half Forchion was successful at attacking the UMass interior defense, collecting all nine points and six rebounds in the final 20 minutes. But by the time he was able to make an impact on the game the damage had already been done.

"It was very difficult for us to play without him because then we had to go with four perimeter players," Hobbs said. "That really changed how we wanted to play and from that point on it became very, very difficult and we had no other choice but to double down in the post, play zone and do some different things just to stay in the basketball game."

Four Minutemen scored in double figures, led by Anderson's 16. Crooks added 14 to go along with his six assists and five boards while Brand added 11 and Kitwana Rhymer with 10 points and a team-leading eight rebounds. Chris Monroe led the Colonials with 19 while Smith added eight points and eight boards.

UMass returns to action tomorrow afternoon at 12:05 p.m. when it takes on regular season conference champs No. 24 Xavier and the A-10 Player of the Year David West. The Minutemen will be looking for revenge on the Musketeers who knocked off UMass on Saturday 72-52 in Cincinnati.

Preparing for the A-10's best

By Eric Soderstrom
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PHILADELPHIA – His 6-foot-9-inch frame sprawled out over five seats, Xavier's David West shook his head, lifted his legs up from the row below him and proceeded to exit the First Union Spectrum.

Seconds earlier, Shannon Crooks had stepped to the free throw line and finished off a three-point play with just under 40 seconds remaining to give the Massachusetts men's basketball team a 71-60 lead over George Washington.

Forfeiting the idea of a Colonial miracle, West – the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year – figured he had seen enough. In order to advance to the semifinal round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament, his top-seeded Musketeers must now beat UMass for the second time in five days.

But this time, Xavier won't be able to take comfort in a home crowd of 10,250 and all the other perks of being the host.

"Hopefully the officials will let us play," said Kitwana Rhymer, who felt he was wronged in UMass' 72-52 loss to the Musketeers Saturday in Cincinnati. "Hopefully it will be a physical game and if [the officials] let us play, I'm good. They way [Xavier] beat us, I didn't like it at all."

For the first time in a while, the Minuteman locker room yesterday was electrified. Ronell Blizzard and Willie Jenkins were boxing playfully, and Eric Williams was waving a towel high in the air, snapping

Turn to XAVIER, page 8

A-10 Rookie of the Year Anthony Anderson led the Minutemen with 16 points in their first round win over George Washington.

WE FINALLY SAW THE PRODUCERS! CHECK OUT ARTS FOR THE REVIEW. ARTS PAGE 5.
NICE PUBLICITY FOR UMASS. ED/OP PAGE 4.
...TINUES WITH ... SPORTS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
FRIDAY ★★★★★ ISSUE NINETY SIX ★★★★★ 3.08.02

Help save UMass

By Melissa Hammel
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Are you angry?"

That was the question asked to over 1,000 people during a "Save UMass" rally yesterday at the University of Massachusetts by Tom Juravich, Director of the Labor Relations Research Center.

A resounding "yes" came from the group of faculty, staff and students who had gathered on the lawn of the Student Union to address the mounting concerns surrounding the proposed budget cuts to the University.

The event was held by the Save UMass coalition, a group of over 200 faculty and staff members concerned with the state of the University.

"We are here first to celebrate UMass," Juravich explained to the audience as he opened the event. "But we are also here to say that there is trouble. We are facing the worst of the budget crisis, and the time for silence has passed."

The rally focused upon what the UMass community could do to help prevent the budget cuts. State Representative Ellen Story, (D-Amherst), explained that students needed to write letters to their representatives and call the governor's office in order to spread the message about the cuts.

"The state University is dependant upon sufficient money from the state," Story explained. "The majority of the state legislature doesn't know much or care much about this University."

Michael Bardsley, an alumnus of the University and a guidance counselor at Amherst Regional High School shared a similar message.

"I wouldn't be in the position that I am today without UMass," he explained. "Bring it back home, the message is 'Save UMass'."

Kerry Mulcahy, a representative for the Student Government Association also touched upon the topic of informing the legislators of the financial problems that had been going on at the University.

She explained that one of the things that the SGA had been working on was inviting all of the legislators to campus to show them first hand the problems that UMass had been experiencing.

Also discussed at the rally was the need to save programs that had already been targeted for elimination, such as the University Childcare program.

STUDENTS, WITH FACULTY, RALLIED YESTERDAY ON THE STUDENT UNION STEPS IN AN ATTEMPT TO TRY AND SAVE UMASS FROM THE BUDGET CUTS.

Peter Laurent, a supervising teacher explained that both the parents and the employees would do whatever is necessary to save the program from being eliminated.

"I need to let everyone know that the Childcare Center is unique," Laurent explained. "It represents not only the undergraduates and graduates but the faculty and staff as well."

The rally ended with the group marching over to the mailing facility in the Goodell Building to send out letters protesting the cuts to legislatures across Massachusetts. The staff of Goodell helped the group to load up three carts full of letters and mail them out.

"The campus is still moving," Juravich said. "We are not dead yet."

Fighting continues in Afghanistan

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Fighting continued in the mountains south of Gardez as American and coalition forces battle al Qaeda and Taliban forces, Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld said at a briefing on Wednesday that the battle may not be over quickly.

"The battle very likely will take some time to play out," Rumsfeld said. "I believe that the outcome is reasonably assured, that the [enemy] who have been in the battle will either be – surrender or be killed in the days ahead."

With at least eight Americans killed and dozens more wounded, Rumsfeld said that the fight would not be an easy one, especially since the enemy seems "determined."

"The forces we face represent very hardened elements of al Qaeda and Taliban – true dead-enders. We expect that they will – we expected that they would put up a fierce fight, and they have, and they are. And they continue to do so. But from everything we've seen, the coalition forces are certainly up to the challenge," Rumsfeld said. "We've said on numerous occasions that the battle moves from cities to tunnels to caves to mountains and that the task of hunting down and rooting out the terrorist networks will be difficult and dangerous, and that lives will be lost."

The attack will continue, Rumsfeld said. The Pentagon believes that by staying on the attack, terrorists will be too busy defending themselves to plan their operations.

"A terrorist under fire in the mountains of Afghanistan is a terrorist who has bigger problems than trying to plan the next attack on the United States," Rumsfeld said.

Rumsfeld also commented on the death of Navy Petty Officer Neil C. Roberts, who was killed after falling from a helicopter that was taking fire. It is unclear how Roberts died; some reports say he was killed in the fall, others by ground fire and still others that he was executed.

"We know a fine American's dead. It is not whether the bullet hit him from ground fire while he was still in the helicopter or after he fell to the ground and hit by ground fire or after someone came up and shot him again. We may never know that. That was a matter of minutes. What's important about this is that the United States of America did not decide to withdraw and leave the field. It decided – those forces decided to go in, bring a helicopter in, get the body, get the wounded and get them to safety," Rumsfeld explained. "What I said was that there was firing from the ground at the helicopter. He was in the helicopter. We do not know whether or not he was shot while he was in the helicopter. We know that when the helicopter departed that area abruptly under fire, he either was not in it, or shortly thereafter he was not in it, but he was roughly in the same location where the helicopter had been.

"So it was a matter of a very short flight for him, if he was not already out of the helicopter before the helicopter departed. What took place thereafter, I – you've heard several reports," Rumsfeld added. "At some point, why, people will merge all of those different perspectives and views and something will come out of it that will be fairly definitive."

There are currenth 5200 to 5300 American troops deployed in Afghanistan. General Tommy Franks, commander of Central Command had previously estimated the number of al Qaeda and Taliban forces at 200. That number is reportedly now closer to 800 or 900. Franks said that there were 800 U.S. soldiers originally deployed, and another 200 to 300 have been added.

"We have put 200-300 additional Americans inside this operation. Once again, that has not been in response to surprise, it has been in accordance with our plan to reposition our forces inside the objective

Turn to FIGHTING, page 3

internet moves traffic

By Jennifer Eastwood
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The view from the footbridge over the Connecticut River reveals a world hidden to that of the motorists driving across the Calvin Coolidge Memorial Bridge on their way to or from Hadley and Northampton. Construction engineers buzz about the site, working on the day's latest project in the bridge's three-year renovation.

Construction on the bridge is set to last until the summer of 2003. Progress, according to Frank Wenz, a Cianbro Construction Company Craft Superintendent who has worked on the project since Sept. 4, 2001, is right on schedule.

The construction team plans to finish the first of its four stages of renovation, Stage 1A, by this spring. Wenz is confident they will meet this goal.

Stage 1A's checklist calls for traffic to be blocked from the westbound lane on the north side of the bridge with the installation of traffic barriers. "That's done," Wenz reported.

Next the metal bridge railing was to be removed and placed in storage, while the pylons, or towers, on north side of the bridge were to be taken down, along with its decorative bas relief eagle panels, which too will be temporally stored. "That's done," Wenz repeated.

The sidewalk on north side of the bridge was then to be removed and the floor beams extended to encompass the widening of the road. "Done

turn to BRIDGE, page 3

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

Weekend Events

Mount Holyoke- African and Caribbean Day 2002 will be held this Saturday, the dinner portion of the event will be held in Chapin Auditorium at 5 p.m. followed by a show in the same auditorium at 7 p.m. The party portion of the event will be held in the Betty Shabazz Cultural Center from 10 p.m. to 4 a.m. Tickets are $12 for the general public and $8 with a student ID.

Mount Holyoke- There will be a conference held on childhood at the Gorse Center on campus to commemorate the Center's 50th anniversary. There will be a speaker on Friday at 7:30 p.m. and on Saturday at 9:30 a.m. The conference is open to all interested parties, and registration for the events is $10.

Smith- Students for a Free Tibet will hold Tibetan Uprising Day on Sunday. The event will begin at 4 p.m. in Pulaski Park in Northampton and end at the Neilson Library at Smith College.

UMass- Living in the Present with Breathing, Yoga and Meditation will be held on Friday from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. and on Saturday and Sunday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Those interested should bring a pillow and a blanket to 201 Flint Lab and wear loose, comfortable clothing. In order to register, a $25 deposit is also necessary and must be made out to "Art of Living."

College Street Motors

it's spring time!

Time to bring your winter blue car in for a Front-End Alignment, Tune-Up, Trip Check and Oil Change.

Complete Foreign and Domestic Car & Truck Repair

260 College St. Amherst MA. 01002 (413) 253.3200 or 256.6712

AUTO PAGE

SPRING BREAK IS COMING. IS YOUR CAR GOING ANYWHERE?

jiffy lube Signature Service
More Than An Oil Change

HAMP PLAZA
North King Street,
Northampton
586-6142

WALMART PLAZA
Route 9, Hadley
586-6795

CURRY HONDA ISUZU SUBARU

$1,000. Low Price Guarantee on every New car at CURRY!
See store for details.

www.curryhondamass.com

HONDA

2002 Accord SE
$229./mo* lease for 36 months
2.9% financing with approved credit

Curry Honda • 767 Memorial Drive • Chicopee

SUBARU

2002 Forester L
$249*/mo.
2.9% APR Financing

CURRY- Voted #1 in the Country in customer service!

Curry Subaru • 767 Memorial Drive • Chicopee

877-GO-CURRY
Next to The Huke Lau, exit 5 Mass Pike • 593-1155

UNDER $10,000
Used Car Superstore

93 Mits. Mirage cpe, 39k, #1355 $7390.00
95 Honda Civic cpe, 45k, #2571 $8250.00
97 Chevy Malibu 4dr, loaded, #21305 $8350.00
00 Kia Sephia 4dr, at, ac, #1337 $8690.00
96 Mercury Cougar XR7, 36k, #14087a $8850.00
98 Dodge Caravan 7 pass, #1286 $9750.00
00 Saturn SL2 36k, #h26943a $9995.00

*Curry will pay you $1,000 if we cannot meet or beat your best deal on any in-stock, identical Honda, Isuzu or Subaru. Excludes trade-in values.

PAIGE'S CHEVROLET
Amherst 253-3444

2002 Impala

- Standard V6
- Standard Automatic Transmission
- Standard Air Conditioning
-  Crash Test Rating

Starting at $21,685*
*Price does not include taxes or fees.

Paige's Chevrolet is a full service Chevrolet dealership offering:
- Full warranty service
- Autobody/collision repair
- Local door-to-door shuttle service
- Daily/long term car rental
- Auto detailing

CHEVY WE'LL BE THERE

Paige's Chevrolet is the only Massachusetts Chevrolet dealer to make the top ten list for customer satisfaction.

40 DICKINSON ST., AMHERST, MA
BETWEEN RTE. 9 AND MAIN ST.
or visit us at www.paigeschevrolet.com

01990362

Campus Perspectives

by Jeff Swartz

"What's your reaction to the budget cuts?"

Melina Mon '04 HRT

"I'm not sure about getting financial aid, and whether or not I can even afford to pay tuition next year. Save UMass!"

Jay Bagge '03 Communication

"This is our education and this is our future; we need to fight for it."

Tracey Samuels '05 Communication Disorders

"I think it's really unfair to the students, especially the freshmen. This is our future, if it slowly disintegrates there will be nothing left."

Nicole Marinaro '05 Communications Disorders

"The budget cuts need to stop. If they don't stop here then they will eventually effect everyone on every campus across the state, and eventually the country."

Chris Carlozzi '03 Political Science

I think it's [the] way [the] money is appropriated things, not like childcare and useless social programs, that [are] causing the [state's] financial crunch, but overall I'm against cuts in general."

Roberto Delgado '02 Communication

"I think any effort to generate any consciousness, of the subtlety of the issue of all the budget cuts, is necessary."

■ fighting

continued from page 1

area as necessary over time in order to completely clear it," Franks said. "We have brought some Marine helicopters in and positioned them inside Afghanistan, and I'd rather not say exactly where, but we have provided some additional robustness there with attack helicopters. We have positioned forces inside this objective area."

Commenting on reports that some troops have encountered heavy resistance upon landing, Franks said that the American military has not been surprised. Objective Remington, the area of operations in eastern Afghanistan is very large, he said.

"I think given the size of an area, perhaps 60-70 square miles, one is not going to have the precision of where those forces may be at any point in time," Franks said. "And so I believe that tactical surprise was, in fact, gained when the operation went in, keeping in mind that there were a great many landing zones involved and a great many approaches involved as we moved into this objective area. And the fact that one or two of these areas may have been very heavily enforced or reinforced and that our forces would encounter immediately mortar fire, no, that's really not surprising. It's deadly, it's bad; it's also war."

On the Net: the Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

■ bridge

continued from page 1

RENOVATION INCLUDES CLEANING AND RESTORING ALL GRANITE FACING OF THE DETERIORATED COOLIDGE BRIDGE

too," he remarked, explaining that the final portion, which includes Verizon Telephone Company relocating its telephone lines to the reconstructed area, began last week. He estimated that such a project would take four weeks to complete in total, thus bringing an end to stage 1A.

"So everything so far is going on schedule," he concluded.

The construction creates, quite predictably, heavy traffic flow for motorists traveling over or near the bridge each day.

"I've seen it pretty busy all the time... till midnight on some nights," Wenz said. "But mornings and afternoons are probably the worst."

Due to this traffic, certain devices, including that of the Regional Traveler Information Center Web camera, have been implemented to aid motorists in obtaining information on the traffic. Dr. Paul Shuldiner of the University of Massachusetts Transportation Center (UMTC) is in charge of this camera's operation and reported that currently two types of video camera systems are in place along Rt. 9.

The first system was installed several years ago and funded by a grant from a privately owned national science foundation. It included a pair of adjacent cameras. The first is located opposite Bread and Circus, monitoring westbound traffic; the second stationed on Damon Rd. at the Norwottuck Bicycle Trail in Northampton, just across the Coolidge Bridge, monitoring northbound traffic.

These cameras read automobile license plates. However, the intention of the project was not to make note of certain automobiles in particular or monitor individual's speed.

"The purpose of the cameras was to measure the times [it took traffic to travel the area between each camera] by watching the license plate images," Shuldiner said. "It was to get the average measures, and anybody can log onto that [information]."

Yes. Log onto. From the website www.umass.edu/coolidgeinfo, one can access the average speed of cars passing through the area which includes the bridge construction zone. This information is updated regularly, so as to provide current information for those planning their commutes along Rt. 9.

The second camera, a Web cam that can also be accessed from the above-mentioned site, was set up as a test for Web camera technology.

By placing the Web cam on the same pole as the initial camera across from Bread and Circus, UMTC could use the same power outlet, thus creating less of a cost for such a pilot project. The Web cam however, being quite some miles from the Coolidge Bridge itself, does not always provide the best view of how congested traffic may be closer to the construction area.

"We've got some [feedback] saying it [the Web cam] is not in the right place, and we know it's not," Shuldiner said. "It was just a test, so in the next several months, we'll be installing more [cameras] in better locations. This was a good place to check the technology of Web cam, but now that we're satisfied with it, we'll be putting up more on Middle Street and Rt. 9 and at the intersection of Rt. 9 and Damon Rd., looking across the bridge. There will also be one put looking at Sunderland Bridge."

He reported that also to come in the near future would be the installation of a time traveling system similar to the initial two cameras. These would monitor from the Amherst/Sunderland town line to the intersection of Rt. 116 with Rt. 5 and Rt. 10 near Whatley, which is near the ramp for Interstate 91.

"The purpose will be so people can know how long it's taking to go between Rt. 9 and Rt. 116," said Shuldiner.

While the initial funding for the first two time traveling cameras derived from the science grant, all of the subsequent funding, beginning with the Web cam on the pole across from Bread and Circus to all of the updates made to the initial equipment to all of these potential new plans, will come through a federal grant supplied for that purpose, Shuldiner noted. The UMTC and the Massachusetts Highway Department will join forces (in part) with the Five Colleges to oversee such projects.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. Became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1958. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

THE AIR FORCE WANTS BOTH YOU AND YOUR NURSING CAREER TO GO PLACES.

Nursing in the Air Force: exciting, rewarding, the best. Best facilities, best benefits. Travel, training, advancement and 30 days of vacation with pay, plus you may qualify for a $5,000 bonus. If you're a registered nurse, Air Force Nursing offers the best of everything.

To request additional information, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit airforce.com

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Undergraduate union:

Where it goes from here

For the first time that most of us can remember, the University of Massachusetts-Amherst is getting positive publicity.

The publicity isn't going to the UMass administration, or to its faculty, but to a rather unlikely source: resident assistants.

On Tuesday, UMass RAs voted 138-88 to unionize, and thereby become members of United Auto Workers 2322. The decision makes them not only the first unionized group of resident assistants in the country, but the first unionized undergraduate employees as well.

The vote has attracted national attention, and it's gratifying to open newspapers and see UMass mentioned without any reference to budget cuts, vandalism or a string of mysterious rapes.

The unionization of RAs is good news, indeed. Hopefully it will allow them to receive higher wages for what is clearly demanding, stressful work – work which requires resident assistants to be vigilant at all times and play the role of the "bad guy" when necessary.

Some have complained that the decision will force the University to make concessions that it cannot afford, especially in light of the recent devastating budget cuts. With programs like child care being cut, these critics say, this is hardly the time for undergraduate employees to demand more compensation.

While money at our campus is clearly tight, there is no reason to believe that a small increase in the salaries of these student workers will be the "straw that broke the camel's back" in terms of whether or not specific academic programs survive. UMass is a place where countless bureaucrats make six-figure salaries in jobs that rarely affect students' lives, and it is ridiculous to imply that student employees ought to remain underpaid when the many legions of administrators earn far more money than they could ever deserve.

Yet the administration has still come out against the decision, and tried to prevent a vote from even taking place. On Tuesday, after the results of the vote were announced, Javier Cevallos, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, spoke to reporters.

"We're disappointed at the result," he said. He added that the administration would take several days to determine "what the next steps" would be.

It seems that the decision has gotten good feedback from students, however. On Tuesday, after the Graduate Employee Organization put a giant sign congratulating RAs for the vote, students passing by often stopped and cheered. As much as we may complain about having to deal with resident assistants, and about the rules they have to enforce, we clearly appreciate the work they do. After the vote to unionize, James Shaw, a graduate student in Sociology and president of the union in question, told reporters that he hoped the decision would inspire resident assistants on other campuses to do likewise.

We can only hope that this occurs.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian

Ed/Op is always welcoming your thoughts. Send columns/letters to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com.

Rallying for the present:

How students and faculty are responding to budget cuts

MATTHEW DESPRES

The first and natural response to your livelihood being threatened is anger. Irrational thought. You want to just up and let it out, to purge whatever it is that ails you and let the whole thing be done.

But then you step back, acknowledge that reality, in all of its strictest senses, won't allow that. And then you wait as the pressure mounts again.

The current budget situation here at the University of Massachusetts adheres to that cycle all too well. We can toss off bits of frustration here and there, but at the end of the day, the negative stronghold remains, and we relent. Against an administration and state that moves quietly and delivers virtually no substantial information to the students it serves, what cards have we been left to play?

* * *

"Always something happening and nothing going on. There's always something cooking and nothing in the pot."

It was just past noon on Thursday at the steps of the Student Union, a site familiar with shouldering the student voice when it decides to rise up. The past few years have been no exception in witnessing that voice swell on occasion: the politics surrounding affirmative action, the rape crisis and other instances have all raised their share of noise before fading back into obscurity. After all, it takes only a winter session here and a summer break there at this University to relegate these causes to our distant memory.

Today, though, could be different.

Rising just above the student and faculty mass that's working its way across the lawn, skirting the edge of the pond, white signs shake with purpose and fervor. "FIGHT THE CUTS!" they read, the rallying cry pasted over the image of Muhammed Ali. Fight the cuts indeed. But how? With what?

The consensus: sheer volume.

"Whose side are you on today?" asked Leslie Edwards, president of the Graduate Employee Organization. "UMass has shown what side they're on, and by UMass, I mean us!" The hundreds gathered responded with whistles, cheers and applause. They're prodded further.

"Ask the University what its priorities are, why are they what they are," shouts a resident assistant, representing the newly formed undergraduate union. Peter Lorent, of the recently deceased childcare program, sends forth a simple warning that carries with it ominous overtones:

"The villagers are rallying."

Perhaps they are. The folks around me now are rallying with simple signs and directed chants between classes. They're stopping. They're listening. But are they understanding? This rally is spreading the word, yes, but will it spark students to actually move? To remember and react to something a day, week or month after they spent one afternoon in March digesting it?

The event unfolding around me is a basic, natural and essential reaction to the budget crisis; it should not, however, be taken as the only one. You do not skip out of class to hold signs and pose for local media outlets and by association bring about change. You do not scrawl, "Fuck budget cuts" in chalk by the Campus Center and watch things suddenly improve.

You bring about change by bringing action to your beliefs, by taking the best intentions of rallies like this and turning the many promises into something compatible and concrete. You bring about change by putting to use the information rallies like these make available – the numbers and simple truths that the University would rather quietly pocket. You bring about change by banding with your friends, classmates and the faculty – a faculty that, in my experience, has gone out of its way to keep us informed –and acting productively.

> "You bring about change by bringing action to your beliefs, by taking the best intentions of rallies like this and turning the many promises into something compatible and concrete."

Fourteen bags of letters, addressed to parents, members of the legislature and Billy Bulger – 14 bags were marched down to the post office this afternoon and mailed off while others were and applause. They're prodded further.

A brief reprise, if you will, of that livelihood business. For better or worse, for four years, five or even six, UMass is the hub that we base our academic, social and professional lives around. Realize this, and know it's being stolen from you. Piece by piece and class by class. It's not only your school, but your home. Each day you're going to return to something less, something missing. Why wait until there's nothing?

At nearly one in the afternoon on Thursday, the crowd dispersed. News 40 had its film and was back at work. The pool of walkers has nearly been exhausted. Despite the present atmosphere and horrendous cuts that have already begun to fall, there are still classes to attend and notes to take.

There's a very real threat, though, that at some point, there won't be. Don't ignore this situation; it's not going away by itself. There are only two paths left to take: either we solve this together or watch the University itself disappear. What will you do?

Matthew Despres is a Collegian columnist.

Another friendly face gone

JAMIE LOO

The faces of the budget cuts have been all around us since the first day of school. They were the faces of classmates being turned away from classes, children without daycare and administrators shrugging their shoulders. The budget cuts have also been a jumble of numbers and statistics that many students are sick of hearing about.

One of the most-staggering numbers from the cuts is the amount of faculty and staff that the campus is losing. By the end of the semester, we could lose up to 375 employees out of 500 who are eligible for the Early Retirement Incentive Program. This last number includes administrators and advisors in places such as academic support programs and in the Student Union, the heart of student life.

Sure, the loss of advisors and administrators is awful. I felt bad for students who were losing an academic advisor or a Registered Student Organization advisor, but I didn't really understand yet – not until this past week when it directly hit one of the student organizations I'm involved in. Nestled in the basement of the Student Union behind the Hatch, UVC TV 19, the student run television station, has just lost its favorite advisor.

Jim Gagne, the technical engineer at UVC TV 19 has decided to go into early retirement. It was completely voluntary and in light of the budget situation, it seemed like the right time to leave. It's never truly the right time for a student advisor to leave, not to the students. Jim worked for Channel 22 News in Springfield for 16 years before coming to UVC TV 19 in 1994. Since then, he has become more than just an advisor or someone who helped us fix the equipment. He's been a true friend and family member.

The studio will be a lot quieter without him. Jim's humor and enthusiasm kept all of us going. He used to put up witty signs around the studio, such as a notice to speak calmly to the graphics computer to get it to work and a price listing for stupid questions. Jessica Johnson, the president of UVC, said she will miss watching Jim fix equipment and learning how to fix it herself. Jim also won't be around to tell her to go to class or work on her homework when she's procrastinating anymore. Johnson said that most of all, she's going to miss Jim's "life talks." Johnson isn't the only one who's going to miss the life talks.

I admire Jim for his amazing amount of patience. Communications students and anyone that has ever worked with video editing equipment will empathize with me when I say that editing is a nightmare. Learning how to video edit has been one of the most painful experiences I've had since being at UMass. Freshman year, I had to spend hours editing. A field report that would last a minute and 30 seconds on the air would take me three to four hours in the editing suite to produce. I made countless mistakes in those first few months, and as I banged my head against the machines and screamed at the computer, Jim was always there. I asked the same dumb questions over and over again, and every time Jim would patiently give me an answer. I kept waiting for Jim to snap and yell at me, but he never did. In fact, I've never seen Jim angry or yell at anyone in the studio.

On Sept. 11, a few reporters and I from UVC went around the campus interviewing students. Our intent wasn't to chase a big breaking story but to connect students to each other during that difficult time, so that somewhere on campus when someone was waiting for a phone call in their dorm room, he or she could see other students grieving with them. When images of the towers collapsing was too much to bear, we hoped watching the vigil by the campus pond would bring some comfort to those who felt alone in their mourning.

This was not an easy task for us. I was so focused on doing my job and beating back my emotions that I felt incredibly inhuman. I was in so much pain and confusion, yet somehow I was still functioning and reporting like it was any other story or any other interview. My co-workers were also just as detached, going through the motions. When we finally returned to the studio, we were bombarded with questions about how the shoot went and if we were ok. I didn't want to talk to anybody. I looked at Jim, and he said, "It's ok, I know." He knew exactly what to say as he went into one of his "life talks," and shared stories with me about the Vietnam War and working at Channel 22. Though it didn't erase the horror of that day, it made me feel a little bit better. While our news team spent the day trying to help other students realize they weren't alone, Jim reminded me that I wasn't alone either. Even if he didn't give me that "life talk," I wouldn't have known that he understood me, as only news people could on that day.

> "Sadly, there are many talented staff and administrators that many of us on this campus will never get a chance to work with because of these budget cuts."

It's a real shame that future students will never get a chance to work with Jim. Sadly, there are many talented staff and administrators that many of us on this campus will never get a chance to work with because of these budget cuts. For those of you that have lost an advisor or heard that a favorite professor is retiring, I understand. This column is for you too.

To all the dedicated staff members that are leaving the University because of the budget, thanks for everything you have done. I'm sure that you will be missed by your colleagues and students. And finally, I give a heartfelt shout out to Jim for his infinite patience, wisdom and humor. I can't thank you enough, Jim. Thanks for always treating me like a true professional, even though I really don't deserve it yet. I don't know what the studio is going to do without you.

Jamie Loo is a Collegian columnist.

The Palestinian will

YOUSEF MUNAYYER

"What is he doing?" my friend asked. "Does he honestly think he stands a chance with a rock?" We both look at the picture of Fares Udah facing an Israeli tank holding nothing in his hands but a rock, and I responded to him, "You know it's not about the rock."

Fares Udah, the boy in the picture, stood before Israeli tanks in the Gaza strip and faced them with rocks. Fares was 13 at the time and is now dead. Israelis shot him fatally in the neck on Nov. 8, 2000.

What is a 13-year-old boy doing that for? Why must a child who should be studying algebra or playing with his friends face a tank? Because he felt like he had to do it. He felt like he had no other choice.

Many people today will not understand why, anyone would give their life for a cause. It is hard for many to understand why the Palestinians are fighting as they are.

The Palestinians are not fighting because they are being overtaxed or because they are enslaved; they are fighting because they are trying to attain something that everyone else in the world can claim to have…an identity.

When I was younger, in elementary school that is, I would introduce myself to people as "Yousef". The general reaction would be something like "Where are you from?" My response would proudly be Palestine. "Where is that?" the next question would follow, or, "Can you show me on a map?"

That's when I began giving a history lesson, and people lost interest. No one likes to believe that someone can be from a place that doesn't exist on a map. I also remember when people I had once told of my homeland would ask me questions like, "You said you were from Pakistine, right?" Those kids made me feel so smart!

Imagine every time you walked from the center of town to school, you would have to have your identification checked twice. Imagine only getting water when the occupying force allows you to have water. Imagine looking to your leader for help only to see he is under house arrest in a building surrounded by tanks.

Imagine that. Can you? I know it's hard to believe such a world exists. It's hard to believe that the United States, the beacon of democracy, would allow such a horrid place to exist. Yet it does.

Every day, gunshots fire, tanks roll, explosions go off. You think you were at the front lines of a major war, but you're not. You're probably in Bethlehem or, better yet, a refugee camp. Where we live in the United States, a person who spills his coffee on them self can win a million dollar lawsuit for it. For Palestinians, there is no compensation for losing your child, your land or your life.

How does it feel inside to walk down a hill with your grandfather and have him point over to a building and say, "That's our house," as you walk back towards a tent?

How does it feel to seem powerless, to have tanks rolling in your back yard, to have guns going off over your head, to drive on the road you've driven to get to your work everyday for years and fail to get through because of an Israeli road block?

How does it feel to wave your flag proudly but be afraid of someone shooting you for it? This is how it feels to be Palestinian. This is how it feels to be occupied, and this is unjust.

So to any who might see the picture of Fares Udah holding a rock steadily as the tank charges towards him, think what must have been going through his head.

> "…no one 'struggles' for peace. If anything this is a struggle for freedom to live ones life in the way everyone should be able to."

CNN covers the entire conflict as a "struggle for peace." News flash…no one "struggles" for peace. If anything, this is a struggle for freedom to live one's life in the way everyone should be able to do.

So now when you hear the news reports about the uprising, think about what people are rising up against. Think about why they are doing this, and think whether or not you would do the same thing.

One other thing. Recently, a Saudi Crowned prince "offered" an idea for peace. Well thank you, Mr. Crowned Prince. How nice of you to be so thoughtful. If any outcome will be achieved in the Palestinian struggle for freedom, it will have to come from within the conflict and nowhere else. As tempting as it maybe, I think that the State of Israel can survive without full recognition from the puppet Saudi leaders, as the crown prince had promised.

I can only hope that the conflict can be resolved one day, but it has to be done justly and freely. An occupier can never force a people to surrender justice and freedom without a fight. In the case of the Palestinians, every single Palestinian will fight physically or diplomatically until freedom and justice is attained.

I want to leave you all with the words that are written below the picture of Fares Udah. "Stand up for what you believe in… even if you stand alone." These are words we should live by.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING Weekend Edition

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 3.08.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Love in the time Of Mix CDs

By Nika Martin
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Tapes, Love & the Pursuit of the Perfect Mix.

Mix tapes have a certain air of mystery around them. They contain songs of (sometimes) a certain theme, and can be considered a special gift if given by a special someone. But how do you know how to "take" a mix tape?

Well, you know the situation. Boy meets girl. Boy gives girl a mix tape. Girl over-analyzes mix tape contents. Girl presumes boy is head over heals in love with her. It happens every day. But fear not. It is simply a case of 'mix tape confusionitis,' a disorder that has overtaken many a heart. But relax my friend. Your mix tape may or may not contain the key to his heart and the answers you have been looking for all your life. Take it easy. Don't look too deeply. Music is music, and it's different to everybody.

I wonder though, does anybody listen to tapes anymore? Let's think: there's the tape, the CD, and the Midi (there is probably something else that I have yet to find out about, seeing as how I still listen to records).

Technology has come pretty far in the past decade, making the use of cassette tapes almost obsolete. But I just can't let go. I'm like one of those grandparents who won't buy a computer, because they are too "high tech." Seriously, what about "the mix tape?" Sure, most have got a CD burner, and it's all well and good to make someone a "mix CD," but it just doesn't have that classic "made-specially-for-you ring."

What I'm saying is this: mix tapes are great; they can be romantic, and they're really fun to make. But "mix CDs" just don't flow. They're like mix tape imposters. See? I even have to use quotations, because they don't have the respect and personality that mix tapes do.

Is it socially acceptable though to make a mix tape with such diverse consecutive selections as Miles Davis's "Kind of Blue" followed by Nirvana's "Smells Like Teen Spirit?" Is it generally understood that the mix tape will follow some sort of theme unless otherwise stated? I don't know about that.

Personally, I have usually been one to go and record mix tapes that start with pop themes, meld into jassic rock, and end in Jazz. But that's just me. My advice on making a music mix for someone else: stick with one theme, use a tape and don't put too many love songs on it unless you mean it. Now that I've made you paranoid, happy recording!

Buggles or Bangles

Remember that song, "Video Killed the Radio Star" with its pulsing harmonies and phony sounding background lyrics sung by a "Smurfette" wannabe? It floats around on commercials every now and again, and you can never think of the name of the group that sings it. Well, there I was on my computer the other day happy to see that my friend had sent me some of his music files to relieve me from my monotonous playing of anything by Britney Spears. So among some "Getup Kids" and "Ataris," I was pleased, if not ecstatic, to see "Video Killed the Radio Star," a song, like my dirty laundry, which I had long forgotten.

I'm one of those people anyone would love to hate. You know the kind. You may even be one of them yourself. You hear a song. You love the song. You listen to the song. And finally, you become the song. Yes, it's true. Through, eating, breathing and sleeping a song, you can actually become one with the melodic tune and punching rhythm that you found striking on the first listen. You listen and listen until you just lose the tape or until someone threatens to take your life unless you stop playing it. Every musical lover probably goes through it; it's a sacrifice that must be made, and somebody has to do it.

Such was the case this weekend, as I played that bloody song till the wee hours of the morning and continued the marathon by singing it out loud and very obnoxiously. I am told, on the way to the DC. It was one of those days when I just couldn't get the song out of my head. It could have been worse, right? I mean, I could have been singing The Brady Bunch theme or anything by Destiny's Child. No, I was singing what I suspected to be an 80's tune and having a good time doing so.

The only problem was that among those tortured listening to my singing was Ilyse, a friend who recognized my butchered version of the synth-pop song and plainly stated that I was singing a Buggles song. But for some reason, I thought that Bangles sang, "Video Killed the Radio Star." Why did I think that? I don't know.

But being the ever-stubborn Greek that I am, I was quite sure that I was right and that the Bangles definitely did sing that song. "They must have just had a guest singer," I thought to myself. Last time I checked, the Bangles were all girls, and unless one of them had a sex change, I highly doubt any of them could sing that deep. That's got to be it.

Somehow, our conversation escalated into an all out argument over which band sang "Video Killed the Radio Star." The two of us went back and forth like a scene out of Clueless, yelling, "It's the Buggles." "No, it's the Bangles." "The Buggles!" "Bangles!"

It seemed trivial to argue over whether the Bangles or The Buggles sang the song, and I figured that since the two names shared a fair amount of letters, we might as well rename the Buggles to the Bangles and call it a day. No such luck.

So it's true. As I have gone online in a tizzy to apparently prove myself wrong, I found that "Video Killed the Radio Star" was indeed written and sang by two men: Trevor Horn and Geoff Downes, of the group The Buggles. They in fact have always been men and were never members of the group, The Bangles. Though I wish they had, so I could have at least claimed to be "confused." My only saving grace is the fact that although The Buggles was technically an 80's band, their song, "Video Killed the Radio Star" came off their album, The Age of Plastic, which was released in 1979, not in the 80s, as Ilyse had said. Theirs was the first song ever to be played on MTV and remains forever "in my mind and in my car."

Over a year later, Producers still strong

COURTESY PAUL KOSIMI

NATHAN LANE AS BIALYSTOCK, AND ONE OF HIS GERIATRIC ADMIRERS.

COURTESY PAUL KOSIMI

MATTHEW BRODERICK AND NATHAN LANE.

By Jake D. Lewis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

THE PRODUCERS
Playing at the St. James Theatre, NYC

Wow.

That about perfectly sums up the Broadway musical The Producers, based on the 1968 Mel Brooks movie of the same title. Ever since last spring's Tony Awards (the theater world's most honored accolade), it has been made clear that The Producers is the biggest thing to hit Broadway since, well, the creation of the musical theater. Nathan Lane and Matthew Broderick embody the characters originally created for the film (which was not a musical) by the legendary Zero Mostel and Gene Wilder, respectively. Lane and Broderick's re-imagining of the characters are genius, earning Broderick a Best Supporting Actor nomination at the Tony's and Lane his second win for Best Actor (his first was for another Zero Mostel part he recreated, in 1996's A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum). The praise doesn't stop there, though: The Producers went on to win 12 Tony Awards (including Best New Musical), the most ever given to one show.

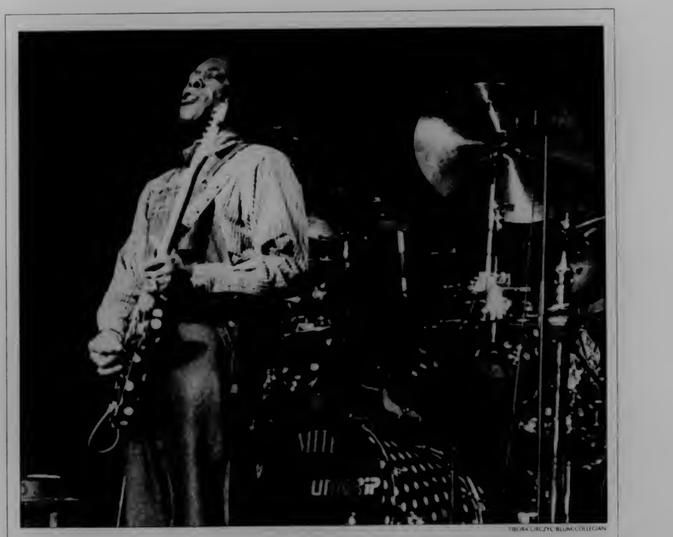
The biggest shock, however, was finding out that the performance that I went to see was one that Lane did not perform at. As I later discovered, there's a clause in his contract in which he does not play matinee performances. His understudy, Brad Oscar, assumes the daunting task of the performing the role in Lane's shadow, and he did it admirably and with great flair.

Lane/Oscar play Max Bialystock, a down-on-his-luck theater producer who hatches a get-rich-quick scheme with nerdy accountant Leo Bloom (Broderick). The cockamamie plan is that the two can make more money producing a bona fide flop than they could with a big-time smash, if only the books are cooked just right. Bloom eventually agrees to the plan, and the two set off to find the worst play ever written. They hire Broadway's biggest losers to get it on stage. They settle upon a script called "Springtime for Hitler," a musical romp which portrays the Nazi dictator as a homosexual. With a cross-dressing director on board, Bialystock and Bloom conclude, "It will close before page four."

The Producers wouldn't nearly be as endearing and sidesplitting as it is if it weren't for the script by the gifted Mel Brooks (co-written by Annie's author Thomas Meehan). Only the mind that gave us such Hollywood classics like Blazing Saddles, Spaceballs and Young Frankenstein could bring humor to the Fuhrer's dictatorship, and write a big song-and-dance number called "Keep It Gay," apparently the key mantra in creating a successful Broadway musical. Brooks' brilliantly twisted sense of comedy is more obvious in scenes like the one where Bialystock and Bloom seek out the playwright of "Springtime for Hitler," a Third Reich wannabe named Franz Leibkind (Oscar's usual role). Leibkind is also a bird lover, and when he calls out the name of one of the doves, it gives him a Nazi salute.

Most of the humor found in the show is slapstick, as was common in the 1930's, in which the show is set. But Brooks also delivers deadpan humor as well. After "Springtime for Hitler" debuts, it's dubbed "a satirical masterpiece." In the song "Where Did We Go Right?" Lane and Bloom lamentably croon, "How could we lose? Half the audience was Jews!" In the hands of a less-talented auteur, The Producers might be seen as offensive, but instead, it is a hysterical and adorable script that sends stereotypes up the flagpole. It tells people not to take things so seriously, rather finding humor in them.

While it was an initial disappointment to find Lane absent from the afternoon performance I attended, Oscar won me over before too long. If I closed my eyes, their voices sound almost identical, and they look pretty similar too. Oscar is not as squat as Lane (in fact, I wouldn't be surprised if Oscar were padded up to play Bialystock), but he has just as much stage presence.



In one of the show's final scenes, Oscar's talent is truly showcased as he sings the song "Betrayed!" from his jail cell. It's a summary of everything that has happened up until this scene, done at a frantic pace in an enclosed area. Oscar nonetheless fills the stage and carries the exuberance of the song with his endlessly extreme energy. You can't pull your eyes off of him anytime, especially here, and this scene serves as evidence that Oscar will most likely soon become a household name much like Lane has after his humble beginnings.

Fortunately, Broderick was present in that performance, and he came as a pleasant surprise to me, especially after seeing his only satisfactory rendition of J. Pierpont Finch in the mediocre 1997 Broadway revival of How to Succeed In Business Without Really Trying. He changes his voice to be more nasally than Wilder did, and makes Bloom slightly more neurotic, but he does the role justice without copying Wilder's original performance.

Bloom is a shy guy and a complete klutz when we first meet him, only coming out of his shell in his dreams, like in the song "I Wanna Be A Producer." His dreary and claustrophobic accountant's firm turns into a huge production number out of a Busby Berkeley musical, as he dons a top hat, cane and ascot, while showgirls come out of the woodwork (literally) and form a chorus line behind him. It's one of the most rousing numbers in the show, thanks to Broderick's talent, and Susan Stroman's direction.

After a win for Best Musical in 1999 with the dancefest Contact, Stroman took over directing (and choreographing) duties of The Producers when her husband and original director of the show, the respected Mike Ockrent, died after a long fight with cancer. In assuming the helm of this ship, Stroman has brought back to the musical theatre what has been absent or unsuccessful for far too long: burlesque comedy. As Act One comes to a close with the song "Along Came Bialy," choruses of Bialystock's little old lady admirers shuffle onstage and use their walkers in place of tap dancing shoes. It's a truly inspired moment from the theater gods.

The show has a happy ending, which is another angle of theater that is becoming more rare each day. Bialystock and Bloom stroll off into the sunset of Broadway together, arm-in-arm, with the marquees of their now lucrative and various shows all around them, each one a Yiddish parody of well-known plays and musicals: "Funny Boy," "She Shrugs to Conquer," and "Maim," just to name a few. On Mar. 17, Lane and Broderick will do as their characters have done for the past year and a half, and sadly leave the show. They have left their mark on the show and with Brooks and Stroman behind them, have created a new Broadway mainstay for the next generation.

DEBORA GARZON/BLOOM COLLEGIAN

"Now I'm gonna get nasty...play blues so funky you can smell it...."

BUDDY GUY, WHO PLAYED AT THE CALVIN ON MARCH 4, 2002.

The Free College Arts Source for Discovery in the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

COURTESY PHOTO

...Smith Theater Guy continues Poetry Venture Friday Mar 8: The theater [illegible] Smith Live Source Mail Online Mar 5 (2:00) and Theater Dance

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

UMASS – On Mar 8 the Every Woman's Center will host the International Women's Day. The event, held from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union will acknowledge the contributions of women worldwide. The celebration will include massage, food, music, dance and a craft exhibit and information about the Every Woman's Center. The event is free and open to all.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – The Augusta Savage Gallery will be displaying work by Prince Valles' self-taught artistry from Wednesday, Feb. 27 to Tuesday, Mar. 12. It includes paintings, sculptures, drawings, [illegible] and a video. An opening reception for the artist will be held on Thursday, Feb. 28 from 5 to 7 p.m. in the gallery. Gallery hours are Tuesday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. There will also be an opening reception on Feb. 25 between 5 and 7 p.m. Admission is free.

UMASS – The University Gallery will be exhibiting The Cutting of Stitches. It showcases works by seven artist who explore violence in the United States and women's conflict and contradictions in terms of rape, hate crimes, weight obsession and terrorism. It is available for viewing on Tuesday through Friday between the hours of 11 a.m. and 5:45 p.m. and from 2 to 5 p.m. on Sundays. Free and open to the public.

AMHERST COLLEGE – The Mead Art Museum at Amherst College will present "Casa Monona: The Morton Collection of Mexican Folk Art" on Tuesday, Feb. 26 at 4:30 p.m. in the museum's [illegible] Gallery. The work within the exhibition, on loan from Amherst College alumni Dwight W. Morrow and his wife Elizabeth, were donated by the artist in 1930. The exhibition will be on display through Friday, March 8. Gallery hours are Tuesday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

SMITH COLLEGE – More than 30 Smith College staff members will exhibit their artwork, called "Staff Visions." The annual showcase of the talent from the Smith community will include photographs, oil paintings, watercolor and pastels, pencil drawings, porcelain dolls and [illegible] artistic works. The exhibition will be open from Mar. 4 through 29. There will be a gallery talk by photographer artist [illegible] on Mar. 11. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Mar. 17 [illegible] Admission is free and the exhibition is open to the public.

SOUTH HADLEY – On Tuesday, Mar. 5 at 7 p.m. at South Hadley High, the Hadley Cultural Council will present Markamusic, a high energy Latin music ensemble.

entitled "MONSTERS" will be on display at Anchor House of Artists at 318 Pleasant St. The self-taught artist from Northampton's works deal with the spirits that accompanied him in his youth. The show will be from Mar. 10 through 30, with a reception by the artist on Mar. 10 from 3 to 5 p.m.

THEATER

UMASS – Shakespeare's romantic comedy, Love's Labor's Lost will be at the Rand Theater until Mar. 9. One of Shakespeare's least performed pieces, the show focuses on love between a group of a king's court and a princess and her maidens. Tickets are $7 for the public and $4 for students and seniors. For more information call (413) 545-2511.

UMASS – Deceased German playwright Georg Buchner's unfinished last play, Woyzeck will be performed at the Curtain Theater. The play, which deals with looking in the head of a killer, was written 170 years ago but still fascinates audiences. Performances will be held on April 11 through 13 and 18 through 20 at 8 p.m. Matinees will be shown on April 13 and 20 at 2 p.m. Ticket are $7 for general admission and $4 for students and seniors.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith Theater Department presents Paula Vogel's play Hot 'N' Throbbing. The show is directed by and starring Smith College students. You can see it through this Saturday with shows at 8 p.m. in Hallie Flanagan Studio Theater, Green St. and Northampton. Tickets are $7 for the general public and $4 for students and seniors. For reservations or more information, call (413) 585-ARTS.

CONCERTS AND DANCE RECITALS

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – Emerging student choreographers Sarah Eley, Christine Luhy and Thaisa Giles present their original choreography in their Division III Dance concert on Mar. 7 through 9 at 8 p.m. The recital will be in the Main Dance Studio, the Music and Dance building at Hampshire College. Ticket prices are $5 for the general admission and $3 for students and seniors. For more information call (413) 559-5889.

MT. HOLYOKE COLLEGE – Six talented seniors will present an eclectic mix of choreography on Mar. 8 and 9 at 8 p.m. in Kendall Hall Studio Theater. Tickets are $3 for general admission and $5 for students and seniors. Call (413) 538-2848 for more information.

SOUTH HADLEY – On Tuesday, Mar. 5 at 7 p.m. at South Hadley High, the Hadley Cultural Council will present Markamusic, a high energy Latin music ensemble.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

UMASS – Artist Ellen Harvey will be conducting a slide show presentation on her artwork. Her work deals with introspective looks at past genres of painting. The event will take place in School of Management room 116 on Mar. 12 at 4:40 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – Bettina Musiolek, a five college Women's Research Center associate, will use the garment industry in central and southeast Europe as a case study in her lecture entitled, "Globalization, Women's Work and Corporate Responsibility," held at noon in the Kahn Colloquium Room in the Neilson Library.

SMITH COLLEGE – Smith College Professor and prolific book reviewer for major publications, Michael Gorra will be speaking at the "Sunday's at Two" series sponsored by Smith College and the friends of Forbes Library. He has reviewed works by John Updike, Jonathan Rahan and Alice Munroe. It will be on Mar. 3 in the Neilson Library Browsing Room.

AMHERST – Poet Ellen Dore Watson will be reading from her new book of poetry called Ladder Music. The event will take place on Mar. 13 at 7 p.m.

Rane, fall down on me.

KISS THE PREGNANT AT THE IRON HORSE TONIGHT.

WRITE FOR ARTS

New School University
Robert J. Milano Graduate School of Management and Urban Policy CHANGE.
Milano
Earn a Master of Science degree in:
- Urban Policy Analysis and Management
- Human Resources Management
- Nonprofit Management
- Health Services Management and Policy
- Organizational Change Management

Ph.D. degree:
- Public & Urban Policy

OPEN HOUSE
April 8th, 9th, 15th & 17th
May 1st
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Program Concentrations in:
- Finance & Economic Development
- Community Development & Nonprofit Management
- Housing & Community Development
- International Policy & Program Management
- Strategic Health Management
- Workforce Development
- Social Policy

Courses Available:
On-Line • Day and Evening • Saturday • Site-line (t/z on line and t/z in-class) • Degree and Non-Degree •

call for information 212.229.5606 ext. 554
72 Fifth Avenue, New York, NY 10011
www.newschool.edu/milano

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/9 - Thursday 3/14
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
THE TIME MACHINE (PG13) 12:05 4:40 7:45 10:20
40 DAYS & 40 NIGHTS (R) 12:50 4:30 7:30 9:50
WE WERE SOLDIERS (R) 12:30 4:35 7:40 10:30
IN THE BEDROOM (R) 12:20 4:15 7:15 10:20
JOHN Q (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05
BIG FAT LIAR (PG) 12:15 4:55 7:20
SUPER TROOPERS (R) 12:25 4:50 7:35 10:15
CROSSROADS (PG13) 12:40 4:35 7:05 9:45
RETURN TO NEVERLAND (G) 12:35 4:40 7:15 9:30
THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO (PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00
BLACK HAWK DOWN (R) 9:50
A BEAUTIFUL MIND (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
LORD OF THE RINGS (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
Sensor Movie - 3/14 WE WERE SOLDIERS doors open at 11:45
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Ticket & Showtimes available @ cinemark.com

lax

continued from page 10

to top UMass 6-3. Last year, the venue was a lot sunnier, not so much the game, as the Minutemen eked out an 11-8 victory.

This year's battle looks to be a rubber game of sorts as the pair meet for the third time under the mantra of the ECAC. Both teams are coming off close games. UMass took an 8-7 nail biter from Stony Brook last weekend, while the Mids couldn't close the deal in a six overtime loss to North Carolina.

As if these two teams need more motivation for this game, the events of the past week will certainly have them focused.

"It's going to be a challenge," Cannella said. "They're coming off a tough loss, and to us it's important to find out who we are and what we are all about."

Cannella's aforementioned soul searching will have to be taken care of under the not so welcoming conditions of Annapolis, MD. Not one player on the UMass roster has had the experience of playing at Navy, but considering their familiarity with hostile environments – i.e. Syracuse's Carrier Dome, Hofstra's Stadium – and team wide attitude, the Minutemen should have little trouble going on the road.

Consider that since a 17-7 loss to 'Cuse in 2000, UMass is 6-0 and outscoring it's opponents 84-47 on the road.

The catalyst for the Minutemen's road dominance has been the steady hand of their offensive midfielders, and that will have to remain the case if the Minutemen are to take its first conference victory.

Pre-season All-Americans Don Little and Kevin Leveille have gotten off to slow starts by their standards.

"The media and everybody puts a lot of pressure on those guys," Cannella said. "We're a different team than we were last year. We ask the guys like Kevin, Donnie and Chris [Fiore] to do more than just score.

"We ask them to lead and to control our offense."

Leveille, a 40-point scorer last year, has four goals and six points in two games. Although those numbers sound pretty gaudy, one must understand how talented a player Leveille is. With only one shot in last week's game against Stony Brook, the junior took only one shot, granted it was the fourth quarter equalizer, but it illustrated just how content Leveille is in letting the scoring chances come to him.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

LYDIA ROBINSON SCORED A HAT TRICK AGAINST HOFSTRA LAST WEEKEND. THE JUNIOR NETTED ALL THREE GOALS IN THE FIRST HALF.

harvard

continued from page 10

contest.

Two goals from junior Leslie Pollack, one goal from junior Lori Kain and another score from Chominski and Emery's third one past the Hofstra goal tender all added up to UMass scoring five out of the last six goals scored in the match.

The result was a hard-fought, surprising 12-6 victory over one of the best teams in the nation.

"It was a great step in the right direction," Barnes said. "We played well as a team."

Now that the Minutewomen have defeated one of the best, has the bar been set higher for success?

Coach Barnes doesn't believe that his team will show signs of overconfidence after the impressive Hofstra victory.

"Our goal has always been to play as a team, and it will continue to be," he said.

The all-important "let-down game" test is set for Saturday afternoon – a match-up against Ivy-League opponent Harvard at 1 p.m. in the friendly confines of Richard F. Garber Field.

"Harvard plays a very similar game to Hofstra so, like always, it will be a great game," said Barnes.

hoops

continued from page 10

rebound of a Crooks miss right to Williams who hit an off-balance shot right in front of the Minuteman bench to tie the game and send it to the extra period.

"When that three [went in] I was like, 'we're winning this,' I knew we were going to win," Rhyner said. "I was praying on the bench for just one more chance. After that, I knew we were winning this game. The calls just didn't go our way after that."

That shot would not be enough as UMass ran out of gas in overtime. The Minutemen did not score for the first four minutes of the extra session, falling behind by as many as nine before losing by six and bringing down the curtain on the careers of four Minutemen.

"I give those kids a lot of credit, [because] they did everything I asked of them," said Lappas of his seniors. "I feel bad for them. I'm going to get more chances, but for Eric, Kit, Shannon and Blizz, this was it for them. When you go down like that, it makes it even harder. In the last game, it's always harder on the kids because when it's your last one, it's your last one."

Temple returns to NCAAs on strength of A-10 tourney win

By Chris Silva
TEMPLE NEWS (TEMPLE U.)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA – The Temple women's basketball team captured its first-ever Atlantic 10 Championship with a 65-58 win over Saint Joseph's at the Hagiacouras Center on Monday. The Owls gained an automatic NCAA Tournament bid with the win. Temple last appeared in the Big Dance in 1989.

"We stayed together and came in there, executed and did what we were supposed to do," senior center Athena Christoforakis said. "Because of practice and working hard towards our goals, we were able to accomplish them."

Junior point guard Stacey Smalls was named the Most Outstanding Player of the tournament. She averaged 13.3 points per game and 4.3 apg and played nearly every minute of the tournament, including the entire 45 minutes in the Owls' semifinal overtime win over UMass.

Senior center Lisa Jakubowicz and Smalls were also named to the All-Tournament team. Jakubowicz played the best ball of her career against St. Joe's. She finished with 14 points and 10 rebounds in the championship game.

"She's probably the one that has made the biggest improvement," Temple coach Dawn Staley said. "Last year at this time, I guarantee you Lisa is not where she is today."

Jakubowicz played gutsy throughout the game with key blocks, a few steals, clutch rebounds and tough shots. She and Christoforakis teamed up to hold Susan Moran, St. Joe's leading scorer and A-10 Player of the Year, to 14 points.

Jakubowicz and Christoforakis disrupted Moran's game and limited her touches in the first half. Moran visited the free-throw line a mere eight times. Christoforakis finished with 19 points, 15 rebounds, four assists, four steals and one blocked shot.

"She stuck with the game plan and came up huge for us on both ends of the floor. And she led us in the post, both her and Lisa," Staley said.

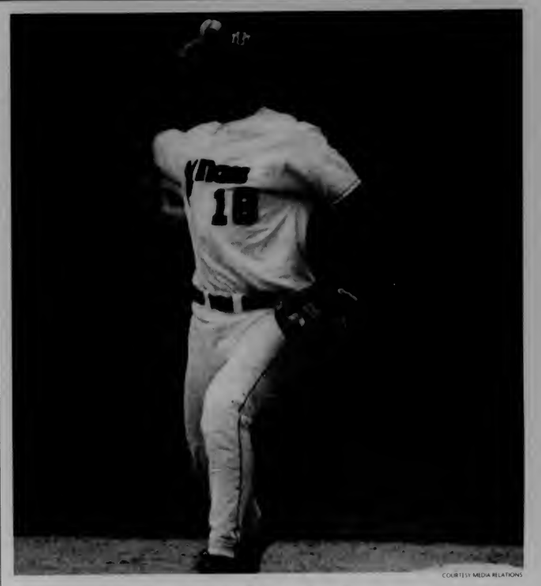
Temple's route to the A-10 title started with a 78-50 win over Duquesne in the quarterfinals. The Owls then faced UMass in the semifinals in what turned out to be the second overtime thriller against the Minutewomen this season.

Senior guard Natalia Isaac connected on all four free-throw attempts in overtime and gave the Owls six points in the extra period in a 67-61 win.

Temple had everything working in their favor at the tournament. The Owls showed several defenses in all three games, including a 3-2 zone that rattled the UMass offense.

The Owls also used its patented full-court press and half-court presses with its guards creating havoc for opponents trying to start their offense. Temple blended quick outlets off rebounds and crisp passing to give its shooters open looks at the baskets.

Isaac, Smalls, Toni Belafonte, Christena Hamilton and Regan Apo were all able to connect on key shots from superb ball movement around the perimeter.



Staley got the best out of her squad this past weekend. Her players used the tactics and skills learned throughout the season and applied them when it counted most down the stretch.

"What it boils down to is working hard, being committed to something. You can see if you put in a little hard work, be diligent at it and you're consistent with it, good things can happen," Staley said.

All Temple can do now is wait for Selection Sunday to see which team they will face in the opening round of the NCAA's.

The team reached its goals of winning the Big Five and the A-10 titles, and now there is only one left to claim.

"We're happy to be there," said Isaac of reaching the NCAA tournament. "But when we get there we're not going to just be happy to be there, we're going to go out there and play to win."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

ADAM STOJANOWSKI SCORED THREE RUNS IN THE BASEBALL TEAM'S FIRST THREE GAMES LAST WEEKEND AGAINST SOUTH FLORIDA. THE TEAM WENT 1-2 ON THE WEEKEND.

Avoiding the letdown

By Jim Pignatiello
COLLEGIAN STAFF

That's why they play the games.

It's a phrase that points out that any team can win on any given day, which is true. But the heavy favorite wins much more often than the major underdog.

The Massachusetts baseball team (1-2) will be the heavy favorite in a home-and-home series this weekend against an outclassed Quinnipiac squad that went just 5-37 last year.

But, in just speaking with junior Chris Morgan for a few minutes, there is no doubt that the Minutemen will be ready for the potential letdown. UMass won't be overlooking its foe; the team wants the two checks in the win column too badly.

"I expect two wins [this weekend]," said Morgan, who played a regular season game last weekend for the first since May 13, 2000.

The catcher, who is one of the best power hitters on the team, was a medical redshirt for 2001 after suffering a season-ending shoulder injury.

Morgan had no problems in his return to the lineup against South Florida, hitting out of the cleanup spot and going 2-for-3 in his first game and 4-for-8 on the weekend.

Morgan's performance in Friday's contest is even more impressive when considering that he drove in all three of his team's runs in the win.

"It all comes back once you get into the game," he said.

The Cranston, R.I. native played catcher Saturday's game and was the designated hitter Friday and Sunday.

The team impressed in Friday's game, especially ace pitcher Jesse Santos, who tossed a complete game, five-hit, two-run gem while striking out five Bulls batters.

It was the Chelmsford, Mass. native's third complete game of his career. The righty's ability to give his bullpen the day off will be extremely important as the season goes on.

"Hopefully he can keep going the distance for us," Morgan said of his battery mate.

Santos' impressive 2002 debut was good enough to earn him the WHMP/UMass Athlete of the Week award as announced by the Sports Luncheon Committee Wednesday.

The rest of the weekend wasn't so fruitful for the Maroon and White, which was facing an opponent with ten games already under its belt heading into the series. USF won the remaining pair of games 12-4, 6-0.

"We came out with fire on Friday night and played real well," Morgan said. "We were ready to play [in the losses], but things just didn't go our way on Saturday and Sunday."

This weekend won't be so much about keeping up with a team that has played a quarter of its schedule already; it will be about not overlooking a team with marginal talent.

Quinnipiac is led by junior infielder Travis LaPointe and senior outfielder Tim Mangano. LaPointe (.351 last year) and Mangano (.323) were the only returning players to bat over .300 last season.

As a team, QU batted just .250 in 2001, while giving up a .344 average to its opponents.

Also consider that Morgan and his teammates feel pretty good about their overall chances, despite having a losing record after the first weekend. Santos' outing was especially promising, while Morgan's easy transition back into the lineup had to be a big boost for Head Coach Mike Stone's ballclub.

"I'm pretty excited," Morgan said of his thoughts after the first weekend of play. "Things looked pretty good. We looked even better than I expected."

Unless Quinnipiac has made major adjustments, this weekend could get ugly.

But that's why they play the games.

Amherst - Pelham Regional School District
Bilingual Tutors/Translators for part-time paid paid assistance during the school day for students speaking Czech, Chinese, French, Korean, Russian, Spanish. For more information contact:
Amherst-Pelham Regional School District
Attention: ESL/Bilingual Office
170 Chestnut, Amherst MA 01002
413-549-9857
An equal Opportunity/ Affirmative Action Employer

McMurphy's
4th Annual
Blarney Blowout
Sat. March 9th
Live Irish Music with The Tinkers
A St. Patrick's Day Celebration
Free Corned Beef Sandwiches
Prizes
Doors Open at Noon
No Cover
Positive ID Required

Old Amherst Ale House
Live Music
NO COVER
(must be 21 with a valid ID)
Rt.116 South Amherst
1st miles South of Amherst Center on the Mt.Holyoke Bus rt.
Friday 8 Lonesome Brothers
Saturday 9 Flying Lessons
10pm - 12:30am

DIESEL FOOTWEAR

Just Arrived.
Exclusively at Zanna.
ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. - Now Available, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sept. 1 year lease. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.info@brandywineapts.com stop by or call (413) 549-0600.

One-bedroom, close to town, on bus route $500+. Avail. 4/1. 259-3720.

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Sublet or take over lease beginning June 1ST in Brandywine 1 bedroom. Laundry in building. Heat and Hot water. 549-0766.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Honda Accord call 259-0068.

1999 Jeep Wrangler hard and soft tops, 30,000 miles Perfect condition $12500, 546-2474 James.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Exciting Opportunity! NSF GraduateFellowships Available. The STEM Connections Project is Looking for Students. Are you interested in sharing your love of science with others? Are you looking for a position with a difference? Then we have a great opportunity for you. STEM connections is looking for Graduate students in science, math or engineering to work with K12 teachers in Springfield in 2002/2003 on a set of unique research projects. You will work with a faculty member to explore a science topic with other graduate students and at least one middle school science teacher. Each team will research the topic, work on curriculum development and provide in-class explorations with middle school students. Stipend for one year (20 hours/week) is $20,500. To be eligible you must: 1) Be a master or doctoral candidate in good standing in at least your 2ND year by Sept. '02, 2) Be a U.S. Citizen or have Permanent Residency, and 3) Have a valid Drivers License. Applications are due on April 16, 2002 for the 2002-2003 fiscal year. All appointments run from June 1, 2002-May 31ST, 2003. For more information and an application, contact: STEM connections Marie Silver, 413-545-0453, msilver@k12s.phast.umass.edu . www.umass.k12.net/connections

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 1-866-291-1884 ext. 485.

ENTERTAINMENT

Passion Parties by Karyn. Independent distributor of CAPI, FREE in home parties for women, offering a full line of lingerie, passion products, and bedroom accessories, great for ladies night out and bachelorette parties. (508) 795-0785, karynbkl@hotmail.com.

Pre-Spring Break Party at Klub Kai Sat. 3/9 10-1 for tickets call 546-2609 or buy them at the door $5!!!!

FOR SALE

Free Dog to a good home!! We need to find a home soon Female 1 1/2 year old-Pursie call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich (P Mulvey, E Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_Goodrich@hotmail.com

INSTRUCTION

Want to be a bartender? Training and Job Assistance provided. $79.00 includes all. Toll free 1-888-581-8562 ext. 57. National Bartending Center.

LOST AND FOUND

FOUND: Woman's watch on Thatcher way. Please Call Thatcher Cluster Office to identify 545-2034 ask for Kurt.

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TO SUBLET

Two bedrooms available in Puffton Village on bus route, free heat/hot water-sublet available thru summer. Call Kelly or Eric at 549-9230.

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sun-coastvacations.com

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Days $279! Includes Meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $ 459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

Get $$PAID$$ to lose up to 5-400 lbs. 1-888-709-8197 www.healthurgent.com

NEED A SUMMER JOB!!!

CHECK OUT THE CLASSIFIEDS DAILY...

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1 ..... CBS/3
4 ..... NESN
5 ..... Fox Sport NE
6 ..... PBS/57
7 ..... HSCN Movie Channel
8 ..... WB/20
9 ..... HSCN Movie Channel
10 ..... TV Guide Channel
11 ..... FOX/61
12 ..... ABC/40
13 ..... NBC/22
14 ..... International Channel
15 ..... UMATV
16 ..... HSCN Info Channel
17 ..... ESPN
18 ..... ESPN 2
19 ..... UNC-TV
20 ..... ESPN Classic
21 ..... Cavalcade
22 ..... CNN
23 ..... CNN HL
24 ..... Weather Channel
25 ..... Learning Channel
26 ..... History Channel
27 ..... A&E
28 ..... Discovery Health
29 ..... Fred Network
30 ..... NASA
31 ..... Home & Garden TV
32 ..... Travel Channel
34 ..... Lifetime
35 ..... CNBC
36 ..... Tech TV
37 ..... BET
38 ..... UPN-38
39 ..... USA
40 ..... TNN
41 ..... MTV
42 ..... CMT
43 ..... VH-1
44 ..... TNT
45 ..... TBS
46 ..... E! Entertainment
47 ..... Sci-Fi Channel
48 ..... Court TV
49 ..... Nick at Nite
50 ..... Comedy Central
51 ..... Cartoon Network
52 ..... Game Show Network
53 ..... TV Land
54 ..... FOX Family
55 ..... Animation
56 ..... Galaxy 6
57 ..... Telemundo
58 ..... College TV Network
59 ..... C-SPAN
60 ..... C-SPAN2
61 ..... Bloomberg Television

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 8, 2002

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	News hour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Now With Bill Moyers (N) (In		Daniel O'Donnell (In
WFSB	3	3 News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	To Be Announced		First Monday "Fight to Live" (In		48 Hours (In Stereo) (In		News (N)	Late Show (In
WBZ	4	4 News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	To Be Announced		First Monday "Fight to Live" (In		48 Hours (In Stereo) (In		News (N)	Late Show (In
WCVB	5	5 News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N)	Funniest Home Videos		All New Bloopers 4 (In Stereo)		20/20 (In		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WLVI	6	Nanny (N)	Just Shoot Me	Friends (N)	Raymond	Sabrina-Witch	Raising Dad (N)	Reba (N)	Maybe It's Me	News (N)		Friends (N)	Raymond
WHDH	7	News (N)	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N) (In	Dateline (In Stereo) (N)				Law & Order: Special Victims		News (N)	Tonight Show
WTXX	25	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends (N)	Just Shoot Me	Sabrina-Witch	Raising Dad (N)	Reba (N)	Maybe It's Me	News (N)	Home Imp.	Blind Date (N)
WVIT	30	News (N)	NBC News	Extra (N) (In	Hollywood	Dateline (In Stereo) (N)				Law & Order: Special Victims		News (N)	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Raymond		70s Show	Titus (N)	Dark Angel "Love in Vein" (N)		News (N)		Seinfeld (N)	Raymond
WYLP	9	News (N)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Dateline (In Stereo) (N)				Law & Order: Special Victims		News (N)	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	News hour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Tribute to Victor Borge (In Stereo) (N)				Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News (N)	ABC News	Seinfeld (N)	Frasier (N)	Funniest Home Videos		All New Bloopers 4 (In Stereo)		20/20 (In		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	News	Frasier (N)	★ Far Game (1995, Suspense) Cindy Crawford. (In Stereo) (N)				Ent. Tonight	Frasier (N)	5th Wheel	Shipmates
WTBS	72	Cosby Show	Roseanne (N)	Friends (N)	Roseanne (N)	★★ "Dead in a Heartbeat" (2002, Suspense) Judge Reinhold				★★ "Dead in a Heartbeat" (2002, Suspense) Judge Reinhold
A&E	70	Night Court	Newsradio (N)	Law & Order "Prayer of Love"		Biography: Evel Knievel		Wild Ride of Outlaw Bikers "Real and Imagined"				Law & Order "Rebels" (N)
CNN	23	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire (N)	Live From...	The Point (N)	Larry King Live (N)		Newsnight		Greenfield	Moneyline (N)
COM	78	10 Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show (N)	Geeks	Pulp Comics	Premium	Premium	Premium	Premium	Premium	Comics Come Home
DISC	52	Discover Magazine		Wild Discovery		Behind the Terror		N.Y. Firefighters (N)		Mind Hunters: Profiler		Justice Files
ESPN	21	Basketball	Sportscenter	College Basketball: Big East Tournament Semifinal -- Teams TBA				College Basketball: Big East Tournament Semifinal -- Teams to Be Announced				Sportscenter
LIFE	32	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Linda Blair"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★½ "A Message From Holly" (1992, Drama) Shelley Long (N)		Women Docs (N)
MTV	29	Real World (N)	Real World (N)	Real World (N)	Real World (N)	Real World (N)	Real World (N)	Real World (N)	Osbournes	Music Videos (In Stereo)		Artists-Watch
NICK	42	Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats (N)	Spongeb	Spongeb	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cosby Show
SCIFI	35	Star Trek "The Menagerie" (N)		Earth: Final Conflict "Deja Vu"		Strange World (In Stereo) (N)		Chronicle "The King Is Undead"		Lexx "Dutch Treat" (In Stereo) (N)		Strange World (In Stereo) (N)
TLC	29	25 Defenders of the Planet		Eye Spy: Video Evidence		Police, Camera, Action!		Kursk		Submarine		Police, Camera, Action!
TNT	25	Law & Order "Terrible Justice"		Law & Order (In Stereo) (N)		★★★ "The Client" (1994, Suspense) (PA) Susan Sarandon. Premiere						Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil (1997)
USA	26	Walker, Texas Ranger (N)		JAG "Black Ops" (In Stereo) (N)		Combat Missions (In Stereo) (N)		★★★ "The Brady Bunch Movie" (1995, Comedy) Shelley Long (N)				★★★ "The Brady Bunch Movie"
HBO	45	6:45) "The Manhattan Project"		Real Sports (N)		★½ "Ludzi: Wisiec's My Cars" (2000) (PG-13) (N)		★ "Saving Silverman" (2001) Jason Biggs. (N)				Showtime	Dennis Miller
MAX	46	5:45) ★★½ "Cat Interrupted" (1989, Drama) Winona Ryder R (N)				★★½ "Fatal Attraction" (1987, Suspense) Michael Douglas. R (N)		★★★ "Disclosure" (1994, Drama) Michael Douglas. R (N)
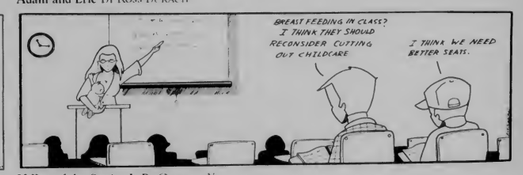
SHOW	44	(4:45) Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles II: Ozone				★½ "Urban Legends: Final Cut" (2000, Horror) R (N)		Hero's Story		Stargate SG-1	Jeremiah "The Long Road" (TV)

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Noodle By Jacki

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"...I have never met you before, but I hate you regardless. If I met you in public, I'd still hate you."

-Cliff Yablonski
www.somethingawful.com

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 61 LOW: 37	HIGH: 67 LOW: 31	HIGH: 44 LOW: 20

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – What begins with excitement is likely to develop quickly today into something that you're not likely to forget. Take care you don't get burnt out.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – What you need to know now is how to spend some time fine-tuning. The major push is over; now it's time once again to concentrate on the details.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may have reason to regret a recent decision today, but before long you'll realize that you are indeed on the right road.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You needn't take things quite so seriously today – and yet you yourself will surely be taken seriously as you wish, nonetheless.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Don't lose sight of things you most want to attain. It may mean you have to go without something in order to acquire something else.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone close to you is likely to want to get even closer today, and the responses he or she gets from you are likely to surprise both of you!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – The more unusual it is, the more you're going to like it – whether at the workplace or at home. You may want someone else to call the shots for right now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – The unlikely may well prove likely today – and vise versa. You may have to enter a new realm of activity today in order to address certain issues.

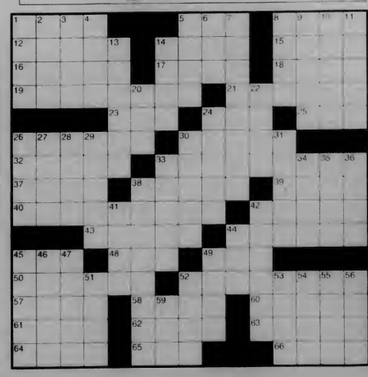
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may come in contact with someone who knows how to make sense of issues you've found difficult or even impenetrable. Try joining forces.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You won't find yourself wanting around too much today; be prepared to swing into action early on – and to keep it up all day long.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Now is no time to neglect your home in any way. Keep things neat and tidy, and don't forget to make those changes and improvements you've planned.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take care that you're not living too much in your head at this time. Trust something that you're not likely to forget. Take care you don't get burnt out.

NEW at DB Mart...
HOT STUFF PIZZA
Buy a Personal Pan Pizza
Get a FREE order of BREADSTICKS
Redeem this coupon at:
259 Triangle St
Amherst, MA
413-549-6606
Limit one per customer



ACROSS
1 Bell
5 Flower adornment
8 Barter
12 Wide awake
14 In a while
15 Slat
16 Thread
17 Flip a coin
18 Plus
19 Excused
21 Farm baby
23 Enthusiasm
24 Wheel part
25 — Paulo
26 Thaw
30 Distorts
32 Clay-target sport
33 Jury-rigged
37 Trunk possessor
38 Chopped fine
39 Diet spread
40 Wildlife-attracting deposits
42 Magic formula
43 Tudor king
44 Fracas
45 Homo sapiens
48 Prefix for "recent"
49 Montreal's prov.
50 Tie
52 Obsolete
57 Zip —
58 Band instrument
60 Please greatly
61 Portent
62 Oklahoma town
63 Tall peak
64 Grassy area
65 Look at
66 Toboggan

DOWN
1 Fishing spear
2 Mishmash
3 Midwest st.
4 Golfer Norman
5 Raucous diver
6 Dawn goddess
7 Motivated
8 Foundry refuse
9 Room dividers
10 Discombobulated
11 Scrapbook item
13 Hot dish holder
14 Stalk
20 Monsieur's wine
22 Urchins
24 Does a fall chore
26 Sonic boom producers
27 Gumbo ingredient
28 Touch
29 Moiters
30 Zany
31 Boutiques
33 Smaller than mini
34 Islands to Cousteau
35 Declined
36 Painted tinware
38 Places to eat
41 Home of jazz
42 Glove leathers
44 Famed pharaoh
45 "Star Trek" physician
46 Bakery come-on
47 Auto-safety advocate
49 Campus area
51 Peddle
52 Oscar's cousin
53 Heidi's mountains
54 Shadow
55 French I verb
56 Hero's act
59 One for Pierre

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

12-5-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH
Vegetarian Vegetable Soup
Shepherds Pie
Fish Nuggets
Lentil Chili (vegan)
Vegan Nuggets (W. Bayou)
Pasta Bar
Cheese Tortellini with Vegetables
Grill Station
BBQ Pork Sandwich
International
Chicken Wing Bar
Buffalo Chicken Wings
Teriyaki Chicken Wings
Vegan Nuggets

DINNER
Vegetarian Vegetable Soup
Cajun Catfish
Salisbury Steak
Vegetable Strudel Marinara (vegetarian)
Potato & Mushroom Delight (vegetarian) (W. Bayou)
Pasta Bar
Cheese Tortellini with Vegetables
Grill Station
BBQ Pork Sandwich
International
Chicken Wing Bar
Buffalo Chicken Wings
Teriyaki Chicken Wings
Vegan Nuggets

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Matthew F. Sacco
Photo Technician	Jeff Swartz
Copy Editor	Jennifer Eastwood
Production Supervisor	Pete "the Brit" Preston
Production Staff	Mike McCormick, Adam DeYoung

DAILY COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM UMass SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

STATISTICAL ILLUSION

Seniors finish careers in O.T.

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA – Massachusetts men's basketball coach Steve Lappas understands the mayhem of March, the month of implausible outcomes. Still, his team's 65-59 overtime loss to Xavier yesterday in the quarterfinals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament just didn't seem right.

"If someone tells you before the game you're going to out-rebound the other team, they're going to shoot 29 and [Xavier's] going to have only more baskets. I'm thinking it's like a 10-point win, easy," said Lappas, shaking his head in disbelief. "But lose? That's ridiculous."

UMass shot 48.9 percent to Xavier's 29.8, but 25 shots to the Musketeers' 14 and out-rebounded them 35-28. The Minutemen beat Xavier in almost every statistical category. Well, every one not under official control.

The Musketeers were awarded 45 free throw attempts, 35 of which found the bottom of the net. UMass finished the game 7 for 11 from the charity stripe.

"I've never seen a stat sheet like this in my entire career," Lappas said. "Here's my quote. I don't know how that happens."

The numbers were almost as baffling as Eric Williams' desperation heave that tied the game at 52-52 with not even a second left in regulation. After a broken play, Shannon Crook threw into the lane and lofted a floater that caromed off the back of the rim. But Xavier's David West tipped the ball accidentally out to Williams, situated about five feet behind the right arc, who tossed up the prayer.

"I just let it fly and it went in," Williams said. "I thought we were going to take it after that shot went in because we worked hard all year and I'm like we were going to pay off at the end of the season."

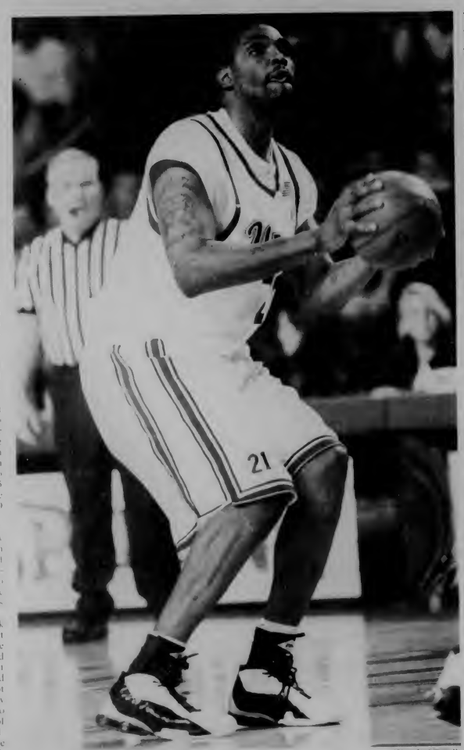
Twenty seconds into the extra period, Woo finished off a baseline drive to give Xavier a 54-52 advantage. He had free throws with 1:52 remaining put the Musketeers up 60-52, pretty much sealing the deal. Micah Brand (13 points) completed a three-point play with 33 seconds to go and Crook's 16 points led Xavier's offense, which finished with a jumper 25 seconds later to cut the lead to 61-57, but those hoops came too late.

"We did everything right," said Anthony Anderson, his first college season now complete. "We out-rebounded them; we out-shot them; we did everything we had to do. But near the end and going into over time, West started getting off. He just showed why he's the Player of the Year."

Shutout in the first half by UMass' boxed-and-one defense, West scored all of his 14 points in the final 25 minutes, including eight in overtime. His biggest hoop, however, didn't come without controversy.

With 2:42 to go in the second half and the score knotted at 48-48, West nailed a leaner coming across the lane just as the shot clock buzzer sounded. But the replay showed clearly that West still had his hands on the ball after the horn.

"The clock went off before the ball even left his hands," Kitwana Rhymer said. "It was definitely a shot clock violation because I was defending him. I saw it."



Lappas agreed.

"That was the basket of the game, probably," he said. "And I thought that was a violation. How about that?"

That shot gave Xavier its first lead since going up 35-33 thanks to a baseline jumper from West at the 15:27 mark. After a David Young free throw, UMass answered with 10 straight points, the last hoop a Rhymer lay-up on the right side to bring the score to 45-36 with 10:53 remaining. Xavier outscored the Minutemen 16-6 in the next 10:19 before Williams' buzzer-beater.

UMass opened the game on an 8-4 run capped by an Anderson trey with 15:25 to go. The Minutemen kept the lead the entire first half and after a Brennan Martin long-ranger, led 28-18 with just over two minutes to play. Xavier finished the first stanza on a 6-0 run but UMass still held a 28-21 lead midway.

"We just wanted another crack at Xavier and we definitely got that chance; we came out with fire in our eyes," said Crooks, who led UMass with 15 points and didn't turn the ball over for the second straight game. "But we've got a lot of young guys and we haven't really played in an overtime game. So that was a new situation for a lot of guys and it kind of showed Xavier's experience showed on the court. They didn't really get rattled, and we did. It's just a big learning experience for the guys coming back."

IN THE FIRST HALF OF THE UMASS-XAVIER GAME, SENIOR ERIC WILLIAMS HIT A DESPERATION THREE-POINTER TO SEND THE GAME INTO OVERTIME. WILLIAMS' SHOT WOULD HELP THE MINUTEMEN COME BACK FROM A 10-POINT DEFICIT IN THE SECOND HALF AND EVENTUALLY FORCE THE EXTRA SESSION. / DAILY COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Lappas, players upset with poor refereeing

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA – With 2:51 remaining in regulation of the Massachusetts men's basketball team's Atlantic 10 Conference Quarterfinal, Xavier's David West hit a leaner in the lane to give the Musketeers a 50-48 lead. A second before the ball left West's hand, the shot clock buzzer sounded, customarily signaling the end of the 35-second period in which teams can shoot. Instead, the shot counted, and the horn merely signaled the beginning of the end for the Minutemen and their four seniors.

Shannon Crooks, Kitwana Rhymer, Eric Williams and Ronell Blizzard combined for 32 points, 11 rebounds, and six assists in what would be the final game of their UMass careers, a 65-59 overtime loss to Xavier at the First Union Spectrum.

"It's hard for me to keep it in perspective at this point, imagine for them what it's like," said UMass head coach Steve Lappas following the loss. "It's hard for them; they're crying; they're upset; and I don't blame them. It's hard for me to deal with, and I'm 47."

Early on, it looked like the Minutemen would live to play yet another day as they dominated Xavier, holding them to just four field goals and 17-percent shooting in the opening 20 minutes. But UMass led by just seven at the break, 28-21, thanks in large to highly questionable officiating. The Musketeers hit 12-of-15 first half free throws, needing all of them just to stay in the game.

In the end, Xavier would make 35 of its 45 free throws including 11-of-16 in overtime to move on to the semifinals this evening against Dayton. Ever since falling to Xavier less than a week ago in Cincinnati, Rhymer had been urging the refs to "just let us play," but yesterday afternoon, they did not. Rhymer's UMass career is over as a result.

"You look at the stat sheet, and we should have definitely won, but the stat sheet doesn't always tell the story," said Blizzard who had two points and a steal in five minutes of action. "The officiating wasn't going our way. I'm not going to say it's going was good or bad. It just didn't go our way."

"It's tournament time, as long as you're not trying to take someone's head off, you have to let them play," added Rhymer. "The calls that they called on me or called on any of our players, they did the same thing to us we just didn't get the calls, they let them play."

The big man from St. Thomas had eight points and five boards in his final game before fouling out with just under three minutes left in overtime. But while the tri-captain will not be on the court for the Minutemen next year, his impact on the program will not be forgotten.

"Since I've been here, he's really helped me along, helped me become the player I am," said Micah Brand (15 points and 12 boards) of Rhymer. "He always gives everything he's got every night."

Rhymer would not have been given the chance to foul out of the game if it were not for a miracle three with under one second left by fellow senior Williams. Trailing by three in the final seconds, West tipped the

Turn to HOOPS, page 7

First ECAC battle is vital for UMass

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

The third game of a still very young lacrosse season isn't supposed to be this important. But when the precedent of the NCAA Tournament committee has marked down your postseason hopes to a conference title or a tie, time these games do start to increase in significance.

"It's big for many reasons," UMass coach Greg Cannella said of his team's upcoming contest with Navy. "It's still the beginning of the year, so we don't want our guys to get too caught up in it. But it's our first league game, which makes it big."

Looking at the big picture, this game is crucial as a first step toward the UMAC's automatic qualifier. But on more of a personal level, these teams don't play like they enjoy each other's company.

"Whenever you play Navy, it's going to be an intense game, and whenever you play UMass, it's going to be intense," Cannella explained. "It's just the style that both teams play."

The Navy-UMass matchup has grown to almost legendary proportions the last two times out. A couple years ago, the Mids fought through a monsoon-like afternoon

Turn to LAX, page 7

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

SOPHOMORE JEFF ZEWICKI IS LEADING GOAL SCORER FOR THE MEN'S LACROSSE TEAM WITH FOUR GOALS.

Juniors carrying the load

Lack of seniors not a problem

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

Don't try to convince the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team that youth and inexperience are liabilities in the pursuit of a championship.

Wednesday afternoon in Hempstead, N.Y., the young and talented Minutewomen, shocked maybe not the world – but a few, when they defeated the 15th-ranked Hofstra Pride, 12-6.

The road victory improved UMass' record to 2-0, while Hofstra has opened its season with a losing record, 0-1.

"It is always great when you can win your first road game," UMass Head Coach Phil Barnes said. "It's definitely something we can build on."

With no seniors on this year's squad, juniors on the UMass team have had to step up and take on the leadership role.

The juniors displayed their readiness for the task at hand Wednesday, as Jada Emery and Lydia Robinson fueled the UMass triumph over Hofstra.

Both Robinson and Emery recorded hat tricks en route to the UMass win.

Last week after the 13-2 win over Holy Cross, junior goaltender Cyndi Doyle talked about how the team has to get off to a fast start every game if they want to put themselves in a position to win each contest. The Minutewomen listened to their reminder and jumped out to an early 6-1 lead over the Pride before halftime.

Robinson was the catalyst in the UMass run as she scored all of her three goals in the first half.

"Lydia [Robinson], along with the rest of the team, played an excellent game," Barnes said.

Last year, Robinson missed a major chunk of the year due to an injury. Her return has improved the UMass squad tremendously, and no one is happier to see her comeback than her skipper.

"She makes everyone around her so much better," coach Barnes said of the New Jersey native. "She really helps our team."

UMass got off to a strong start in the contest, but Hofstra's experience was apparent when they were able to make the game close once again at the start of the second half.

The Pride started off the second half with three straight goals to cut the score to 6-4.

UMass slowed the Hofstra run when sophomore Nicole Chominski netted her first goal of the season to give the Minutewomen a three-goal lead.

Hofstra cut the lead to two once again after the Chominski goal but UMass shifted into fifth gear and sped past the Pride during the rest of the

Turn to HARVARD, page 7

UMass weekend schedule

03/09	W. Water Polo	CWPA Tournament	Amherst Col.	10 a.m.
03/09	Baseball	Quinnipiac	Lorden Field	12 p.m.
03/09	M. Tennis	G. W.	Hampshire Col.	12 p.m.
03/09	W. Lacrosse	Harvard	Totman Field	1 p.m.
03/09	W. Water Polo	CWPA Tournament	Amherst Col.	4 p.m.
03/09	M. Gymnastics	N.E. Championship	Boyden Gym.	7 p.m.
03/09	W. Water Polo	CWPA Tournament	Amherst Col.	8:30 p.m.

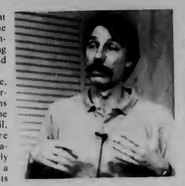
CHECK OUT ARTS FOR OU
Soldiers REVIEW ON PAGE 5
THE CASE FOR PUBLIC HIGHER EDUCATION ED/OP PAGE 4.
LACROSSE
ON PAGE 28

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
MONDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE NINEY SEVEN ☆☆☆☆☆ 3.11.02

Towsley addresses Internet concerns at lecture

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Routers, "killer apps," and Napster were all topics discussed by Don Towsley, Ph.D. during his talk entitled "The Internet: Order or Chaos" given last Thursday as part of the University of Massachusetts Distinguished Faculty Lecture Series.



After being warmly introduced by Computer Science Chair Bruce Croft, Towsley began his lecture by describing the Internet in terms of routers, servers and networks: all busy transmitting and moving data. He speculated that the Internet serves almost half a billion people worldwide.

"[There is] no way for you to really count the number of computers connected to this network," Towsley said. He then directed the audience's attention to a screen where he presented a power-point production that would follow the rest of the talk. He showed graphics of individual computers being connected to routers, hosts and other computers.

For the first part of the lecture, Towsley concentrated on the diversity of technology and applications that are prevalent throughout the Web today. Personal pages, email, movies, games and IP picture frames were all listed as applications that have become immensely popular. He even referenced a web-enabled toaster that forecasts the weather as a possible innovation.

"Apps are unlimited in this domain," Towsley said. "[There is] a tremendous diversity in the types of technology that we have."

He also mentioned the different kinds of connections and hosts that are available, including dial-up modems, fiberoptics, and radialinks. There has been an exponential growth in networks and hosts, which has enabled more computers and people to access more data, and also, remain undetected within the network.

Don Towsley

Towsley said that there is no real way to measure the Internet because "many of the computers are hidden – they're in companies that don't want to be seen." This may be because some computers and networks put up firewalls to keep secrets inside the local network, and keep unwanted parties out.

Nevertheless, according to Towsley, the Internet runs what he calls a low-grade fever. Hackers and viruses cause huge problems. Over 4,000 hosts are attacked each week, the victims of which are networks, governments, universities and businesses. Ten to 20 percent of these attacks are against machines within the home.

"What seems to be the case, is that in general the Internet runs a low grade fever that normally we don't notice but is always there," Towsley said. "There's no single authority. If you have problems, there is no single person who you can go to and say, 'fix this for me'."

Towsley then began to talk about "packet switching," and how data is moved around. Web objects are broken up into pieces and sent from computer to computer. Packet switching provides efficiency and fairness in routing. However, consequences of this type of data transfer can be loss or delay, and Towsley and his colleagues are looking into ways of design that would make loss an infrequent occurrence.

A timeline was then presented showing the different evolutions of packet switching and other parts of the Internet that are now taken for granted. Starting in the '60s and

Turn to TOWSLEY, page 3

Program reaches out to stop male violence

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Discussions on Mentors in Violence Prevention (MVP), a program that asks non-violent men to take the responsibility to confront men's violence against women, began at 9:30 a.m. Friday in Room 917 of the Campus Center with 25 men and women in attendance.

The MVP program was initiated in the early 1990's and is currently utilized in the U.S. Marine Corps and by five NFL teams, including the New England Patriots. Creators now seek to have it take a strong root at the University of Massachusetts.

"The program initially began with work with athletes and has spread, at least on this campus, to Residence Halls and fraternities," Merle Ryan, Dean of Students Office and a MVP UMass coordinating committee member, explained.

"The important thing is having men have dialogue with men concerning violence," Ron Trunzo, a Resident Director in Southwest and also a committee member, added.

Friday's meeting was an information session to invoke further interest in the MVP program at UMass, with ultimate hopes in it reaching every male on campus, both students and faculty.

Sut Jhally, UMass Communications professor and a committee member as well, spoke on behalf of Jackson Katz, founder of the MVP program and UMass alumnus ('82), in order to explain it premise. According to Jhally, the MVP program centers upon the process of questioning how to involve men in the discussion on how to change a culture of violence, of how to bring men in as active participants in ways that do not turn them off.

Part of this strategy is by invoking sports terminology. From using the term of MVP in the first place to using playbooks during the program's session, Jackson creates the atmosphere of a team. The playbook itself includes pages of potential scenarios and challenges men to discuss how they would act in such situation.

"A teammate pushes and then slaps his girlfriend at a party," a playbook example read. "People are upset but don't do anything. He's not a close friend, but he is your teammate."

The playbook then takes men through the possible trains of thought one might have in that situation: "If nobody else is stepping it, why should I?" it questioned. "It could get ugly," the book continued, "Am I ready to get into a fight, if it comes to that? But if I don't do something, I'm saying it's okay for a guy to abuse a woman."

The session's discussion picks up from there as to how average males view such situations and what actions are realistically taken to prevent or stop them.

"MVP's major focus is this notion of the bystander," Jhally explained. "It says we're all bystanders and that silence in the face of oppression is consent. The program is based on the assumption that despite all of this propaganda that portrays men as violent, most men are not violent, but are being policed by a very visible minority in culture."

Organization aims to feed children

By Melody Zagami
Collegian Staff

"Kids Can Free the Children" founder Craig Kielburger spoke at the Newman Center last Thursday as part of the Father Brian Boland Lecture Series.

A crowd of students, parents, educators and also a youth group from Worcester were all in attendance for Kielburger's presentation on his organization. "Kids Can Free the Children" is an organization consisting of 100,000 young volunteers operating in 35 countries. The group's aim is to end the exploitation of children and break the cycle of poverty through education.

In addition he also gave a talk on unequal distribution of wealth and taking small steps to make a big difference.

Keilburger's visual presentation consisted of an overhead showing photos of children working under hazardous conditions and without proper education in countries such as Africa, Israel, Palestine, Serbia, Sierra Leone and Ecuador. Keilburger recounted heartbreaking stories and amazing accomplishments. He detailed to parents in the group ways that they can get their children involved, where contributions go and how the organization is formed.

The overhead presentation of children working under oppression had a noticeable effect judging by the gasps of the audience. One images of the images featured an 8-year old boy, sitting amongst rubble. When Keilburger met the child, he asked, "Have you ever been to school?

The boy then turned to his father and asked, "Papa, what's school?"

He also showed a photo of a young girl without gloves or shoes, sorting through syringes. When Craig asked her what she did if she got a cut she told him that she just dipped her hand in a bucket of dirty water to stop the bleeding.

Stories like these and social injustices like the sexual exploitation of children and children in combat are what Keilburger explained provide motivation for he and his followers to make a difference.

Keilburger got his point across clearly.

"I'm not trying to make you feel sad, angry, guilty or frustrated," Keilburger said. "I just want you to see how blessed we are and that we are expected to give something back in return."

He also noted that the solution to poverty is not just charity. "It's not a question of the Western World writing a big, blank, check."

Keilburger's message is clear. We need to give back what we've received. We have to fight injustice because we've known nothing but justice and what better way to communicate that justice than through goodwill.

He stressed the importance of the small efforts that lead to big differences. Kielburger started the organization when he was 12. While looking at the comics he was sidetracked by the story of a 12-year-old from Pakistan who was sold into bondage as a carpet weaver and murdered for speaking out against child labor. He and some friends got together and founded the organization; their first fundraiser was a garage sale where they made $600.00.

Today, "Kids Can Free the Children," has built over 300 schools in 23 counties. It has provided education to over 15,000 children and distributed 50,000 school kits and more than two million worth of medical supplies to needy kids.

It keeps on growing today with anti-child poverty campaigns and others that provide funding for schools and income for impoverished children the world over.

The group has met with Mother Theresa, received numerous awards, and works in alliance with the UN. Kids of all ages can join "Kids Can Free the Children" for two weeks to a year.

On The Net: www.freethechildren.com.

Budget cuts hit support services hard

By Denise Nuñez and Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Enrollment Services, which serves as the umbrella to all of the smaller Support Services in the University of Massachusetts, is facing widespread budget cuts that are directly effecting service programs for minorities as well as larger Student Affairs programs.

Enrollment Services has lost one million dollars in the last three years, and will likely lose more as budget cuts increase.

"For Enrollment Services, it is not the first year of budget cuts, this is the fourth year we've been dealing with them. We got two budget cuts, one in July 2001, and one in the middle of this year," Dean of Enrollment Services Joe Marshall said. "We have an ongoing need to change things because of decreasing resources. Over the last four years Enrollment Services has been able to maintain resources to students by doing things differently."

Doing things differently includes trying to maintain the high level of services but with minimal administrative advising. Many directors of smaller programs have been forced to leave, and staffs have been cut up to 50 percent in some cases.

The Bilingual Collegiate Program, (BCP) provides bilingual students at UMass with a variety of supportive services. It reaches out to bilingual youth in local schools and communities and helps students to successfully apply to UMass. This program also has tutoring, mentoring and helps with financial aid and housing. Director Manuela Littlesield explained. However, the BCP is also a victim of budget crunches.

"At least five years ago we had completed budgets but this year cuts the budget 41 percent and want to cut 10 percent more," Littlesield said. "All the directors from the BCP are leaving."

"The United Asian Learning Center (UALRC) is similar to the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), the only difference is that it serves the Asian American students and advisors are Asian," Director Lucy Nguyen said. "Because of budget cuts it's hard to give to students. There is less money but we don't reduce service and we put students' service first."

Native American Student Support, (NASS) is an academic support program similar to BCP, UIRC, and the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS). NASS serves primarily Native American students that descend from Alaska, The Caribbean, South America and indigents from the North American continent. It is also suffering from budget cuts. According to Director Aquila McCants the cuts have severely inhibited its ability to recruit Native American students to UMass.

"This support program's services are different. For example, almost every state has a commission, NASS works with the state," McCants said. "It is not easy to recruit native students, but it is not a lack of interest – they are the poorest in the country."

CCEBMS is also feeling the strain, Director Floyd Martin said.

"The times are facing racism, some intervening," Martin explained. "The effect of budget cuts is 50 percent, and we're expecting to lose more at the end of the year. [We're expected to lose] 50 percent of staff members primarily to retirement."

The Enrollment Services budget cuts do not just affect the lesser-known programs as NASS or BCP. Students Affairs, which also resides under the Enrollment Services' umbrella, is also feeling the effects of an ever-decreasing budget.

Student Affairs supports the commissions on campus. Familiar programs such as Housing Services, Mental Health Services, The Stonewall Center and Public Safety are all categorized as Student Services. They can now also be categorized as under-funded.

"It is a learning support program outside the classroom experiences," Vice Chancellor Javier Cevallos said. "The Student Affairs' cut is 10 percent this year."

BY HARUN AKSEL/COLLEGIAN

Riveted

A child in attendance at India Nite 2002 watches the skits during the two hour presentation.

International Briefs

Switzerland

By Stacie Brown
The Lantern (Ohio State U.)

(U-WIRE) COLUMBUS, Ohio – For many, Switzerland's most recognizable trait was its neutrality. That neutrality was sacrificed earlier this week when the country voted to join the United Nations.

The vote was a close one the country's 23 cantons, or states, were deadlocked at 11-11 before Zurich cast the deciding "Yes" vote. Nationwide 1,484,818 people, or 54.6 percent, backed the government's narrow decision with 1,236,067, or 45.4 percent, voting against the referendum.

Richard Meltz, an academic adviser for Ohio State's undergraduate international-studies program, said the close vote reflects a reluctance to abandon isolationism.

"From the outside looking in, I see this as an extremely divisive issue in that country. Switzerland had an independence and neutrality that kept them out of certain issues and some are almost a little sad at the loss of that special status," Meltz said.

In a statement, the Swiss Federal Council said, "Switzerland will remain what it is, a strong democracy, a sovereign state, a neutral country."

But Alex Thompson, assistant professor of political science, said it's not that simple.

"The cost for Switzerland involves sacrificing its long-cherished neutrality. As a member of the General Assembly and possibly the Security Council and other U.N. organizations, Switzerland will now have to vote publicly – and thus make its position known on various issues," Thompson said.

"It will inevitably be drawn into delicate political situations where it might have preferred to remain more anonymous," he said.

Stephanie Grau, a sophomore in political science, agrees Switzerland is going to be forced to take a stand.

"Because it was such a close vote, the citizens of Switzerland may not totally agree with giving up their neutrality. But they are now going to have to take a position on world issues," Gras said.

"This will force them to come involved with peacekeeping operations – possibly even in Afghanistan in later months," she said.

These peacekeeping operations could possibly affect Switzerland's economy.

Lucia Dunn, professor of economics, said, "They won't be able to sell weapons to countries like Iraq. The Swiss have a large weapons industry for a country their size.

"But the main impact of this event is political, not economic," Dunn said.

Switzerland is expected to formally submit an application for membership in time to participate in the General Assembly session this fall, becoming the last state except for the Vatican to join.

Thompson said Switzerland joined because of the immeasurable benefits.

"Switzerland would like to have a seat at the table when important political decisions are made at the supranational level that might affect its interests," Thompson said.

Peace Corps

By Alexandra Gekas
The Daily Cardinal (U. Wisconsin)

(U-WIRE) MADISON, Wis. – For the 15th consecutive year, the University of Wisconsin-Madison was ranked as the university with the highest number of Peace Corps volunteers. University of Michigan-Ann Arbor ranked second and the University of California-Berkley ranked third.

Currently UW-Madison has 96 graduates working overseas in the Peace Corps and 108 serving in Americorps. Mary Rouse, director of the Morgridge Center, a campus service organization, said the repeated high rankings were due to the strong social conscience UW-Madison promotes.

"There is a very long and rich tradition of public service at UW-Madison which goes back to its founding," Rouse said.

This social conscience appears at UW-Madison in many forms, she said. The Wisconsin Idea, a program instituted over a century ago, promotes programs that allow the university to give back to the community. This "idea," Rouse said, instilled in the university a sense for public service which now extends far beyond the boundaries of the state.

UW-Madison graduate student Jon Simon, the campus representative of the Peace Corps, said he commended UW-Madison on both its student awareness and the support the university gives to public service programs like the Peace Corps.

"There is a tremendous amount of awareness at Madison for service work, and as we get a tremendous amount of support from the university, that strong relationship [gives us] a tremendous amount of exposure," Simon said.

UW-Madison senior Sean Arnold said he planned on joining the Peace Corps after graduation.

"I want to get an interesting experience after college and not get a job right away," Arnold said.

The majority of the UW-Madison graduates involved in the Peace Corps and Americorps are recent graduates which Rouse said is because before going into their career paths, they want a chance to give back to the community.

"There is such a feeling of public service that after they graduate and before they go into a career to make more money, students want to go and help, to make a difference," Rouse said.

International Students

By Bobbi Parry
Daily Utah Chronicle (U. Utah)

(U-WIRE) SALT LAKE CITY – Alex Husdal's apartment is her home and also her prison.

Alex Husdal draws a rectangle on a piece of paper. She carefully divides it into sections and begins to shade them.

"This is my apartment building. I live on the second floor," she says.

Her apartment has only two windows with trees growing in front of both of them. she continues. Even in the daytime, she has to turn on the lights to be able to see. And yet she still spends the majority of her time there.

Husdal, husband is an international student obtaining his doctorate in Geography Information Systems at University of Utah. As his wife, her visa status does not permit her to hold a paying job. Her financial situation does not allow her to attend classes. Consequently, she finds herself stranded in her small, poorly lit apartment day after day.

"I wake up, stay at home, there's nothing good to say," she said. "It's very depressing to live like this."

Spouses of international students often face such problems. In a foreign country where they may or may not speak the language and cannot work, the spouses often retreat to their homes.

"Everything [for these spouses] has to be dependent on your husband. You are really helpless. You become nonexistent in this kind of system," Husdal said.

With her F2 visa, she is not given a Social Security number; she cannot even open a bank account that yields interest. She can attend up to 12 hours of school, but she cannot afford the international tuition.

Husdal has a degree in architectural engineering and has studied in both Norway and Illinois. Her inactivity here has been hard on her.

"If you don't use your mind to think, it becomes duller," she said.

She has considered campaigning the Immigration and Naturalization Services to let spouses of international students work a maximum of five hours a week. Even these few hours would help, not only with finances but with mental health and self-esteem.

"If [the spouse] wants to buy skin care products, they can do that with the money," she said.

She also feels the U should allow spouses to audit classes or to attend at a reduced rate.

Currently, her only option is volunteer work. But even that is limited by the cost of transportation. Riding the bus becomes too expensive.

"I'd have to pay $2.50. That's $80 per month," she said.

She gets by with activities close to home, in her work as an anti-torture activist, both online and around campus.

"The main aim [of the campaign] is to inform people that these things still go on," said Husdal, whose activism is rooted deep in personal experience.

Not only has she seen torture happen in her native country (which she asked not be named) but she also has a friend who spent two years enduring water torture and solitary confinement at the hands of his government. He remains under scrutiny to this day, she said.

About 150 countries around the world are known to practice torture.

"The torturers know they can do this because of the silence of the victims and the families. If more people know, they have no place to hide," she said.

As a part of her campaign, last year Husdal manned a table in the Union Building, handing out information about such activities.

She also involved herself in the International Women's Association, an organization designed specifically for spouses in her situation. The IWA helps women adjust to their new lives in the United States. Husdal, who recently quit the organization, founded its vocabulary club.

Last year the association had about 90 women on its mailing list, though knowing the exact number of international spouses is difficult.

The club provides a haven for women intimidated by life in the United States.

"You have someone willing to help you. I helped a new student to go around the city, to call the cable company," said Melita Djurisic, an international spouse from Yugoslavia and member of the association.

The IWA offers activities for its members, such as the book club or the coffee club, as well as moral support.

International spouses must make the best of their situations, said Leda Miranda, the association's president.

"Most of us knew exactly the conditions – that [we're] not going to be able to work here. But when I came, I knew that I would be able to do other things," Miranda said.

Spouses should take the opportunity to enjoy everything they can about the country while they are here, she said.

But for Husdal, it's not that easy.

"There's not much to do. It's difficult, especially if you are a person who really likes to study. It's not healthy," she said.

Husdal's husband will graduate in 2003, at which time they will decide whether to go back to his native Norway or remain in the United States. Because of her anti-torture activism, she cannot return to her native country.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 9:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauti Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Fibwa Gitcze Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Simawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

NATIONAL LAMPOON IS BACK!
"ABSOLUTELY HYSTERICAL... ANOTHER LEGENDARY NATIONAL LAMPOON CLASSIC"
"YOU'LL LOVE EVERY STICKY MINUTE OF IT"
"THE FUNNIEST THING SINCE SLICED BREAD!"
"RYAN REYNOLDS IS FANTASTIC"
"HILARIOUS ... I DRIVE LAUGHED SO HARD IN MY LIFE"
NATIONAL LAMPOON'S VAN WILDER
THE TRADITION CONTINUES THIS SPRING
THIS FILM IS NOT YET RATED
www.nationallampoon.com
ARTISAN

Collegian News...Ice cream with more scoops.

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
VEGGIE POTATO SKINS $3.75 4.48
NACHOS ESPECIAL $3.75 4.48
SWEET POTATO FRIES $2.75 3.38
1/2 PRICE!
OCMP Welcome Here
Judie's
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

Did you like Newsies? Then you should write for News.

Panel speaks on women in arts

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

A jazz musician, an arts manager and a pioneer for women in rock music spoke in the Campus Center on Thursday about the opportunities open to women in the art world.

Miya Masaoka, a jazz composer and artist, Martha Richards, the Director of the Fund for Women in the Arts, and June Millington, a former member of the all-female rock band Fanny, spoke on a panel sponsored by the Everywoman's Center in honor of International Woman's Day.

Richards was the first of the three panelists to speak. After being asked to speak about the obstacles facing women artists, Richards said, "I think that the obstacle is sexism, sexism, sexism!"

"The problem," she continued, "lies in not being in control. Women are getting paid less. There's a consistent employment problem."

Richards described how, throughout her five-year stint at a theater company, only one play written by a woman was performed. She also cited statistics about the lack of female representation in the acting world, stating that women receive only one out of three primetime television roles.

Richards said that ultimately, discrepancies in funding must be dealt with.

"Huge amounts of money are being dealt with," she said. "Ted Turner gave one billion to the United Nations. That was only nine months of income from his stock holdings. Meanwhile, the budget for the National Endowment for the Arts is only $98 million a year."

Following Richards' comments, jazz musician Masaoka spoke. Masaoka continued the discussion of obstacles facing women in the art industry.

"One thing that happens in music and the art world is that women and people of color often become tokens," she said. "When that happens, you become defensive of your position. You somehow subliminally think that there are only one or two spots for women."

Masaoka suggested that women counter this phenomenon with support organizations.

"Men are always kind of bonding with each other," she said. "But women don't do it naturally. It's great when there are organizations, where you can get beyond the barriers created for us."

June Millington, the final panelist, spoke about her childhood as a Filipino immigrant to the United States.

"Me and my sister [a fellow member of Fanny] suffered from sexism and racism terribly," she said. "For me, music was tremendously freeing. In many ways, I feel like it saved my life.

"But," she continued, "there was no rock world for women. For me, learning blues and rock licks was very difficult, because you couldn't approach a guy for lessons without him thinking you were coming on to him."

Ultimately, Millington said, while women have yet to achieve equality in the music industry, things have greatly improved.

"There hasn't been a better time to be a woman in music," she said. "The opportunities are endless. We have vastly improved opportunities for networking with each other."

At the conclusion of the speakers' statements, the floor was opened to the audience for questions and comments. Zoe Tomasi, a senior music major, spoke about her distaste for most mainstream female musicians.

"My impression when I think of women in music is Lilith Fair," Tomasi said. "The only real woman in rock I can think of is Gwen Stefani, and that's kind of sad. Sometimes I feel like, being a woman in music, I sometimes might need to choose something I don't like."

"I think there's a huge market of women like you who want to hear something different on the radio, but can't," Millington responded. "It's a terrible problem."

UVC and Craft Center hold open house

By Andrew Chin
Collegian Staff

The Union Video Center (UVC) in conjunction with the Student Union Craft Center hosted an open house for students to come and view the inner workings of both centers on March 6.

Members from the Student Government Association and Graduate Student Senate were also in attendance at the event.

The doors were opened at 11 p.m. and the students started to drop by. Bagels and coffee, which were provided by the People's Market located in the Student Union, started off the day.

Although there was a slight misunderstanding as to where the bagels were supposed to be delivered, the mix-up was immediately fixed by noon.

Flyers, which advertised the event, were posted weeks in advance. Leith MacDonald, a Senior Bachelor of Fine Arts major, was responsible for their design.

The flyers advertised the day's list of activities ranging from facility tours, video productions, craft demonstrations, membership sign ups and workshop information sessions.

President of the UVC Julie Flanders took those interested on a walk-through tour of the UVC. She showed students the editing rooms, the video libraries, the reception area and the engineering office.

While the tour was going on, Charlie Danison, the News Director, explained to a group of people how the organization taped news. The typical news schedule started off with news tapings on Sundays, finishing around 3:00 and showing the news Monday through Friday at 6:00.

Their main subjects covered include the assorted campus news, national news, entertainment news, weather and sports.

Meanwhile over at the Craft Center, the facility tours started up. Paula Hodecker, the Craft Center director, took one group through the center's facilities showed them to the textile room, formerly the Kiln room, where students do silk painting and marbling. The next places to be shown were the two dark rooms, one used for photography and the other used for silk-screening.

She then finished the tour with the stations where people can make belts, beadings, stained glass and sculptures made from silver, brass and copper.

Vendors help sell supplies for all craft areas that they offer. The Craft Center even accepts supplies that students bring into the center.

"I do a lot of crafts here," said Eric Hedges, a junior Sociology major, who was looking up info for the Silk-screening workshops that day. "The staff has been very helpful."

As the day progressed, people who signed up for the mock news trial got a taste of what it was like behind the news anchor desks as cameras rolled and the anchor people read the day's news in a fixed, alloted time.

Katherine Ross, who was one of the anchorperson for the day's Mock News said, "it had the correct effect and I am going to be an actual member soon. So I'll be coming down here more often."

Jennifer L. Niedziela, the sports anchor fill-in for that day, said, "I used to work for the radio so it was fun to work in a different medium for a change."

The remainder of the day was spent giving out information on the workshops at both centers. Students who were interested in using the facilities were suggested to go through the workshops first before they actually used the equipment there.

Now in their second cycle of workshops offered once a week, the UVC is now running workshops for cablecasting, multicam, camcorder and editing, while the Craft Center is offering workshops for silk screening, photography, stained glass, leather, sewing and silk painting. The workshops are still available for more sign-ups as well as membership sign-ins.

The Open House ended with performances by poets, signers, and comedians at the "Open Mic," in the room adjacent to the Craft Center, previously known as the Game Room. The show was hosted by Stephen Arthur, who emceed for the evening.

Too much fun during spring break may provide trip to the hospital

By Renee Rowe
Cavalier Daily (U. Virginia)

(U-WIRE) CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. – The sun, the surf and binge drinking – lots of binge drinking – it's how many students envision spring break.

The spring vacation is a time when many students plan to have fun, be daring and act crazy. But unfortunately for some, the fun leads to tragic consequences.

Alcohol-related injuries and deaths among college students always increase between March and mid-April, the time when many students are on break, said Christopher Holstege, University of Virginia director of medical toxicology.

"Spring Break is a time when young people experience trauma associated with drinking, such as drowning, falling off balconies and driving accidents," Holstege added.

He said he sees the most alcohol poisoning cases during greek rush and big sporting events such as the fourth-year fifth.

For a fourth-year fifth, fourth-year University students attempt to drink a fifth of a gallon of 80-proof liquor during the season's final home football game.

Not all students party to get drunk, however. Last year's Health Behavior Survey by the psychiatric medicine department reported 77 percent of University students consume five or fewer drinks on weekend nights.

Most substance abuse experts define a "drink" as 12 ounces of beer, 4 ounces of wine or a shot of 80-proof liquor.

Many substance abuse experts say binge drinking has become one of the most popular forms of recreation for college students.

Binge drinking is defined as five drinks for a man and four drinks for a woman, said Rick Heisterman, a licensed social worker for University Counseling and Psychological Services.

Binge drinkers consume this amount of alcohol within a short period of time with the intention of becoming intoxicated, Heisterman added.

Virginia law considers individuals with a blood alcohol content of at least 0.08 percent to be legally intoxicated and to have impaired judgment.

"At the legal level of intoxication, body mechanics such as speech are affected," Heisterman said.

At this point, you can't tell you're drunk and you're more likely to create dangerous situations, he added.

Heisterman sees about 200 University students each year who need counseling for their alcohol use.

Of those students, 5 percent have visited the emergency room for alcohol poisoning, he added.

People become drunk as alcohol continues to enter their bloodstream from the gut. "Sobering up" occurs as the liver converts the alcohol into a harmless compound.

The human body can metabolize only one drink per hour, however, and drinking too much exceeds the liver's ability to process alcohol.

People experience a "hangover" effect when their overworked liver makes side products that remain long after drinking ends.

Consuming eight to 10 drinks in a short amount of time may lead to acute alcohol intoxication and a visit to the emergency room.

"Alcohol is a central nervous system depressant and everyone's level of tolerance is different," Holstege said.

Individuals need immediate medical attention if they are unconscious and do not respond to shaking or pinching, he added.

There are several other signs of alcohol poisoning.

* The person has slow respiration of eight or fewer breaths per minute or lapses between breaths of more than eight seconds.
* The skin is cold, clammy, pale or bluish in color.
* The person vomits while passed out and does not wake up after vomiting.

The blood alcohol content of a person who has fallen asleep or passed out can continue to rise even after the person stops drinking.

In some cases alcohol continues to build up in the body and begins to shut down vital organs such as the brain.

If not immediately treated, this stage of intoxication may lead to death.

According to Glass, binge drinking also can severely affect students' academic performance. One in six college students develops an alcohol abuse problem that may have devastating effects, she added.

As students choose what and how much to drink, they should remember that each individual body is diverse and will have varied reactions to different amounts of alcohol.

"Everybody needs to learn what their own level is and be willing to accept feedback about their behavior," Heisterman said.

Towsley

continued from page 1

making his way into the present, Towsley discussed some of the influential people and programs that ultimately helped the Internet become ubiquitous.

For example, in the 1970s, there was a proliferation of networks designed differently. The IP hourglass gave computers a common protocol to be able to communicate. Twenty years later, computers and their technology have become so prevalent that virtually anyone can create new applications, a perfect example being Napster, which was developed by a freshman at Northeastern University.

Towsley used the Napster case to segue into a discussion of "killer apps." Napster, which is an example of a peer-to-peer application, is a different kind of application than a client-server application such as CNN.com. The peer-to-peer application has exploded, thus it has become a "killer app." Even though Napster has been shut down, many similar programs have already begun proliferating, such as Gnutella and Morpheus.

"It doesn't really look like there's a way to shut it down. It's an indication of how these peer apps are becoming very dominant today," Towsley said. "Universities have finally come to terms. They realize now that these apps are no different, no less important in the lives of students. I'm sure we'll all be using them for legit reasons in the years to come."

Finally, Towsley discussed his current research in network tomography. By studying the networks of the Internet and figuring out what's really going on, Towsley "can figure out what the problems are and where they're occurring, take observations and determine [the origin] of problems."

He compared mapping the Internet to mapping the human brain. Towsley is trying to make a simple structural model and perform an inference.

"We send streams of probes and we count the probes that make it and get some kind of data series," Towsley said.

He closed his lecture by entertaining some parting thoughts with the crowd.

"The Internet is a work in progress, what you see now isn't what you'll see in five to 10 years," Towsley said. "We're all sort of affecting the direction the Internet is going. Applications will develop that will change everything."

Chancellor Williams then presented Towsley with the Chancellor's Medal. The Medal is the highest honor that the University can bestow on anyone.

"I liked the discussion of the Internet as a whole. It has a wild nature. It's very difficult to gauge things on the Internet because it's so diverse," Whitney Nelson, a junior Computer Science major, said after the lecture. "[Towsley's] talk wasn't very technical. But I thought he boiled down exactly what the Net is for people now."

Write for News. Come down and talk to Catherine, Ken or Melissa

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Oregon U. student dies in fall

By Sarah Linn
OSU Daily Barometer (Oregon State U.)

(U-WIRE) CORVALLIS, Ore. – Oregon State University student Spencer M. Haugh, who fell from a fraternity house fire escape last Friday, died early Thursday afternoon.

Haugh, 20, was taken off life support Wednesday, having remained in critical condition at Legacy Emanuel Hospital in Portland since his fall, which caused extensive brain damage.

The junior art major from Gresham suffered severe head and spinal injuries after he fell from a second-floor fire escape at Kappa Sigma fraternity.

Haugh is survived by his mother, Kathryn; his father, Michael; his brother, Brandon; and his stepbrother, James Russell. Brandon is studying for a master's degree in nuclear engineering at Oregon State. Russell is a sophomore at the University of Oregon.

Kathryn Haugh first heard of the incident early Saturday morning, when she received a call at her Gresham home.

"My first thought – and every parent's first thought, really – was that it was an automobile accident," she said. As neighbors gathered around, all she could say was, "It can't be true."

According to Capt. Bob Deutsch of the Corvallis Police Department, Spencer had been rocking back and forth on the thin, metal railing of the fire escape when he fell three stories to a basement-level concrete patio.

His blood-alcohol level at the time was at least .20 – more than twice the level at which drivers are considered drunk in Oregon.

The severity of Spencer's condition was not readily apparent.

"We knew it was bad," Kathryn said. "But all those things take a lot of time to sink in."

He was pronounced dead at 1 p.m.

BY HARIPRASAD CHEGURI

Arranged Marriage

One of the many skits in India Nite 2002 included a man searching for the perfect husband for his daughter.

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
107 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/9 - Thursday 3/14
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
THE TIME MACHINE (PG13) 12:05 4:40 7:45 10:20
40 DAYS & 40 NIGHTS (R) 12:50 4:30 7:10 9:50
WE WERE SOLDIERS (R) 12:30 4:35 7:40 10:30
IN THE BEDROOM (R) 12:20 4:15 7:15 10:20
JOHN Q (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05
BIG FAT LIAR (PG) 12:15 4:55 7:20
SUPER TROOPERS (R) 12:25 4:50 7:30 10:15
CHOSSROADS (PG13) 12:40 4:35 7:05 9:45
RETURN TO NEVERLAND (G) 12:35 4:40 7:15 9:30
THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO (PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00
BLACK HAWK DOWN (R) 9:50
A BEAUTIFUL MIND (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
LORD OF THE RINGS (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
Senior Movie - 3/14 WE WERE SOLDIERS doors open at 11:45
*NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
cinemark.com

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON
Summer 2002
Summer at UMass Boston means
- Four- and six-week sessions, beginning May 28, July 1, July 15
- Morning, afternoon, and evening classes
- On-line courses
- Travel-to-learn programs
- Quality education at an affordable cost
To learn more, visit
www.conted.umb.edu
or call 617.287.6000
A great university in a great city
UMASS BOSTON

DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL/OPINION
COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Sports gambling sets a bad example

We are but days away from the beginning of the NCAA men's basketball tournament and with it will commence the largest annual gambling medium in the United States.

Office pool directors, bar owners, web sites, advertisers and the like are all licking their chops at the predicted record rate of betting on this year's tournament. Everybody is getting in on the action. If you thought that the American flag was ubiquitous after Sept. 11, wait until you see how many consumer products have brackets stamped on them.

And it isn't just sports related products anymore. It would be one thing if the main proprietors of the tournament's popularity were Budweiser and ESPN. But when CNN.com has it plastered on its front page then you know something's going on.

The NCAA basketball tournament has become a national phenomenon and predictably, advertisers have begun using it as a selling point for any and all of their products.

It's understandable when the tournament represents the peak of collegiate athletic competition. But every year it seems that it represents competition on the hardwood less and competition in the wallet more.

So it's fine right now that the tournament's big advertisers are beer and car companies, but what happens if brackets start showing up on cereal boxes and the like. And children look at it and it reminds them of their dad cursing in front of a game on television. Is that the kind of image we want children to see? We don't think so.

The NCAA tournament has become a haven for the sharks of the advertising business and it's showing no signs of getting any better. Gone are the days when the biggest pool you entered was the five dollar one you formed with your college buddies, your classmates or your co-workers.

Now tournament pools are a click away online. All it takes is a postmark, a phone call or a credit card number to enter any number of pools from any number of sources all over the country.

People talk all the time about the pure sport of college basketball being corrupted by kids who leave early for the pros or players who take money and gifts from agents or even programs. But those people need to recognize that college basketball is almost as much a business as the NBA and that business starts with the NCAA Tournament.

The television deal between CBS and the NCAA is enormous and why? Not just because the station knows people fans will watch, but because many of these fans have a financial stake in the games and because many non-fans will tune in because they have five bucks that Gonzaga will make it to the Sweet 16 or 10-to-one odds that Kansas makes the Final Four.

College basketball is a business. And whether people want to admit it or not, that business started and is fueled by the new nature of the postseason.

Face it, this isn't your grandfather's NCAA basketball tournament.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

The case for public higher education

KEN CAMPBELL

I must study politics and war that my sons may have liberty to study mathematics and philosophy. — John Adams

I begin by apologizing to our illustrious President William Bulger for stealing his headline. It just fits so perfectly.

I enrolled in the University of Massachusetts for less than noteworthy reasons: it was the only college that accepted me. To be fair, the only other place of higher learning I applied to was a prestigious and elite Virginian school. However, my choice was clear – the University of Massachusetts or the United States Navy. I had always been told, and had always thought to myself, that education was the path to a better life. I saw the sacrifices my grandparents made to send their children to college. I had seen what sacrifices my family made to see my mother through her continuing education at the University of Massachusetts at Dartmouth. I remember serving my sister the dinner that I had prepared, knowing that it would be hours before my father returned from work and my mother from class. Now I see firsthand how education improved one's lot in life.

So it wasn't really in doubt how I would choose. I forsook an enlistment in Uncle Sam's "wooden walls" (in a John Adams mood right now) to better myself through education.

I have always been proud of my state. My commonwealth. The birthplace of the revolution. The cradle of Liberty. The Hub of the universe. I grew up thinking that no state could rival Massachusetts. The old Bay State was the best, and it wasn't mere jingoism. The Adams family, the Kennedys, Coolidge, and other politically important figures rose from here. John Hancock was from my state. So were Samuel Adams and Paul Revere.

I stood on hallowed ground, the first place where patriots shed blood for the then conception of what was going to be the United States of America. It was a field trip, one that my public school took me on. It made the words in the history book real. Moreover, it whetted my appetite for more. I wanted to know everything there was to know about the past.

My teachers – all in public schools – encouraged my obsession, giving me books, instruction and most importantly, guidance. I am nothing less than the prod uct of public education, of state-supported and mandated learning. I am the end result of John Adams' dream – that of someone who studied because of liberty and what it meant. While I may have grumbled during my high school years over testing and seemingly meaningless readings, I now realize their value. I realize that without building a solid foundation through my formative years in elementary, middle, and high school, I would not be able to complete, nor fathom, the level of education I am now receiving under the auspices of the Commonwealth.

Now that I am in my twilight months as a pupil of the Commonwealth, I realize that my, and really, no one's, education stops at age 18. Massachusetts, a liberal state in almost every sense of the word, must realize that. It was a Massachusetts senator that crafted the land-grant university idea. We have a complex of buildings on our own dear campus named for this man. It is obvious how heavily the idea of public higher education weighs on people's minds. I realize that I am being schooled by a branch of the state's government. I realize that all of my education is paid for with Massachusetts' dollars. I recognize that my public education did not stop in June 1998 on a rainy field at Apponequet High School.

"We have a national reputation. Do not tarnish it by neglecting our education. We realize that times are tough, but I plead to your better natures not to sacrifice our education..."

None of us, whether from the Commonwealth or from states or countries far away, can possibly think that a state with the politically and historically important past could possibly neglect the education of its sons and daughters.

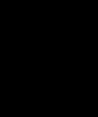
I love this state. I do not like to leave it. I do not wish for warmer shores, or dryer climates, or warmer winters. I, and Ray Staters like me, are as tough as the granite quarried out of our green hills. I am immensely proud at being schooled at the flagship campus of our university system.

That pride has not diminished in recent times. I have never been, nor never will be, ashamed at saying that I went to Massachusetts' public schools for 16 years. The state has taught me much. I will graduate knowing more than I ever thought possible. I will not just know simple facts, but how to think. That is, not "think" in the brainwashed way of cults and such, but how one goes about thinking critically, and how to break things down and analyze them at their most basic level, and then draw conclusions from there. I am now a formidable opponent in a debate. I am now fearless when presented with a problem. I am confident, self-assured, and willing to repay my debt to the state. All of those things are something that private schools can never instill. Private schools may be able to pass on one or another part of that, but they can never teach pride in one's state. They can never give an education and then expect the educated to return a portion of the benefits to the state where the college is, and not the college itself. Harvard looks out for Harvard. Boston University and Boston College look out for themselves. UMass grads, regardless of campus, remember the state, not just our alma mater, in their prayers. More than just prayers, I will always remember the state in whatever I do, for it has given me a gift that money, though much (and more as the years go by) cash has gone towards it, can not pay for. I feel a debt of service to the Commonwealth for raising me from the lower levels of education. I feel a debt of honor to Massachusetts for granting me an opportunity to better myself through learning.

I want to repay that debt somehow. In my wildest fantasies, it is by settling in the capital, covering a beat for one of the papers and paying taxes, raising a family, sending my children to public school so that they can receive the same gift I have. Regardless, I want to remain in the state. I want to participate in elections. I want to pay taxes. I want to support Massachusetts in all it does.

I am sure that I am not the only one at the University that feels this way.

I have made my position known. I am thankful for what you, Massachusetts, have given me, and willing to repay you. I beg of you, and because the General Court represents you I beg of them, please do not sell short my fellow students by snatching the gift from their reach. Please, I beseech you: fund the University. It is the best way to develop intelligent, civic-minded individuals. It is the best way to endear yourself to thousands of people. We have a national reputation. Do not tarnish it by neglecting our education. We realize that times are tough, but I plead to your better natures not to sacrifice our education, and consequently, the future of the Commonwealth in favor of other programs.



I recognize the dilemma – times are tough all over. But if there is to be a future then UMass grads are sure to be a part of it. Whether as voters, legislators, consumers, or just citizens, it is important that we correct the error of our ways: we can no longer disdain public higher education simply because quality private higher education institutes abound in our fair state. That does not alleviate the responsibility of our state to provide a top-notch education to its citizens.

I hope to send my children to the University of Massachusetts. I hope they can receive the same quality education I have. I pray that posterity will be able to partake of the bounty of learning that is the University of Massachusetts.

Posterity: You will never know how much it has cost my generation to preserve your freedom. I hope you will understand it. — John Quincy Adams.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

On my mind...

BRIAN LOHNES

Many simple things in this world amaze me, provoke me and lead me to write columns that have no redeeming social value aside from putting a smile on your mug. It this is a crime call me Let's get to it

Barry Manilow is planning a comeback. Why? I asked that too but no one could tell me. If anyone has ever been strapped into a chair stuck in a car or otherwise been forced to listen to the audio-swill that is Barry Manilow, you know why this guy is the epitome of bad. One word sums this guy up... "Copacabana." If you have ever heard this song chances are that even thinking about it will lodge the words so deeply into your brain that only a screwdriver and a case of beer will get it out. Not pretty stuff. The NY Times ran a big picture of Barry across the top of their Arts page last Monday. The guy looks like a cross between Kermit the Frog and Rod Stewart.

"So the vote passed for the RA union. This sounds like the best idea since Crystal Pepsi, or possibly "Crack Lite"."

Here's a question: What the hell is "Salgene" and how did it manage to corner the entire water bottle market? Like almost every other trend/pop culture phenomenon, I've missed the boat. I asked my roommate Topher what the story was. Basically he said it was really durable the cap is connected so it's so you can't lose it and that was about it. Ok, so like I asked before, why the hell are those things so damn popular? One feature unmentioned by Topher was the "approximate volume gauge on the side of the bottle. These people don't even know how much water their own damn bottles hold. What else does Nalgene make? My guess is nuclear bombs for the government – sweat-loop clothing, heroin and paper towels.

Ex-Catholic folks are pretty lucky. I've noticed every time a religious figure's likeness is found in say a potato chip, muffin, dirty window knotty pine door or car wax, it's always one of our guys or ladies. I've never heard of Buddah showing up in a Ruffle before. Like they've always said, the Lord works in mysterious ways. So I ask you Jehova's Witnesses, where are your people? You may be well dressed and politely take the many hundreds of cruel rejections you get every day scouring the street for converts, but you will never bust open a bag of Bagel Chips and see the face of...ah Jehova?

Do you think Major Dad is fighting in Afghanistan? I hope so because he seems like the type that can really kick ass.

The Swiss have finally cracked; they are going to join the UN. Their time of world domination has begun. The Swiss are like that friend you had in high school that instead of getting pissed off real easily acted all normal when he should have been mad. Finally, it all built up and he went berserko probably picking a fight with the biggest guy at the party you were both attending. Or was that just my experience? Anyway, the Swiss are sick of putting up with all the world's crap and are finally going to get involved and start sticking up for themselves. This should be interesting.

What's the deal with this new XM satellite radio thing? There is only one question that I have about this idea. Why the hell should anyone spend money on it? I have a radio on right now and unless I already have XM, it's working pretty good. Hold on, I'll run to my car and try it there. Yep, works fine, not one satellite in sight. The commercials do nothing to educate anyone about what its advantages are, although they do show Snoop Dogg smashing down through an office ceiling. It makes about that much sense.

Here's a piece of advice that you should always follow: Beware of homemade booze.

Question: Will figure-skating ever recover from the voting scandal at the Olympics and regain a place amongst respected sports?

Answer: No one gives a flying rat's patoot. Bring on the Biathlon, skiin' and a shootin'. It goes together like beer and chocolate cake. Trust me.

So the word is that Puff Daddy is losing his record label. Now he may have to actually move in with Martha Stewart instead of just being her neighbor. I can see it now: a personal welcome mat. "Welcome to the humble hizzome of P.ditty and M-stiddah."

So the vote passed for the RA union. This sounds like the best idea since Crystal Pepsi, or possibly "Crack Lite".

Finally, as a rule of thumb, never trust anyone that leaves a bathroom licking their hands.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian columnist.

Resorting to nukes?

RENE L. GONZALEZ BERRIOS

On Saturday, March 9 to instruct the Pentagon to prepare contingency plans for the possible use of nuclear weapons against at least seven countries: China, Russia, Iraq, North Korea, Iran, Libya and Syria.

The release of this information comes at a time when declassified documents regarding President Nixon's activities during his presidency revealed that the president seriously contemplated annihilating a large part of the Vietnamese people (including innocent men, women and children) with nuclear weapons in order to bring the Vietnam War to a close and the U.S. a victorious outcome. This information is not new (revealed previously in Henry Kissinger's Diaries), but certainly was distributed more broadly through the mass media. Nixon's actions and gradual moves by the present administration to erode safeguards regarding civil liberties, war conventions, missile arms treaties, environmental treaties and others are a major cause for concern. It seems that the current President is "masturbating" with the idea of supreme, unilateral and authoritarian power and worst of all, the American people are consenting to it. All theories that professed the conviction that the American people would not tolerate an authoritarian President encroaching on the powers of the other branches and of the democratic power of the American people are being put to test, and they are failing.

This failure of the American people to realize what their President is doing (or worse, consenting to it under the erroneous belief that they must support their President in a time of crisis by not dissenting) has reached its logical conclusion: the belief of a U.S. President of his right to unilaterally alter the most fundamental of power politics in the modern nuclear age. Namely, the abrogation of mutual nuclear destruction theories, and the contemplation of breaking the "nuclear stalemate" by considering the use of nuclear weapons in aggressive, rather than defensive action. For years, mutual nuclear destruction theories have held that rational (and this is very important to the theory) leaders would not resort to the aggressive use of nuclear weapons because the cost would be too high if they did (non-nuclear nations would condemn the use of them bringing unfavorable unpopularity in the international arena, and nuclear nations would most likely prepare or launch their own weapons as part of self-defense or alliance obligation with other victim nations). World War I started from this type of complex military alliance obligations.

It began with a simple assassination of a Serbian leader, and then progressed to be one of the world's worst wars. The possibility of another World War beginning with the ignorant aggressive actions of a jingoistic President is not unlikely.

In practice, we could contemplate some possible outcomes of the U.S.'s aggressive use of nuclear weapons (no matter how "small", as the present administration is trying to justify). A nuclear attack against China would force the Chinese to launch their nuclear weapons against the U.S. and possible U.S. allies (like Britain and France), destroying much of the Western civilization in the process. There is debate about how many weapons China has, but it has at least eight presently readied for immediate launching against the eight major cities of the United States. Estimates of the total number of nuclear weapons China have ranged from 50-200. A launching against North Korea would also have a similar Chinese reaction (because of the Chinese-North Korean alliance). A U.S. launch against Russia would ensure the total destruction of both Russia and the United States. Russia has thousands of weapons, enough to destroy the United States and its Western allies many times over. Launches against Iraq, Iran, Syria and Libya would have unpredictable consequences.

The mere usage of nuclear weapons would destabilize governments in many parts of the world, and could lead to "preemptive" strikes by other nations (China, Russia, and even Israel) against each other for fear of a breakdown in the international nuclear order. The Chinese and Russians would most likely strike at the U.S. and the West, and maybe even each other if suspicion was high enough. The Arab world and Israel would be severely destabilized, causing turmoil in the region and possible Arab war against Israel and the subsequent usage of Israeli nuclear weapons to defend itself. The reactions of nuclear India and Pakistan are also unpredictable, possibly escalating the present Kashmir and other conflicts to nuclear proportions.

All of this, I admit, is purely speculative. But what is scary to me is that our President would actually contemplate (as did Nixon) the use of nuclear weapons in an aggressive fashion (a new development), and furthermore, to publicize it in a manner that may destabilize governments around the world (especially the seven mentioned as possible targets). That governments have threatened to use nuclear weapons is not new. During the Cold War, nuclear states often threaten defensive retaliation if nuclear weapons were used. But, rational leaders in all nations knew that aggressive nuclear action would be met with resolute retaliation and would give doomsday results. If the present government cannot see the error of its ways, then it is up to the citizenry to do something about it or else face the consequences of an overly ambitious President with absolutely no idea of the repercussions of his "tough Texan cowboy" attitude.

Nuclear politics in the modern age are no joke. It's not some Starcraft or Command and Conquer video game in which there is the possibility of unilateral nuclear victory. The usage of nuclear weapons by any state would have unpredictable consequences. It is entirely possible that one nuclear state could potentially destroy the ability of another nuclear state to retaliate (U.S. vs. China), but the same could not be said of a U.S. vs. Russia interchange. Furthermore, the risk of using nuclear weapons against other nuclear states or even non-nuclear states would far outweigh the possible gains. Even under the theoretical context of a U.S. unilateral destruction of possible nuclear adversaries (a very unlikely possibility), the devastation that such an attack would do to the world economy, or to international and domestic politics would destabilize the U.S. to the possible breakdown of the nation. Stone Age economics would reign in the nuclear-afflicted areas, and the entire world would be set back hundreds of years.

Rene L. Gonzalez Berrios is a UMass graduate student.

WRITE TO ED/OP AT COLLEGIANEDITORIAL @YAHOO.COM

DAILY COLLEGIAN
ARTS&LIVING
COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 3.11.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DEIANO

Old books, bloody wars, bad HMOs

Guy Pearce is H.G. Wells's famous time traveler in The Time Machine. It is Pearce's second recent success, coming after the winter's The Count of Monte Cristo. See him next as Oliver in Oliver Twist or as War in War and Peace.

While it's great that Pearce is finding mainstream success, one wishes it wouldn't have to consistently be in movies based on old books. His best films, L.A. Confidential and Memento, have featured Australia's Pearce as conflicted characters in shady worlds. In both, he thrived.

However, his more recent movies

At the movies

with Sam Wilkinson

have made more moolah — Machine cleaned up with $22.5 million, what might be the biggest opening ever for a movie based on a boring book.

Thus, it is once again corporate demand that far outweighs creative success. Sat Bially should be furious.

Mel Gibson's We Were Soldiers shot down to second place, taking $14.5 million. Gibson does do movies other than war movies, right?

Ice Cube's totally inexplicable All About the Benjamins earned $10.1 million. A wacky buddy-caper starring Cube and Mike Epps, Benjamins is rumored to be funny. It is also rumored to be a terrible title for a movie. Why not admit defeat and call it License to Chill or Gotta Have It or I'll Be Back or any of the other inane phrases that have briefly swept this land?

While the Catholic Church continues to blame gays for its problems, Hollywood continues to cavalierly muck thousands of years of history, this time to the tune of a third place finish for 40 Days and 40 Nights. Josh Hartnett might be cute – and bankable, as the movie brought in $7.1 million – but is anybody going to feel bad for him? Anybody?

This week's American male, Hartnett won't, realistically, have to wait for 40 minutes, never mind 40 days.

Denzel Washington's turn as a crazed black man in John Q. took fifth place. The film, which earned six million dollars, features Washington as a father on the brink of madness when his white HMO refuses his son treatment. If Hollywood is nothing else, they certainly are subtle about the difference between good and evil – this time they take it for a wild ride, making the black man good and the white person evil. It generally tends to be the other way.

Smell the progress.

While sniffing, check out the putridity of the bottom five:

-Return to Neverland took sixth with $4.7 million. Now in release: sequels to Peter Pan, The Hunchback of Notre Dame, and Cinderella. Doesn't exactly seem like good news for Disney stock holders hoping for the venerable entertainer to come up with something new.

-Dragonfly made $4.1 million. As if Kevin Costner hasn't damaged his career enough. Waterworld, The Postman, Message in a Bottle, For the Love of the Game and 3000 Miles to Graceland – now he insists on entering the spooky unknown entity genre. Sixth Sense both opened and shut the door on that genus of filmmaking.

-A Beautiful Mind made $5.9 million. Russell Crowe last week choked a Brit and screamed that said Brit would never work again in Hollywood because "the best actor" decreed it. Does he really deserve another award?

-Big Fat Liar made $5.9 million. The movie went was over-budget as scene after scene had to be reshot after Frankie Muniz's voice cracked.

-The Lord of the Rings made $2.6 million. Considering this University's budget cuts, can we continue to give money to the Science Fiction society if it only pays for repeat viewings of said film?

Arthouses had some success – Monsoon Wedding and Festival in Cannes both did well, with Mira Nair's Wedding having earned $1.1 million in three weeks of slight release. It averaged more than $10,000 per showing.

Maybe next week's Resident Evil and Showtime will better the cinemas, but it's doubtful.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian staff member.

Soldiers stands out amongst inferior war films

Mel Gibson as Lieutenant Colonel Harold G. Moore in We Were Soldiers.

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

WE WERE SOLDIERS
With Mel Gibson, Sam Elliot and Chris Klein
Directed by Randall Wallace
Now Playing at CineMark 12

Hollywood should make more war movies like this, and less like Behind Enemy Lines. We Were Soldiers is a classic combat film in the tradition of ... well, that's tough to decide. It's a powerful, moving film that depicts the Vietnam War in a way few movies do: not in the jungles of the Mekong Delta, but in the forests and mountainsides of the Central Highlands.

We Were Soldiers is the true story of individual valor, bravery, and American military blunder. The film opens on a nameless road in Indochina during the 1950s, while French soldiers tried to maintain control of their colony. The viewer is treated to a quick history lesson as the Viet Minh overwhelm and kill a French patrol, taking no prisoners.

The film then goes forward in time, and we learn that the Pentagon is creating a new unit of cavalry. Air Cavalry. The success of the helicopter for medical evacuation was proven in the Korean War. Further development on the "medevac" chopper resulted in the UH-1 series "Huey" helicopter – one of the most versatile and rugged helicopters ever created. Hueys would be the new horse of the new cavalry. Lt. Col. Harold Moore (Mel Gibson) will help train the officers and men of the new unit. The training of the new unit is tough, but Moore and Sgt. Maj. Basil Plumley (Sam Elliot) are tougher.

Together, they train up the new officers that will that command the men of the new 7th Cavalry. The original 7th was Gen. George Armstrong Custer's regiment. It was wiped out in the Battle of the Little Big Horn, in 1876. Hal Moore thinks a lot about that massacre, and the one in a place once called Indochina, now known as Vietnam.

In 1965, the United States sent the Air Mobile Division to Vietnam. The 7th Cavalry (Air Mobile) was deployed to the Central Highlands. First Battalion, about 450 men, dropped into the Ia Drang Valley to secure a landing zone (LZ) known as X-Ray. What the American general staff did not know was that area was riddled with North Vietnamese Army tunnels and bases. NVA troops were waiting as the choppers came in, their single engine driven twin blades splitting the air with a distinctive sound.

The battle rages three days, during which the viewer is treated to both sides of the conflict, as well as the home front. We realize that the Army didn't expect this kind of fight, and certainly weren't ready for casualties, as telegrams informing the wives, now widows, that the secretary of the Army regrets to inform them that their husband was killed.

We Were Soldiers is not The Patriot or Braveheart in the "Nam. We Were Soldiers concentrates on the bravery of soldiers on both sides, on the ferocity of combat "in country" and in the feelings of those left behind. We Were Soldiers also takes advantage of several technical effects that puts it ahead of other great "Nam films such as Platoon and Full Metal Jacket. Napalm and other weapons are shown in all their horrible glory. It also depicts the Vietnamese as something more than just "the nun in the black pajamas" or "Charlie." The NVA are a tough and determined enemy in We Were Soldiers.

It is equal with the aforementioned films in terms of casting. Chris Klein does a surprisingly good job at being the soft-spoken new father/lieutenant who struggles to deal with the brutality of war while raising a child. Sam Elliot is the new John Wayne, but tougher. Elliot does an amazing job as the unflappable sergeant major that's been to hell and back, and prefers hell. Gibson plays the brave colonel to the hilt in what is probably his best acting since Braveheart. Barry Pepper is perfect as Joe Galloway, the reporter who tells the story of what happened at I Z X Ray.

Another star in this film are the Hueys. There are multiple UH-1Ds in various configurations, the Hueys in this film are dead-on right (unlike in Full Metal Jacket and Platoon), and will make anyone who's ever flown in one have flashbacks to the shaky flights. There are camera angles that have never been seen before in a "Nam picture, and it's a pleasant surprise. The bravery of the pilots (such as Maj. Bruce Crandall played by Greg Kinnear) is a testament to the real guys who flew low and slow to deliver ammunition, water, medical supplies, and then return with the wounded and killed. They saved lives that day.

The film does have some problems. There's a brief photomontage near the middle of the film that doesn't quite fit with the rest of the movie's feel. It jars the viewer's senses and then the film returns. It's almost like a commercial in the middle of the movie – if you have to have to leave the theater for a short time, now's the place to do it. You won't miss anything.

Another downside was the soundtrack, which didn't fit in the film very well. With the exception of a few songs, much of the music doesn't jive with what's happening on the screen. This leaves one sort of detached from what's going on, and annoys in one scene where the music masks the sounds of what's happening.

In the final battle scene, while it may be what happened, the movie leaves the viewer feeling too good about themselves, as Americans. Not that patriotism is a bad thing, but it's important to remember that we lost that war, that we had little chance of winning that war and that it was a horrible waste of American lives. The film does, however, end on a properly respectful note of the sacrifice of Vietnam veterans, casualties and of their opponents.

Those criticisms aside, We Were Soldiers will give Black Hawk Down a hard fight as the best war movie of the year, possibly one of the best films of the year. It is likely one of the better films about the Vietnam War Hollywood has made. Hopefully, they'll keep making them like this.

Radio: the best of times, the worst of times

Is something wrong with radio today, or is it just me?

Thanks to fractured radio formats and the changing record industry, No. 1 no longer means a song is heard by most of the nation. From the mid-1900s to the present, the cultural importance of a No. 1 song has vastly changed as a noted distinction is an empty statistic.

Elvis (20 No. 1 singles) and the Beatles (18), touted as the kings of the No. 1 hit, aren't actually the leaders in the No. 1 category. Bing Crosby, the crooner who topped the charts in the 30s and '40s, had nearly as many No. 1 pop singles than those two artists combined: 36.

Since the cultural impact of being No. 1 was different in that era, record chart researchers don't count Crosby's figures today.

CHANGING TIMES

The modern pop era began with the birth of rock 'n' roll in the mid-'50s, and statistics today prove what has happened since then. Now another dividing line needs to be drawn in terms of pop charts. Conditions in the record business are as different now from the days of Presley and the Beatles as their day was from Crosby's.

During the rock 'n' roll revolution in the '50s, singles were the main focus of teenage record buyers (who, just as now, made up most of the buying power). They were affordable – you could buy four or five singles for the price of an album – and it was a lot more economical and clever to have all those singles than an album that might have one hit song and a lot of filler.

Sounding Off with Nick Markantonatos

The prominence of albums didn't begin in earnest until the arrival of Bob Dylan and the Beatles in the '60s, when fans started having faith in the artist's ability to deliver an entire album of good work. From that time on, the primary purpose of singles has been to sell albums by exposing the music on radio. (The Beatles felt so confident about their music and their popularity by 1967 that they never released a U.S. single from Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band.)

The next step that marked the end of the No. 1 single can be traced a decade back to the start of Soundscan, which provided the first precise measurements of music sales. Executives who long suspected that singles cut into sales of the more profitable full-length CDs now had evidence to back that up. As a result, singles became less ubiquitous.

There's some debate about the extent to which that's true, though.

Nickelback's Silver Side Up album is in the top 10, seemingly unhurt by the CD single for the song "How You Remind Me," likewise, Santana sold boatloads of its most recent album despite a succession of singles.

To avoid manipulations of its charts, Billboard changed the way it computed the Top 40 to reflect radio airplay as well as sales. Therefore, it was possible to have a hit "single" without a song ever being released as a single.

Since records are now ranked on the charts in part by the amount of radio airplay they receive, record companies spend a fortune trying to influence stations to play their releases.

CHANGING RADIO FORMATS

Radio formats have also changed. In the early days of rock, most young music fans listened to Top 40 stations that played a broad range of music, picking the strongest cuts from rock and country, R&B and pop. That means you could hear Presley, Aretha Franklin, Marvin Gay and Frank Sinatra on the same station. Because the stations appealed to such a broad range of fans, it was possible to build a national consensus when it came to No. 1 records.

Today, radio formats have been broken into narrow categories –country, urban, adult contemporary, alt/college rock, modern rock, classic rock and so on. As a result, we don't all hear the same music anymore. And depending on age, taste of music, and geographic location the gaps have further widened.

Once the backbone of the industry, singles sales totaled 51 million last year, down a whopping 41 percent from 2000, according to Soundscan. It's believed to be the lowest sales figures since the 1940s, when singles were introduced on vinyl.

The sad truth: Singles can become No. 1 some weeks by selling as few as 15,000 copies.

LOSS OF QUALITY

Between promotional pressure and stations' desperation to hook listeners, the last factor considered is whether the record is any good. You get an idea of how flimsy a No. 1 single can be when you realize Paula Abdul and Milli Vanilli had nine No. 1 singles between them between 1988 and 1991.

There are still mainstream pop stations, but they don't show nearly the same openness to a broad range of sounds that their forerunners did. Country and hard rock, for instance, are not generally welcome on these mainstream formats. There are many No. 1 records each week, one in each format. But there is no longer that consensus choice for a No. 1 hit that everyone celebrates. For instance, take this week's No. 1 hit on the Billboard Hot 100, "Ain't It Funny" by Jennifer Lopez featuring Ja Rule. The song is in heavy rotation on urban stations but hardly such a presence elsewhere.

Some great records have reached No. 1 in recent years, including TLC's "Waterfalls," Aaliyah's "Try Again" and Mary J. Blige's "Family Affair."

But now consider the following flaccid No. 1 singles: All 4 One's "I Swear," Next's "Too Close," and Hanson's "MMMBop."

The most notorious example of the deceitful No. 1 single can be found by looking no further than Mariah Carey. Record companies like to persuade us that Carey is a credible artist because she has more No. 1 singles (15) than anyone since the Beatles and Elvis Presley.

Carey has mastered the art of the No. 1 record in an anonymous pop age – one in which No. 1 records carry only a fraction of the musical character and cultural impact that they did in earlier decades. Some of Carey's singles have been put on sale for a money-losing 49 cents, artificially boosting sales to secure flashy chart debuts.

Carey's duet with Boyz II Men on "One Sweet Day" in 1995 spent more weeks at No. 1 (16) than any other record in the '90s. Not exactly a sign of excellence when you realize that Los Del Rio's "Macarena" had the second-longest run at No. 1 in the '90s.

Nikolas Markantonatos is a Collegian staff member.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. - Now Available, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sept. 1 year lease. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.info@brandywineapts.com stop by or call (413) 549-0600.

One-bedroom, close to town, on bus route $500+. Avail. 4/1. 259-5720.

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Sublet or take over lease beginning June 1ST in Brandywine 1 bedroom. Laundry in building. Heat and Hot water. 549-0766.

Take over our lease. Starting June 1ST!!! 3 bdr. Puffton Apt. $1050/mo. Cheapest rent for a 3 bdr. Call 549-1986.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Honda Accord call 259-0068.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00

EMPLOYMENT

413-584-8857
Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-5238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Wanted: Spring/ Summer Interns. Must be Rebels, Innovators, Desenters, seeking leadership outside the box. Average pay $7200.00. Last week 617-216-4741 jbrown@college-works.com .

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

Exciting Opportunity! NSF GraduateFellowships Available. The STEM Connections Project is Looking for Students. Are you interested in sharing your love of science with others? Are you looking for a position with a difference? Then we have a great opportunity for you. STEM connections is looking for Graduate students in science, math or engineering to work with K12 teachers in Springfield in 2002/2003 on a set of unique research projects. You will work with a faculty member to explore a science topic with other graduate students and at least one middle school science teacher. Each team will research the topic, work on curriculum development and provide in-class explorations with middle school students. Stipend for one year (20 hours/week) is $20,500. To be eligible you must: 1) Be a master or doctoral candidate in good standing in at least your 2ND year by Sept. '02, 2) Be a U.S. Citizen or have Permanent Residency, and 3) Have a valid Drivers License. Applications are due on April 16, 2002 for the 2002-2003 fiscal year. All appointments run from June 1, 2002-May 31ST, 2003. For more information and an application, contact: STEM connections Marie Silver, 413-545-0455, msilver@K12.phast.umass.edu, www.umassk12.net/connections.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 1-866-291-1884 ext. 485.

EMPLOYMENT

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399 CAMP or check our website at www.independentlake.com and apply on-line. Passion Parties by Karun. Independent distributor of CAPI, FREE in home parties for women, offering a full line of lingerie, passion products, and bedroom accessories, great for ladies night out and bachelorette parties. (508) 795-0785, karynbkb@hotmail.com .

FOR SALE

Computer for sale-Compaq . CD Burner for sale-Sony, call 253-

INSTRUCTION

1614 Best offer. GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich (P Mulvey, E Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_Goodrich@hotmail.com

Private Boxing Lessons with retired Pro. Djata Bumpus, In Amherst. Call 413-731-1450.

ENTERTAINMENT

LOST AND FOUND

FOUND: Woman's watch on Thatcher way. Please Call Thatcher Cluster Office to identify 545-0234 ask for Kurt.

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $385.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon? The warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is ELSI giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center. 545-1995

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1550.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room w/ kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

WANTED

Get SSPAIDSS to lose up to 5-400 lbs. 1-888-709-8197 www.healthmgmt.com

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1 CBS 4
2 NESN
3 Fox Sport NE
4 PBS 57
5 HSCN Mosaic Channel
6 WB 12
7 HSCN Mosaic Channel
8 TV Guide Channel
9 FOX 61
10 ABC 40
11 NBC 22
12 International Channel
13 UMATV
14 HSCN Info Channel
15 ESPN
16 ESPN2
17 UNI-14
18 ESPN Classic
19 Good Life (Food)
20 CNN
21 CNN HL
22 Weather Channel
23 Cartoon Channel
24 Hot Ent Channel
25 A&E
26 Discovery Health
27 Food Network
28 NASA
29 Home & Garden TV
30 Travel Channel
31 Lifetime
32 CNBC
33 Tech TV
34 BET
35 UPN 38
36 USA
37 TNN
38 MTV
39 CMT
40 VH-1
41 TNT
42 TBS
43 E! Entertainment
44 Sci Fi Channel
45 Court TV
46 Nick at Nite
47 Comedy Central
48 Cartoon Network
49 Game Show Network
50 TV Land
51 BOK Family
52 Univision
53 Galavision
54 Telemundo
55 College TV Network
56 C-SPAN
57 C-SPAN2
58 Bloomberg Television

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 11, 2002

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	News hour With Jim Lehrer		John McDermott: A Time to Remember			Members' Choice			Austin City Limits (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker	Amazing Race 2 (N)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker	Amazing Race 2 (N)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	My Wife-Kids	Wayne Brady	The Chair (In Stereo)		Once and Again (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	7th Heaven Ay Caramba		Glory Days (N) (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Fear Factor (N) (In Stereo)			Colin Quinn	SNL Remembers John Belushi		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	19	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends		Just Shoot Me	7th Heaven Ay Caramba	Glory Days (N) (In Stereo)	Colin Quinn	SNL Remembers John Belushi		Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Fear Factor (N) (In Stereo)			Colin Quinn	SNL Remembers John Belushi		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Boston Public (N) (In Stereo)		American Embassy "Pilot"	News			Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Fear Factor (N) (In Stereo)			Colin Quinn	SNL Remembers John Belushi		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	News hour With Jim Lehrer		Great Performances: Vladimir Horowitz			Best of Sarah Brightman (In Stereo)			Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	My Wife-Kids	Wayne Brady	The Chair (In Stereo)	Parkers	Girlfriends	Once and Again (In Stereo)	News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	Hughleys	One on One				Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel
WTBS	72	Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	★½ "Guarding Tess" (1994, Comedy) Shirley MacLaine							Shipmates
A&E	20	Paralympics (Ty Pratt Soft Ba		Law & Order	Remand	Biography "Buried Step" (N)		Investigative Reports		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Asylum"
CNN	29	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Amer. Stories	The Point	Larry King Live		News night		Crossfire	Moneyline
COM	35	Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show	Geeks	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	22	Discover Magazine Sapphire		An Animal's World The Lion		Deadly Reptiles (N)		Best of Neil Leifer (N)		Chasing Giants: Giant Squid		Inside the Bermuda Triangle	Justice Files
ESPN	31	Sportscenter			NCAA Women	College Hoops' 2Night (N)							Sportscenter
LIFE	32	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Kelly Ripa"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Her Best Friend's Husband" (2002, Drama) Bess Armstrong				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	MTV Special	Five Minutes	Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Prime Time Players (In Stereo)		Real World	Real World	Real World	Flipped	Dismissed	Kidnapped
NICK	25	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Told by Ginger	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cheers	Cheers	All In Family	All in Family
SCIFI	23	Star Trek "The Menagerie"		"Firestarter Rekindled" (2002) Marguerite Moreau				"Firestarter Rekindled" (2002) Marguerite Moreau				"Firestarter Rekindled" (2002)
TLC	27	Armageddon on Wheels		Secrets of Forensic Science		Labor & Delivery			Maternity Ward "Fertile Desert"			Labor & Delivery
TNT	25	NYPD Blue "The Trial, Part"		Pretender "Under the Rods"		Law & Order "Empire"			Witchblade "Pancoun"			Law & Order "Empire"
USA	29	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Romance" (N) (In Stereo)		★★½ "Casino" (1995, Drama) Robert De Niro, Sharon Stone			Law & Order "Thin Ice"			JAG "Survivors" (In Stereo)
HBO	50	(6:15) "Cradle Will Rock" (1999, Drama) John Cusack, Hank Azaria, Cary Elwes. R		★½ "Dusty, Where's My Car?" (2000) PG-13		★★ "3000 Miles to Graceland" (2001, Action) Kurt Russell. R			Time Machine: First Look			★★★ "Meet the Parents" (2000)
MAX	52	(6:15) "Earthquake" (1974) PG		★★★ "Stand by Me" (1986) Wil Wheaton. R		★★★ "Monkeybone" (2001) Brendan Fraser.			★★★ "X-Men" (2000, Science Fiction) Hugh Jackman. PG-13			Beverly Hills
SHOW	45	★★ "If You Only Knew" (2001) Johnathon Schaech. PG-13				★½ "Supperstar" (1999) Molly Shannon. PG-13		★★★ "Sleepy Hollow" (1999, Horror) Johnny Depp. R

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Noodle By Jacki

UMass Hysteria By Eric Nycz

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"It's a great thing when you realize you still have the ability to surprise yourself."

-American Beauty

Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 41 LOW: 23	HIGH: 45 LOW: 31	HIGH: 55 LOW: 32

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Try fishing in the campus pond. The fish may have three eyes, but it's kind of appealing after a while.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You'll have a good deal to talk about when all is done, and you'll be quite proud of what you've accomplished if you stick to your guns. Unless your one of them hippie gun control people. Then stick to your granola.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your reaction to news received through the grapevine can make things worse or better, depending upon how the news is taken by others.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You can pick up the pace today, but take care that you don't try to do too much at any one time. Concentrate on completion.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You needn't do things old-fashioned way today. Explore new options – and don't listen to what all those negative souls have to say. Wait, you are one of those negative souls. Ok, the stars say, today that some upstarts are going to try something risky and scary. You must crush them at all costs. Status quo forever!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may think everything has been taken care of quite nicely, but the fact is that you may have left one loose end untied. A little duct tape and a blunt instrument will take care of that.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can have a great deal of fun with a kindred spirit today, trying to outdo each other at every turn. Be sure to maintain a playful spirit.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You aren't the only one to come up with just the right stuff today. Fortunately, there are others with whom you can team up with very successfully. You will be known as the Justice League.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You'll enjoy a rare and special opportunity to step into another's shoes before the day is out. What you learn can serve you well in the future – that your professor has huge feet.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You are likely to find that the same old thing isn't going to do it for you today. Do what you can to surround yourself with a new stimuli.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You're on the verge of a very big development, and today you'll want to look back and study just what you've been doing. Is everything in place? Giant laser? Moon base? Excellent...

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may feel as though you're letting someone down, but if you focus on yourself in a certain way you can actually help more than hinder.

Collegian Graphics... we ride bare-back.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Cream of Broccoli Soup

Fried Chicken

Hot Roast Beef Sandwich

Vegetable Taco (vegan)

DINNER

Cream of Broccoli Soup

Chicken with Dijon Sauce

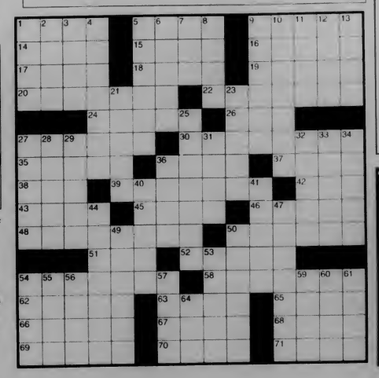
Beef Stew with Biscuit

Vegetable Stir Fry with Rice & Beans (vegan) (W Basics)

Le Commensal Entree (vegan)

NEW at DB Mart...
HOT STUFF PIZZA
Buy a Breakfast Sandwich
Get 2 FREE HASH BROWNS and a 12 oz COFFEE
Redeem this coupon at
220 THURMAN ST
AMHERST, MA
413-549-5606
Subway

ACROSS



1 Turn over
5 Pats on
9 Sky-high
14 Floppy filler
15 Jane Austen novel
16 Contributor
17 Hair curler
18 Doe's offspring
19 Color of lapis lazuli
20 Wine servers
22 Absorbs
24 Glide
26 Rickey ingredient
27 Concur
30 3-D photograph
35 Exude moisture
36 Not any
37 Let up
38 Apple seed
39 Sound systems
42 Comedian Conway
43 Bearded flower
45 Depot info
46 Tenet
48 Nonsense
50 Realty listings
51 Rocker part
52 Wish for 54 Papyrus
58 Inhale
60 Ouzo flavor
63 "Fernando" group
65 Banshee's cry
66 Climbs the ladder
67 Garden implements
68 Smashing serves
69 Hit the trail
70 Tacks on
71 Luke Skywalker's guru

DOWN

1 Bank watchdog org.
2 Pastemak heroine
3 "Take — leave"
4 Remedy
5 Overcome
6 Gather together
7 Luxury car
8 Grit
9 Ballet duet
10 Cough drop
11 Disagreeable talk
12 Safe refuge
13 Uno y dos
21 Typeface choices
23 Ice hut
25 Treatment
27 Savory jelly
28 Eddy
29 Cuttlefish genus
31 Minerals
32 Hourly fees
33 Put — save
34 Written reminders
36 Catherine — - Jones
40 Semesters
41 Cross the goal line
44 Less crowded
47 Escape
49 Most loyal
50 Nag at 53 Recorded
54 Officer's stripes
55 Apartment
56 Actress Bonet
57 Joke response
59 Burrito cousin
60 Sped off
61 Movie lioness
64 Slangy physique

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

G	O	N	G		T	E	E		S	W	A	P
A	L	E	R	T		S	O	O	N		L	A	T	H
F	I	B	E	R		T	O	S	S		A	L	S	O
F	O	R	G	I	V	E	N		P	I	G	L	E	T
		V	I	M		R	I	M		S	A	O
S	O	F	T	E	N		W	A	R	P	S
S	K	E	E		M	A	K	E	S	H	I	F	T
T	R	E	E		D	I	C	E	D		O	L	E	O
S	A	L	T	L	I	C	K	S		S	P	E	L	L
		H	E	N	R	Y		T	U	S	S	L	E
M	A	N		N	E	O		Q	U	E
C	R	A	V	A	T		O	U	T	D	A	T	E	D
C	O	D	E		T	U	B	A		E	L	A	T	E
O	M	E	N		E	N	I	D		S	P	I	R	E
Y	A	R	D		S	E	E			S	L	E	D

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Ken Campbell
Photo Technician — Richard Blake
Copy Editor — Matt Brady
Production Supervisor — Alicia Upano
Production Staff — Shannon Farrington, Mike Kulik

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM UMass SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Minutemen sink Midshipmen attack

Chris Fiore notched a goal and an assist for the men's lacrosse team this past Saturday as UMass beat No. 12 Navy by a 13-10 score

Lacrosse improves to 3-1 with win

By Eric Soderstrom
COLLEGIAN STAFF

ANNAPOLIS, Md. – Kevin Leveille is a comedian, but not because of a cosmic sense for wit. His jesting comes more in a physical spotlight.

Like when he's brought to the ground by two defenders but still manages to find a teammate streaking down the side of the field for an easy goal – the way he orchestrated his team's final tally Saturday in the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's 13-10 victory at No. 12 Navy.

That's the stuff that makes people laugh.

"Kevin can do that, we all know that," said coach Greg Cannella of the junior midfielder. "He just made a tremendous play from his knees and hats off to him for doing that."

Streaking into the open field, Leveille came upon two Midshipmen defenders and paused for a moment. Soon knocked to the sod of Navy-Marine Corps Memorial Stadium, Leveille looked trapped. But that didn't stop him from recognizing senior Dan Paccione out the left corner of his eye and assisting on the goal that ended Navy's late fourth-quarter run.

"I just stopped and figured someone would be coming down the side," said Leveille, a preseason First Team All-American. "And there was Danny, so I just dumped it off to him."

After being outscored 6-2 in the third quarter, UMass (3-1, 1-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) began the final stanza up 11-8. And despite sophomore Jeff Zywicki's laser with 9:40 remaining to put the Minutemen up 12-8, UMass' defensive struggle continued. With 8:58 to go, junior Eddy Holton laced a low shot passed Minuteman senior Rob Schneider (five saves).

One minute later, sophomore Dave Pittard did the same thing.

But that was the last time the Midshipmen (2-2, 0-1 ECAC) found nylon. After Paccione's goal with just over five minutes remaining, the UMass defense threw up a wall and allowed zero shots during a four minute Navy possession to seal the victory.

UMass	13
Navy	10

"That was pretty huge because they had been taking it to us in the second half," said junior defender Tom Fallon, who missed last game with a strained ankle. "We knew they were going to come out fired up. That game was far from over in the first half. But we stepped it up and shut them down in the last four minutes."

The Minuteman offense was the real story though. Behind Paccione's four goals and Leveille's three goals and two assists, UMass showed for the first time this season glimpses of the 2001 Minutemen's high octane style. After a slow opening period and a Navy goal under two minutes into the second period to knot the score at 2-2, UMass exploded with seven straight goals to grab a 9-2 lead midway.

"This is the way UMass lacrosse is supposed to be played," said Paccione, whose team significantly damaged Navy goalkeeper Ian Higdon's 5.26 goals against average. "We're a run-and-gun team. We showed transition, when the double came we were moving the ball, and that's the way we're going to win games. It's not going to be a 1-on-1 battle."

Also starring for the Minutemen was senior Marc Morley, who scored two goals and had three assists, and freshman Gene Tundo who, in his first start, scored one goal and added three assists.

"Individually we're great players," Paccione continued. "But to be a good team you have to play together and when our shooters play together you can see what happens."

It was a perfect time for the Minutemen to get their offense going. Its first ECAC game of the season, UMass is now only four conference wins away from its ultimate goal.

"We knew we needed this game," Paccione said. "We know that to make the playoffs we need to get the automatic bid. And we want to win the conference. We want to be ECAC champs, but alone this time."

Rookie shines for lax in first collegiate start

MATTHEW F. SACCO

ANNAPOLIS, Md. – Dan Paccione is handing neat midfield at Navy's Memorial Stadium casually answering questions being posed by two young reporters.

He counters each query with one of your standard sports world cliches until one question lands unknown news.

"Ohhhhhhhh. Gene Tundo," Paccione said as if he just remembered the answer to a trivia question. "I want you guys to write about him."

Glad to oblige.

On the other side of the field sticks Tundo, the man of the hour. He quietly gathers his equipment before he is confronted by a lone sportswriter who must have looked over the fact sheet and noticed one [illegible] Tundo. Back for more effort, Paccione [illegible] Tundo's superb game on [illegible] will [illegible]

[illegible] first collegiate [illegible] Tundo [illegible] a goal [illegible] with a goal. Fiore [illegible] like that to come into a big game – that's his first start, he just didn't tell today that he's starting. He played like a senior.

Although this was only Tundo's third collegiate game, and his four point day bumps his career total up to a whopping five, he's no stranger to big games.

The freshman spent his high school days at Orchard Park on the blessed hotbed of Long Island, NY.

Just to offer an idea of the commitment of lacrosse in Tundo's backyard, Long Island regularly sports anywhere from 10 to 15 high school teams in the national boys lacrosse top 25 poll.

And Tundo didn't just play for Orchard Park, his 62 goals and 81 assists as a senior are the marks of dominance.

So it's fair to say that his outburst against Navy wasn't exactly a surprise, at least not to his teammates or his coach.

"Gene is a talented kid," coach Greg Cannella said matter-of-factly. "We were tinkering with the attack. We gave them all a shot and we stayed with the hot one."

And after one half, Tundo was clearly heating up.

The freshman made two spectacular plays during a 7-0 UMass run that broke the game open in the second.

With the Minutemen clinging to a 4-2 lead Chris Fiore found Tundo straddling the right goal line extended.

Instead of firing a had angle shot like many rookies would do, he faked goalie Ian Higdon before feeding Paccione for a quick stick into the yawning net.

Just a few minutes later Tundo made it a 7-2 advantage by looking off Paccione on a two-on-one and firing a skip shot between Higdon's wickets.

After Navy tallied a pair of goals right out of the half time gates to cut the deficit to three, Tundo stepped up again.

"That game was far from over," Tom Fallon admitted after his mates escaped with a victory.

Well if it wasn't over at the half, Tundo assisted in Navy's effective burial with a pair of world class feeds.

First he found Kevin Leveille parked in his sweet spot on the left wing to make it an 8-4 game.

Then he dodged and drew two defenders before gift wrapping Dusty Smith's second goal of the year from the right wing.

Five points in three games as a rookie isn't bad. Nor is a four spot against the No. 12 team in the country.

So maybe next time UMass is faced with a big game, Cannella will employ the same strategy.

You know, just stick with the hot one.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian Columnist.

Santos, UMass, sweep two vs. Quinnipiac

By Jesse Greenspun
COLLEGIAN STAFF

[illegible] Quinnipiac, is a school without a nickname after it abandoned the name Braves this past winter.

After being swept in a two-game series by the University of Massachusetts baseball team, Quinnipiac (9-7) [illegible] Minutemen (10-6) [illegible] Amherst. Jesse Santos earned the victory [illegible] Minutemen [illegible] Monroe, who closed out the [illegible] Bobcats' only 2 runs in the top of the 11th [illegible] Bobcats 5-4.

Jeff Santos, [illegible] scattering four hits and five walks.

Although he did not give up a run, coach Mike Stone still did not feel it was his ace pitcher's best performance, as Santos struggled with his control in the first few innings.

"He did okay, but he did much better on Friday (a 7-2 win over South Florida)," the 14th year coach said, who picked up his 400th win at UMass on Saturday. "He needs to economize his pitches and get people out 1-2-3 like he should."

Santos agreed. "I felt better the first game," the Chelmsford native added. "It took me a couple innings to try and get comfortable. It is always frustrating to fall behind, but you have to stay with it. It only takes one pitch to get an out."

The game remained close until the fourth inning, when Matt Boulanger lined his first collegiate home run over the left field wall to drive in Jeff Altieri and Tim Klett, who had reached on a single and an error, respectively.

Later in the same frame, Connell Clark (3-for-5) came around to score on an Aaron Senez (2-for-4) single, and the Maroon and White had a 5-0 lead it would not relinquish.

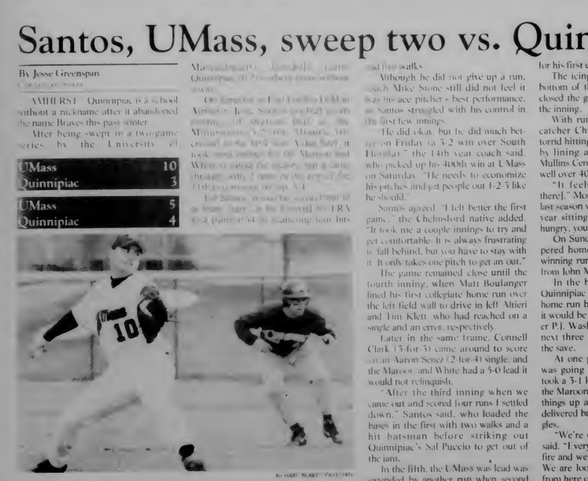
After the third inning when we came out and scored four runs I settled down," Santos said, who loaded the bases in the first with two walks and a hit batsman before striking out Quinnipiac's Sal Puccio to get out of the jam.

In the fifth, the UMass was lead was extended by another run when second baseman Adam Stojanowski launched a sky shot over the 370 sign in left center for his first collegiate home run.

The icing on the cake came in the bottom of the eighth, after Quinnipiac closed the gap to 7-2 in the top half of the inning.

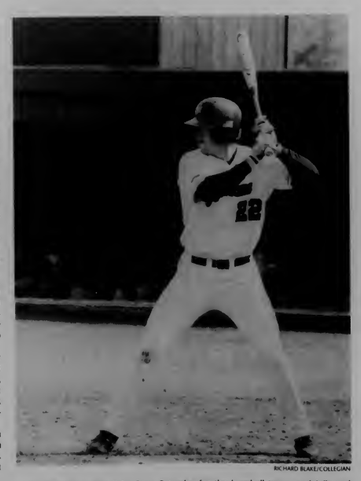
With runners on second and third, catcher Chris Morgan continued his torrid hitting (.455 on the year thus far) by lining a shot off the side of the Mullins Center practice rink, which was well over 400 feet from home plate.

"It feels great [to be back out there]," Morgan said, who missed all of last season with a shoulder injury. "I last year sitting on the bench, you get so hungry, you just want to play."



On Sunday, it was Clark who scampered home with the eventual game-winning run in the 11th, on wild pitch from John Melillo.

In the bottom half of the inning, Quinnipiac cut the lead to one after a home run by catcher Chris Varturli, but it would be for naught, as UMass pitcher P.J. Washenko was able to retire the next three hitters in order to pick up the save.



At one point, it looked Quinnipiac was going to pull off the upset, as it took a 3-1 lead into the sixth. However, the Maroon and White was able to knot things up after Altieri and Mike Kulak delivered back-to-back two-out RBI singles.

"We're on the right road," Morgan said. "Everyone on the team plays with fire and we are only going to get better. We are looking to win every time out from here on in."

The Minutemen next compete on March 14 against Sacred Heart.

Ace pitcher Jesse Santos has a 2-0 record and a 0.54 ERA after his victory this past Saturday over Quinnipiac.

Connell Clark went 3-for-3 on Saturday for the baseball team, and followed that up by scoring the game-winning run the following day against Quinnipiac.

FLECKTONATION, ARTS PAGE 5.

GET ANGRY. ED/OP PAGE 4.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
TUESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE NINETY EIGHT ☆☆☆☆☆ 3.12.02

The unlucky seven

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

The UMass Athletic Department will be reducing its athletic team count from 29 to 22 at the end of the year, in a move that will reduce its budget by $1.1 million dollars andseveral positions, and cause much frustration throughout the UMass athletic community.

By Andrew Merritt and Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

As expected, the University of Massachusetts Athletic Department cut seven varsity teams yesterday.

Men's and Women's Water Polo and Gymnastics, Men's Tennis and Indoor Track, and Women's Volleyball were all eliminated. According to the University's press release, the cuts will affect 136 athletes, 10 coaches and will save the University approximately $1.1 million per year.

According to the University, team success was outweighed by other factors, including financial burden to the Department. On a press release, the Athletic Department explained its reasoning for the teams' cut. The explanations range from financial imposition with Men's Indoor Track and Field, to rare success with Women's Volleyball, to lack of local interest with both Water Polo teams.

The eliminations come just days after rumors swirled about teams being cut. Last week, officials indicated that no final decisions had been made. Representatives of the University of Massachusetts system said only that they were expecting recommendations in the coming weeks. The cuts also come just weeks after the Faculty Senate recommended that the Athletic Department cut between one and two million dollars from its annual budget. Senators recommended that cuts not come from eliminating teams, instead suggesting that the biggest programs take the biggest hits.

It has been assumed that the Senate was referencing football, basketball and hockey. All three escaped cuts.

The University's Athletic Director, Bob Marcum, explained that the school's financial obligations to those three sports couldn't be lessened.

"We didn't think it would be an option to sink all of these programs," said Marcum, referencing the notion that all sports could have slighter budgets in the coming years. Specifically discussing the University's big three, Marcum said, "as a member of each conference, we have to adhere to the rules of the conference in terms of financial support and scholarships."

The football and basketball teams are part of the Atlantic 10, while the hockey team is a member of Hockey East. Marcum elaborated on HE, saying that UMass couldn't compete if it didn't make the necessary expenditure.

"We have a challenge for the budget, which is now at about $1.1 million," Marcum said. "And the Chancellor and President are looking at a challenge of about $17 million, and the people who are running the state are looking at something like $1 billion."

Marcum was also asked about the proposed new recreation facility. While he couldn't comment on whether or not the new building will facilitate the reinstatement of the Water Polo team, he did mention that the building will most likely include an improved swimming pool.

Marcum began meeting with the coaches of the teams that were up for cut consideration. "I gave them an overall evaluation of where each sport was at the time. The coaches were aware of the consideration."

He also mentioned that there were "no surprises" in which teams ended up being eliminated.

"With water polo, we don't even have a decent facility on campus. And when you talk about going to Little Rock, Ark. for the Eastern Championships, you need to think about what money is being spent there."

When the question was raised about how the men's Water Polo squad's recent Final Four appearance might have affected the decision, Marcum said, "When you look beyond the success they have had, there really is not

Turn to SEVEN, page 3

"Another World is Possible" panel features notable anti-war activists

By Bridget Henry
Collegian Correspondent

The anti-war speaking tour "War and Resistance: Another World Is Possible" visited the University of Massachusetts on Thursday. Sponsored by the International Socialist Review, lectures were given by a panel of notable speakers representing many organizations. While each speaker had his own issues to discuss, all were united under the same anti-war cause.

"It is important to expose the story that isn't covered in the media," Adam Meringolo, a sophomore Social Thought and Political Economy (STPEC) major and member of the International Socialist Organization (ISO) said before the lecture began. "Students need to be educated to get new perspectives, because the world's current system of capitalism is headed for destruction."

The lecture commenced with speaker David Bates, a Chicago criminal justice activist. Bates, who is now exonerated, spent ten years in jail for a crime he did not commit after being allegedly tortured by police for a false confession. He believes the U.S. government cannot properly monitor its own affairs, rendering it unable to intervene in other nations.

"Why do they hate us?" Bates asked, in reference to the rest of the world. He then provided an analogy that likened the United States to a bully.

"The class bully wakes up and thinks of who he can exploit that day. If you look around the world, we [the United States] are bullies. We have resources. Are they ours? No, we took them."

The highlight of Bates' lecture was a New York study conducted between 1988 and 1999. According to this study, legislative spending for prisons was 700 million dollars, while only 600 million dollars was allocated for schools. In California, 21 prisons were built, while only one school was constructed. In Washington, D.C., more inmates were taking courses in jail than free people.

With this study, Bates pointed out that more money is spent on jailing people than on educating them. He claimed that money spent on prisons was essentially being taken away from schools and also remarked that the money being spent on the war was a leading cause of the UMass budget crises.

Bates ended his speech by praising the recently approved Resident Assistant union and the participants of the Save UMass rally on Thursday for "organizing and fighting for what you believe in."

"Because you've experienced this, you will have sympathy in the future for people who are suffering, because you've been there. You recognize the need to organize and for that you are the leaders of tomorrow."

The next speaker, Colleen Kelly, was a representative of Peaceful Tomorrows, a group of people who lost loved ones in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Kelly, whose brother died in the Trade Center, suffered much anguish trying to learn to forgive the men who carried out the attacks.

Kelly gained a new perspective when four families from her organization visited Afghanistan. They stayed with Afghan families who had lost loved ones in U.S. bombings, and talked about their similar plight. Kelly now advocates that Americans need to be forgiven as well for their part in the Afghanistan situation, and is appalled that Bush's war on terror is justified in the names of people like her brother.

"We all need forgiveness in this country for how we act towards the rest of the world," Kelly said. She then talked about the need for peace in the world, and quoted Albert Einstein: "You cannot simultaneously prepare for war and peace."

"America is not ready for peace. War is the priority. Until we end this war, there will be no peace," Kelly finished.

The lecture continued with speaker Rima Anabtawi,

Turn to ANTI-WAR, page 3

Horowitz makes return to Amherst

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

One of the most controversial voices in American politics will be heard at Amherst College tonight.

Conservative author and activist David Horowitz will speak at Amherst's Johnson Chapel at 7:30 p.m. His lecture is titled, "How the Left Undermines America's Security."

Horowitz is the president of the Center For the Study of Popular Culture and the Editor-In-Chief of Front Page Magazine. He made national news in 2000 when he began a campaign against proposals for slavery reparations, and took out ads in college newspapers listing, "Ten Reasons Why Reparations For Slavery is a Bad Idea, and Racist Too." After many newspapers refused to print the ads, he began a national tour of campus speaking engagements.

Since Sept. 11, Horowitz has shifted his attentions from racial issues to anti-war activism. He has repeatedly accused leftists of damaging American interests, in some cases accusing them of treason. In his latest Front Page Magazine column, titled, "Appreciating the Commander in Chief," he lashes out at President Bush's critics.

"We all need forgiveness in this country for how we act towards the rest of the world," Kelly said. She then talked about the need for peace in the world, and quoted Albert Einstein: "You cannot simultaneously prepare for war and peace."

"America is not ready for peace. War is the priority. Until we end this war, there will be no peace," Kelly finished.

The lecture continued with speaker Rima Anabtawi, Massachusetts' Student Union Ballroom as part of his anti-reparations lecture tour.

"Anyone can come up [tonight] and give their viewpoint and point out what they disagree with," Horowitz told the assembled crowd. "But on campuses across the country, we have name-calling, we have protests, we have editors refusing to print an advertisement that's a political ad, that's paid for.

"How is this possible?" he asked. "What ideas are so dangerous that college students and faculty can't hear them?"

The UMass lecture was faced with many protests, with students picketing outside the Student Union and walking out as a group during the lecture. Many UMass faculty members, including Afro-American Studies Professor Ernest Allen and Women's Studies Professor Arlene Avakian, took part in the protests.

Horowitz is unlikely to revisit the Pioneer Valley without facing similar controversy. A 1999 lecture by anti-affirmative action activist Ward Connerly on the same stage drew an angry crowd, in which some students shouted at Connerly while he spoke.

Prior to his days as an unlikely campus activist, Horowitz was best known for his memoir, Radical Son: A Generational Odyssey, in which he described his transformation from a liberal activist in the 1960s to a 1990s conservative.

For all of his controversial writings, Horowitz has also authored, with Peter Collier, a number of biographies about famous American families, including The Rockefellers: An American Dynasty, and The Kennedys: An American Drama. He holds degrees from Columbia and the University of California-Berkeley, where he began his transition from campus radical to campus reactionary.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

David Horowitz, who spoke on campus last year, will be at Amherst College today.

National Briefs

Iowa

By Ty Dalbey

(U-WIRE) IOWA CITY, Iowa – In the belief that students should not be criminalized at the time they could not make a decision, a bill was introduced to decriminalize marijuana possession in small amounts.

[illegible] student Jason Pearson introduced the bill [illegible] proposing the decriminalization of marijuana possession in amounts [illegible] at the time the bill was introduced. Pearson could not be reached for comment.

[illegible] Student Association President Nick Ehrle [illegible] said the measure [illegible] a well-attended university budget.

The bill was accompanied by a resolution [illegible] Pearson [illegible] the bill [illegible] Ehrle said.

Pearson [illegible] the bill [illegible] Ehrle said.

[illegible]

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Athletic program cuts:

maybe right, but not fair

Couldn't there be another way?

Seven UMass athletic programs have been erased. Eliminated. They will exist no more.

The decisions that come with UMass's budget cuts are getting uglier and uglier, and it's probably going to get worse. That doesn't mean, however, that the elimination of volleyball, men and women's gymnastics, men and women's water polo, men's tennis, and men's indoor track and field are not regrettable.

They are. There are another 136 students in our University family who have been severely impacted by the cuts. The scholarships that made education at the University of Massachusetts possible for many of the students involved in the cut athletic programs will be cut after another year. In other words, they won't be playing next year, but the athletes on scholarship will get another year of financial aid based on their past status as varsity athletes.

But then what? The rug has been pulled out from under many of these students. Some will transfer to schools that still have their sports. Some will stay as regular students. Some will just be plain out of luck, with no scholarship and no finances to afford an education here.

This is the worst part of a decision that is painful to begin with. The budget cuts are still playing with people's lives. Promises that were made to these student athletes have been broken in the name of financial responsibility. It's a cheap excuse.

Athletic Director Robert Marcum made a decision. Rather than having a University watch 29 programs struggle financially, he's hoping to watch 22 programs flourish. Considering recent history, even that's a tall order.

The decision may even be the right one. That doesn't make it fair, though. It doesn't make the short notice to the incoming freshman class that would have participated in these sports right. And it doesn't change the fact that there is no gymnastics, water polo, men's tennis, men's indoor track and field, or volleyball at the University of Massachusetts forever more.

This decision is not a reversible one when the funding becomes available at some far distant date. Varsity athletics require longevity to be successful. Consider our hockey team. It still hasn't achieved any kind of success since it was introduced in 1993. Reintroducing any of the now-eliminated programs at a later date is not even an option because as far as recruiting goes, it's difficult to attract students to a program that opens and closes its doors as the financial weather changes.

Marcum and Acting Chancellor Marcellette Williams have supposedly saved the University $1.1 million by giving the fated seven a death sentence. It had better be enough. It's been said before, but it bears saying again. The student body at the University of Massachusetts deserves better than this.

Staff editorials are the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial staff.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian

Get aware and get angry

MELODY ZAGAMI

"It is by the goodness of God that in our country we have those three unspeakably precious things: freedom of speech, freedom of conscious, and the prudence never to practice either of them." – Mark Twain.

I'd like to ask each and every one of you to prove wrong the greatest humorist that ever lived.

We, as Americans, you will recall, are endowed with certain unalienable rights. Among those are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. What's seldom spoken of is the pursuit of "unhappiness," which is guaranteed by our freedom of assembly. The column that you're reading commenced last Thursday when our campus community mustered all the fervor it could to fight for its future. It was a beautiful Thursday: high noon, classes dismissed, teach-in coordinated, and there, in front of the Student Union, stood our finest faculty and students, pissed, unhappy, and ready to march to wherever needed marching to forcefully state their unhappiness.

Where were you?

Sam Clemens made some pretty interesting observations about the state of the Union in his time. I'd guarantee today, though, that he'd probably want you to go to a school that could afford to buy you his books. You don't, friends, our University (a term that should be used loosely from here on out) is going down the proverbial crapper. Chances are you're still sitting on your ass, hitting your bong, ordering Pinocchio's, and getting on with your day in, day out college schedule.

If you're not mad, you should be. If you're not aware of the disgusting inadequacies of your future "education," you need to be. If you don't yet realize that your parents' hard-earned pay will be going toward tuition that kicks back to old white guys on Beacon Hill and a new coach for our defensive line, then you best start paying attention now. You best start doing something about it, because when there's no longer a University of Massachusetts in Amherst, you're going to have quite a try at using your degree for anything except cleaning the bathrooms at the Hadley KFC. That's assuming someone from Holyoke Community College or Springfield Technical Community College hasn't beat you to it.

For all the bitching I do about the Happy Valley, the truth is, I love it. I love it all right down to that ridiculous "Mommy, where have all the trees gone?" bumper sticker. We are this community. The University of Massachusetts brings five thousand new people a year to a place most never even think to travel. Our school makes the surrounding towns, and it employs thousands of employees. It has nourished the children of entire generations of working-class America. It has a distinct voice that is rarely heard East of Exit 8 off the Mass Pike. It is special; it serves you excellent pizza until 2 a.m. and caters to your every whim. You make it what it is. Without you it is nothing.

So I am asking you not only to save yourselves, your educations, and your futures, I'm asking you to save the communities that surround you. When high schoolers stop applying to UMass because it doesn't offer the programs they're interested in, when graduate students stop coming because they aren't guaranteed a spot in their field, when research can't be done because there are no journals dated later than Jan '98 in the library, then the machinery will rust, the garden will go unattended and the academic way of life will be destroyed.

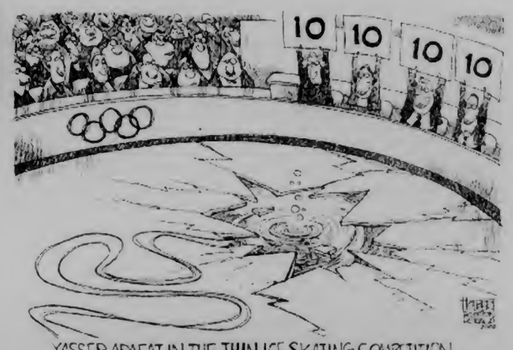
What I'm asking you to do is write a letter, an email, or a note to your legislators and state reps. What I want you to practice is being angry that this commonwealth, reportedly built on the spirit of independence and scholarship, doesn't give a [expletive] about you, your family, or your education, and it's laughing all the way to the bank. Write a letter, send a fax, or visit the State House the next time you go to Beantown. Join the rallies that are taking place everywhere.

Take a moment out of your busy schedule of procrastination and binge-drinking and do something about the atrocities administered to you daily by the people who are going to step on you plenty once you leave the plastic bubble that is UMass-Amherst. While are you young, strong, and seemingly invincible do something simple and have the prudence to practice your First Amendment, your conscious right to get pissed.

If you don't think that you can make a difference then allow me to provide you with some real-world examples:

One: Thursday night I was down at the Newman Center listening to this kid talk. At age 12 this kid started an organization that fights for children's rights all over the world. Today he has opened thousands of schools, changed child labor laws, and has a following of 100,000 volunteers. That's not what's incredible. What's incredible is he started with a bake sale.

Two: Two weeks ago, I, your Tuesday columnist, pissed off a whole population of paintballers who were not afraid to tell me exactly what they thought of me. They were pissed and they did something about it.



I urge you to do the same. If you don't, I suggest you transfer out right now, because you are also a part of the problem. Your complacency will rob you of what you have come here to receive: a good education at an affordable cost.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

Email us: Collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

Growing with clichés:

It's a way of life

YASSER ARAFAT IN THE THIN ICE SKATING COMPETITION

© Boston Herald. Distributed by NEA, Inc.

KATIE LANDERS

As I think about this upcoming weekend and following week of spending some great times in Marlboro, Massachusetts, I think about all the things parents say. The words that they have used in order to teach us how to live. Teachers are us, them. Our elders, our grandparents. Cliche #1. Well, you know, or think about what the lovely phrase that we've grown to hold so dearly? In my procrastination of work this weekend, I filled my Internet addiction by looking up cliches. Nice life. Of course I didn't spend much research. I remember plenty. I did it for kicks anyway. Let's review and see if we can uncover some answers.

Have you ever heard "what goes around comes around"? Well, not true. Plenty have good things have happened to me that bad things aren't always happening to everyone else. Next. Better point – I get the shit end of the stick. I have (cliche #2) lots of times and it doesn't look to that person. It's all about destiny here. You as a person can only make things happen. Imagine if you sat around waiting for your turn to come around. We'd all be waiting. Ed McMahon won't show up at our door with a $10 million check. Try to relate this to UMass. Why waste millions of dollars in state aid and fundraising on Lance Swift won't go for broke any time soon. He's not holding his breath (cliche #3 there).

Can we always look on the bright side of things? I point much to not see the bright side to failing an exam. I see a downward spiral (cliche #4) in my academic status. When I fail one exam I'm put in a bad mood. My anxiety toward the next one increases and basically, I suck for the rest of the semester. I end up getting a bad grade, therefore, below my GPA. That low GPA prevents me from getting a job and I'm stuck on my parents couch for yet another few months. No bright side there.

"You're only as good as when you fail to try." Tell that to the Red Sox. I've been watching them try for 21 years. Yet I have failed to watch them bring home a World Series Championship. I don't want to call them losers per se, but they aren't winners. My field hockey team in high school had one win. We weren't winners. When you lose something 19/20 in a loser. I lost my car, therefore I am a loser. I rest my case.

I think that many, primarily those from the '70's, used "the more things change, the more they stay the same" as a strong point for lyrics. If things change, how can they possibly stay the same? Oxymoron. Let's use UMass again. Over these past few months and into the next few months, there will be over 100 layoffs and early retirements. There isn't any security in the dorms anymore, or escorts. Next semester it will be even harder to get into classes and the classes you do get into will be larger. There will be less athletic teams. You or your parents will find out that you need to pay an extra grand to stay. Call me silly but I definitely don't think that's the same as last fall.

I did find an odd cliche I had never heard before, but maybe you have. "When the pom dies, the ride is over." What the hell is that supposed to mean? Taken literally, I don't think anyone should be riding a horse "that's on its last leg" (cliche # 9). I'm not even an animal lover. I still don't get what it means figuratively. Poor pony.

"If you don't beat 'em, join 'em." Yeah, that's a great one. Goes along with "if the rest of your friends jumped off a bridge, would you?" Way to confuse a kid. Everything you learn growing up, is that if your friends are drinking, don't do it. If they smoke cigarettes, don't do it. If everyone else skips classes, keep going. But hell, if you can't get everyone to change their ways you might as rip a cig, drink some rum, and fail your gen-eds. It's not a good way to live.

The last cliche I would like to refer to is "only time will tell." Time doesn't tell me anything. Basically, I'm impatient and I want to know everything now. If I sat around waiting for time to tell me things, nothing would ever get done. Time doesn't tell me to go to work in order to pay my credit card bills. If I just sat around waiting for time to tell, how Discover would get paid? I'd be paying interest in the thousands. Not a good idea.

So next time someone tells you that something is going to "hell in a hand basket," don't let someone regard you as "six or one, half a dozen or the other" (cliches 12 & 13). Be weary of the words you use because over time they lose their meaning (I guess here we could approach the phrase "only time will tell"). Same thing, different day.

Katie Landers is a Collegian Columnist.

In a column in yesterday's Collegian, Ken Campbell accidentally identified Justin Morrill as a Massachusetts senator. Morrill represented Vermont in the Senate. The Collegian and Mr. Campbell deeply regret the error and apologize for any misunderstanding that resulted.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Cutting athletics wrong decision

Dear Editor:

These past few weeks have been tumultuous ones for the statewide UMass community. The twists and turns of the constantly undulating UMass budget roller coaster have all made us want to get off the ride and lose our lunch at one point or another. However, I'm not here to discuss the finer points of U-"Mass" reegurgitation spectacles. I would like to offer a perspective from the flip side of the coin of the budget-cuts coin. It is a uniquely student perspective; the quandary of the UMass student-athlete and the rumors surrounding the demise of many of our athletic programs.

I have been a student-athlete at UMass for three years and in each of those three years, I have cherished my experience. The positive relationships that I have cultivated on and off the field will forever stay with me. Athletics has been the vehicle through which many of my fellow student-athletes could attend college. The opportunity afforded to these qualified students to access higher education is not one to play lightly with. In the classroom, student-athletes are no different academically that any of the other thousands of undergraduate students that populate UMass. We still hold ourselves to the high standard of academic excellence that is demanded of every college student.

In addition to our high commitment in the classroom, student-athletes also diligently apply themselves on the slopes, in the arena, and between the chalk lines. For many years now, the University has been fortunate enough to have nationally recognized athletic teams as well as individual student-athletes that bring athletic and academic prominence to our university. Student-athletes help to diversify our campus academically, socially, and culturally.

As a part of the larger student community, we will feel the eminent budget cuts twofold: Initially as students and secondly as athletes. First, through the consolidation of academic departments, elimination of majors, decreased availability of classes, and of course the ever-decreasing population of full-time professors. Secondly, and just as important, some of my peers will not have a sport to return to in the coming academic year if the anticipated budget cuts are implemented. It is not only a frightening scenario, but also an incredibly disheartening realization.

This leads me to my plea: Athletics are vital to the lifeblood of this university and they enrich our campus exponentially. They foster a sense of pride, unity, spirit, and offer a common ground for individuals of differing backgrounds, experiences, and beliefs to come together in a positive venue. It would be a travesty to eliminate any one of our 29 varsity teams in hopes that this would instantaneously relieve our campus's financial woes.

Ultimately, this issue will be decided on the other side of the state. But for the student foot soldiers entrenched in this current battle, the choice is clear: students must support one another. In-fighting will lead us nowhere. Surely, this portion of the budget shortfall (two million dollars over four years) can be mitigated by some other means than the Draconian elimination of nine athletic programs. It's up to each one of us to see if this roller coaster ride is worth the price of admission – and I think it is.

Student voices must be heard. Encourage the voting population (your parents, friends and family) to also contact the University, Contact Board of Trustees either by e-mail or letters. Sign petitions available around campus. Get involved in this vital campus issue.

Sincerely,

Douglas White
Class of 2003
Isenberg School of Management
Varsity Football

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 3.12.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Spring skin savers

ASK ELENA

By Elena Panesis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the unpredictability of March weather, (wasn't it 60 degrees out Saturday and Sunday was 30?) and the headaches of midterm exams, many of us are ready to say bon voyage to Amherst and aloha to more temperate climates. But savvy sun worshipers know their limits. Read on for questions on how to maximize your spring break glow without resembling a vine ripe tomato or any menu item at Red Lobster!

Elena, I'm Irish and I have super fair skin! You may as well call me Snow White. I'm going away for spring break and I'm worried that I'm going to end up burnt to a crisp. Do you have any sunscreen tips? – SB

First, let me refresh your memory on the 411 of skincare in the sun. Dermatologists recommend that you wear a sunscreen with an SPF of at least 15 everyday, which blocks 92 percent of the sun's harmful UV- rays. Since you are a fair-faced Irish lass, I suggest using at least SPF 30 giving increased protection at 96 percent.

Remember to apply lotion at least 15 minutes before heading outdoors considering that even with a low UV rating of 3-4, very light skin can potentially burn in 20 minutes. Also, do not forget about your lips, ears, eyes, feet and even your scalp! Reapply protective lip balm and look for sunscreen sprays (I like Banana Boat®) that are meant to safeguard both the scalp and hair. When swimming, use waterproof lotions which block the harmful rays for 80 minutes of water exposure. Make sure to reapply it every two hours or after towel drying your bod.

Moreover, wearing a hat, sunglasses and a T-shirt between the hours of 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. helps minimize burning. Avoid black fabrics, since the color attracts the sun and instead opt for T-shirts with the SPF built in or wash your clothing with SPF sheets that are sold in the laundry aisle of most grocery stores.

Let me confess that I do not follow all of these sun tips and I am not trying to lecture you! Yet, I do wear an SPF 15 moisturizer on my face daily and take precautions during the summer and at the beach. Supposedly 80 percent of all sun damage occurs before age 18 but that does not mean we are in the clear considering that sun-induced cancers are the most common cancers in Caucasian adults. According to studies, the risk of developing melanoma doubles every ten years!

So take care while soaking up the rays but do not spend your days hibernating indoors while everyone else is playing beach volleyball. Remember that you are on vacation but know your limits!

Hey Elena, I have heard a lot about sunless tanners but I am afraid to try them. I don't want to end up with an orange streaky body right before spring break. Do you have any suggestions? – Pale in Pierpont

Ah, the wonder of sunless tanners! I have a love/hate relationship with them. Basically, I hate putting them on (it's such a pain!) but I love the effect. Most brands that I have used require you to first cleanse the skin with a body scrub and allow it to dry completely before application. Once you are so fresh and so clean, you can begin applying the cream but make sure to read the bottle! Some brands actually tan your hands so wear rubber gloves if possible. At the very least, wash your hands thoroughly with warm soap and water immediately after you're done.

Also, some brands like Tan Perfect (sold at Sally Beauty supply and on TV) come with a color guide that aids in putting on the messy cream. The brown rather than white cream actually makes your skin look tan immediately and allows you to see mistakes/streaks and correct them. For best results, apply this brand at night, let the skin dry for 15 minutes and in the morning shower off excess lotion.

I prefer this brand to drugstore products like Neutrogena and Endless Summer. Endless Summer really left me looking like an Oompa-Loompa even though it promises its moisturizer will end up giving you a smooth, flawless, streak-free glow. Nice try!

If you do end up with streaks, first try scrubbing the area with a loofah sponge, which usually blends the color after some effort. A friend once told me to try whitening toothpaste like Rembrandt or Plus White on those pesky stains! Supposedly, it lightens the teeth and the skin! Who would have known?

Of course, all horror stories can be avoided but at a cost. Last summer, I ventured to a spa in the Boston area where a really nice "skin specialist" applied Soothys sunless tanner onto my body for forty dollars excluding tip. Girls, I must say it came out so natural! It looked so much like a real tan that I bought the lotion, which I believe has won a few awards in women's magazines for it's natural effect. It was about $26 but was well worth the cost, as I will honestly never use any other product.

So experiment a little, find a product that works for you and definitely try out a spa sometime when you have some extra cash. Lastly, wear sunscreen at the beach! Your artificially (but still gorgeous) bronzed body will not give you any extra degree of protection from el sol.

Send your questions about love, life, friends, family, school and health to askelena@yahoo.com!

Bluegrass + jazz = Bela Fleck

COURTESY JEFF FRAZIER

Bela Fleck and the Flecktones come to Northampton's Calvin Theatre tonight at 8 p.m.

By Matt Despres
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BELA FLECK AND THE FLECKTONES
Live at the Quick
Columbia Records

"The Jed Clampett of the new millennium, won't you make welcome Mr. Bela Fleck."

Equal parts bluegrass, jazz and homegrown jam, Bela Fleck is a latter day Jed Clampett, able to lead his Flecktones through far ranging territories while maintaining the sense that home is always just around the bend. On Live at the Quick, the Flecktones embrace that quality with varying degrees of success, simultaneously planting their feet while soaring musically over the lines at which most bands are content to rest.

A trio of saxophones ring in the intro to "That Old Thing" with a lamentable voice, the sort you'd find cowering in the shadows of a dark club waiting for the night to give. It sets a solemn mood: the party was nice, it seems to say, but now it's over.

Enter Victor Wooten.

Routinely recognized as the premiere jazz bassist alive by critics and fans, Wooten steps into the ring and delivers the first blow, shaking things up by way of "Farth Jam," a frenetic piece that builds on Wooten's foundation with insistent waves of percussion and a remarkable display of virtuosity by Fleck. His banjo speaks up in the mix and ultimately howls, tastefully enhanced by a wah-effect that cleverly blurs the lines between genres. Is it jazz? Bluegrass? Rock? The answer is neither here nor there: the true pleasure here is the sum, and it pleases with a perfect blend of all the right pieces.

"Zona Mona" achieves similar heights by employing subtlety and intelligent tempo shifts that rock the tune back and forth gently but also fulfill the duty of continuing forward motion. Fleck will occasionally trap himself moving side to side, but seldom regresses back into patterns of repetition.

When that does threaten, however, Wooten is on hand to bail out the boat. "Scratch & Sniff" showcases his natural feel for where a song is headed – set to the pulse of his bass, minor intricacies emerge as integral components within the context of the song's framework. His vibrato work in the high register also contrasts nicely with the Jeff Coffin-directed sax melody. Listen for the fireworks set by Fleck at the 4:10 mark as well – few musicians in any format can ignite a moment like this.

Many moments on the disc impress. The improv take on "Amazing Grace" is composed by a gorgeous run of harmonics. Fleck's journey into "Improv/Prelude from Bach Violin Partita #3" is a beautiful mixture of classical and contemporary, while synth-percussionist Future Man looks to other corners of the globe, weaving in exotic beats and Indian textures onto more local canvasses. At nearly every turn it succeeds because it surprises: pieces seem to fall from the sky and land exactly as the Flecktones had wished.

What falters on disc does so only because it strays toward what some would call "easy listening." Fair enough. In the context of a live show, however, as this album is packaged, they represent moments of progression and assume a greater level of maturity when viewed as part of a whole. Whether it's your style or not, the talent remains unquestionable.

The disc is strong, the disc is good, but never judge a show by the album that has captured it. Head out to the Calvin Theater in Northampton this evening to catch Bela Fleck and The Flecktones in the flesh. Show begins at 8 p.m.

Spring break swimsuit "issues" now solved!!!

COURTESY AMBER ANTAUCE

For spring break fun, find a swimsuit that makes you feel comfortable AND look good – in that order.

FLATTER YOUR FIGURE

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As I'm writing this column, I'm eating two steak tacos with sour cream from Buenos Somos and wishing it down with a soda. Tastes great – but when I try on my spring break wardrobe tomorrow, I'm definitely going to regret this meal. As fun as it is to hit a tropical beach during the March vacation, it's probably THE worst time to being strutting your stuff on the shoreline. The winter months have left us all with a little hibernation weight and with slicks pale skin. Sorry folks – no time to lose the weight or tone the arms, spring break is approaching at break neck speed.

While there is no way that you can suddenly drop 10 lbs. (despite what the ads in the back of Cosmo say) there are subtle tricks to looking great in a bikini next week.

Small Chest – do the words "padded" mean anything to you? Sure, some folks say that it's "false advertising" but you, my dear, are not a billboard. So if you want to sport a padded bikini top, go for it. For those opposed to padding, look for a top with gathering at the cleavage – it tricks the eye into thinking there is more there. Or embrace your smaller chest, and wear the triangle or bandeau tops that larger-chested girls WISH they could wear with ease.

Short Legs – Wear a bikini bottom or one-piece suit with high cut legs. Boy-short bottoms will just make your legs look stubby, but high cut bottoms draw the eye upwards.

Short Torso – Steer clear of the one-piece suit. Opt instead for a two-piece with a low-rise or string bikini bottom. The lower on the hips that the bottom sits, the greater the distance to the bikini top – creating the illusion of a longer torso.

Broad Shoulders – Beware of halter tops! This will only make your shoulders look wider. Choose a suit with wide-spread straps – such as a tankini, an underwire bikini top or a one-piece suit with straps that rest past your collarbone.

Big Chest – Many people who don't have big chests wonder how this could be a problem. But for comfort in the water and on the sand, most of the stores' skimpy bikini tops just won't do. Underwire tops are key – so steer clear of triangle tops. Also, wide-spread straps will give added support, so for maximum comfort, stay away from halter tops and strapless bandeau styles.

Big Hips/Thighs/Stomach – No, you don't have to rock the big ol' T-shirt. Bikini bottoms that don't sit low on the hip will cover hips and stomachs nicely. Tankinis are a great option for those who are tired of hiding their belly in a one-piece. Boy-shorts are a good option, sometimes, for those who wish to hide their thighs – but you need to get a perfect fit. Often boy shorts bug the leg too tightly causing little waves of flesh, so purchase with care. It may sound like the opposite of what you're looking for, but by buying high cut bottoms, the leg is elongated which actually causes a slimming effect.

Tans make anyone look slimmer and better toned, so try a sunless tanning cream or spray (for more information on these methods, check out today's "Ask Elena" to the left). A carefree attitude makes everyone look great as well – so when you hit the shore, don't hide yourself in shorts and a T-shirt, just get out there and have fun. Life's too short to worry about a little extra flesh – so grab a cocktail from the nearest cabana boy, and hit the beach.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-3699

APARMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. - Now Available, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sept. 1 year lease. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.info@brandywineapts.com stop by or call (413) 549-0600.

One-bedroom, close to town, on bus route $500+. Avail. 4/1. 259-5720.

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Sublet or take over lease beginning June 1st in Brandywine 1 bedroom. Laundry in building. Heat and Hot water. 549-0766.

Take over our lease. Starting June 1st!!!! 3 bdr. Puffton Apt. $1050/mo. Cheapest rent for a 3 bdr. Call 549-1986.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Car for Sale. 1995 Toyota Tercel DX Sedan 2D at 74k $400 obo. Runs great 549-1689 tamak@mail.pse.umass.edu leave your phone number , I'll call you back.

Purchasing a new or used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $159.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Bartenders needed up to $250 per day. No experience necessary. Call 1-866-291-1884 ext. 485.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12.

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Wanted: Spring/ Summer Interns. Must be Rebels, Innovators, Desenters, seeking leadership outside the box. Average pay $7200.00. Last week 617-216-4741 jbrown@college-works.com .

EMPLOYMENT

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Waterskiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399-CAMP or check our website at www.independentlake.com and apply on-line.

EMLOYMENT

Exciting Opportunity! NSF Graduate Fellowships Available. The STEM Connections Project is Looking for Students. Are you interested in sharing your love of science with others? Are you looking for a position with a difference? Then we have a great opportunity for you. STEM connections is looking for Graduate students in science, math or engineering to work with K12 teachers in Springfield in 2002/2003 on a set of unique research projects. You will work with a faculty member to explore a science topic with other graduate students and at least one middle school science teacher. Each team will research the topic, work on curriculum development and provide in-class explorations with middle school students. Stipend for one year (20 hours/week) is $20,500. To be eligible you must: 1) Be a master or doctoral candidate in good standing in at least your 2nd year by Sept. '02, 2) Be a U.S. Citizen or have Permanent Residency, and 3) Have a valid Drivers License. Applications are due on April 16, 2002 for the 2002-2003 fiscal year. All appointments run from June 1, 2002-May 31st, 2003. For more information and an application, contact: STEM connections Marie Silver, 413-545-0453, msilver@k12s.phast.umass.edu. www.umassk12.net/connections.

EMPLOYMENT

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich (P Mulvey, E Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D. Goodrich@hotmail.com

Private Boxing Lessons with retired Pro. Djata Bumpus. In Amherst. Call 413-731-1450.

LOST AND FOUND

FOUND: Ring (2/15) small, says Forever found on Orchard Hill. Also found: Bracelet (2/04) on sidewalk near Newman Ctr. Yours? Call 546-1246.

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet available $585.00 a month in sunderland on bus rte 548-6969.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

ENTERTAINMENT

Passion Parties by Karun. Independent distributor of CAPI. FREE in home parties for women, offering a full line of lingerie, passion products, and bedroom accessories, great for ladies night out and bachelorette parties. (508) 795-0785, karynbkb@hotmail.com .

FOR SALE

Computer for sale-Compaq . CD Burner for sale-Sony. call 253-1614 Best offer.

TRAVEL

Need a ride to the airport? Call Valley Transportation and get there on time. Book early for student discount. Call 253-1350.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Days $279! Includes Meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $ 459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

Get $SPAIDS$ to lose up to 5-400 lbs. 1-888-709-8197 www.health-mgmt.com

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network

1	CBS-3
4	NESN
5	Fox Sport NE
6	PBS-57
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	WB-22
9	HSCN Movie Channel
10	TV Guide Channel
11	FOX-61
12	ABC-40
13	NBC-12
14	International Channel
15	USA TV
16	HSCN Hot Channel
17	ESPN
18	ESPN-2
19	CNN-2
20	ESPN Classic
21	Cinemax Guest
22	CNN
23	CNN HL
24	Weather Channel
25	Learning Channel
26	History Channel
27	A&E
28	Discovery Health
29	Food Network
30	NASA
31	House & Garden TV
32	Travel Channel
34	Lifetime
35	CNBC
36	Tech TV
37	BET
38	UPN-38
39	USA
40	TNN
41	MTV
42	CMT
43	VH-1
44	TNT
45	TBS
46	E! Entertainment
47	Sci-Fi Channel
48	Court TV
49	Nick at Nite
50	Comedy Central
51	Cartoon Network
52	Game Show Network
53	TV Land
54	FOX Family
55	Univision
56	Galavision
57	Telemundo
58	College TV Network
59	C-SPAN
60	C-SPAN2
61	Bloomberg Television

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 12, 2002

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Andre Rieu Live at the Royal Albert Hall			Elvis Forever (In Stereo)			Welcome to the Club
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Hero Worship" (In Stereo)		Guardian "The Divide" (N)		Judging Amy "Lock Down"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Hero Worship" (In Stereo)		Guardian "The Divide" (N)		Judging Amy "Lock Down"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Dharma-Greg	Spin City	NYPD Blue "Guns & Hoses"		Philly (N) (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Gilmore Girls (In Stereo)		Smallville "Zero" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Frasier	Watching Ellie	Frasier (N)	Scrubs (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		25 Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Gilmore Girls (In Stereo)		Smallville "Zero" (In Stereo)		News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT		30 News		Extra (N)	Hollywood	Frasier	Watching Ellie	Frasier (N)	Scrubs (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11 Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	70s Show	Undeclared	24 "2:00PM - 3:00PM" (N)		News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	9	22 News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Frasier	Watching Ellie	Frasier (N)	Scrubs (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Mountain Park Memories		Under Quabbin			Watercolor	Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	20 News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Dharma-Greg	Spin City	NYPD Blue "Guns & Hoses"		Philly (N) (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	News	Frasier	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		As If (N)	Random Years	Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel	Shipmates
WTBS	22	Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	NBA Basketball Toronto Raptors at New Jersey Nets (Live)					Inside NBA	★★½ "Shoot to Kill" (1988) (PA)
A&E	43	Paralympics (N) (Part 2 of 2) (In		Law & Order "Conviction"		Biography "Roger Phoenix" (N)		★★½ "Scarface" (1983, Drama) Al Pacino, Michelle Pfeiffer
CNN	29	24 Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Amer. Stories	The Point	Larry King Live		Newsnight		Crossfire	Moneyline
COM	45	10 Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show	Geeks	★★★ "48 HRS." (1982, Comedy/Drama) Nick Nolte, Eddie Murphy				Battlebots (N)		Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	25	Discover Magazine		Venomous Snakes		New Detectives-Forensic		New Detectives-Forensic		FBI Files "Deadly Threat" (N)		Justice Files
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		College Basketball: NCAA Div	Teams TBA			College Basketball 1st Find Round -- Teams To Be Announced				Sportscenter
LIFE	39	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Vera Wang"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Remember Me" (1996, Suspense) Kelly McGillis, Premiere				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	MTV Special	Osbournes	Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Prime Time Players (In Stereo)		Real World	Real World	Real World	Osbournes (N)	Dismissed	Kidnapped
NICK	69	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Told by Ginger	Cosby Show	Cosby Show	Cheers	Cheers	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	35	Star Trek (In Stereo)		Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		★★½ "Tremors II: Aftershocks" (1996, Science Fiction) Fred Ward				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	69	28 Bewars! Bad Drivers		Secrets of Forensic Science		Private Eye: True Stories		World's Worst Drivers		Extreme Driving Quiz		Private Eye: True Stories
TNT	65	NYPD Blue "Sleep Over"		Pretender "Rey" (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Juvenile"		Law & Order "All My Children"		Charmed "Enter the Demon"		Witchblade "Pentalum"
USA	59	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Recovery" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Bombshell"		★★★½ "Get Shorty" (1995, Comedy) John Travolta. Premiere				JAG "Recovery" (In Stereo)
HBO	65	★★½ "Blast in Show" (2000) Michael Hitchcock		★★★ "Throw Momma From the Train" (1987)				★★★ "The Laramie Project" (2002) Dylan Baker		Showtime		Str Fast Under (In Stereo)
MAX	66	★★½ "Bad Boys" (1983, Drama) Sean Penn. R				★★ "Miss Congeniality" (2000, Comedy) Sandra Bullock. PG-13				★½ "Money Train" (1995, Suspense) Wesley Snipes. R
SHOW	68	★★½ "Keep the Faith, Baby" (2000, Drama) Harry Lennix. TV				★★½ "Judge Dredd" (1995) Sylvester Stallone		Extras				Chris Isaak "Rat in the House"	Queer as Folk (N) (In Stereo)

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Noodle By Jacki

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Loose Control By Submerged Duck

Quote of the Day

"It's not that I'm lazy, it's just that I don't care. It's a problem of motivation."

-Office Space

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 46 LOW: 28	HIGH: 51 LOW: 33	HIGH: 55 LOW: 30

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You're going to have to be specific and informative with others today if teamwork is to yield any results. Working together demands discipline.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You're going to have to discuss things that may seem a little "personal" to you today. Once you get started, you'll share ideas freely.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're in need of a little more security –either physical, domestic or financial – today. Don't put all your eggs in one basket, however.

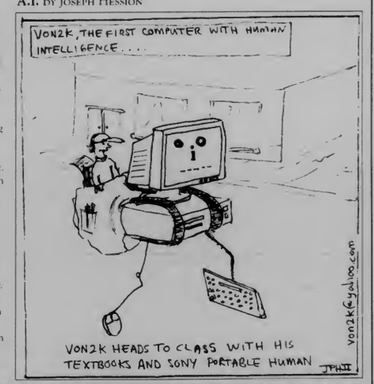
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your eyes are likely to be opened today to a reality you've never fully acknowledged. What you do with this new perspective is wholly up to you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) –It is not up to you to overrule the directives of an authority.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Now is no time for "passing the buck." Work instead to find a solution – together with others if possible. It you must, do it on your own.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Something special comes your way late in the day, and you'll discover something important that will enable you to break through a personal barrier.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may be tired of hearing the same old thing from someone who wants only your time or your money. Today is the day to say "no" once and for all.



SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may require a few careful explanations today before you understand exactly what is going on around you. Pay attention, and listen up!

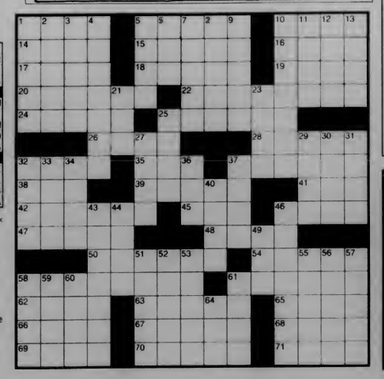
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You'll have to keep certain information to yourself today if you're going to use the element of surprise to your advantage.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Your nerves are talking to you once again, and this time you're going to want to listen. Heed subliminal warnings today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may have an odd reaction to the seasonal phenomenon today, but, rain or shine, you can still get your work done if you concentrate.

A.I. By Joseph Hession

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
Crossword not challenging enough?
Collegiate Trivia Night
Team Pub Trivia win money and prizes 9-10:30pm call for details
163 Sunderland Rd. Amherst, MA 548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition



ACROSS
1 Excess ads
5 Wallops
10 Polite cough
14 Make a salary
15 Theater part
